Alas, an air of condescension and arrogance hangs over the album. The ballad "Daughters" is a particularly galling example. Mayer exhorts "you are the god and weight of her world" to the men looking after their daughters, as if implying that fathers are the only part of a girl's world. "Heavier Things" works best when Mayer stays upbeat, as on "Bigger Than My Body" and "Home Room." When Mayer slows down the tempo, the album gets bogged down. Mayer's relaxed voice is certainly nice to listen to, but the music itself lacks personality and distinction. It's not terrible, but it's not terribly exciting either.

Mayer certainly has talent in him – "Room For Squares" is an example of it, and "Heavier Things," even for its faults, shows it too – but he needs to demonstrate that he can do things heavier than seducing young girls with his slick and smooth sensitivity.

A peek through Chuck Palahniuk's new 'Diary'

By Teresa Roach
Collegian Staff

COURTESY DOUBLEDAY & CO.

'Diary' By Chuck Palahniuk Doubleday & Co.

"Diary," the latest effort from "Fight Club" author Chuck Palahniuk, is a creepy dive into the world of one Misty Marie Wilmont. Misty used to be an aspiring artist until she married the doomed Peter Wilmont. Peter now lies in a vegetative state in the local hospital, after a failed suicide attempt. Now Misty has the daunting task of taking care of her 13-year-old daughter, Tabbi, and her mother-in-law, Grace. The reader understands quickly that something sinister is happening involving Grace and Tabbi – unfortunately the reader realizes that before Misty does.

It can't get any worse until Peter's clients start calling to complain about the condition of their houses. Peter used to remodel houses, and it seems as if he sealed certain rooms off. Clients call to say their bathroom or kitchen is missing. When Misty goes to investigate, she finds that her husband has scrawled violent messages all over the walls. "Set foot on the island, and you will die," or "you'll die and the world will be a better place for..."

Readers are in for many surprises as the novel unfolds. "Diary" has the hallmark of a good book, as Palahniuk makes the reader eager to turn the page.

His matter of fact and often grotesque descriptions probe at the reader's psyche. Constantly, the reader questions what is actually happening in the novel and if, in fact, the characters are actually real. There are consistent flashbacks in the novel to when Misty and Peter met and before the horror of her life started.

These descriptions, coupled with the way Misty addresses Peter indirectly in the "diary," add much to the novel. Palahniuk actually sets the novel up as a diary, each chapter having the month and the date and the short chapters make the reader feel as though they are reading actual diary entries.

Readers will find much satisfaction reading "Diary" if they enjoy novels that are atypical and unusual. The constant one-liners that Palahniuk injects into the prose will make readers wince as well as smile.

Lawsuit filed against music, movie co.

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Makers of the most popular online file-sharing network are suing entertainment companies for copyright infringement, alleging the companies used unauthorized versions of its software to snoop on users in their efforts to battle piracy.

Sharman Networks, the company behind the Kazaa file-sharing software, filed a federal lawsuit Monday, accusing the movie studios and the Recording Industry of America of using "Kazaa Lite," a replica of its software without advertising, to get onto the network. Sharman claims its copyright was violated because Kazaa Lite is an unauthorized version of its free software.

Once on the network, the companies offered bogus versions of copyright music and movies and then sent online messages to users warning them they were breaking the law. Sharman claims those moves violated terms for using its network.

The RIAA, which has battled the widespread sharing of music, called Sharman's "newfound admiration for the importance of copyright law" ironic and "self-serving."

Sharman's lawsuit also revives its previous allegation that Universal Music Group and Warner Music Group violated antitrust laws by stopping Sharman and its partner Altnet Inc. from distributing authorized copies of music and movies through Kazaa.

Last year the companies filed suit against Sharman, accusing it of providing free access to copyright music and films to millions of Internet users in the United States.

Sharman, in a countersuit, claimed movie and recording industries didn't understand the digital age and were monopolizing entertainment.

U.S. District Judge Stephen V. Wilson rejected those claims in July but last week allowed Sharman to try again.

Universal Music Group and Warner Music Group declined to comment on Sharman's latest lawsuit.

- Associated Press

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer: Liquor: Wine:

Pilsner Urquell 24 btl case...$19.99* | Glenlivet 750 ml...$27.99 | Talus Chard., Cab., Merlot, Pinot Grigio 1.5 lt...$10.99
Heineken 24 btl case...$19.99* | Jameson 1 liter...$22.99 | Jacobs Creek Chard., Cab., Merlot, Shiraz 750 ml...$6.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49* | Captain Morgan 1.75 lt...$21.99 | Casa Lapostolle Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk cans...$15.99* | Wild Turkey 1 liter...$21.99 | Beaulieu Vineyards Costal Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Coors Light 20 pk btls...12.99* | Martell V.S. 750 ml...$21.99 | Vendange Chard, Cab., Merlot, Pinot Grigio 1.5 lt...$6.99
Bud & Bud Light 20 pk btl...$12.99* | Smirnoff All Flavors 1.75 lt...$19.99 | Marcus James Chard., Cab., Merlot, White Zin 1.5 lt...$5.99
Milwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99* | Crown Royal 750 ml...$18.99 | Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99* | Bailey's 750 ml...$17.99 | Barton & Guestier Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$4.99
Shipyard 12 pk btl...$9.99* | Romana Sambuca 750 ml...$17.99
Otter Creek 12 pk btl...$9.99* | Jose Cuervo 750 ml...$15.99
Seagram's Gin All Flavors 750 ml...$8.99

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 9/18 THROUGH 9/24

Come to the Arts & Living meeting Tuesday at 5 p.m. in the newsroom. New writers always welcome.

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars • Passenger Vans • Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Young Men's Club
138 East Street Hadley, MA
413-584-6728
Monday Night Football
• Pool Table
• Darts
• Horseshoes
• Keno
• Smoking
• Public Invited
• Women Welcome
Transportation Available
Free Munchies with this ad!

TRUST
"Before Rushing into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0243808
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA® Contraceptive Injection
(medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension) USP

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given as an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttock or upper arm once every 3 months (12 weeks). To continue your contraceptive protection, you must return for each new shot within 2 weeks (14 days) of the end of 3 months (13 weeks). DEPO-PROVERA contains medroxyprogesterone, a synthetic chemical similar to (but not the same as) the natural hormone progesterone. Progesterone is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. It helps prepare your body for pregnancy by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and results in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely...

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The efficacy of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (see "How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?"). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first receive DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection, the injection must be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period. DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is also highly effective if given ONLY within the first 5 days after childbirth if not breast-feeding and if exclusively breast-feeding. ONLY at the recommended dosage schedule does long-term, injectable, contraceptive action by medroxyprogesterone acetate make DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is over 99% effective at preventing pregnancy. Pregnancy rate is less than 1 per 100 women who use DEPO-PROVERA. The effectiveness of most contraceptive methods depends in part on how reliably each woman uses the method. The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA depends only on the patient returning every 3 months (12 weeks) for her next injection. Your health care provider will help you compare DEPO-PROVERA with other contraceptive methods and give you the information you need in order to decide which contraceptive method is the right choice for you.

The following table shows the percent of women who get pregnant while using different kinds of contraceptive methods. It gives, from the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the most expected pregnancies in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancies (which includes women who became pregnant because they did not follow the directions exactly).

Percent of Women Experiencing an Accidental Pregnancy in the First Year of Continuous Use

Method	Lowest Expected	Typical
DEPO-PROVERA	0.3	3
Implants (Norplant)	0.09	0.09
Female sterilization	0.2	0.4
Male sterilization	0.1	0.15
Oral (birth control pill)
Combined	0.1	5
Progestin-only	0.5	5
IUD
Progesterone	0.2	0.2
Copper T 380A	0.6	0.8
Condom without spermicide	2	12
Diaphragm with spermicide	6	18
Cervical cap	9	18
Withdrawal	4	19
Periodic abstinence	1-9	20
Spermicide alone	3	21
Vaginal sponge
used before childbirth	9	18
used after childbirth	20	36
No method	85	85

Source: Trussell et al. Choice Group of DEPO-PROVERA

*From Hatcher et al. 1998

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Not all women should use DEPO-PROVERA. You should not use DEPO-PROVERA if you have any of the following conditions:
• if you think you might be pregnant
• if you have any vaginal bleeding without a known reason
• if you have had cancer of the breast
• if you have had a stroke
• if you have or have had blood clots (phlebitis) in your legs
• if you have problems with your liver or liver disease
• if you are allergic to DEPO-PROVERA (medroxyprogesterone acetate) or any of its other ingredients

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
You also have a physical examination before your doctor prescribes DEPO-PROVERA. It is important to tell your health care provider if you have any of the following:
• a family history of breast cancer
• a personal history of fibrocystic breast disease (breast nodules or lumps or bleeding from your nipple)
• other diseases
• irregular or scanty menstrual periods
• high blood pressure
• migraine headaches
• asthma
• epilepsy (convulsions or seizures)
• diabetes or a family history of diabetes
• a history of depression

Tell your doctor about any prescription or over-the-counter medications.

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital herpes, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Because DEPO-PROVERA is a long acting birth control method it takes some time after your last injection for it to leave your body. Based on the results from a large study done in the United States, for women who stop using DEPO-PROVERA in order to become pregnant it is expected that about half of those who become pregnant will do so in about 10 months after their last shot. About two thirds of those who become pregnant will do so in about 12 months. About three fourths of those who become pregnant will do so in about 15 months and about 93% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 18 months after their last injection. The length of time you are exposed to DEPO-PROVERA has no effect on how long it takes you to become pregnant after your last injection.

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Irregular Menstrual Bleeding
The side effect reported most frequently by women who use DEPO-PROVERA is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding or no bleeding at all. Prolonged, heavy or continuous bleeding however is not a usual effect of DEPO-PROVERA and if this occurs you should see your health care provider right away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA bleeding usually decreases and many women stop having periods completely. In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA 55% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding (amenorrhea) after one of one and a half of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reasons that your periods stop – because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly the lining of the uterus does not grow as often. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your normal menstruation does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your menstrual period will usually return to the normal cycle.

Other Menstrual Changes
Some DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of menstrual blood in your flow. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The risk of bone fracture is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use, but after that it begins to resemble the normal rate of age-related bone loss in this...

Other Side Effects
Women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used injectable forms of contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast. DEPO-PROVERA for contraception: However women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer. Similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health care provider.

Pregnancy
Pregnancy DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method, the risk of accidental pregnancies for women who get their shots regularly (every 3 months +/- 2 weeks) is very low. Women there have been reports of an increased risk of low birth weight and neonatal death in the infants of women who received DEPO-PROVERA during pregnancy. However, it is not known whether these risks were due to DEPO-PROVERA or other factors. You should tell your health care provider as soon as possible if you become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA. Contraception after pregnancy...

Allergic Reactions
Allergic reactions while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection have been reported. Severe and some acute allergic reactions known as anaphylaxis and anaphylactoid reactions, sometimes include the sudden onset of hives or swelling and itching of the face. Breathing difficulties and a drop in blood pressure...

Other Risks
Other risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection are: Weight gain...

How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
You must return every 3 months (12 weeks) for your next injection. You must return within 2 weeks (14 days) of the end of 3 months (13 weeks) for your next injection. It is important to return on time for your next injection. If you wait longer than 3 months (13 weeks) between injections, you should be sure you are not pregnant before receiving your next injection. ONLY a reasonable certainty that you are not pregnant is required before the initiation of DEPO-PROVERA. It is essential that you return every 3 months (12 weeks) for your next injection. It is a MUST – even if you have not had your period or have other bleeding problems. If you are late for your next injection, you must be sure you are not pregnant before you receive DEPO-PROVERA. You should not have sexual intercourse or use another method of birth control for the first 7 days after your injection.

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Weight gain...

Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Menstruation...

Pharmacia & Upjohn

If you accidentally got pregnant, could you still make it to graduation?

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective in preventing unintended pregnancies.

If you're not ready, you're not ready. That's why more women than ever choose Depo-Provera. You need just 1 shot every 11 to 13 weeks to protect you from pregnancy. So, you can focus on history, not maternity.

Depo-Provera does not protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant or if you have had any unexplained periods. You should not use it if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a loss of some of the bone mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures.

Some women using Depo-Provera have side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months. You may gain weight when using Depo-Provera. About two thirds of the women in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 lb during the first year of use.

If you're not ready to get pregnant, be ready with effective birth control. Talk to your health care provider to see if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

See what Depo-Provera is all about.
Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on the adjacent page.

DE148562A © 2003 Pfizer Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA/September 2003 10% TOTAL RECOVERED FIBER Pfizer

Synthesis Center provides people of all ages opportunity to grow as a beings overlooked the higher powers of the human mind. Over the years that have passed, psychotherapists, clergy, educators, social workers, and people from many other professions have continued Assagioli's work.

Continued from page 6

The end result of all of this mixing of specializations has yielded what is today called psychosynthesis.

"That is the real beauty of psychosynthesis, it is to this day an open work that while it is being used to help people become complete, it is still growing," Firman said.

One who studies the art of psychosynthesis may note similarities to some conventional western psychological theories that focus primarily on the personality of an individual as being the key. Others may focus on the spiritual focus of eastern philosophy in its methods as well.

"We don't ask you about your childhood and then say, 'OK, look, your parents messed you up.' Instead we look at your past and say, 'Yes. You did have a bad experience now let us figure out how to grow from it.'" Firman explained.

This combination of viewpoints is what psychosynthesis is all about. It deals with the human being in its entirety – that is, body, mind and spirit, in order to promote physical, mental and spiritual growth.

Unlike most therapy styles, there are no set patterns of steps that therapists using psychosynthesis follow. In fact, each person's progress toward being a complete being is unique.

"Sometimes we use hypnosis, or art therapy, or music, sometimes even dance is a part of what an individual may need to achieve high levels of being," Firman said.

Though there are no defined stages to the art, it does progress in two very general steps. First is the personal step, where one learns how to be who they are and how to maximize one's output in day-to-day life. The second is the transpiration stage where an individual will learn how to align their own energies in order to influence and interact with the energies that are all around them. Also in this stage, there is a greater focus on the outside world and the notion of how one can impact the community, culture or world for the better.

It may sound like a great deal of cutting and coping from the methods used in many types of psychology, religion and culture, but that is the point of psychosynthesis.

"We have people from all walks of life who have come to the Center for training," staff member Clare Goodwin said. "Many of them have professions that do not necessarily require any kind of psychological skill, but in having learned how to better themselves and others through psychosynthesis, they not only improve their lives and the lives of those they encounter, but the entire community as well."

Beyond the psychosynthesis training and therapy the center conducts many other programs. One such event will be Clare Goodwin's class series on intuitive development.

"Intuition or the sixth sense can be developed by anyone. It is in the very makeup of the human being," Goodwin said.

Participants in these classes will explore their intuitive natures through many different exercises. Though it may sound neat to take a class to develop a sixth sense, it is not necessarily cheap. The course costs $200.

If conventional psychiatric help does not seem like the answer to your depression, anxiety, or just all around down-and-out state, then maybe the Synthesis Center could help. They have a number of therapists, each with their own area of specialization and all of whom are fully certified. The Synthesis Center offers a range of therapy techniques, and is open to anyone regardless of age, gender or race.

The Synthesis Center has a strict scent-free policy that they ask all visitors to respect.

"In today's world where so many people have allergies, sometimes very severe ones, we just like to ask that when you come to see us, you just leave the perfumes, body sprays and colognes out," Goodwin explained.

For those who are interested in learning more about psychosynthesis or who with to learn about the center's certification program, Didl Firman will hold an open introduction to psychosynthesis on Thursday, Oct. 2, at 7 p.m. Space for this event is limited, so it is recommended that you call in advance. For more information on any of the center's programs, call the Synthesis Center at 413-256-0772 or on the web at www.synthesiscenter.org. The center is located in downtown Amherst at 274 North Pleasant Street.

COURTESY SYNTHESISCENTER.ORG

Clare Goodwin, staff member, has worked in the psychosynthesis field for nearly three decades.

COURTESY SYNTHESISCENTER.ORG

Dorthy (Didi) Firman, right, gives knowledge and spiritual guidance to SC members.

Acupuncture hits UMass

Continued from page 6

stress begins."

At an acupuncture session, Whiteside or Lussier will attempt to determine where that blocked channel is and release the blockage with the filaments. To help them determine the highlighted zone, they will read the patient's pulse six times on each wrist. This differs from western practitioners who will take one pulse during a normal check-up.

Now does all this sophisticated medical jargon equal out to a reasonable price for students on campus?

Effective Aug 1., the Student Health Insurance Plan covers up to $500 a year towards acupuncture.

The prices per session range according to the degree of the ailment that is being attended too.

Whiteside and Lussier do expect a demand from students during high stress times such as exam period, but to their surprise, the patients have been flowing in already.

"The first week of classes I was coming into UHS once a week, now I am up to twice," Lussier said. "Who knows what will happen later on?"

The people who have received treatment have been returning, according to the two acupuncturists, and they are returning because they know exactly what it can do for their overall well-being.

"It's not something that is necessary to living well, it is a way to enhance the quality of your life by paying attention to parts of your life, physically and mentally," Whiteside said.

To make an appointment, call UHS at 577-6511.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUI SUPERCERTA FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS
UMASS

Become a
Judicial Hearing Board Member

A great experience for students who:
are interested in law, social justice and student's rights
are interested in student leadership wish to enhance communication skills
want to build their RESUME

Requirements include:
full time enrollment
at least a 2.0 G.P.A.
no current judicial sanction

Training Sessions held in 903 Campus Center
October 14th @ 7:00 to 9:30 P.M.
October 20th @ 7:00 to 9:30 P.M.
(you will need to attend both sessions)

Applications available at:
Residential Cluster Offices
The Dean of Students Office
Student Government Association

Deadline to apply:
5:00 P.M. October 9, 2003

Any questions? Please contact: Patrick Higgins, Brian Long or Rhys Livingstone
Dean of Students Office 545-2684

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Big Y® WORLD CLASS MARKET®
We've Got It All!

WELCOME BACK UMASS® STUDENTS!

175 University Drive
Amherst · 413-253-0416
Monday-Saturday
7am-11pm
Sunday 7am-10pm

WE ACCEPT OCMP!

Prices Effective September 25th to October 1st
In Our Amherst Store Only.

From Our Kitchen

Sandwich Shop Hours:
7am to 9pm Every Day
Pizza Shop Hours:
9am to 9pm Every Day

12 Piece
Fried Chicken
$9
Save On Up To 5

Slice of Cheese
Pizza and Regular Fountain Soda
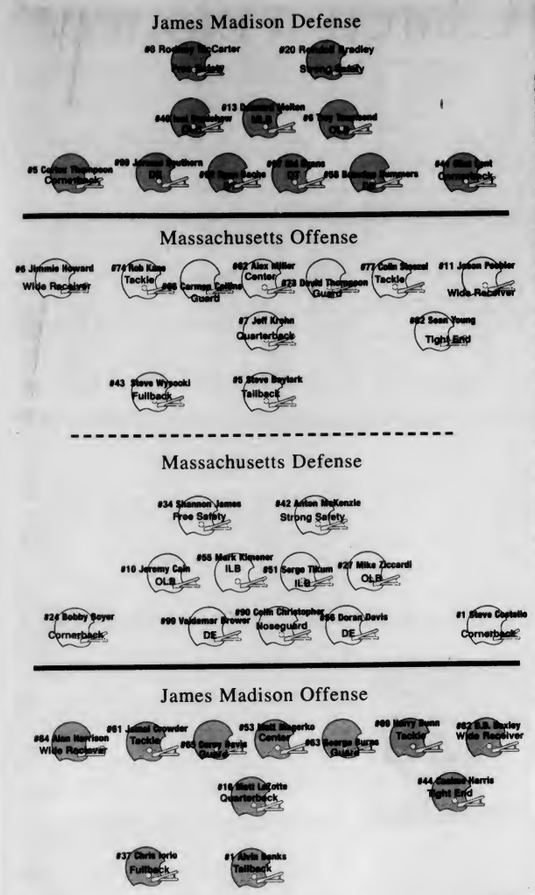
$1.99
Save On Up To 5

Best Pizza In Town!

Made Fresh Every Day!

To Place A Grinder Order
Call: 253-8098

Large
Ham & Cheese
Grinder
BUY 1 · GET 1
FREE
Save On Up To 5



Just Heat & Serve!

Grandpa's
BBQ Ribs
By The Rack
BUY 1lb · GET 1lb*
FREE
Save On Up To 5
*Package of equal or lesser value

Come In and Sign Up
For Your
FREE
Big Y® Express Savings Club™ Card
To Save On Items Throughout The Store Week After Week... After Week!

See Store For Details On More Ways To Save!

Minutemen return to McGuirk to host JMU

Continued from page 14

should carry a great deal of the offensive load. They are also riding high following a 23-20 victory over Hofstra in which they rallied from a 17-0 deficit to knock off the Pride.

Experienced junior quarterback Matt LeZotte returns for a third season under center, and has a strong, capable arm and a massive offensive line to protect him. He will have senior Alan Harrison and speedy freshman D.D. Boxley as his primary weapons.

The Minutemen will look to put pressure on the oft-injured signal caller with a variety of different looks and blitzes.

The focus, however, will more than likely remain with the powerful Banks and the ground game.

"LeZotte's got another year of experience under his belt, and [JMU] is much better on offense as a whole," Whipple said. "Their line is nearly as big as Kansas State's, and they have a good talent with Banks in the backfield."

For the Minutemen offensively, quarterback Jeff Krohn will look to continue the success he has had in the early going, as well as that of receivers Jimmie Howard and Jason Peebler. The onus of controlling the football, however, will once again be placed on the shoulders of sophomore tailback Steve Baylark.

Coming off the second 100-yard game of his young career, Baylark is someone Whipple has seen improve each week, and the veteran coach expects that to continue.

"I think [Baylark's] gotten better each game," Whipple said. "He's learning on the fly, and I think he's close to popping that one [big run]."

On the defensive side of the ball the Minutemen have been solid all year. Injuries to cornerbacks Steve Costello and Bobby Boyer, as well as safety Shannon James leave UMass banged up in the secondary, but that will not deter them from being aggressive against the Dukes on Saturday.

"We have to hurry the quarterback," Whipple said. "If he has time, he can throw it as well as anyone. He's got a strong arm that can make throws that not many people can make. We just need to pressure him and not let him sit back there.

"I think we have tremendous respect for James Madison," he added. "They have all the ingredients to be a very good football team, and a real sleeper in this league. We just need to find a way to win this game."

Northeastern continues to roll

Continued from page 14

second quarter, and a 32-yard strike from Matt LeZotte to D.D. Boxley with a minute left capped off the rally, giving the Dukes the 23-20 win over Hofstra.

Freshman Alvin Banks rushed for 153 yards on 28 carries for the Dukes, good enough for the Rookie of the Week nod. Junior Cortez Thompson earned the Special Teams Player of the Week award. His 33-yard return off of a JMU safety set up the winning drive, and he also returned a punt for 24 yards, leading to a scoring drive for the Dukes.

Huskies put up another monster number

Northeastern's offense continued its juggernaut ways last weekend, with a 48-14 win over William and Mary. The Huskies have scored at least 40 points in all four games this season, including a 78-6 stomping of Stonehill, and a 51-point shutout of Albany.

Northeastern will be hard-pressed to continue the streak this week, however, when it travels to Villanova Saturday. The Wildcats have the second best defense in the Atlantic 10, allowing just 13.3 points per game. Junior defensive end Terence Taylor (three) and senior linebacker Ryan Breeden (two) are third and ninth on the A-10 sack list, respectively.

Another stipulation of the battle between the Huskies and Wildcats this weekend is that it's the first time since 1998 that two Atlantic 10 teams ranked in the top 10 will face each other. In '98, No. 8 Villanova downed No. 4 Delaware 34-31 in overtime, and No. 9 Connecticut eked out a 28-27 win over eventual 1-AA National Champion UMass, ranked No. 7 at the time.

Record book bound

When Rhode Island visits Richmond on Saturday, it will have another chance to showcase its ground attack. The Rams, spearheaded by senior Luther Green, are currently on pace to break the A-10 record of 326.3 yards per game, set by New Hampshire in 1998. URI is currently rushing at a 387.3 yards per game clip, and Green is averaging a monstrous 9.9 yards per carry.

Note to students:

The UMass football team is looking to hire student managers for the 2003-2004 school year. Individuals are needed for home games, away games and practices to assist with field preparation, equipment and other projects. Those who are interested should contact Paul Bys at 413-545-2196.

www.dailycollegian.com

ADVERTISEMENTS

University of Massachusetts Amherst
Student Government Association

Student Government Association
Room 422 Student Union Building
41 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003-9245

voice: 413.545.0341
fax: 413.545.1999
e-mail: sga@stuaf.umass.edu

My fellow students,

Our community is facing a challenge. Disagreements over Senate procedure have escalated into heated rhetoric and related concerns, and these disagreements threaten to overshadow the opening of the 2003-2004 Senate session and prevent the Student Government Association from fulfilling its mission of improving the lives of all students.

I, along with many of you, am concerned about the way in which the Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, Jared Nokes has chosen to pursue a resolution to the issue of appointed representation. While his actions may have been legal - the divergences in varous interpretations do not settle the matter - they were most definitely insensitive and procedurally restrictive. Because of our constitutionally-mandated division of powers, I have no control over, or liability for, these actions.

The issue as a whole, however, has risen beyond the level of representation. Students have expressed concern about University recruitment and retention policies, cultural center administraion, and diversity within the faculty and staff. The Student Government Association has been asked to give a stronger accounting of how it is responding to the needs of all students, and in particular students of color. I fully share in the student concerns over issues of diversity throughout the University and within the Student Government Association, and I, along with my Executive Cabinet, have been working to address many of these issues. I can assure that I, along with the Cabinet, are fully committed to meeting the needs of all students in our diverse community.

As some students have noted, however, there is always the potential to do more. My Cabinet and I will be focusing a great deal this year on issues related to diversity. And we are all more than willing to sit down with any undergraduate students who have concerns about any area of campus life. It is incredibly important that all of us maintain open communciation with one another; it is only by working together that we can achieve these common goals.

I don't have the liberty of ignoring public opinion, as I was elected, but a student body that entrusted me to seek their best interests at all times, including times of great promise, and times of considerable difficulty. The best way to ensure that your voice is heard is to get involved. Engage your Executive Officers and voice your concern and opinions. Engage the Senate as an elected representative or simply by exercising your fight to vote on September 25th. At a time of such uncertainty, it is my hope that we can move forward and address these critical issues. I look forward to hearing from all students about how Student Government can better serve their needs; please feel free to contact me or any member of my Cabinet at 545-0341.

Sincerely,

President David Carr

STUDENT GOVERNMENT SENATE ELECTIONS

CANDIDATES FOR SGA SENATE

CENTRAL		Jennifer	Mayefsky
Michael	Goldberg	Kathryn	Mayefsky
Pauel	Payano	Doug	Woodruff
D.J.	Bettencourt	Beatrice	Ake
Branwen	Hardebeck	Farley	Pedler
Katelyn	Claffey
Larry	Dougher	ORCHARD HILL
Erica	Han	Ewelina	Bielica
Shawn	McKenna	Eoin	Moore
Brendan	Duprey	Brian	Roberts
Stacey	Bernadeau	Laurie	Belsito
Richard	Cookson	Krit	Chakravarthy
Marquis	Hunt	Zsuzsa	Cook
Widlande	Raymond	Sanam	Hakim
Daniel	Pozmanter	Liz	Jennings
Silas	Lowe	Tristan	Brown
Ann	Nguyen	Lindsay	Lesser
Arthur	LaPan
Matthew	Murphy	SOUTHWEST NORTH
		Damien	Weinstein
COMMUTER		Monique	Quiles
Eduardo	Bustamante	Jill	Sawyer
David	Falvey	Tim	Busiere
Jason	Ferreira	Kathleen	Edison
Joey	Giarusso	Olaf	Aprans
Craig	Goldschmidt
Patrick	Higgins	SOUTWEST SOUTH
Laura	LaPlume	Marina	Solovyov
Kelly	Ormond	James (Seamus)	Brennan
David	Peterson	Christopher	DeCambra
Paul	Pitts-Dilley	Adrienne	Girard
Ted	Plettner	David	Owens
Meredith	Rice	Michael	Sheridan
Renate	Robertson	David	Synnott
Maggie	Rogers	Rachel	Deleveaux
Michael	Troisi	Armando	Roman
Joseph	Wright	Raul	Brens
Anthony	Pascoe	Albert	Dennis
Tomi	Faust	Alexandra	Mitson
Leia	Hlustick	Stephanie	LaMarca
Christopher	Mira	Marcus	Deforest
Rodney	Sinclair	Katharina	McCarty
Alyssa	LaBonte	Cassandra	Priddy
NORTHEAST		SYLVAN
Dan	Pomeroy	Shaun	Ashworth
Ama	Boadu	Susan	Allen
Gladys	Franco	Aiysha	Cooper
Andres	Gomez	Mor	Dar
		Ayotunde	Onikoro

Vote today!

Central and Orchard Hill at Franklin D.C.
Northeast and Sylvan at Worcester D.C.
Southwest South at Berkshire D.C.
Southwest North at Hampshire D.C.

ENGINEERING CAREER FAIR

Wednesday, October 1
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 3 pm

co-op and full time positions for engineering and computer science majors of all degree levels

For more information
(and to see who's coming!)
go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

CareerServices

Clarett a pioneer?

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

If the potential fallout from Maurice Clarett's lawsuit against the NFL wasn't so worrisome, it might be good for a laugh.

How's this for audacious? Because Clarett couldn't stop himself from taking free stuff and lying to investigators, thus breaking one set of eligibility rules while playing for Ohio State, he asked a judge Tuesday to bend another set of eligibility rules so he can play in the NFL.

But by the time family adviser and former football great Jim Brown finished describing Clarett's act of selflessness, it ranked alongside Mahatma Gandhi's hunger strikes.

"He wants to point out what's wrong with the system," Brown said.

"I think that's a big statement today," he added. "Most people just want to take the money and shut up."

Brown is a category unto himself. He takes money and still won't shut up. Though Clarett has said precious little about anything in public recently, that didn't stop his family adviser from insisting that creating opportunities for other youngsters played a big part in Clarett's decision.

"He understands he can be a pioneer," Brown said. "He wants to help other players."

Yet when asked in the same ESPN.com interview how many other athletes might be helped, Brown replied a precious few. "Only the [elite] players will benefit from it."

Ask somebody who watches the NBA or college basketball how that little experiment is going. Then duck.

Nearly all the kids jumping directly to the pros from high school or bailing out on college after a season or two enter the league long on attitude and short on fundamentals. It's watered down the final product – both college and pro – to where some nights it's painful to watch.

More than three decades later, Spencer Haywood, who successfully challenged the NBA's early entry rules, still wonders whether he created a monster.

"Right now the American athlete is dunking and dribbling himself right out of the league. I don't even want to imagine," he said recently, "what would happen with football."

Soon, he might not have to imagine.

To play in the NFL, you must be three years out of high school.

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said no single case prompted commissioner Paul Tagliabue to arrive at that formulation – no exceptions allowed – only that Tagliabue decided sometime around 1990 to take any guesswork out of the process.

NFL players association chief Gene Upshaw, unlike his NBA counterpart, Billy Hunter, had no problem going along.

However, because Tagliabue and Upshaw made their agreement on the side instead of writing it into the collective bargaining agreement, Clarett's attorneys found the opening they needed. In the lawsuit, they contend the minimum-age provision is not covered by the antitrust laws that exempt all of the other working conditions agreed to between the league and the union and spelled out in the CBA.

Tagliabue's mostly old-school owners have told him they're willing to eat hefty legal bills to defend the age limit. They argue it's unfair to throw kids in against men in a sport so much more bruising than any of the others.

In truth, though, their objections might be no more principled than Clarett's. Even though Clarett may not turn out to be a particularly good example – he's on the smallish side, with questions about his durability and judgment –there are more than a few others out there who are physically, mentally and emotionally prepared to begin mixing it up with their elders.

Even more rare is the owner who, given the chance, would pass up such a kid in the draft. And who in their right mind would tell a kid to walk away from the kind of money the NFL hands out?

So it could just be that a shrewd commissioner and his owners don't want to lose a minor league system – college football – that delivers players who are not just finished products, but in many cases, already proven box-office attractions.

No matter how you view it, this is a tough call.

"Arbitrary? Sure it is," agent Ralph Cindrich said of the NFL's age limit.

He cites fourth-year Redskins linebacker LaVar Arrington as a prime example. "He came into the NFL after three years of college, but I met him at a banquet when he was back in high school. He was already a man's man back then."

But in the next breath, he notes there are age limits for all kind of things.

"You have to be a certain age to drive, vote, fight and drink, even though some people can handle the responsibility sooner. But Jet's not forget why we put them out there, because the vast majority of people are not.

"And I believe the same is true," said Cindrich, a tough-guy NFL linebacker 30 years ago, "about football players."

Email comments to:
Sports@Dailycollegian.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0900 NO. AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

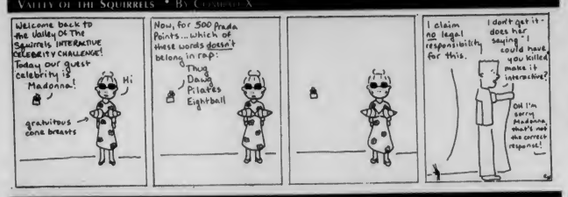
CLUB CASTAWAY
RT. 5 & 10
WHATELY
665-8733
will proudly present another successful
AMATEUR NIGHT
MONDAY, SEPT. 29, 2003 • 7PM-1AM
Ladies Must Be 18 Years Old
Apply In Person
(No Professional Dancers)
1st Prize $300
2nd Prize $200
3rd Prize $100
NFL MONDAY NIGHTS ARE BACK!
10-15 Erotic Dancers
Free Buffet • Free Gifts
No Entertainment Charge For Students with College ID & Legal Picture ID
Must Be 21 Years Old
Our New All Nude VIP Room Is Free For Private Parties
We Have Free Dancer's Choice Twice A Night
$Attractive New Entertainers Welcome$
Directions: From I-91 North, Exit 22, go right, 3 miles on right. From I-91 South, Exit 24, go right, 2 miles on left.
0240590

$$ HIPPODROME $$
EARN UP TO $40 PER HOUR
Nightclub Now Hiring
Bartenders
Cocktail Servers
Cashiers
Floor Staff
Barbacks
Coat Checkers
Apply In Person Only
Dates: Wed Sept 17th and Thurs Sept 25th 2003
Time: 6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Place: 1-00 Main Street, Springfield, MA
www.hdrome.com

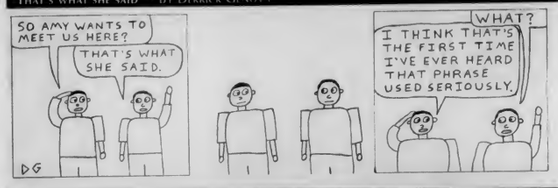
Blue Rail
Restaurant & Sports Bar
Featuring:
Pool Tables, Music, Big Screen TV
Restaurant Hours:
Tuesday - Sunday
11 am - 10 pm
Pizza, grinders, seafood, beef and more
Monday Night Football
Student Special:
Bud Bottles $2
October Fest 22oz $4
227 Russell St (rt.9)
On Blue 43 bus route
next to Amherst DropZone
(413) 586 - 3880

EXPRESS/ STRUCTURE
Warehouse Clothing Sale
Mon - Thur
9 to 8
Fri - 9 to ???
GOT CLOTHES?
1st Quality Merchandise
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Don't Miss Out!!!
Sept 22nd thru Sept. 26th
WAREHOUSE SALE
Student Union Ballroom

L'Shana Tova
Services are sponsored by Hillel at Umass
Friday, September 26:
7pm Service in the Student Union Ballroom
Saturday, September 27:
10 am Service in the Student Union Ballroom
12 noon Alternative Musaf Service followed by Discussion in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge
7:15pm Service in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge
Sunday, September 28:
10 am Service in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge
1pm Tashlich by the Campus Pond



Late 40 Bidon • By [illegible]

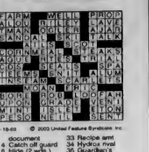


Jayhoo and Jawhoo • By [illegible]

Valley of the Squirrels • By [illegible]

That's what she said • By Derrick Genova

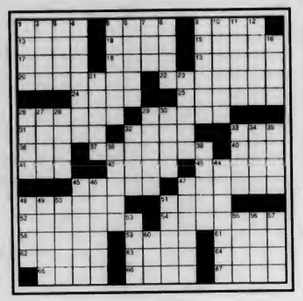
Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Kryzkowski



Quote for the Day

"One thing life has taught me: If you are interested, you never have to look for new interests. They come to you. When you are genuinely interested in one thing, it will always lead to something else."

-Eleanor Roosevelt



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Previous puzzle solved

Across
1 Rachel the engine
5 Pecks at 9 Campus building
13 Gut frying
14 Exiled Roman poet
15 Zodiac sign
17 High plateau
18 "Star Wars" princess
19 Tax assessor
20 Most watchful
22 Lash darkener
24 Advertise
25 Wrestling hold
26 Rough fabric
29 Hawaiian instrument
31 Map datum
32 Restaurant handout
33 Drag
34 Baby buggy bar
37 Pedro's tongue
40 Halter
41 Dip in gravy
42 Smallest pup
43 Bobby — of Indy fame
45 Every morning
47 Camera "eg"
48 Fuel tank
51 Timely benefit
52 Planned course
54 Concussion result
58 After a skirt
59 Singer — James
61 Groan causers
62 Busan Local vamp
63 Light bulb meas.
64 Mimic
65 Makes lace
66 Fair (hyph.)
67 Twig dwelling

Down
1 Rear-ends
2 AC supply
3 Travel
4 Catch off guard
5 Hints (2 wds.)
6 Subsidy
7 Clock face number
8 Mild cheese
9 Mild oath
10 Spud
11 Morano and Coolidge
12 Part of MOM
16 Young Lennon
21 Jackets
23 Black cattle
26 Dressmaker's dummy
27 Golden Rule word
28 Party-thrower's plea
29 Bandleader — Goodman
30 College credit
32 Sledgehammer document
33 Recipe amt
34 Mystics rival
35 Guardian's charge
36 Chandelier gadget
38 & Grant Lake
44 Bowling piece
46 Notice
48 Scents
49 Garden produce
50 Heck's customer
49 Unmoving
50 Brazilian port
61 Mid-glass bump
53 Evergreens
55 Positive
56 Calligraphy thicks
57 Secy.
60 Way of Lao-tzu

Amherst Brewing Company

BURGERS • WINGS • BEER
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
PING PONG
DARTS
POOL
LIVE MUSIC
NO COVER CHARGE
JAZZ • BLUES • FOLK • KARAOKE
EVERYTHING UNDER ONE ROOF
OUMP
413-549-1960
24 North Pleasant Street • www.amherstbrewing.com • Amherst Center

September 25th
Karaoke
September 27th
Octoberfest Celebration!
Scheister Meisters 4 to 6
Raider Eddie 10pm
September 28th
Few and Far Between Bluegrass

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 49

FRIDAY
- High: 71
- Low: 57

SATURDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 59

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen / Oliver Chong
Katie Dwan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't give out too many special favors, it'll come back to bite you.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Buy folders, LOTS of folders. You can never have enough folders.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
People are jerks and try to manipulate you, don't let them. Be a jerk right back.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't be a snitch and tell on people, but don't get yourself in trouble either.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Someone is obsessed with you, unfortunately, it is a shady stalker.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go to bed earlier, those bags under your eyes are totally unattractive.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will totally prove yourself to your doubters this week.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Beware of visiting lecturers to your class this week, they are mean and boring.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Sometimes things are gone and can't come back, deal with it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Try predicting others futures. It can be very scary.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Remember to press save, it sucks when you lose all your work.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Swans are fun to look at but not fun to play with, they are psycho.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown- Meals-Night Club passes. www.montreal-express.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Auto for Sale

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Merc Sable Wag '94 Runs Great. Gd. Cond. Reliable trans. Recent Sticker. $1050. B/O Call 549-7455

Auto Repair

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Employment

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50/hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com. Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Futon great condition Thick Mattress $150.00 O/B/O KariSlyn@aol.com

Instruction

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

Roommate Wanted

Looking for a quiet, non-smoking female roommate 2 share 2 Bedroom Apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906 PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Services

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweep-picker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa Services Aveda Facials includes make over session 253-2322

Travel

Spring Break — Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now - Free

Travel

Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers, Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900 Rnichols@gbtlaw.net, www.robertmnicholsesq.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Homeward bound

UMass returns to host JMU

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The date was Sept. 6. Nineteen days ago.

The Red Sox and Yankees were playing their second to last game of the season, the NFL was still a day away from beginning its first full week, students across the country were completing their first week back in the classroom and the Massachusetts football team beat Central Connecticut State 51-7 in its season opener at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Since that date, the Red Sox and Yankees have both sewn up playoff berths for all intents and purposes, the NFL is heading into Week 4, students are finding themselves faced with their first sets of exams, and the Minutemen (2-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10) have traveled first to I-A national power Kansas State, and then to two-time defending Atlantic 10 champion Maine.

So now, two weeks and several thousand miles later, a battle-tested UMass squad will finally return home this weekend from its lengthy but successful hiatus, and face James Madison (2-1 1-0 Atlantic 10) Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium, where it is a solid 16-5 against A-10 opponents all-time under coach Mark Whipple.

"Those were two very hard trips, although it was positive to get a win at Maine," Whipple said. "There's a certain comfort level playing at home, and after a tremendous win last week, that makes this week's game a huge one.

"This game is important, and we can't afford to take a step back. There needs to be the sense of urgency there has been over the last few weeks."

The Minutemen need not be reminded of the strength of a JMU squad that was one yard away from taking the Maroon and White to overtime last year. In fact, last season's 14-7 thriller, in which a fumble recovery by Shannon James as time expired on fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard line saved the day for UMass, is fresh in the minds of Whipple and his team.

"I hope [what happened last year] will be fresh on their minds, because we've certainly showed them enough tape of it," Whipple said. "They played us very tough last year and we were fortunate to come away with a win. Now they have a lot of their guys back, and we expect a hard-fought game."

Experience is certainly something the Dukes and Minutemen have in common. While the UMass defense returns 10 starters and has garnered plenty of early season attention and accolades, JMU returns eight defensive starters, including what may be UMass' lone competitor for best linebacking corps in the A-10.

Leading the way for the talented Dukes is senior inside linebacker Dennard Melton, who has a team-high 34 tackles, along with outside linebackers Trey Townsend and Isai Bradshaw, and All-Atlantic 10 defensive end Jerame Southern.

"I just don't see a weakness in their defense," Whipple said. "Melton is a tremendous player. I think he's probably the best pure linebacker in the league.

"Bradshaw is also very talented, and their outside linebacker Townsend was their leading tackler, so they know what they're doing and they're well coached on defense."

Offensively, JMU is even more experienced as they return nine starters and have filled a hole at tailback with talented redshirt freshman Alvin Banks, who

Continued on page 11

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Cornerback Steve Costello has been a defensive stalwart for the Minutemen so far this season. The junior has intercepted three passes on the year, and he returned a fumble 35 yards for a touchdown against Maine.

Milestone for A-10

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Atlantic 10 football entered this week with a milestone. In a sign of the improving quality of A-10 competition, the conference put a fourth team, Massachusetts, in the Sports Network I-AA top 10, the first time four A-10 teams have been in the top 10 since it became a NCAA poll of record in 1993.

The Maroon and White joins No. 4 Northeastern (4-0, 2-0 A-10), No. 5 Villanova (3-0, 1-0 A-10), and No. 6 Delaware (3-0, 1-0 A-10) in the top 10. Northeastern (one) and Villanova (two) also received first-place votes. It is the fifth time this season that the A-10 has put more teams on the top 10 than any other I-AA conference.

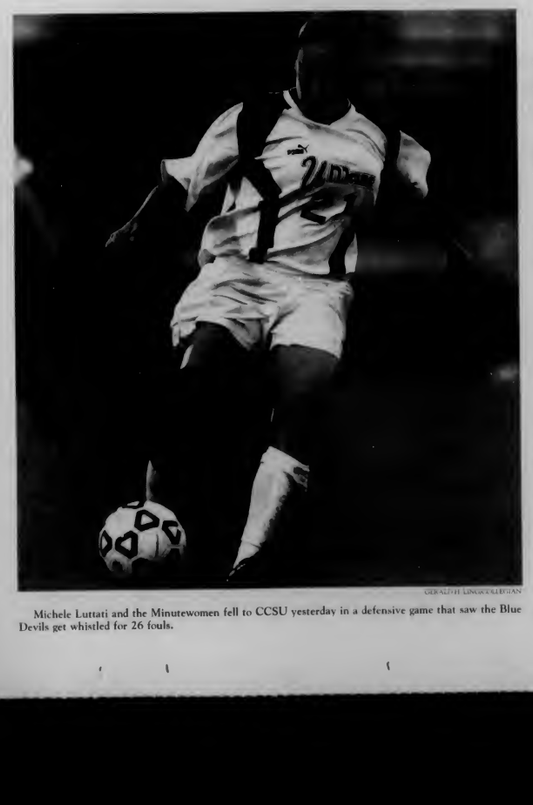
Notebook

Isabel's wrath felt in Williamsburg

There was some disappointment this week regarding the decision by William & Mary (1-2, 0-1 A-10) to cancel its game against Maine, scheduled for this Saturday in Williamsburg, Virg. The school, which will be closed until Sunday in the aftermath of Hurricane Isabel, decided to cancel all home sporting events for the week. While some events may be made up, the football game will not, much to the ire of some coaches around the A-10.

"I think it's horrible," UMass coach Mark Whipple said at the weekly UMass sports luncheon. "They've suspended school for the week. They are continuing with their other athletics, but they made a decision for William & Mary saying, 'we will not play Maine in football.'

"Maine is really at a tremendous disadvantage because they are in the running for a league title and a playoff berth, and if they lose this game, they will not have the chance to go to the playoffs because they will be down a game, and they will not have a chance at the championship."



Whipple said that, according to Maine, a deal was worked out that would bring the game to Orono on the Black Bears' dime, but the Tribe refused. W&M also refused to play the game at Richmond's UR Stadium, according to Whipple.

The A-10 athletic directors are planning to have a teleconference today to discuss further action by the league.

The Dukes rally back

In a performance that landed two of its players on the Atlantic 10 honor roll this week, James Madison (2-1, 1-0 A-10) came back from being down 17-0 in the

Continued on page 11

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Michele Luttati and the Minutewomen fell to CCSU yesterday in a defensive game that saw the Blue Devils get whistled for 26 fouls.

A devil of a time

UM falls in physical game with CCSU

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team lost a highly physical battle to Central Connecticut 1-0 at Rudd Field yesterday. Between the shirt-pulling and the hard knocks, the tightly-called game featured 26 fouls by the Bobcats (7-1-0, 2-0-0 Northeast Conference) and nine by the Minutewomen (2-3-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10).

CCSU	1
UMass	0

"[Some of the CCSU players] are foreign and that could be a reason why they play more physical," sophomore Lindsey Bellini said. "I thought [the referee] called it pretty well. She called a lot of fouls and there isn't usually that many fouls called in a game.

"I think it got us out of our game a little, but I'm sick of excuses. We are way more talented than them."

The lone goal of the contest developed quickly, when CCSU forward Jessica McCavanagh fired a long-range blast from near midfield that was blocked. The ball was eventually collected by Denise Thomas, who crossed the ball to sophomore Jen Frisch. Frisch then flicked it into the top left corner in the 21st minute. The goal was Frisch's third of the year.

Only moments later, UMass freshman back Nadia Villarroel sent a floating, arcing free kick from 30 yards. The ball sailed between the crossbar and CCSU goalie Sabrina Mariani's hands to find the back of the net. The goal was called back however, because the ball was not stationary when Villaroel took the shot.

That was as close as the Minutewomen got to scoring yesterday.

"It's sort of mixed emotions about [the goal] being called back, but hey, it's part of the rules," UMass coach Jim Rudy said.

After the Bobcats dominated the first half, Rudy went to a more aggressive style, which created more passing opportunities. After being outshot 9-3 in the first half, the Maroon and White had a one-shot advantage in the second.

The real story of the second half was the crisp, quick ball movement by UMass, which was able to take possession for most of the remainder of the game.

The Minutewomen changed their formation in the second half, adding an attacker.

"The first half we didn't play, the second half we did," Rudy said. "It's that simple. The second half we forced them to play, because we played with one less defender. I told [the defense] that they needed to step up, because they were going to be exposed. If we took another two or three seconds longer, we could have put one in."

Kelly Nigh continued to be a model of stability for UMass, with eight saves in the contest. Two of those were on one-on-one breakaways, and she made an incredible diving stop to the lower left corner from point-blank range.

Mariani was relatively untested, and came up with four saves.

"The Minutewomen haven't been at full strength since the beginning of the season, and yesterday's rough play caused an aggravation to senior Erin Lilly's injured ankle, which kept her out of the first three games of the season. Rudy said that it could be a mild sprain.

With lingering injuries to offensive keys Lilly, junior Lindsey Fairweather, and sophomore Adair Blyler, UMass has been held scoreless in its last three games, all losses.

"Adversity is a measuring stick of character," Rudy said. "When you are losing, that's real measurement you go by."

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 18

Bulger brothers lose pension bids

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — State retirement officials dealt a double blow Thursday to the Bulger brothers by unanimously rejecting William's bid to boost his annual pension payments, and John's attempt to reinstate his.

The retirement board voted to refuse William Bulger's request to increase his pension, already in line to be the highest in state history, by another $32,000.

The former University of Massachusetts president qualifies for an annual pension of nearly $200,000. But he was seeking to include his annuity and housing allowance from his UMass contract as income when calculating his pension benefits, which would have boosted his annual pension to $230,000.

State prohibits the annuity and housing allowance from being included in the pension, the board ruled.

William Bulger, 69, resigned Sept. 1 under pressure from Gov. Mitt Romney and Attorney General Thomas Reilly, both of whom argued that the former state Senate president has not done enough to assist authorities in the search for his fugitive brother.

The five-member board also voted Thursday to permanently withhold John "Jackie" Bulger's annual pension.

"Neither person got what they sought because we didn't feel what they sought was legal or right," said state Treasurer Timothy Cahill, chairman of the board.

The board began withholding John Bulger's $3,700 monthly checks in May, after the retired Boston Juvenile Court clerk magistrate pleaded guilty to charges of interfering with efforts to capture his fugitive mobster brother, James "Whitey" Bulger. John Bulger was sentenced earlier this month to six months in federal prison.

"What's right is that people who don't break the law and live according to the law in accordance with their duties are qualified to get pensions, and those that don't should not get pensions," Cahill said.

John Bulger, 65, worked for the state for 32 years. His final salary was $86,000 and he qualified for annual pension of about $45,000.

John Bulger left the hearing without commenting but his lawyer, George Gormley, said he has already appealed the decision by filing a lawsuit in South Boston District Court.

"This was a foregone conclusion. It's political, it's completely political," Gormley said. "Mr. Bulger's situation has absolutely nothing to do with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. He has served honorably and ably for 32 years and has paid into this pension system."

John Bulger "made some errors in judgment out of brotherly concern and loyalty," Gormley said. "What that has to do with this is, in my view, simply politics."

William Bulger, a state employee for 42 years, did not attend the hearing. His attorney, Thomas Kiley, also did not attend and did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

Cahill denied that the votes were political.

"It had nothing to do with politics," he said. "It had nothing to do with the last name of the person."

Romney said Thursday that William Bulger's pension request shows the need for pension reform.

"It's very hard for the people of the Commonwealth and myself included to understand a pension which is four times, almost, the median income of a Massachusetts family," Romney said. "And for a person receiving a pension of that scale to say he wants even more strikes me as being greedy."

Cahill said any effort to reform the system should focus on the state's university system, from which at least 11 retirees receive annual pension payments of more than $100,000. The average state retiree receives a pension of just $18,000, Cahill said.

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

The state retirement board turned down former University of Massachusetts William Bulger's request for increased pension yesterday.

New textbook online marketplace evolves

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Correspondent

Students who hate the semi-annual long waits and heavy lugging of textbooks from the Textbook Annex can opt to do their shopping online, enjoying discount rates on a vast selection of books from TextbookX.com.

This national Internet book market is geared particularly toward college students.

TextbookX.com is a discount online bookstore currently offering 75,000 titles, including a vast selection of used books that can be hard to find. The website provides the opportunity for students and professors nationwide to exchange books with each other.

Buyers can choose to purchase their books from individual sellers, whether they are purchasing discounted new books or used books, or any combination. The exchange is the latest in a series of new programs that Akademos, Inc., a provider of educational resources on the Internet, has developed to help students meet their needs.

According to Brian Jacobs, founder of Akademos Inc., there are an estimated 15 million college students nationwide. Jacobs launched the exchange program two years ago as part of the company's mission to promote the Internet's democratizing effects on higher education. The Internet marketplace enables students to sell their books, many in near-perfect condition, for more, and purchase textbooks the following semester for less, he said. Unlike any other online marketplaces, the exchange is set up specifically for textbook sales.

"Our system is unlike anything else that I am aware of," Jacobs said. "From the get-go we designed [it] to be in line with students' needs and expectations."

And according to Jacobs, inventory is constantly purged, keeping it up to date.

Jacobs believes the exchange provides a lot more information than other sites such as Amazon.com or E-bay.

"It's really taking off," Jacobs said. "It's not surprising that within 15 months, membership has grown to well over 100,000 [people]." Jacobs said. "We have gotten very nice comments from a lot of people." he said.

"Where have you been all my college life?'" said Jacobs, summarizing the responses he has received from students.

"The high cost of education is significantly compounded by the cost of textbooks," Jacobs said.

"We know students spend

Continued on page 3

Wrecked car was stolen, police say

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Police Department announced yesterday that the driver of the 1991 gray Oldsmobile Cutlass that flipped over Wednesday morning on Sunset Avenue was drunk and that the car he was driving was stolen.

Kevin Sicard, 42, of Easthampton initiated the chase when he fled from a police traffic stop on Sunset Avenue, said police department detective Janine Bonaire. He was stopped after the Cutlass was recognized as a stolen vehicle.

Sicard sustained "minor" facial injuries, according to Bonaire. No passengers were in the car when the accident occurred, the department said.

The chase, which startled many students in the Southwest Residential Area, ended Wednesday when Sicard accelerated down Sunset Avenue, driving the car into the traffic island at the intersection with Massachusetts Avenue. The car then became airborne and landed upside down in the street.

The Amherst Fire Department arrived to extinguish the wreckage when it caught fire after landing on the ground. The University of Massachusetts Police Department brought two officers to the scene to assist in Sicard's arrest.

The chase was not in progress for more than a few seconds, Bonaire said and it covered only a section of Sunset Avenue.

Sicard was arrested on several charges including an outstanding warrant for his arrest issued by a different police department. His charges directly related to this arrest are reckless operation of a

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
PENSION PLAN STATE REFUSES BULGERS' REQUESTS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
OUT OF THIS 'WORLD' MTV AUDITIONS TEST ANXIETY
SPORTS PAGE 8
SOX CLINCH SECOND INNING RALLY LEADS TO WILD CARD
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Ballot check

University of Massachusetts freshman Susannah Kirkpatrick and Mike Nelson, a sophomore engineering major, vote in yesterday's SGA elections. Aubrey Phillibert, a junior economics major, mans the voting table at Franklin Dining Hall. As of 12:30 a.m., referendum questions 1 and 2 were expected to pass, and questions 3 and 4 were expected to fail, according to members of the SGA. About 1,500 students voted in the election.

Bomb blast kills eight Iraqis

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — An explosion at a market outside Baghdad killed eight Iraqis and wounded another 13 Thursday, hours after a bomb damaged an NBC News office and a member of the U.S.-appointed government died from wounds received in an ambush five days ago.

The market in Baqubah, about 30 miles north of Baghdad, is believed to have been struck by a mortar, U.S. military spokesman Sgt. Danny Martin said.

Earlier Thursday, a bomb damaged a hotel housing the offices of NBC News, raising fears of attacks against international media. A Somali guard was killed and an NBC sound engineer was slightly wounded in the early morning explosion at the small al-Aike Hotel in the city's fashionable Karrada district.

Meanwhile, a member of Iraq's Governing Council, Aquila al-Hashimi, died from wounds suffered when six men in a pickup truck ambushed her near her Baghdad home. This was the first time violence claimed the life of a member of the U.S.-appointed administration.

In the north, eight American soldiers were wounded — including three seriously — when their convoy was ambushed with roadside bombs and small-arms fire in Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city.

The tenuous security situation prompted U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to order a further reduction in U.N. international staff in Iraq after two bombings at U.N. headquarters, including one on Aug. 19 that killed 22 people.

And the commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, warned he would use whatever force necessary to defeat those who attack American soldiers.

But use of force has led to "friendly fire" deaths in Iraq. On Thursday, the military said U.S. soldiers shot and killed two Iraqi policemen in Fallujah on Aug. 9.

Col. Bill Darley, a spokesman with coalition joint task force, told The Associated Press that an Army investigation found that the soldiers acted in accordance with the rules of engagement. He identified the soldiers as members of the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, part of the 1st Armored Division's 3rd Brigade.

Darley did not give further details.

On Sept. 12, U.S. soldiers killed eight Iraqi policemen and a Jordanian hospital guard near Fallujah. The police were chasing a car known to have been involved in highway banditry.

Future of 'do-not-call' legislation uncertain

By David Ho
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With remarkable speed and near unanimity, Congress on Thursday passed legislation intended to ensure consumers can block many unwanted telemarketing calls. But whether the service millions of Americans signed up for takes effect next week was thrown into doubt when a second federal court judge ruled the list violates free speech protections.

U.S. District Judge Edward W. Nottingham in Denver blocked the list late Thursday, handing another victory to telemarketers who argued the national registry is unconstitutional and will devastate their industry.

His decision came shortly after the House and Senate voted overwhelmingly for a bill making clear that the Federal Trade Commission has the power to enforce the "do-not-call" list. The legislation was prompted by an earlier ruling by a federal judge in Oklahoma City who said the FTC lacked the power to create and operate the registry.

The House voted 412-8 and the Senate 95-0 for the bill. President Bush said he looked forward to signing it. "Unwanted telemarketing calls are intrusive, annoying and all too common," he said in a statement.

The list that would block an estimated 80 percent of telemarketing calls is supposed to be effective Wednesday, but it's unclear whether legal issues will be settled by then. Even after Bush signs the legislation, the FTC must win in court for the list to move forward.

Despite the uncertainty, the FTC is encouraging people to continue signing up for the list at the Web site www.donotcall.gov or by calling 1-888-382-1222. The FTC asked U.S. District Court Judge Lee R. West to block the order he issued Tuesday declaring the agency lacked proper authority to oversee the list. He declined Thursday and the FTC immediately appealed to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The FTC had no immediate comment on Nottingham's ruling, but it also probably will end up with the 10th Circuit.

During brief debates, House and Senate members made it clear they want the list.

"Clearly the court's decision was misguided," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., referring to West. "The measure before us makes crystal clear the commission can and should proceed with the do-not-call list."

He said the ruling has "served as a rallying cry for the tens of millions of American households who signed up for the registry."

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said no one likes "hopping up and down like jackrabbits to answer the phone and then hear somebody on the phone try to sell you something. It drives you crazy."

Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, said he is confident West's decision will be overturned.

"We should probably call the bill 'This Time We Really Mean It Act' to cure any myopia in the judicial branch," he said.

The ruling caught lawmakers off guard but they responded with remarkable speed. Bills can take months or even years to pass, but the do-not-call legislation was drafted and approved in both chambers in little more than 24 hours.

The rapid response underscored the popularity of the list, which after fewer than four months already has nearly 51 million numbers.

"This legislation got to the House floor faster than a consumer can hang up on a telemarketer at dinnertime," said Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass.

Being a student,
you can live without a lot of things.

Cable shouldn't be one of them.

Get your first month of select Comcast Digital Cable packages featuring HBO for just $1!
Add Comcast High-Speed Internet for just $1 more! Plus get FREE basic installation!

1-877-407-7806 • comcast-ne.com

Comcast

HBO MTV Discovery Channel MTV2

*Comcast may not service your address. All services are not available in all areas. Offer available in Comcast servicable areas only. Restrictions may apply. For restrictions, minimum requirements and complete details about service and prices, call 1-877-407-7806. Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold and Comcast High-Speed Internet: customer offer includes basic installation and one month of service for each product. Offer does not apply to services to which customer currently subscribes. Offer does not include Standard Cable, Federal, State and Local taxes, franchise fees, other related fees or equipment charges. After first month, published rate card rate for Comcast Digital Plus, Digital Silver, Digital Gold, and Comcast High-Speed Internet applies. Installation offer is valid for new customers only and does not apply to non-residential or non-standard installations, including installations over 150 ft. from outside cable system. Offer available to residential customers located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas only (and is not available to current or former Comcast customers with unpaid balances). Additional charges for non-standard installation, wiring beyond, and materials may apply for homes not yet wired for cable. Certain services are available separately or as part of other levels of service, and all programming and services are not available in all areas. You must rent a converter and remote control for an additional charge to receive certain services. Installation, additional outlet, change of service, programming access and other charges may apply. Franchise fees, taxes and other fees may apply. Pricing, programming, channel location and packaging may change. Offer applies to one TV. Not valid with any other discount or coupon for Comcast services. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. Comcast Digital Cable service is subject to terms and conditions of Comcast Cable Policies & Practices. Ethernet device is required for Comcast High-Speed Internet service and may be purchased from Comcast or through a local retail location for an additional fee. Actual speeds vary. Minimum computer system requirements apply. Offer expires 10/05/03. ©2003 Comcast. All rights reserved. ©2003 Home Box Office, Inc. All rights reserved. HBO® is a service mark of Home Box Office, Inc.

A15-090103-ABC

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What do you think of 'The Real World' and 'Road Rules' tryouts held on Tuesday? Did you participate?"

junior
History major

"I don't think that anyone from Amherst will make it, and anyone who waited in line to try out wasted three hours of their lives."
Tim Macugha

freshman
Political science major

"I would have gone, but it was raining."
Yasmina Serdareic

sophomore
Theater major

"I went, and I loved playing the hurry-up-and-wait game to be placed around a table for .2 seconds and realize that people are willing to say and do anything to have their face on TV."
Jared Bonfiglio

sophomore
Sociology major

"I think that people are getting way too excited about it, because they are going to go to so many schools to pick people."
Marisa Feola

senior
Theater major

"I went just for the hell of it."
Caitlin Jafffe

junior
Psychology major

"If you want to do it, why not?"
Katie Lewin

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Ferrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant News Ferron Salniker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Bob McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts summer and winter. The Collegian is entirely independently funded through advertising revenue. Established in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life and the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Police chase

Continued from page 1

motor vehicle, failure to stop for police, operating with a revoked license, a third offence for operating under the influence of alcohol and a charge for the stolen vehicle he was driving.

Sicard failed a field sobriety test on the scene. The accident itself also indicates alcohol involvement, Bonaire said.

"We have to take into consideration the fact that he just rolled on a car too," she said.

Sicard failed a Breathalyzer test administered at the station, the department said. Also, alcohol may have been found in the car when police went to Amherst Towing to examine the wreckage, Bonaire said.

According to Bonaire, Sicard gave no additional statement to the department.

Arrests in Amherst

Two University of Massachusetts students were arrested Wednesday night in Amherst Center on charges of disorderly conduct, assault and battery and resisting arrest.

Robert Rizzo, 21, and David Pomeroy, 21, along with Christopher Pomeroy, 22, who is not a student at UMass, were allegedly found fighting in front of the Bananarama Juice Bar in Amherst Center.

Officer Brandon Seymour first saw them, and other officers arrived to assist in the arrest, the Amherst Police Department said. The three allegedly resisted the offers in their attempted arrest, the department said.

"These idiots decided they wanted to fight with the police instead of being arrested and they were all arrested," said police department detective Janine Bonaire.

The UMass students are brothers of fraternity Zeta Beta Tau.

All three were intoxicated at the time of the arrest, the department said.

They were released on bail Wednesday night and were arraigned yesterday.

— Morris Singer

TextbookX.com: online marketplace

Continued from page 1

anywhere from $600 to $700 and even up to $1,000 dollars for books through the course of a year," he said. "It can be quite an added burden when they are already struggling to pay for their college tuition.

"Creating a national market place through the Internet is an ideal solution," said Jacobs, who believes it is an obvious economical and ecological solution to reuse books.

The exchange offers significantly discounted prices on new and used books. According Jacobs, traditional buyback programs at campus bookstores offer 40 to 50 percent of the purchase price if the book will be reused and zero to 50 percent if not. However, if a student is willing to use the previous edition of a textbook, which many times contains only slight variations to the newer version, savings of up to 90 percent can be common through the exchange.

"For current editions it's quite common to get 50 percent off," Jacobs said.

Students and others list their books according to price and condition. Pictures and information that describes the condition of books based on factors such as highlighting, underlining and other such wear, are also available. The exchange also doesn't pay sellers until three days after the buyer receives his books and has a chance to evaluate their condition.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0080
90, AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

BURGERS • WINGS • BEER
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
LATE NIIGHT MENU TIL' MIDNIGHT
PING PONG
DARTS
POOL
LIVE MUSIC
NO COVER CHARGE
EVERYTHING UNDER ONE ROOF
OCMP
JAZZ • BLUES • FUNK • KARAOKE
253-4400
24 North Pleasant Street • www.amherstbrewing.com • Amherst Center
September 28th
Few and Far Between Bluegrass
September 27th
Oktoberfest Celebration!
Scheister Meisters-4-6
Raider Eddie-10pm

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN
Flyers • Newsletters • Posters • Banners • Business Cards
And other layout platforms
Phone: 413.545.1864 Fax: 413.545.3699
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bulger's greed grows larger

State retirement officials made the right choice yesterday in denying pension bids to the Bulger brothers. William had asked that his annual pension be increased by another $32,000 for an astronomically high total pension of $230,000.

The board ruled that state prohibits the annuity and housing allowance from being included in the pension, as William had asked. The current pension William will be receiving is still among the highest in state history. In addition to Bulger's pension, he has also been granted a $1 million severance package. The request from William to take additional state pension money from taxpayers of Massachusetts was greedy and unfair.

Besides insulting taxpayers, William showed no regard for students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts system, where he once served as president. The UMass system is currently suffering from an endless string of budget cuts and fee increases. Bulger knew that the current economy has made for very difficult times at UMass. His request only added salt to the wound.

John "Jackie" Bulger had asked for reinstating his $3,700 monthly checks, which the state had been withholding since May after he pleaded guilty to charges that he was interfering with efforts to capture his fugitive mobster brother, James "Whitey" Bulger. The retired Boston Juvenile Court clerk magistrate was sentenced earlier this month to six months in federal prison.

"Whitey" has long eluded police officials in the nation and John's role in helping his brother flee capture and later trying to seek money from the state is abhorrent.

It is ironic that John has requested money that essentially comes out of state taxpayers' pockets when at the same time he is also aiding "Whitey" — who is also costing taxpayers money thanks to continued efforts to find him.

Part of the role of an active state worker is to follow the law and be a good citizen. That role should not stop when the worker enters retirement. Citizens in Massachusetts and students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts should be relieved the state made the right decision in refusing to grant both requests.

The rejection of both requests yesterday did not seem political. Romney has been attacking William for a long time for failing to cooperate with authorities in the search for his fugitive brother. But William's request was unnecessarily high. John's request was unfair after he admitted that he has assisted his brother in hiding from U.S. officials.

The next step following the board's decision should be to focus on the state's university system, from which at least 11 retirees receive annual pension payments of more than $100,000 when the average state retiree receives a pension of just $18,000. It seems obvious that UMass' retirees have underhandedly manipulated the system by asking for more money than they should have thanks to greed.

It is our hope that yesterday's decision to shoot down the requests of the Bulger brothers will set a precedent for the future: that bogus requests continue to be refused and, even more importantly, that unreasonably high pension plans be avoided altogether.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Information from The Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Hello Mr. Speaker

Emilie Duggan

Some of the feedback I received for my last column berated me for making a "scapegoat" out of Student Government Association Speaker, Jared Nokes. In reality, I didn't have to do anything. Jared Nokes did a stellar job of making a scapegoat out of himself. Much to my delight, he's still doing it, too.

It's coming to light, Mr. Nokes, that you are just as underhanded and slimy as I thought you were. Your carefully crafted existence of deceit is starting to fall in around you. The Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Michael Gargano, has gone on record saying that he believes you are practicing "backdoor politics."

As a member of your Coordinating Council, Levi O'Brien has come forward to tell the truth of how you appointed him – telling him he had been promoted after the final meeting adjourned rather than having it offered up for vote, as the bylaws mandate.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that you used the Constitution to back up your reasoning when it came to the elimination of the ALANA Caucus, making it seem that you were (on the surface, at least), a man of principle, a man that followed the letter of the law. Yet, you blatantly ignored the bylaws so that you could have a Coordinating Council consisting of people who would simply nod their heads in agreement to your agenda.

I guess Levi O'Brien was a disappointment to you, wasn't he, Mr. Nokes? He didn't pander to your wishes, choosing instead to take the high road and be honest with the student body that he represents. That was a gross misjudgment on your part, appointing him to the Council because you thought he would just follow the program.

Let's do a quick recap, shall we? Levi O'Brien has the guts to take a stand for truth. Vice Chancellor Gargano thinks you're practicing bad politics. ALANA thinks you should resign.

I think you're a liar and a hack.

You make it a practice to interpret things to suit your needs, in public, no less. Words come back to haunt, Mr. Nokes, and everything you have said is a matter of public record. You are a walking, talking contradiction that thinks he has the moral right to do whatever he pleases because of the position he holds, regardless of whom it will hurt, even if it will negatively affect the entire campus.

This is the Student Government Association, not the Levi O'Brien has the guts to take a stand for truth. Vice Chancellor Gargano thinks you're practicing back-door politics. ALANA thinks you should resign.

Jared Nokes Association. Your job is to represent all the students, not just those of your choosing. You were elected to serve us. You are included in the student body, but the student body is not just you. The sooner you realize this, the better off this campus – and you – will be.

You were offered the chance to have the matter of the ALANA Caucus debated in an open forum. Yet, you declined because you didn't want the issue to become a "matter of public opinion."

Mr. Nokes, any decision that could potentially affect the dynamic of the University's students is already a matter of public opinion. What you really meant was that you didn't want to give the student body the chance to shoot holes in your argument. It's okay, though. We don't need a public debate to do that. You do an excellent job of poking holes in your tall tales for us, every time you open your mouth.

Do you actually know what you're doing, Mr. Nokes? Or are you just faking your way through politics? It's okay if you are. All of us are faking our way through something – a class, a paper, a life. There's no shame in it, if you admit you're doing it. C'mon, sport, own up. You don't have a clue, do you?

You don't have to say anything. The answer is obvious already. You masquerade your social ineptitude behind your book smarts. If you didn't, it would become blatantly clear that you are incapable of dealing with the prospect of diversity, let alone the fact that it exists on this campus.

But, Mr. Speaker, you can only hide behind bylaws and constitutions for so long before the truth comes out. And the truth, as I see it, is that it's easier for you to cater to the whims of those who agree with your agenda, rather than take into consideration how your actions will impact the student body.

Wake up, Mr. Speaker. That's not how it works. If you continue down this self-righteous path, you're in for a damn rude awakening when you graduate. I hope you're not planning on a career in politics where you have to actually represent a community's agenda, and not your own.

'They're not like me? Hey, I don't have to worry what they think. I'll just implement my own agenda and everyone else will conform like the good little peons they are.' As long as your yes-men – are met, then who cares about the needs of everyone else you represent? Certainly, we won't notice, right? And if we do, surely no one will say anything, right?

Wrong, Mr. Nokes, we notice. And I'm saying something about it. The ALANA Caucus does not need to be eliminated, and it's starting to look like it won't be. The SGA, on the other hand, seems to need a complete overhaul.

I say we start with your seat, Mr. Speaker.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

A guide to Israel

Morris Singer

Given the ongoing debate on Israel, which has yet again flared up in recent weeks, I feel it necessary to use my space here to attend to the needs of those thirsty for information on the subject through an exploration and informative examination of the facts at hand.

The Israeli-Palestinian issue certainly has its fair share of misinformation, distorted facts and double truths, of which I find the task of correcting far too daunting for the few inches I have been given. I intend, however, to make an attempt to scratch the surface of what is really going on in the Holy Land, set opinions on the right track and make clear who is who and what causes what in this tumultuously violent, yet ultimately revered portion of the globe.

Israel has existed for 55 years. During this time, it has withstood the test of numerous wars. One such war occurred directly after it's independence was declared, when Israel was least prepared both financially and militarily. This war was waged on Israel by all of its surrounding countries in an attempt to destroy the Jewish State before its establishment could take root. Israel prevailed in this war, and remembers it in history as the War of Independence. The surrounding Arab nations refer to it as al-Naqba, or "The Tragedy."

Violence continued against the Israelis after their independence was declared and then won through victory in the war brought against them. For years, Israelis attempted to continue cultivating the land, the economy and the country through agriculture, construction, business ventures and hard work. Immigrants flocked to the land to seek refuge for their persecuted kind. They came seeking safety, opportunity and a connection to the history of a land they believed their ancestors had lived in thousands of years ago when they had come seeking refuge.

In 1964, life got more difficult for Israel's citizens when an Egyptian-born Palestinian civil engineer created the first terrorist group in opposition to them. Fatah, Yasser Arafat's group, began to set up training camps throughout the Middle East and carry out acts of violence against innocent Israelis. Arafat's philosophy was "no compromise".

When Israelis die, many say it is the fault of the Israelis because the Israelis attacked those who kill them blindly.

In addition to the new violence and atrocities, which began with Fatah, the Egyptian army began amassing a large military presence along Israel's southwestern border. When the situation intensified, Israel had no choice but to take military action to bring its borders back under control.

When Jordan entered the war, Israel had had to defend itself on that front as well. The Syrians also joined the war when the Soviets told them falsely that Israel had concentrated forces along the Israel-Syria border with intent to invade.

Despite the multi-front war, Israel prevailed. When Israel won the war, it gave back a large amount of its newly gained territory in exchange for peace. Israel had won the land through legitimate military action, which was initiated for justifiable preemptive reasons, but returned most of the land anyway.

Israel was attacked again in 1973, this time by surprise on the holiest day of the year for Jews. When nearly every Jew in Israel was in synagogue, worshiping God and fasting for Yom Kippur, they were forced to mobilize and defend their country, again on many fronts. Israel again prevailed, although it withstood significant losses.

Two Intifadas, or Palestinian uprisings, have occurred since that war. Israel has withstood significant terrorist activity against its population. Each time the Israel Defense Forces attacks a terrorist target (a military target), the response is violence and terror against innocent Israeli civilians.

When Israelis die, many say it is the fault of Israelis because the Israelis attacked those who kill them blindly. Israel continues to live and to thrive; it's citizens attempt to move on with daily life, although one never knows when a call on his cell phone is going to bring news of a dead family member or friend, killed at the hands of terrorists with the sole aspiration of murdering as many as possible.

So now that the facts have been adequately presented, I hope that more informed opinions will surface. Of course, I cannot mention everything in this column, but I believe I have presented the essential facts in truly understanding the nature of Israel, its status and its legitimacy. I hope my readers will agree.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

It's a college life

Matt Brochu

I wrote this piece almost two years ago at a pretty vulnerable and lonely time in my life. As a transfer student crammed into a corner room in Central lacking both the social skills and the desire to meet new people (in other words, a girlfriend at home.) I just wasn't all that happy. As a result, I blamed the University of Massachusetts for all my problems. Sniffle, forlorn sigh. Anyway, here's what came out.

I live in a dorm. I eat at a dining hall. I have a schedule of five classes that I get to when I can. I don't read the hundreds of pages I'm assigned. I write papers and I take exams. I am a college student, but I don't have a typical college life. Maybe it's because I'm a transfer student, or because I go home to work every weekend. But I think the college life is what I want. This is my wish list.

I want a roommate. I want to spend more time in other people's rooms than my own. I want a group of friends to eat with me so I don't have to pretend to read the paper any more during dinner. I want to steal something random from a frat. I want that the only thing that tells me I'm in a frat is the sticky floor, keeping my entire world from spinning. I want to walk home from a party at 4 a.m. in 6-degree weather in a wife-beater and shorts and not feel cold.

I want to eat a semester's worth of DC food without paying a dime. Actually, I want to eat a semester's worth of food from Wings without paying a dime. Screw that, I just want the DC not to (expletive) up the Rice Crispy treats. I want the UMASS booty shorts to be mandatory.

I want a TA who speaks English better than my '89 Honda Civic hatchback drives. I want a lifetime supply of Easy Mac. I want to protest against protestors in front of the Student Union. I want to complete a crossword puzzle from this newspaper. I want to be able to open a window in Herter when it's 97 degrees outside.

I want to paint the "ASS of UMASS" on my rock-hard pecs at a basketball game to make me look creative ... and drunk. I want a group of people to go with me to the Wu-Tang concert even if they can't name all eight members or floss on my level right thurr. I want to know someone who can make me a ridiculously fake out-of-state ID with the holographic keys all over the place. Or at the very least I want to know someone with a thirty-two-year-old friend named Roberto whose eyebrows kinda look like mine so that I can use his old one. I want to be stranded outside a bar in downtown Boston at 2 a.m. with no money and wake up the following morning in my own bed with no memory of my return trip ... and no pants.

Sit next to the hot chick in Psych 100. Unscrew your closet door to make a beer pong table.

I want to raise up, take my shirt off, twist it around my head, and spin it like a helicopter. I want to wear my second grade Spiderman pajamas to class on Halloween. I want to know who eats the vegan Native American Stew at the DC.

I want to know what the hell Pelham is. I want to be the guy in the 8-foot inflatable Minute Man suit. And then I want to fart right before I get out of the suit as a gift for the next guy. I want to see a skateboarder, a bike-rider, and a dude on one of those stupid scooters crash into each other and fall on one of the swans next to our sparkling pond.

I want to walk in on my roommate doing it. I want my obnoxious cell phone ring (set to my favorite Avril Lavigne song) to disrupt my enormous philosophy lecture, just because. I want to ask the police if it's OK to pet their attack dog Max during the Hobart riots.

Wait a second ... I did do that.

I also plan on knocking off half the list before graduating this spring, and ... (cue up sentimental "Dawson's Creek" music) ... I owe it all to my friends. So, to anyone who can identify with my pathetic former self, whether you're single or spoken-for, hot or heinous, promiscuous or prude, drunk or designated driver, get yourself the hell out there. Sit next to the hot chick in Psych 100. Unscrew your closet door to make a beer pong table.

Over the next four years of your life, 4,000 new faces will be shoved into Amherst each fall for your own personal use and exploitation. Even though they'll have 4,000 different personalities, insecurities, and annoying tendencies among them, we all have one thing in common: that we want to live, and deserve to live, a college life.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

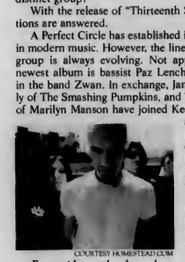
ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Changes in Circle

A retooled APC release



By Justin Marques
Collegian Correspondent

When A Perfect Circle released their first album in the summer of 2000, many wondered if the band would turn out to be just an experiment conducted by Tool front man Maynard James Keenan and guitar tech Billy Howerdel. Would Keenan let his new project fade into oblivion and concentrate more on his premier band Tool? Or would A Perfect Circle develop into their own distinct group?

With the release of "Thirteenth Step," the questions are answered.

A Perfect Circle has established itself as a power in modern music. However, the lineup of this super group is always evolving. Not appearing on this newest album is bassist Paz Lenchantin, currently in the band Zwan. In exchange, James Iha, formerly of The Smashing Pumpkins, and Twiggy Ramirez of Marilyn Manson have joined Keenan, Howerdel and drummer Josh Fresse to establish a very formidable group of musicians.

COURTESY HOMESTEAD.COM

Even with new band members A Perfect Circle hasn't changed.

This band marks the perfect outlet for its members, who previously seemed creatively stifled by their former bands. The blending of experienced musicians creates one cohesive unit. Best of all, "Thirteenth Step" sounds unlike anything else these musicians have done before.

The new lineup also makes for a very different album than A Perfect Circle's previous album "Mer De Noms." There is no standout single on the new disc, like "Judith" from "Mer De Noms." Instead, most songs create independent themes that flow into one another, fitting the tracks together very well. This is somewhat of a concept album about getting something or someone back. On the first track, "The Package," Keenan sings, "Lie to get what I came for. Take what's mine, give it to me." This theme of loss and search for redemption, and recovery of what is taken is reiterated throughout the album – especially in songs like "The Noose," "Week and Powerless" and "Gravity."

As could be expected, there are some musical overtones Keenan has borrowed from his experience as lead singer of Tool, but the sonic, sometimes over-the-top attack is kept to a minimum. Instead, Keenan focuses more on adding texture to the throughout the album by incorporating droning guitars and deep bass along with simmering, calm, almost ballad-like vocals. It's not until the end of the opening track, "The Package," that heavy, thunderous guitar work is heard.

Only a few tracks show constant metal guitar influence and rhythms, such as "Pet" and "The Outsider," which sounds like it could have been a leftover track from Tool's last album "Lateralus." Many of the other songs come across as ambient metal soundscapes, moody overtures that evoke rising and falling emotions. This subtle balance proves much more effective than a constant bombast of loud guitars, anger and rage. The listener gets the feeling that danger is only moments away.

The real road to fame runs through UMass

MTV auditions for 'The Real World'/'Road Rules'

On Tuesday, casting directors for the MTV series "The Real World" and "Road Rules" came through UMass looking for the more of the young, buff and good-looking to appear on their twin "reality" shows. Being an aspiring actor – and being deluded enough to think I was actually someone who could get on the show – I decided to head down to the Campus Center basement in an attempt to land myself a role as a semi-celebrity on MTV.

COURTESY EMILIE DUGGAN

While waiting Johnny thought up ways to use his new fame.

So after I got out of class, I made a beeline for Room 101 and ran into a long, long line of people who also believed they had what it took to join the ranks of Puck, Ruthie, Pedro and the dozens of others who made their way on the channel. Since we all pretty much did nothing but stand in line and fill out a form, there wasn't much in the way of action to report. So to kill time I decided to keep a running diary of my random thoughts while I waited for an eternity to make my way into the audition room to strut my reality TV stuff. Here is a chronicle of my journey:

12:45 I arrive at the Campus Center and promptly get in line. It's a big line: a mighty big line. I'm stuck near the bottom of the escalators. This is going to take a while. Why didn't I just skip class? I'm sure my acting teacher wouldn't have minded ...

12:55 We have to fill out a form. It asks us the basic things: our best and worst traits, our most embarrassing moments, yada yada yada. I don't want to seem too conceited, so under best traits I just write down that I'm exceptionally handsome, funny, intelligent, charming, charismatic, sexy, fun and, of course, modest.

1:04 Line jumps forward ten feet or so. Maybe it won't take so long after all.

1:13 Begin conversation with Peter, an exchange student from Adelaide, Australia. He's chosen this just for the fact he can say he auditioned for MTV. He's a nice guy; we're having a nice conversation about not getting on either show.

1:22 Waiting does not make for an interesting story. I have come to realize this.

1:22:30 There are two cute girls standing behind me. I'll use the newspaper as a hook to initiate conversation.

1:24 Liz is a junior english and communication major who's doing this for fun. She'd rather be on "The Real World" as she lacks a competitive spirit. Her roommate Sarah, a junior communication major, is also doing this for fun and would rather be on "Road Rules."

1:27 Seriously doubting I'll make it to work at Big Y in time.

1:27:30 Starting to feel like a media whore ... mainly because I am a media whore.

1:32 I am looking at the most recent photo of me, which I had stapled to my form. I've come to the realization I am not a photogenic man.

1:33 I smell fruit ...

1:41 Peter disappeared like a half hour ago, asking me to save his spot. He has yet to return. Contemplating sending a search and rescue team into the throng.

1:42 Now I smell green beans ...

1:46 Half the men are better looking than me, and the women are even more so ... I'll never get on either show.

1:50 There's a picture on the Campus Center wall of a woman who looks like John Ritter.

1:51 Definitely a media whore.

2:02 As Homer Simpson would say ... "Me Hungie!"

2:04 la la la, la di da da...

2:10 Random jingles are now passing through my head. Yeah, I'm that bored.

2:15 Kay, now I smell s'mores. Wondering if it's a bad sign that I smell random foods.

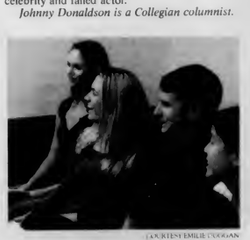
2:32 Glory and hallelujah! It's a cushion on a little wheelie cart! Someone made a mobile chair!

2:33 Best seat ever!

2:42 Okay, definitely not making work ...

2:48 Front of the line! Twelve of us are segregated from the rest of the chattering mob. Sorry, Peter, I hardly knew ye.

3:20 They finally let us 12 in to audition. Apparently the casting directors had a lunch break ... while we waited ... with no food.



3:21 Some sort of group conversation ... we introduce ourselves and discuss social issues (i.e. our thoughts on interracial romance.) A large number of the people here are afraid of spiders (including myself.) There are a couple guys from Wisconsin, and a Bostonian bartender who has met members of previous casts. I think I know one of the girls, though I'm not sure ... She looks like a girl I went to a community college with.

3:22 I'm charming, funny and charismatic, which is odd because I'm not funny, charming or charismatic.

3:22:23 Mention that I'm a proud virgin ... it'll cover at least one all-important Real World archetype – the good kid destined to be corrupted. Too bad, because I really wanted to be the skanky bad girl.

3:37 We're done. That was a bit...anticlimactic, three-hour wait for a 15-minute discussion? Well, I guess now its time to go home and wait for them to not call me. If they do ... well, then that'll set me up on the road to becoming a half-celebrity and failed actor.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY EMILIE DUGGAN

After the wait interviewees were given 15 minutes to show off before the MTV reps.

COURTESY EMILIE DUGGAN

Hundreds of UMass students woke up early, cut class and called in to work sick to make the auditions in the Campus Center basement. Even after hours of waiting and wading through a small flood, caused by a torrential rainstorm, many still hung around.

Dropkick Murphys, some kickin' concerts

Punk band rocks Pearl Street and The Paradise in one weekend

By Marcy Newhall
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — The chant of "Let's go Murphys!" rose from the crowd at Pearl Street in Northampton Sunday night. A single bagpiper took the stage and began to play the opening cords to "Cadence in Arms" and the crowd went silent. Moments later the rest of the band joined in, the crowd erupted and a wild set from the Dropkick Murphys began. This was only the beginning of two nights of shows in Massachusetts for the Dropkick Murphys.

Boston's own Irish punk band the Dropkick Murphys played Pearl Street on Sunday and returned home to play at The Paradise on Monday. The band is heavily influenced by traditional Irish music; their instrumentation includes bagpipes, an accordion, and even a tin whistle. Their blue-collar upbringing shows through with their union supporting, beer drinking and working-class lyrics.

COURTESY ANDY SCHWEGLER

Bagpiper Scruffy Wallace provides the Irish tones of the band.

Opening for the Dropkick Murphys at Pearl Street were The Disasters and The Unseen. The Disasters, led by Roger Miret formerly of Agnostic Front, got the crowd primed for the night of loud, fast, punk rock that lie ahead. With the band's tribute to The Clash and finale "New York Belongs to Me," The Disasters seized the attention of the audience and left them ready for more.

The Dropkick Murphys punk brothers from Boston, The Unseen, took the stage next. The Northampton crowd responded well to the rowdy street-punks. The Unseen's set was full of punk-rock anthems with messages that may be lost among many newcomers to punk but were fully appreciated veterans of the scene.

From the moment the eight members of Dropkick Murphys took the stage, they had the audience in an uproar. Front man Al Barr had no problem sharing the microphone with his room full of backup singers. At any given point in the set, there would be a fan onstage singing a few lines and then diving into the packed crowd that filled Pearl Street's ballroom. Ken Casey, bassist and vocalist, could speak in between sets and have the boisterous crowd's full attention. Watching the crowd and band interact with each other, the mutual respect each group has for the other was clearly visible. The bond between the Dropkick Murphys and their fans is truly unique.

COURTESY ANDY SCHWEGLER

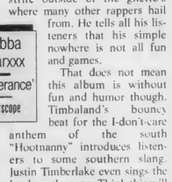
Frontman Al Barr vents anger-fueled punk lyrics onto fans, who often return the favor by getting on stage with him.

The highlight of Sunday night's show was the performance of "The Dirty Glass," in which Stephanie Dougherty sang the part of Ken Casey's former love interest. The Dropkick Murphys also performed Johnny Cash's "If I was a Carpenter" as a tribute to the man in black. The ladies in the crowd also got a special invitation to dance up on stage for the Spicy McHaggis jig led by bagpiper Scruffy Wallace. A three-song encore ended with the Dropkick's announcing a free for all and sharing the stage with all who could push their way up for "Skinhead on the MBTA".

■■■

BOSTON — Monday night's show was a true homecoming for the Dropkick Murphys, who wrapped their four-month tour in Boston with that show. Dirty Water, a group featuring former members of Boston's infamous Ducky Boys, opened the show. Fronted by Mark Lind, they were the perfect choice to welcome the Murphys' hometown fans to the show.

Despite a set similar to Pearl Street, the feel at Paradise was completely different. The event, sponsored by Guinness Beer, was by invitation only, though some lucky fans won tickets. Halfway through the set Casey asked "How many of you were on our guest list?" and 75 percent of the crowd raised hands. The crowd seemed to have camaraderie with each other, after going wild in the pit the fighters would shake hands and pat each other on the back, which is not the case in most mosh pits.



Both nights the band played straight from their hearts, seemingly feeding off the energy that their devoted fans threw at them. "We're grateful to everyone who comes to see us," Casey said. "I don't understand why all the kids keep coming back, but I thank them for it."

"Hick-hop" is hot

Bubba Sparxxx's new album is stunning

By David Pessah
Collegian Correspondent

Bubba Sparxxx: another white rapper. Timbaland: another big shot producer. "Deliverance:" another album of smart rhymes, backed by masterful beats.

So when did hip-hop producers start incorporating banjos and fiddles into their beats? And when did country boys decide to pick up a microphone? And why do they sound so good together? The answer to all these questions and more is on one compact disc: "Deliverance."

On the title track, fresh off the strumming guitar introduction, Sparxxx shares with the listener just that — his deliverance. He delivers well, discussing how the masses doubted he could make another quality album and providing introspection into the mind of an artist on the brink of his sophomore disc.

"She Tried" is a sorrowful tale of a love that got away because of the hectic schedule and outlandish lifestyle being a star lends itself to. He confesses his regrets to her, but realizes she now has what she wanted, "not a rebel with a passion for the moment" as he was.

Bubba's sentimentality and candor are refreshing compared to that other white rapper in the spotlight. There is no straightforward controversy found on this album past the usual ego-boosting rap. He even gives his fellow Caucasian rapper a shout out, while addressing to all that he is worthy of a listen. "Eminem's incredible, but did I really have to say this for ya'll to leave my soul at rest and add me to your play list," he asks on the track "Nowhere." This song also asserts that there is struggle and strife outside of the ghetto's where many other rappers hail from. He tells all his listeners that his simple nowhere is not all fun and games.

That does not mean this album is without fun and humor though. Timbaland's bouncy beat for the I-don't-care anthem of the south "Hootnanny" introduces listeners to some southern slang. Justin Timberlake even sings the hook on the song. Think this will lessen Sparxxx's street credibility? It doesn't matter, because he "don't really give a hootnanny."

Timbaland's beats never disappoint throughout, amazingly capturing the essence of southern sounds along with thumping rhythms. The array of new sounds on this album is impressive. The chemistry between the artists is astonishing.

After listening to this album, there is no questioning how Bubba's self-proclaimed "hick-hop" has reached the masses. No one will be asking if he's a gimmick, or a follower to a white rapper trend, because he's not.

The real question is, why did it take so long to sign him to a record deal, and when is his next album coming out? As some parting advice from the artist himself, "There's a portrait of the south in the spirit of the songs, keep following the fiddle, it will never steer you wrong."

The Sandman has returned

'Endless Nights' marks 10th anniversary

By Deepti Hajela
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) - It's a fan's dream come true: the Sandman is back. Seven years after he stopped writing his groundbreaking, history-making comic book series, author Neil Gaiman has returned, again telling stories about Morpheus, the King of Dreams, and his six siblings, collectively known as the Endless.

"The Sandman: Endless Nights" was released last week as a graphic novel to mark the 10th anniversary of Vertigo comics, the publisher of the series during its run in the 1990s. The new book is a collection of seven short stories, one for each member of the Endless, illustrated by artists from around the world.

Since the series ended, Gaiman has published a story about Morpheus. But "Endless Nights" is a return to the comic book form. He acknowledged a slight case of nerves when he started back, but said he soon felt right back at home with the characters.

"I felt, 'Oh my gosh, I've missed you people. This is so much fun,'" Gaiman said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Gaiman started writing the Sandman comics in 1989, and finished in 1996 after 75 issues. Along the way, he revolutionized the whole genre, introducing work that stood out for its quality writing and adult themes, rather than superheroes in costumes.

"Sandman' has been the key book that really got Vertigo noticed, and not only Vertigo but literary comics in general," said Karen Berger, vice president and executive editor at Vertigo, which is part of DC Comics.

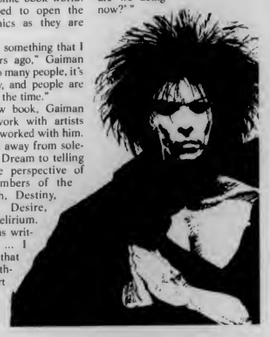
"When you look and you say, 'Can comics be considered as literature?' you look at Sandman and say yes," Berger said.

The series attracted nontraditional fans, such as women, to the comic book world. It won every major comic book award and it still sells big.

"It was a demographics-buster in terms of the normal comic book fan you think of," said Matt Brady, editor of Newsarama.com, a Web site dedicated to the comic book world. "It really helped to open the doors for comics as they are today."

"For me, it's something that I started 14 years ago," Gaiman said. "But for so many people, it's completely new, and people are coming to it all the time."

For the new book, Gaiman was able to work with artists who had never worked with him. He also moved away from solely focusing on Dream to telling tales from the perspective of the other members of the Endless Death, Destiny, Destruction, Desire, Despair and Delirium.



"When I was writing Sandman ... I always felt that sometime the others got short shrift," he said.

And it was also a chance to step away from the novels he's been writing since the series ended.

"When I'm writing a novel, I find myself missing comics," he said.

After working on "Endless Nights" for the last two years, Gaiman is heading back to straight novels. He is contracted to write two books, which means saying goodbye to Dream and the Endless for at least the immediate future.

"I have to put my novelist hat back on," Gaiman said. But "when my novelist hat comes off again, I will look around and blink and call Karen (Berger) and say, 'OK, what are we doing now?' "

Husky week continues

Continued from page 8

scoring spree by tapping in a loose ball in front of the cage with two minutes to go.

In one half of a game, the Huskies managed to match the number of goals (seven) the Minutewomen have scored all season.

The barrage continued just 42 seconds into the second half, when Dixon raced to the net untouched, and beat Tocco to tally her first hat trick of the season. Creatini rounded out the scoring with the final two goals of the game at 38:40 and 40:42 for her own hat trick.

Webber had three assists for the day, while Creatini and Leigh Shea tallied one apiece. Creatini is now tied for eighth on Northeastern's career goals list (37), and ninth on the career points list (92).

Defensively, the Minutewomen had a world of trouble trying to keep Northeastern's high-powered offense, led by Creatini, Singelais and Dixon, out of the circle. The Huskies outshot the Minutewomen 30-0, and dominated the penalty corners 15-1.

"[Tocco] has been doing good stopping shots, but [she] can only do so much. [We] can't allow that many opportunities," Coach Shea said.

The 10-0 loss is the worst defeat in Minutewomen history, and only the second time in the history of the program that they have ever let up ten goals. On October 4, 1997, the Minutewomen managed to net two goals in a 10-2 loss against North Carolina, in Chapel Hill.

The Huskies keep coming tomorrow, too.

After five straight losses, the Minutewomen continue their search for a win in Storrs, Conn. tomorrow at 1 p.m. against rival Connecticut. UConn (5-3) has swept the last three meetings between the two teams. The Maroon and White's last win, a 2-1 victory at Garber Field, came in 2000.

"It's a big game, they're a big rival. I mean, we want to beat everyone, but it's always in the back of your mind. 'This is UConn,'" junior Adrianne Monaco said.

The Minutewomen's coach also recognized the rivalry.

"There's a lot of history with UConn," Shea said. "There's a huge rivalry, and it's a pretty unique game. We're mirror institutions, we're mirrored in everything we do."

UConn seniors Mary Jo Malone and Maureen Butler were both awarded Big East Player of the Week honors on Monday. Malone, who is currently leading the league conference in goals (nine), was named Offensive Player of the Week. Butler's goaltending has been impeccable, and she has been named Defensive Player of the Week twice. Her five shutouts leads the conference.

The Huskies have been managing 16.7 shots per game, while the Minutewomen have managed just 6.6. Tocco, who has made 98 saves in just nine games this season, will be crucial to stopping the UConn offense. However, the UMass defense will need to be more protective of the circle than it has been so far this season. Opponents have penetrated the UMass defense to the tune of 193 shots this season, compared to the UConn back corps, which has only allowed 60 shots.

In contrast, the UMass offense has taken 59 shots in their nine games, while the Huskies have managed 117 shots in their eight games.

"We've not been able to play a solid 70 minutes. We have good spurts, but we let down at times which is when the opponent takes advantage of the opportunities we give them," said Monaco.

There is good reason for the Minutewomen to come together in tomorrow's game. The history between the schools goes back to 1981, when the NCAA held its first championship field hockey game. The Huskies won that game 4-1, and the legacy of that rivalry continues tomorrow.

Men's soccer takes on UNH

Continued from page 8

they do, but they have a very direct team, so we have to cut down their service and make it hard for them to put balls over the top."

The Maroon and White is coming off a close double-overtime 2-1 win over Siena and a 5-1 shellacking of BU.

Siena (0-5) posed to be a bigger problem for the Minutemen than expected. After a big game against BU and a two-hour van ride, UMass needed a chance to regain their composure and it almost cost them the game.

"Playing at their place was certainly an issue because [we] didn't play well in the first half," Koch said. "Siena looked at our game the way we looked at the BU game, so they were emotionally focused and ready to play.

"I give our guys a lot of credit because we could have lost the game and they didn't, they regrouped, they came back in the second half and they won it in overtime."

This week, senior forward Prah Myers earned Atlantic 10 player of the week honors. Myers leads the team in scoring with four goals. His most recent came in the second overtime against Siena, giving his team the 2-1 win.

The persistence of the Minutemen offense and the determination of the defense confirm their strength as a team.

"We're playing smarter," Koch said of his defense. "We still have a ways to go, but certainly we're improving.

"What you want is the NCAA tournament berth, that's what everybody's driving for."

Freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman (3-0-0), has allowed just two goals, made nine saves and registered one shutout in three starts.

Women's soccer gets back to work

Continued from page 8

NSCAA/Soccerbuzz second-team All-Northeast and Soccerbuzz's National Player of Year for first year programs as a sophomore. After three seasons leading Binghamton in scoring, she is ranked third on the school's all-time points list with 104.

"Tracy Kasmarcik is a very good forward," Kausamen said. "She is also a very accomplished player. [Her playing style] doesn't look pretty, but gets the job done."

Kasmarcik is currently playing alongside her probable successor as Bearcat scoring champion. Blessed with great speed and athleticism, freshman forward Danielle White is another key player to watch for on Sunday. White has started her collegiate career with a bang, leading the Bearcats with 11 points in nine games.

The Minutewomen will focus upon their own scoring issues along with containing the two Binghamton threats. The Maroon and White hasn't put a crooked number on the board in three games. Finding the back of the net has been a problem with three important scorers — Boston College transfer Lindsey Fairweather, last season's leading scorer Erin Lilly and this season's leading scorer Adair Blyler — recovering from various injuries.

"The offense is the last thing to come around," Kausamen said. "The shuffling of the lineup [due to injury] could be the problem. Once we started getting into the offense like at Rhode Island, we started losing players. If we can get the first goal against Binghamton and get on a good roll, I believe the confidence will flow from there."

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at both Amherst locations only.
Original roll developing only.
Offer ends:
Sept. 30, 2003

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated" 0243006
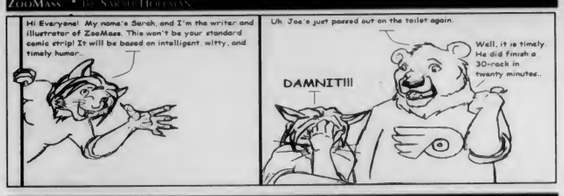
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 '90, AMHERST

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
73 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

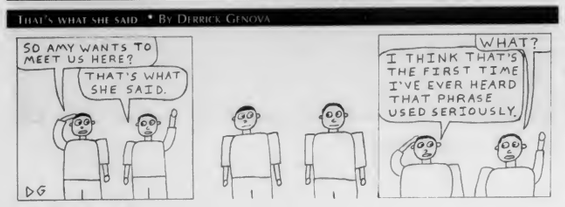
King Tut at MikesMaze/Warner Farm
50 Main Street (Rt. 47) Sunderland
$5 with Student ID
• there's corny mazes
• Corn Cafe, games,
• enormous potato cannon,
• hayrides, corn traffic control tower
• & the great bailing twine PYRAMID!
Weekends, holidays, Aug.30-Nov. 2 11AM- 5PM
More info? call 413-665-8331 or www.mikesmaze.com

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

MUSIC • SOFTWARE • MOVIES • BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101



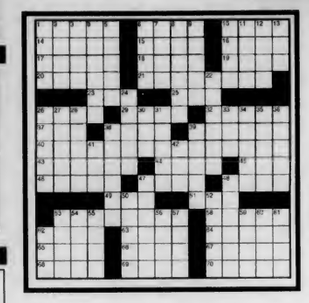
EXPRESS/ STRUCTURE
Warehouse Clothing Sale
Mon - Thur 9 to 8
Fri - 9 to ???
GOT CLOTHES?
1st Quality Merchandise
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Don't Miss Out!!!
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
Sept. 22nd thru Sept. 26th
WAREHOUSE SALE
Student Union Ballroom



HALLOWEEN Extravaganza
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL YOUR HALLOWEEN NEEDS!
In the Hampshire Mall, near J.C. Penney.
Mention this ad and get 10% off your purchase with a Student ID!

Quote for the Day

"I won't bite ... hard."



-Austin Powers

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Take it all off
6 Music notation
10 Spouse
14 First rate
15 Slope
16 Mad scientist's workplace
17 Warehouses
18 Soprano's rendition
19 Fawn or doe
20 Garret
21 Calmed
23 Isaac Newton's title
25 Wrath
26 Delhi housemaid
29 Border on 32 Sailor
37 Badge wearer
38 Tyrant
39 Comic — Picard
40 Caller hero (2 wds.)
43 Cream puff kin
44 Every
45 Get the message
46 Parasol part
47 Peace Prize city
48 Uncool one
49 Wrench pocket
51 Corporal, briefly
53 Hammerlock pro
58 Wee lord of
62 Colorado ski resort
63 Aloe
64 Stage whisper
65 Rainbow shapes
66 Incoming plane stats
67 Pine tree product
68 Kid
69 Actress — Russo
70 Height, to a cager

DOWN
1 Humera org.
2 Stow run
3 Kind of squad
4 Mischievous
5 "My Cousin Vinny" star
6 Bird's beak
7 Mideast money, formerly
8 Draw out
9 Knack
10 Long skirt
11 Film script writer James —
12 Drove a rail
13 Tilt-a-Whirl
19 Be Off Base
22 Charm
24 Shaving need
26 Joint problems
27 Sponge off of
28 Pie ingredient
30 Outwear
31 Yens
33 Farm workers
34 Outdo Bravo
35 Type of vinegar
36 Entered data
38 Bluffs
39 Georgia city
41 Rock's Idol
42 Ripken of baseball
47 Lily brother
48 Rackets
50 Different
52 Nurse
Corpin
53 Caribou
54 Haystack
55 Fishing that
56 Field for Ma
57 Thorny blossom
58 Part of SWAK
59 Singer — Adams
61 Bumper flaw
62 Fana

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish & Chips
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Salmon Miso
- Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 71
- Low: 56

SATURDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 63

SUNDAY
- High: 76
- Low: 51

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Adam Shane

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't allow others to take advantage of your good nature and kind heart.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You feel like a big fish in a small pond, keep swimming, the pond gets bigger.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are so hot right now, keep working it. Holla!

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go dropkick a murphy, it'll make you feel good.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're a really good person. Your bubbliness truly shows through.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Head up to the lake for some end of the season relaxing.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
Don't lie, the only way to cover a lie is with another lie. It's a vicious cycle.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Call your mother, or your father, whoever, just don't talk to me.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Dont play head games with your related love interests. They are on to you.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't bail on your obligations, it screws other people over.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Spend some time getting to know your inner qi, it's tough to harness.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't be a tool. No one likes a tool.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Merc.Sable Wag. '94 Runs Great. Gd. Cond. Reliable trans. Recent Sticker. $1050. B/O Call 549-7455

AUTO REPAIR

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Mad Science: Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.50/hour call 545-6837 or write jkingston@linguist.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xsratic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Futon great condition Thick Mattress $150.00 O/B/O KariSlyn@aol.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit-www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for a quiet, non-smoking female roommate 2 share 2 Bedroom Apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker or consumer? The Student Legal Services Office provides free help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa As Seen on TV Ceramic Asian Hair Straightening *Smooth, Soft, Shiny, Straight Hair. Call 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004! Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Free Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@rnlaw.net, www.robertnicholsesq.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sox clinch Wild Card

Second inning rally clinches playoff berth for Boston

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The Red Sox are back in the playoffs for the first time since 1999, looking for their first World Series title in quite a bit longer.

Derek Lowe held Baltimore to two hits over six innings, and Jason Varitek, Nomar Garciaparra and Kevin Millar homered as Boston clinched the last spot in the AL playoffs by beating the Orioles 14-3 Thursday night.

The Red Sox, who have made the postseason 10 times since 1918 without winning a championship, are four games ahead of the Seattle Mariners in the AL wild-card race with three games remaining.

Baltimore	3
Red Sox	14

"These fans deserve this, and they definitely deserve a World Series championship," second baseman Todd Walker said on the field during a raucous celebration.

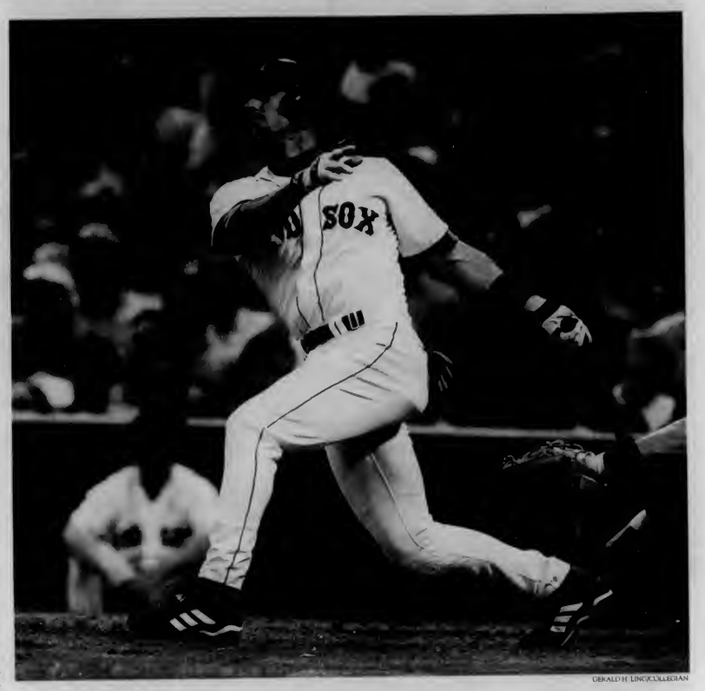
Boston's win also finalized the AL matchups for the first round: Minnesota will play against the Yankees starting Tuesday in New York, and Boston will open the following day at Oakland.

Playing before a full ballpark for the 64th consecutive home game, the Red Sox quickly gave the crowd of 34,526 something to cheer about. It was 12-0 after four innings, and the rest of the night was just a prelude to the celebration.

With the crowd cheering, flashbulbs popping and the Red Sox perched on the dugout steps; Ramiro Mendoza struck out Brian Roberts to end the game. The Boston players poured out of the dugout for a somewhat subdued celebration — it didn't even match the one that greeted David Ortiz's 10th-inning homer two games earlier.

But this time they had hats, T-shirts and champagne.

Gabe Kapler and Tim Wakefield sprayed the fans with bubbly, while Garciaparra went out to the outfield to applaud the fans. Millar took a microphone to the pitcher's mound and reprised his embarrassing "Rally Karaoke Guy."



"It's time to 'Cowboy Up,' " said Millar, a Texan who inspired the team's motto. "We're going to take this thing to the next level."

Manager Grady Little emptied his bench after five innings, and Lowe (17-7) left after six with the victory all but secure. The Red Sox won't be back at Fenway Park until Game 3 of the playoffs, on Oct. 4.

Lowe did not give up a hit through 4 1-3 innings. He wound up allowing one earned run and four walks while striking out one.

Bill Mueller went 3-for-5 to raise his league-leading batting average to .327, adding two runs and three RBIs for Boston.

Baltimore couldn't muster so much as a hit against Lowe until there was one out in the fifth and Luis Matos hit a high bouncer that stopped about halfway to third base. Lowe, who pitched Boston's last no-hitter on April 27, 2002, appeared disappointed, so Varitek went out to the mound to talk to him and give the fans a chance to cheer.

GERALD H. LINO/COLLEGIAN

Nomar Garciaparra's three-run homer capped off a five-run second inning for the Red Sox, who trounced the Orioles 14-3 to clinch the American League Wild Card. The Red Sox will take on Oakland in the first round of the playoffs.

Week of rest comes to an end

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Dealing with key injuries and a three-game losing streak on their hands, the Massachusetts women's soccer team needed a break after a disappointing start. With coach Jim Rudy out of his office yesterday, the squad was given the day off to lick its battle wounds after a highly physical 1-0 loss to Central Connecticut on Wednesday.

While the players rest and relax, their minds will be focusing on the upcoming contest against Binghamton University at Rudd Field Sunday. The game is essential for momentum as this is the final game before the Minutewomen (2-3-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10) begin the rest of the conference season against George Washington.

In its first A-10 game, the Maroon and White downed Rhode Island 4-1 on Sept. 5.

The last meeting between Binghamton (5-4, 0-1 America East) and the Maroon and White, a 6-2 UMass win on Sept. 16, 2001, was the first game the Minutewomen played after the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11. It was also the first-ever meeting between the two teams.

"Binghamton isn't anyone we can look over," UMass assistant coach Jorma Kausamen said. "There are a lot of similarities to this game as the UNH game. They also lost big to West Virginia like UNH previous to our game and [UNH] was able to get a draw from us. If we don't come out to play from the first minute, they could steal one on us."

The Minutewomen battled to a 1-1 draw with the New Hampshire Wildcats on Sept. 10.

Since Binghamton joined Division I in 2001, senior superstar Tracy Kasmarcik has been the team's driving force behind the team's leap to the big time. Kasmarcik was named to the

Continued on page 6

Streak on the line

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's soccer team looks to extend its winning streak to five as it travels to Durham, N.H. Saturday to take on the Wildcats.

It is the last chance for the Minutemen (5-2) to work out the kinks before conference play begins and the road to an Atlantic 10 championship commences.

"We don't have any games this week so we're anxious to play an opponent," coach Sam Koch said. "It's still a big New England game for us so we want to do well in preparation for the conference games coming up."

Going into this game, the Wildcats (5-2), are coming off of their first conference win of the season. They posted a winning record in the 2002 season, and they possess a lot of talent evenly distributed throughout the field.

Senior back Brendan Hankard is an obstacle the UMass offense will look to find ways around. Last season, Hankard earned first team honors in the America East, and on the National Soccer Coaches Association of America All-New England team. He was named to the America East All-Championship team and is also a two-time America East player of the week. Hankard is making his mark this season as well, with two goals.

Although the Wildcats pose a threat to the Minutemen's four-game winning streak, Koch is more concerned with his teams play.

"We have to focus on the way we play. We have to be aware of what they do, we have to respect what

Continued on page 6

Huskies' bite worse than bark

Northeastern takes off on 10-goal rout

By Brendan Hall and Paula Aden
Collegian Correspondents

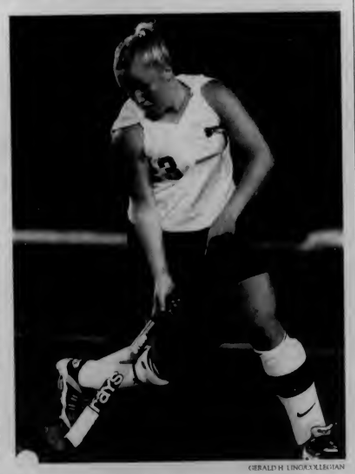
The Massachusetts field hockey team just can't get away from Huskies. The Minutewomen arrived at Sweeney Field in Boston on Wednesday looking to improve its game, facing off against No. 13 Northeastern. What resulted was a 10-0 shutout by the Huskies, who dominated just about every aspect of the game.

The loss drops The Minutewomen to 2-7, while Northeastern's victory bumps their record up to 7-3.

The Huskies' Junior Mari Creatini netted her third hat trick of the season, and assisted on an additional one. Creatini now leads the nation in scoring, with 18 goals and seven assists for 43 points. Junior Liane Dixon also tallied a hat trick, her first, while redshirt freshman Natalie Singelais scored two. Senior Leigh Shea and sophomore Jay Quinn rounded out the scoring with one goal apiece.

The Minutewomen found themselves on the defensive for most of the game. Junior netminder Christine Tocco managed 15 saves, despite letting up 10 goals. Tocco currently leads the Atlantic 10 Conference in saves, with 98.

UMass coach Patty Shea expressed disapproval of her team's performance.



"We just didn't go out there and play," she said. "There are certain things that must be done to have a good game. We didn't do what we need to do."

The Huskies controlled the game from start to finish. Singelais started the scoring frenzy 5:58 into the game, followed by a nice goal off of a corner play by Creatini at 8:41, the first of her three goals. Quinn next launched one in from ten yards out, at the ten-minute mark. Dixon scored her first of three goals at 13:44, off of another corner play.

Five minutes later, Singelais slammed in her second goal of the game, making it her fourth in two games, while Dixon also tapped in her second off of a nice pass from Sara Webber at 27:01.

Leigh Shea closed out the first half

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINO/COLLEGIAN

Kristin Hopwood and the Minutewomen dropped a 10-0 decision to Northeastern Wednesday night. They'll take on UConn tomorrow.

UMASS
Weekend Schedule

Friday, Sept. 26

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Tennis	at St. Johns	2:30 p.m.

Saturday, Sept. 27

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. James Madison	1 p.m.
MSoccer	at UNH	1 p.m.
Field Hockey	at UConn	1 p.m.
Cross Country	at Syracuse	11 a.m.

Sunday, Sept. 28

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Soccer	vs. Binghamton	3 p.m.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 19

ALANA grabs 25 percent of Senate, wins in five out of seven districts

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The Office of ALANA Affairs snared about 25 percent of the Student Government Association Senate Thursday, with more than 90 percent of ALANA-sponsored candidates winning their respective races.

"We did great," said Gladys Franco, the internal chair for the ALANA Caucus. "Pretty much every ALANA student that was running won in their area."

Candidates sponsored by the Office of African, Latino/a, Asian/Pacific Islander and Native American Affairs garnered the most votes in five out of seven areas, with Pauel Payano winning Central, Eduardo Bustamante winning the commuter district, Ama Boadu winning Northeast, Rachel Deleveaux winning Southwest/South, and Aiysha Cooper winning Sylvan. Payano and Deleveaux received more votes than any other candidate, with 56 and 51, respectively.

Student Government Association Speaker Jared Nokes attributed ALANA's success at the polls to a recruitment drive that they put together over the last few weeks. The drive included phone calls, e-mails and meetings.

With 25 percent of the 66-person Senate this year, the ALANA caucus will again have a higher percentage of students on the Senate than there are ALANA students on campus. The student body includes about 17 percent ALANA students.

"If they're exceeding that [17 percent mark] by five or 10 percent, I think that shows what can be done through the electoral process," Nokes said.

Chancellor of Elections Steve Hoeschele and Nokes were both very happy with the high student turnout for the election. Hoeschele estimated that 10 percent of the campus voted, a number that nearly doubles last year's Senate elections total.

"This is a very good one-day turnout," Nokes said. "We usually get more in the [SGA] presidential election [in the spring], but that's over two days."

Franco said she believes that the ALANA campaign had not only a positive effect on the results for ALANA, but also increased awareness overall, leading to more students voting.

"If we wouldn't have done that, I don't think the ALANA community would have been so alive," Franco said.

Nokes said that with 25 percent of the Senate made up of elected ALANA-sponsored senators this year, the Senate's overall makeup will be about the same as it was last year, when it included 13 percent appointed seats, or eight appointed senators.

Nokes has chosen not to recognize the appointed seats this year, saying they conflict with the SGA Constitution.

Franco is happy with the percentage of elected ALANA senators on the Senate for this year, but said the caucus will still be working to get back the appointed seats.

Continued on page 3

Elections results

CENTRAL		write-in
Pauel Payano	59	Aaron Maloy	1
Ann Nguyen	36	write-in
D.J. Bettencourt	29	Charles Mingham	1
Michael Goldberg	25	write-in
Matthew Murphy	23	Brian Murphy	1
Arthur LePan	20	write-in
Daniel Pozmanter	17	Richard Cookson	0
Brendan Duprey	15
Erica Han	15	COMMUTER
Larry Dougher	13	Eduardo Bustamante	36
Stacey Bernadeau	12	Joey Gianusso	16
Katelyn Claffey	12	Patrick Higgins	16
Silas Lowe	10	Tomi Faust13
WidlandeRaymond	10	David Falvey	12
Marquis Hunt	9	Levi O'Brien	12
Branwen Hardebeck	6	write-in
Shawn McKenna	5	Kelly Ormond	11
Ariel Junkelowitz	2	Paul Pitts-Dilley	10
write-in
Andrew Killoy	1

Continued on page 3

NASSER ISHTAYEH/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Palestinian women carry a model of the Dome of the Rock, a Jerusalem Islamic holy site, during an anti-Israel march. The demonstration was held in the West Bank town of Nablus yesterday.

Palestinians march in support of Arafat

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Thousands of Palestinians marched through the streets of the West Bank yesterday to support Yasser Arafat marking the third anniversary of the latest violent uprising, or intefadeh, which has claimed thousands of lives.

The demonstration came as the Palestinians appeared set to appoint a new Cabinet filled with Arafat loyalists, despite efforts by the United States and Israel to sideline the Palestinian leader, whom they accuse of fomenting terror attacks.

Also yesterday, members of Islamic Jihad said one of their members was responsible for a weekend shooting attack on a West Bank settlement that killed two Israelis— one an infant — but they stopped short of claiming responsibility.

The intefadeh began Sept. 28, 2000, after Israel's then-opposition leader Ariel Sharon, now prime minister, visited the hotly contested Jerusalem holy site known to Muslims as Haram as-Sharif and to Jews as the Temple Mount.

Palestinians called the visit a provocation, because Sharon emphasized Israel's claim of sovereignty. Violent clashes followed, and grew into three years of violence marked by repeated terror attacks against Israelis and Israeli military strikes into Palestinian areas. A total of 2,477 people have been killed on the Palestinian side and 860 on the Israeli side.

Today, the "road map" peace plan, stalled but still on the table, offers the Palestinians a state by 2005 if the violence ends. If the violence continues, the result could be a complete collapse of the Palestinian Authority.

The Islamic militant group Hamas, responsible for scores of suicide bombings against Israel, marked the anniversary yesterday with a pledge to continue the uprising nonetheless.

In a statement released in Gaza, Hamas reiterated its opposition to the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan and called on the Palestinian Authority and the new Cabinet to uphold the Palestinians' right to resist the occupation.

In the West Bank city of Nablus, about 5,000 people from an array of Palestinian factions marched in support of Arafat and called for the intefadeh to continue.

Hamas supporters carried miniature versions of an Israeli bus and warplane to the center of town and burned them. Dozens of people dressed as suicide bombers wore mock explosive belts.

In Cairo, Egypt, nearly 300 people rallying to mark the anniversary called on the Egyptian government to open the door to a holy war against Israel, to expel the Israeli ambassador and to abolish the 1979 peace treaty between the two countries. The protesters were surrounded by at least 400 police officers in riot gear.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
GAY MARRIAGE: THE PUSH FOR NEW LAWS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
BEAT THE DRUM PERCUSSIONIST MILFORD GRAVES WOWS THE FAC
SPORTS PAGE 8
DUKES DOWNED MINUTEMEN BEAT JMU 31-26
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

GERALD H. LINO/COLLEGIAN

Band Day

More than 3,500 students from over 60 Northeastern high schools showed up this weekend to participate in Band Day. The event was hosted by the University of Massachusetts Marching Band and was held in conjunction with the UMass - James Madison University football game at the Alumni Stadium.

LISA POOLE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former General Electric chief executive Jack Welch, left, and Terrence O'Malley, UMass general counsel, center, listen during a UMass president search committee meeting Friday in Boston.

Search for UMass president begins

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The last nationwide search for a University of Massachusetts president ended on Beacon Hill when school trustees hired William Bulger, then state Senate president and Democratic power broker.

Eight years later, a panel of trustees and high-profile alumni are vowing a comprehensive hunt for a leader to replace Bulger, who resigned Sept. 1 under political pressure. The panel met Friday for the first time.

"We will search all corners of the nation for the person who we believe is best able to achieve the university's higher vision," said Grace Fey, chairwoman of the Board of Trustees.

Trustees gave Bulger high marks for his leadership and fund-raising abilities, but Republican Governor Mitt Romney, who appoints trustees, targeted Bulger for removal. Bulger withstood Romney's legislative attempt to eliminate his office but eventually resigned after criticism that he hasn't helped authorities capture his fugitive mobster brother, James "Whitey" Bulger.

Search committee members include former General Electric chief executive Jack Welch and former General Motors leader John Smith Jr., both UMass alumni, and Northeastern University President Richard Freeland, a former UMass administrator.

The panel, which also includes faculty members and community leaders, hopes to compile a list of preliminary candidates within two months. The committee went into a closed-door "executive session" Friday to begin discussions of names.

Dennis G. Austin, co-chairman of the search committee, stressed that names of preliminary candidates be kept confidential. If they leaked to the media, he said, it could have a chilling effect, and as a result, "we will not get the best woman or man in the United States."

Search consultant William Funk said the committee must be aggressive. Public universities Florida, Washington and Idaho, and private schools Syracuse, Rice and Duke, among others, also are searching for a president.

"This is a very, very competitive business," Funk said. "All of those institutions will be looking for individuals exactly like what we're looking for."

UMass spokesman Robert Connolly Jr. said he would not comment on any preliminary candidates. Trustees attorney Terry O'Malley said discussion of those candidates can be kept private, but not finalists.

"The courts have insisted that any discussion or vote, that is the deliberation and the actual vote, concerning finalists does have to be in open session," he said.

Romney has called on trustees to hire a president "recognized here and across the country as being one of the real leaders in the educational field." He also cautioned them against granting large severance packages.

Trustees gave Bulger, 69, a severance package worth nearly $1 million. His contract, which paid him $309,000 in salary and another $48,000 in benefits, was set to expire in 2007.

Poll: Californians in favor of recall vote

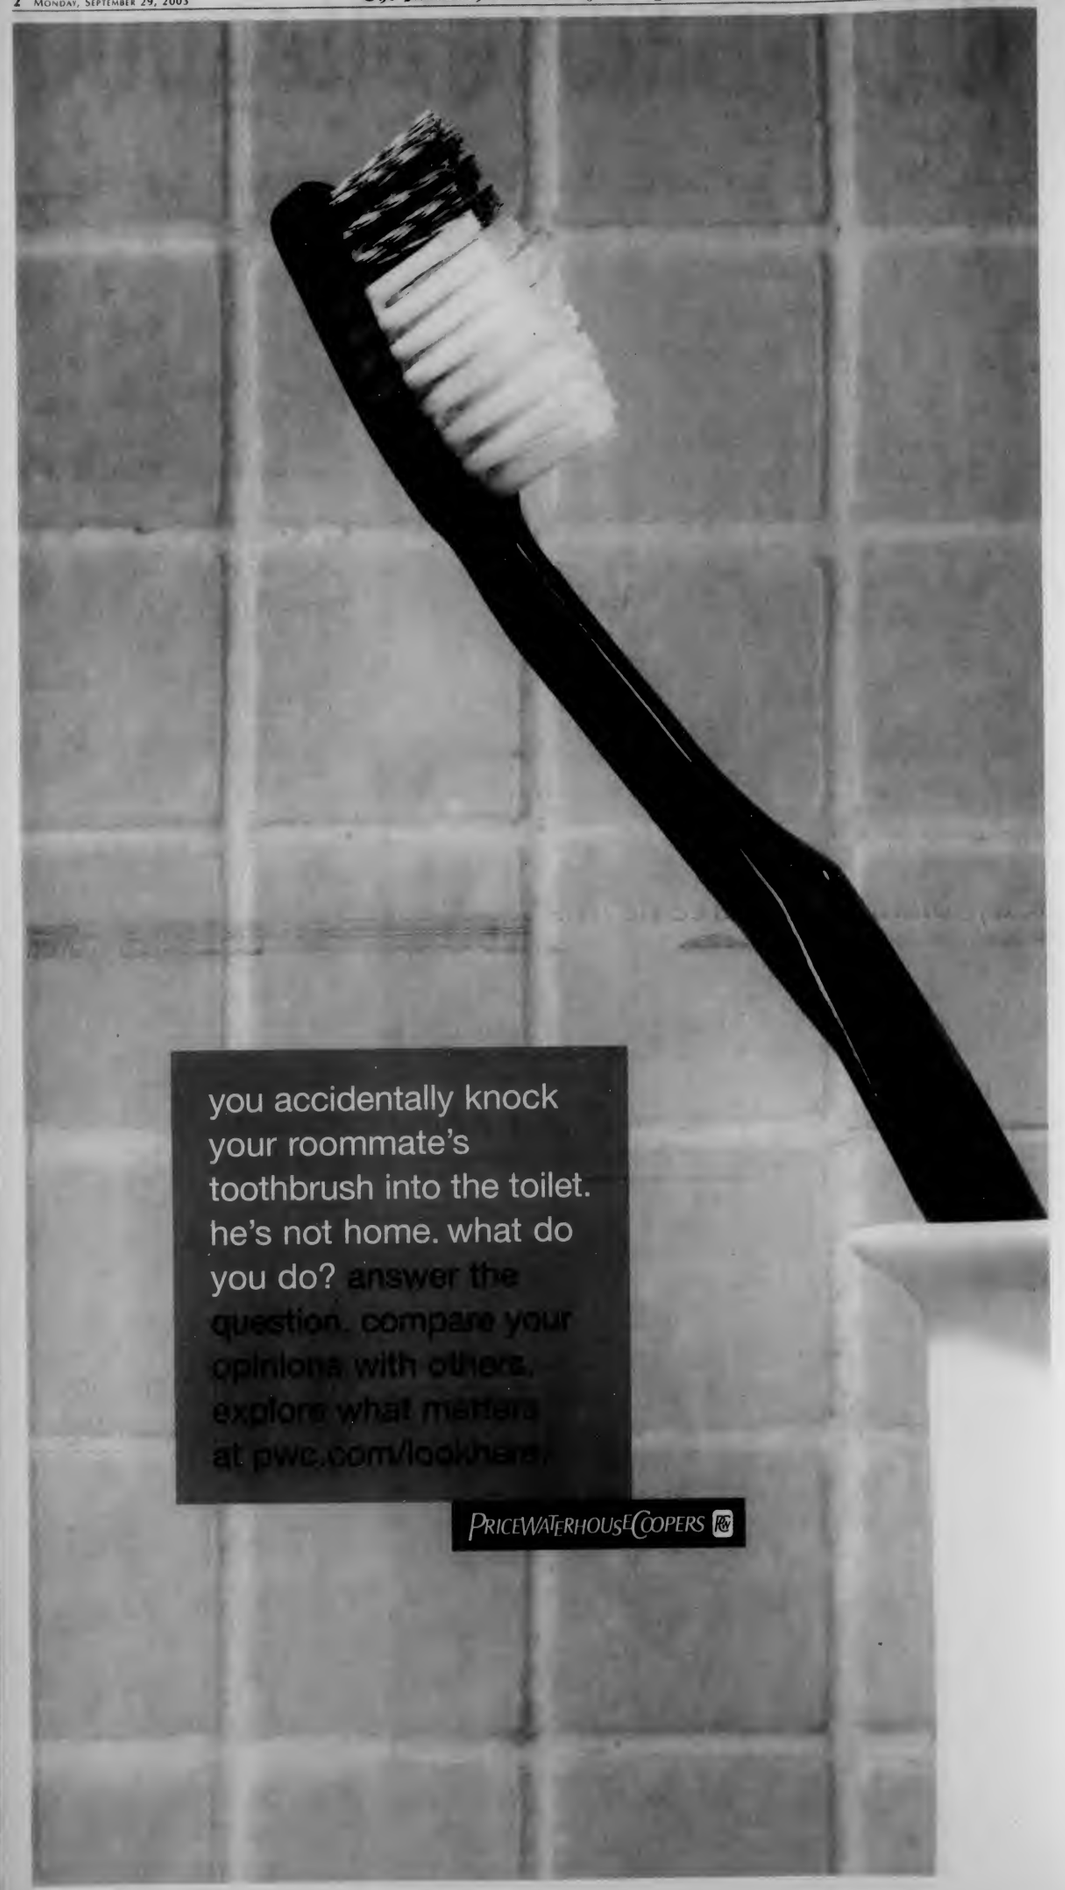
By Erica Werner and Jim Wasserma
Associated Press

SANTA MARIA, Calif. (AP) — With the campaign to recall Gov. Gray Davis entering its final full week, a poll released yesterday showed the Democrat could lose office by a wide margin and put Arnold Schwarzenegger way ahead of everyone else trying to become governor of California.

Schwarzenegger barnstormed around California yesterday, appearing before enthusiastic crowds in airport hangars. "This is now hand-to-hand combat. We are in the trenches. This is war," Schwarzenegger said, adopting a newly aggressive tone.

Davis unveiled a new television commercial accusing Schwarzenegger of ducking tough questions and refusing to debate.

Some of California's major newspapers made endorsements yesterday, most urging voters to reject the recall on Oct. 7 and recommending nobody to replace Davis. "Davis is lucky: there are no replacement candidates worth a recommendation," wrote the San Jose Mercury-News.



The endorsements came out as the poll taken after last week's pivotal candidates' debate indicated sharp differences with previous surveys, which showed a much narrower margin of Californians favoring the recall, and an even race between the Republican actor and Democratic Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante.

Davis's campaign spokesman, Peter Ragone, attacked the numbers.

"It's a joke," Ragone said. "It is so far from what every other public poll and every other internal poll by both Democrats and Republicans have found."

Schwarzenegger planned to focus his message on the governor's failings during his fly-around campaigning yesterday.

"We plan to spend the rest of this campaign reminding voters that the real question of the election is whether or not they want the status quo in Sacramento, with the government controlled by special interests or whether they want real change," said his spokesman, Todd Harris.

SGA election results debut

Continued from page 1

Maggie Rogers	10
Alyssa LaBonte	7
Michael Troisi	7
Anthony Pascoe	6
Rodney Sinclair	6
Leia Hiustick	5
Laura LaPlume	5
Renate Robertson	5
Craig Goldschmidt	4
Janie Kim	4
write-in
Christopher Mira	3
David Peterson	3
Meredith Rice	3
Joseph Wright	3
Ben Flanders	2
write-in
Emera Trujillo	2
write-in
Viola Corradina	2
write-in
Daniel Bloom	1
write-in
Ben Farley	1
write-in
Jason Ferreira	1
Theodora Plettner	1
Matt Chandler	1
write-in
Nick Parseghian	1
write-in
Andres Gomez	1
write-in

NORTHEAST

Ama Boadu	39
Beatrice Ake	28
Dan Pomeroy	25
Gladys Franco	16
Andres Gomez	13
Farley Pedler	12
Doug Woodruff	10
Robert Porter	8
write-in
Jennifer Mayefsky	4
Kathryn Mayefsky	2

ORCHARD HILL

Lindsay Lesser	35
Zsuzsa Cook	32
Brian Roberts	21
Laurene Belsito	18
Tristan Brown	18
Eoin Moore	18
Liz Jennings	15
Krit Chakravarthy	14
Sanam Hakim	14
Ewelina Bielica	10
John Angell	1
write-in
Jessica Jorgensen	1
write-in
Michael Pisalvo	1
write-in

SW/NORTH

Monique Quiles	51
Kathleen Edison	48
Olaf Aprans	41
Damien Weinstein	32
Jill Sawyer15
Tim Busiere	13
Andre Cartwright	9
write-in
Enos Henry	9
write-in
Jason Bissonnette	3
write-in
Amy Anastos	2
write-in
Carlos Garduno	2
write-in
Eduardo Carvalho	1
write-in
Rachel Deleveauy	1
write-in
Angela Fiete	1
write-in
Victor Zhou	1
write-in

SW/SOUTH

Rachel Deleveaux	56
James Brennan	51
Marcus Deforeet	50
Albert Dennis	45
Adrienne Girard	41
Marina Solovyov	35
Alexandra Mitson	24
Jason Garland	22
write-in
Raul Brens	19
Stephanie LaMarca	12
Michael Sheridan	11
Chris DeCambra	10
David Synnott	9
Armando Roman	8
Katharina McCarty	7
David Owens	6
Cassandra Priddy	5
Dan Brownstein	1
write-in
Sharl Milkowski	1
write-in

SYLVAN

Aiysha Cooper	36
Ayotunde Onikoro	34
Tayo Aiyeku	27
write-in
Shaun Ashworth	23
Mor Dar	19
Susan Allen	10
Turd Ferguson	1
write-in

RESULTS COURTESY SGA.UMASS.EDU OR SGA@UMASS.EDU/SGA/

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stumm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagstic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant News Ferron Salsiker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Bob McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

ALANA garners 25 percent of SGA seats

Continued from page 1

"UMass students voted to keep the ALANA caucus [seats]," she said. If this isn't a strong enough statement by the UMass community, we will be taking parliamentary procedures to insure that he abides by the bylaws and the constitution of the SGA."

Hoeschele said he was surprised to see that three students who had incorrectly filled out nomination forms all won seats on the Senate by using a write-in campaign. Those students include Enos Henry, Tayo Aiyeku and Jason Garland, who won with 22 votes in the competitive Southwest/South district.

"I was quite surprised he pulled in as many votes as he did," Hoeschele said.

Hoeschele said that the four referendum questions drove people to the polls to vote. Two of those four questions revolved around how to deal with the status of ALANA's appointed seats in the future. With overwhelming votes of "yes" on Question two and "no" on Questions 4, students elected to change the SGA Constitution to include appointed seats, and rejected changing SGA bylaws to remove appointed seats if the UMass Board of Trustees does not accept the proposed changes in the constitution.

Hoeschele said the counting process, which ended after press time late Thursday night, went smoothly.

"The commission was fantastic. I basically took their methods for counting and we were able to zip right through it," he said.

Power outage sweeps through Italy, blamed for three deaths

GREG BAKER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

An unlit traffic light on the Fori Imperiali Avenue, leading to the Colosseum, is seen during a nationwide blackout in Rome, Italy early yesterday.

By Tom Rachman
Associated Press

ROME (AP) — A storm-tossed tree branch that hit Swiss power lines helped trigger a massive blackout in almost all of Italy, trapping thousands on trains and forcing the pope to use a backup generator to proclaim his new cardinals. The outage, blamed for three deaths, underlined the dangers of Italy's reliance on imported power.

It was Italy's worst power outage since World War II. Most of the country's 58 million people were affected— more than in North America's biggest blackout, which left 50 million people without power in Canada and the United States on Aug. 14.

As in the North American blackout, there was initially confusion about the cause and finger-pointing among neighboring countries. With scant domestic supply and swelling public demand, Italy imports most of its electricity.

The blackout began at 3:25 a.m., hitting all of Italy except the island of Sardinia. The lights came back on in northern Italy by early morning and in most of Rome shortly after noon. Power was restored to southern Italy late yesterday, according to television news reports.

The blackout was blamed for the deaths of three elderly women, the ANSA news agency said.

Two women—one 81 and the other 72— died in separate accidents when they fell down darkened stairs, the agency said. A 92-year-old woman died of burns after a candle set her clothes on fire.

The outage tripped a burglar alarm at the home in Rome where Lonia Liscio, 21, was babysitting an 8-year-old boy. She woke up in a panic. "The baby woke up too— he sleeps with the light on," she said. "I was scared. I didn't know what was happening."

Tommaso Primavera, 17, was riding his motor scooter at the time in Rome.

"There was panic on the streets," he said. "The tourists went mad— everyone was thinking about themselves."

As experts tried to work out the cause, none of the three countries involved wanted all the blame. Swiss and French energy officials said the responsibility was Italy's, while the Italians noted that the power cut came from France.

Initial investigations indicated a chain reaction that started in Switzerland and moved through France.

In Switzerland, a tree branch hit and disabled a power transmission line. This caused another Swiss line to overload, which then knocked out French transmission to Italy.

"After that, all connections to Italy dropped out," said Rolf Schmid, spokesman for the Swiss power company Atel.

Italian energy company Enel agreed with the Swiss description of the chain reaction. But France's electricity grid operator RTE said it was too early to speculate about causes.

Whatever the cause, the blackout was an ordeal across Italy.

It brought to a halt some 110 trains with 30,000 passengers on board, and delayed numerous flights in addition to a few that had to be cancelled.

Hospitals were forced to rely on generators, which was crucial for one man undergoing a liver transplant in Turin. The blackout occurred during his six-hour overnight surgery, but emergency power helped doctors finish the operation successfully, ANSA reported.

In Rome, the city had been holding an all-night festival with museums, bars and shops still open at the time of the blackout. The result was that many people who had been encouraged to use public transport found themselves stranded at subway stations.

The Vatican was also affected, with St. Peter's Basilica— normally lit up overnight— in darkness.

Weekly news meeting at 6 p.m. tonight.
All current writers must attend.
New writers are encouraged to come.

LSAT
GMAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
OAT

higher test scores guaranteed or your money back

Attend all required classes or make-up sessions, complete all scheduled tests, and do your homework. If your score doesn't improve on test day from your Kaplan diagnostic or a prior official test score, you can choose to repeat our program for free or get a full refund of your tuition. It's that simple.

World Leader in Test Prep and Admissions

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.

To be eligible for this offer, you must be enrolled in Kaplan's full classroom, tutoring, or online courses. In addition, you must present a copy of your official score report and your course materials within 90 days.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Gay marriage on the campaign trail

According to an article in Sunday's edition of The Boston Globe, Gary Bauer, a 2000 Republican presidential candidate and head of the organization, American Values, will be meeting outside the White House this week to declare that the week of Oct. 12-18 is "Marriage Promotion Week."

Bauer's group and a coalition of 21 evangelical Christian and other conservative organizations are taking this measure in response to the most recent efforts by homosexual and civil rights activists to expand gay rights in the country.

"There was a little bit of burnout, but there has been spontaneous reaction to this issue, in both its intensity and the numbers involved, that has surprised all the conservative public-policy groups," Bauer told the Globe.

Just within four months, the push for permitted same-sex marriage in America has gained tremendous momentum. In June, the U.S. Supreme Court put an end to Texas's anti-sodomy law, which extended privacy rights to gay relationships.

In the coming weeks, possibly days, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruling on the Case of Goodridge v. the Massachusetts Department of Public Health will be announced. The case was filed last year by the Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD), on behalf of seven homosexual couples that were denied marriages licenses at their local town or city halls. According to the Globe, the conservatives fear that the Court will rule in favor of GLAD and the Commonwealth will become the first state in the Union that gives same-sex couples the right to legally wed.

The activists who will petition Washington this week say "their aims are to enact a federal positional amendment sanctioning only heterosexual marriage and to make 2004 candidates from the White House to state house take a stand against same-sex unions and gay rights."

Unfortunately for these conservatives, the man leading the way from the Democratic Party in the 2004 presidential race is Howard Dean, the former governor of Vermont – a state that granted same-sex couples the right to form legal unions and gain domestic benefits in 1999.

Dean has yet to come out on any kind of endorsement for gay marriage in his presidential run but three other democratic candidates, Dennis Kucinich, Carol Moseley Braun and Al Sharpton have.

In the next few extremely crucial months on the campaign trail, Dean and the other democratic leaders like John Kerry should be making a valid effort to make sure conservative republicans do not let their views affect the minds of American across the nation.

Our country is supposed to keep a separation between church and state. This idea is what creates a working democracy. The Bush administration has done all it can to implement democracy on to other countries worldwide but in the process has forgotten to maintain the democracy that supposedly is in our nation.

For democrats, issues – like the homosexual marriage conflict – are extremely important to take a clear stand on, as the public has lost touch with many of our domestic affairs. The stand they should take is towards protecting a true democracy, giving anyone in America the same right as his or her neighbor such as gaining a marriage license.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

The European Earth Day

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

World Perspectives

Last week in Brussels, I experienced something that many Americans might find just a little bit foreign. I was walking down the street toward Le Grand Place (the center of the city) when I spotted a banner announcing "Mobility Week 2003."

Wondering what on Earth this could possibly mean, I asked a passerby in my broken French just what this "Semaine de la Mobilite" was. It turns out that Europeans have this crazy custom whereby they make a concerted effort to participate directly in environmental action.

Coming from a land where environmental concerns are nothing more than a nuisance to "business as usual," I was enchanted and proceeded to dig deeper into their strange traditions. I was quite intrigued by what I found.

On Feb. 4, 2000, European Car Free Day was launched (to be held on Sept. 22) by a Brussels convention of European metropolitan and NGO leaders. Since then, umbrella groups such as the Prague-based World Carfree Network have taken local organizations from over 1,000 cities in some 31 countries worldwide under their wing in founding the "In Town without My Car" campaign.

Centered in Europe, this program includes nations from Albania to Canada. Estonia to Iceland, and so on. In addition, cities that publicly acknowledge Sept. 22 as a "World Carfree Day" span five continents and include cities such as Jakarta, Indonesia and Newark, New Jersey. All in all, an estimated 100 million European city dwellers are involved annually.

Even more astounding than the widespread enthusiasm are the diverse celebrations that the countries practice. Sections of the municipalities are open only to public transportation, and tens of millions across Europe hop on their bicycles to trek around town. Some towns hold fairs with public information booths, music, and events to commemorate the day and make the town square a lively place. The three or five cities that do the most for environmental awareness (i.e. the highest number of streets closed to private automobiles, the greatest community involvement, etc.), receive awards from the campaign organizers.

Eighty percent of Europeans live in urban areas and a 2002 survey conducted by EuropaWorld (a European information service) shows that four out of five people support this project. Those participating in the poll cited air and noise pollution, poor mobility, and unsightliness, among others, as the principal causes for their endorsement of the movement.

Such an event integrates well into the already environmentally conscious European society, whose mastery of public transportation is a shining example to the rest of the globe. The consensus here is that this direction is an important one.

One day I showed up to school and the entire campus was occupied by one of the many countrywide bike tours as well as a midway of exercise facilities, trainers and musicians.

In the week prior to Sept. 22, there are also events that address alternatives to the use of private automobiles as a principal means of transportation. The idea is to introduce ecological concern while simultaneously constructing a festive ambience. It certainly had the desired effect in nearby Brugge, where children raced for free all week on hand-made bicycles that were comically misshapen or alternatively designed in a variety of ways.

One of these bikes was propelled by the rising and falling of the seat (the sitting/standing motion of its rider) as opposed to pedaling; another had a sprocket system that entailed pedaling backwards to propel the front wheel; several had warped wheels that caused the bike to bounce as it rode. The children ran about and let out Dutch cries of glee.

Here in Brussels, the event turned a quiet city on Sunday into a stimulating ceremony. There were parades and marching bands, sections of street covered in lush-green sod, live horses and cows munching on grass, plenty of street vendors, and lots of bicycles. All public transportation was free for the day, as was the entrance to the numerous museums and galleries.

During the preceding week, many individual groups seemed to take the initiative on their own. One day in the sprawling park Le Bois de la Cambre, a group of about 20 or 30 young women on bicycles wearing white dresses with angel wings pedaled around. Much to my dismay, the same group congregated for a city tour below my bedroom window the following night at 3 a.m., this time with male counterparts dressed in togas!

One day I showed up to school and the entire campus was occupied by one of the many countrywide bike tours as well as a midway of exercise facilities, trainers and musicians for the many staff-members of the European and Belgian ministries.

Reflecting upon the cultural gem that I have stumbled upon, I realize that this is a tradition that Americans are entirely capable of achieving for themselves. After all, Europeans are not so different from us and if Serbia and Montenegro can involve themselves, and if miniscule Malta can muster up an impressive 24 "cities" to participate, then I'd bet that somewhere in the towns and cities of western Massachusetts there lies the potential to do the same.

If a town like Amherst could do it, then what's to stop a city like Boston or smog-plagued Los Angeles from following suit? Before you know it, the United States could be the largest contributor to this wondrous event of awareness, health, and fun.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist.

Another side of Ferris Bueller

Mark Ostroff

Ever watch "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" and get the feeling something isn't right? Well, now there's good reason to. Amid the nonchalance of being a teenager, there is a deeper, darker message conveyed out of the bowels of Paramount Pictures Studios. It was an odd revelation, but I am here to tell it to you. Ready?

"Ferris Bueller's Day Off" is actually a more racist film than "Blazing Saddles." There. I said it.

I know you're thinking that I probably snapped, but before making rash judgment calls, look at my analysis of both movies. We start with "Ferris Bueller's Day Off."

Exhibit one: The first black character is a nurse at the high school. She comes to deliver bad news and the music that plays as she walks down the hall is rather unpleasant. If you watch the movie, you'll find that she is the most well represented black person in the whole movie!

Exhibit two: After taking the car, Cameron, Ferris and Jeannie go to the garage, where a Hispanic man is working. "Do you speak English," asks Ferris, who assumes he probably hasn't taken the time to learn any. The man wears a hair net with shiny slicked-back hair, a pencil-thin mustache, and looks very shifty. After the crew drops the car off, the garage man and his black friend steal the car and take it out for a joy ride!

Exhibit three: Ferris is standing on the parade float, dancing and singing "Twist and Shout," and the camera pans on a group of dancing black people. On a weekday, when everyone is either at work or in school, why are there whole crowds of black teenagers hanging around downtown Chicago? Why aren't they in school? Does anyone recall even seeing any black or Hispanic students in the whole movie that weren't playing hooky?

Exhibit four: A black deliveryman brings flowers to Ferris; Rooney gives him the middle finger.

Exhibit five: At the police station, Jeannie meets a drug felon played by Charlie Sheen whose real name is actually Carlos Irwin Estevez – not exactly an Anglo-Saxon name, is it?

Well, this is the full extent of racial representation for "Ferris Bueller's Day Off", and yes, there is definitely a pattern in this movie. Whoever cast for this movie may have been trying to convey a very offensive message that went over the heads of every liberal in this country ... except one, of course. (No applause, please.)

Blazing Saddles, however, is a different story.

If you haven't seen the Blazing Saddles, you really ought to — at least to get it out of your system. You can gauge the movie on its un-PCness by the vast amount of overly PC people who scream "racism!" within the first 10 minutes of the film. These are usually the same people who get offended when you say "White trash" or if you think "The Honeymooners" was funny.

Exhibit one: The movie fades in with Black, Chinese, and Irish people hard at work on a railroad and exploited by foul-mouthed caricatures of George W. Bush — only more leather. One of the bosses named "Lyle" tries to get all the black workers to sing a work song while the white bosses look on and laugh. To Lyle's surprise, our movie's black hero "Bart" (Cleavon Little) breaks in with a Frank Sinatra tune.

Exhibit two: After nearly dying in quicksand, Bart ends up in prison after hitting one of his bosses, "Tagart" on the head with a shovel. Instead of an execution, the cross-eyed "Governor Lepetomane" (Mel Brooks) appoints him as Sheriff of a small, moronic town called Rock Ridge.

Exhibit three: Bart ends up being the smartest one there. After befriending a washed-up gunslinger (Gene Wilder) the two become partners.

Exhibit four: Corman's character "Heddey Lamar" (that's HEDLEY!) tries to recruit every evil person he can find in order to destroy the town. He ends up recruiting the Ku Klux Klan, the Nazis, the Outlaws, Hell's Angels, Mexican bandits, Islamic extremists, and even Methodists, uniting them all to do his bidding. (Hey at least they're getting along, right?)

Exhibit five: All the ethnic railroad workers come to the rescue of the town and during the big brawl toward the end of the movie, a crowd of tuxedo-wearing gay men joins in fighting the bad guys.

Exhibit six: Bart kills the bad guy and he and his deputy drive off into the sunset in a limousine. All the railroad workers are rewarded and the once simple-minded town is now the center of racial tolerance for the rest of the Wild West.

Whoever cast for this movie may have been trying to convey a very offensive message that obviously went over the heads of every liberal in this country ... except one of course.

This is a much happier ending than in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off." At the end of that movie, all the kids simply retreat back into white suburbia, where Ed Rooney is seen walking the streets and mumbling to himself like a vagrant. His last moments are seen riding away on a bus, next to the biggest reject in school, staring at a sign that says, "Rooney eats it." The bus rides off into the sunset, fade to black.

So, there you have it – just a little brain-candy to kick-start your week for you. Now, go do that Voodoo that you do, so well!

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Video games: as bad as they say?

Matt Elder

Blame it on computers. Blame it on the Internet. Blame it on video games. These statements are being thrown around nowadays like the meritless "Impeach Bush" signs that I see seven year olds holding up in North Hampton.

Last week, I got my Sports Illustrated and, like every other week, I flipped to Rick Riley's column that is always on the last page. For those of you who don't know, Riley is extremely funny and makes analogies and comparisons like no other. However, this week he blamed video games and the Internet for the fact that the United States has the fattest kids in the world.

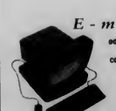
There were other comical interludes and other insights, but that was his main argument. I was very disappointed to see such a creative man take such a familiar road. However, I am going to take the complete opposite side to the whole argument. Recently, my roommate and I spent an hour yelling at the screen, yelling at each other, laughing and swearing. Were we watching the Red Sox?

Nope. We were playing each other in our Dynasty in Madden 2004. Since we are in the same division, we play each other twice. (For all those who care, we each won one and lost one). This is what a different roommate and I did last year. Nightly, in the winter, we would play a video game against each other. We would yell at the screen, swear at the screen and at each other, and just have a ton of fun.

While complaining about video games, all people see is senseless violence and needless time spent in front of a screen. However, my roommate and I see it as a bonding ritual, and one that we cannot do without.

Adults see video games as a waste of time and money, and think kids should be out doing other things. However, with online play now taking over Playstation 2, that won't happen. I'm not saying America's youth should be locked in their room staring at their TV for hour and hours. All I'm saying is that if they spend an hour playing, it isn't a crime. People who don't play video games and don't watch people playing don't realize how much thinking is involved in it.

Most parents just complain from afar, and never bother to take a look at their kids as they play. However, if they took time off of their pedestal and saw what was actually involved, they would see that video games are extremely complicated. If it was so easy, then why do most adults (before the PS2 era) not bother playing?

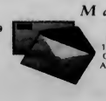


Video games are more interactive than most people know. It isn't like staring blankly at a screen, the way one does when watching prime time. And the interaction isn't between you and the "computer". It's between you and your opponent (if it's a person, like me). My roommate and I spend good quality time as we play these games, and so did my last roommate and I. Since we are doing a franchise, it is extremely complicated. It's more complicated than I ever could imagine. Since I am not a sports management major like my roommate, his financial situation with his team is thriving, while mine is under par.

All people see is senseless violence and needless time spent in front of the screen. However, my roommate and I see [playing video games] as a bonding ritual, and one that we cannot do without.

In the game, you choose everything about your team and you track it. From ticket prices to parking prices to beer prices: you decide it all. It's not your average game, and you need to be somewhat skilled to be successful. With the world being so serious that most people don't want to watch the news, today's youth needs video games as a deterrent. I'm not saying they should be ignorant. I'm just saying parents shouldn't be either.

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.



Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3099

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New WWE game still has 'Raw' flaws

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

The newest line of WWE wrestling games has been released, and "RAW 2" for X-Box is likely to take number one out of the three. Last year marked the first release of a WWE game to X-Box with "WWE RAW." The new installment looks to deliver a bit more of a punch than its predecessor.

"RAW 2" is filled with all of today's current superstars. Not only does it include top talents like The Rock, Austin, Hogan and Triple H, but it also includes some newer faces to WWE games such as Tommy Dreamer, Goldberg, Rey Mysterio and Batista. This game has the updated looks and roster for today's wrestlers, along with the new look for matches as well.

The main improvement from the last game is the create-a-player mode. This mode has gotten far more in depth than the previous game. You can change the smallest detail of a face to match someone, or yourself, in almost any imaginable way. This is a great step up from the previous game, as it was greatly difficult to create wrestlers who were not in the game without having them look almost nothing like the actual wrestler.

Another addition is that you can use songs that are uploaded to your X-Box to use as your entrance music. However, if you are planning to burn about 20 songs onto a CD to upload, think again. The X-Box has hardware that restricts burnt disks from being played.

On top of having a more detailed create-a-character mode, the season mode has been bulked up as well. It follows the superstar point system found in "Smackdown! Shut Your Mouth." The more points you have, the bigger your potential. Much like "Shut Your Mouth," the game also enables you to decide which storyline you want to move to next, without any penalties, like missing a title shot. You can also drag three friends down the path to "WrestleMania" in season mode.

"WWE RAW 2: Ruthless Aggression" X-Box Publisher THQ Developer Anchor T Teen

"RAW 2" unfortunately carries over some of the major defaults that were found in the first. The gameplay is still not advanced, as you must grapple, tap a button, then a direction, and then hope it isn't countered. It was one of the more aggravating features of the first game, and it looks like it will continue to be a problem. The only advancement in the gameplay is being able to perform moves like Rob Van Dam's "5-Star Frog Splash" much easier and smoother. The finishing moves also appear to be in much greater detail, as in the last one some high flying moves lacked what they would actually look like on TV.

Another downfall that flows over from the original is the targeting system is just as horrific as the first. You still have to manually change your view to an attacker, unlike in "Smackdown!" games, which you automatically turn to the attacker. This provides a great deal of frustration when you're thrown into a triple threat match. The AI has not improved much either. You will find in most cage matches that within a few moments of the match starting the CPU will already be looking to head out of the cage. While the idea of every game is to beat the computer, wrestling fans know most cage matches will not be over in a mater of 20 seconds or so. The AI really gives you no real competition.

Overall, "Raw 2: Ruthless Aggression" manages to fail in many areas, but it also improves in a few others. This game appears to be one that wrestling fans should go out and purchase, but the casual fan should probably hold off for a game like "Halo 2" that will probably be more worthwhile. "RAW 2" is T for Teen and currently available at gaming retailers for around $50.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY THQ

"WWE RAW 2: Ruthless Aggression" fails to improve on the gameplay of the first one.

Bang on the drum all day

Percussionist Milford Graves inspires FAC audience

By Rachel Siegel
Collegian Correspondent

Legendary percussionist Milford Graves performed a solo concert Thursday night at Bezenson Concert Hall in the Fine Arts Center. Those lucky enough to be in attendance (many eager would-be audience members were stranded outside the space) witnessed a resounding demonstration of why Graves continues to be such an important figure in the improvised music world.

Milford Graves Bezenson Concert Hall Amherst Sept. 25

Graves' virtuosity is astounding. The 62-year old musician played at an intense energy level for close to an hour-and-a-half without giving any indication of fatigue. He improvised a lengthy karate-like dance, which looked like it might have been difficult for even the most agile dancers to execute. He spoke at breakneck speed about the importance of reciprocation in the performer-audience relationship, his own affinity for the "New England Feel," and even about his close friend in the audience who provided a collection of gongs for the concert. Graves sang in different languages, skipped around the stage with large a gourd shaker, had an older audience member play rhythms on Graves' talking drum, and at one point draped a willing student over his shoulder, carrying him onto stage while playing and singing. The concert was an event, and the energy that Graves emitted was intoxicating.

The concert was the first in a series entitled "Solos and Duos," and a great start to a season that also includes an Oct. 9 performance by Sunny Murray and Sabir Mateen, and a Nov. 20 performance by Sonny Forunte and Rashied Ali. Residential Arts, which is producing the concerts has grouped together for this series some of the founding members of the 1960's era New York Free Jazz scene. Graves was a key player in the radical politics and musical experiments of that time, and the concert on Thursday showed his continued interest in global sounds.

COURTESY NICOLAS FERREIRA/DRUMMERWORLD.COM

Milford Graves is one of the most legendary improvised-music artists.

Graves held court at the concert, communicating with his music an urgent sense of the importance of spirituality. His playfulness and lack of self-consciousness broke down the barriers of intellectualism that are normally associated with musical experimentation. In their place Graves left a strange energy of confession. One had the sense that Graves was sharing his most intimate secrets with the audience and wanted to encourage the audience to do the same.

If there was a problem with the concert, it was only that more people couldn't have attended. To keep Graves' music for only a select few is a shame. It was apparent from last week's concert that his music has something to offer everyone. It is likely he would say that everyone has something to offer him, as well.

COURTESY NICOLAS FERREIRA/DRUMMERWORLD.COM

Rock singer Robert Palmer, 54, dies of heart attack in Paris

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press

PARIS — Robert Palmer, the well-tailored British rock singer who created one of the first iconic music videos with the look-alike models of "Addicted to Love," died Friday of a heart attack. He was 54.

A two-time Grammy winner in the '80s, the star behind the hit "Simply Irresistible" died of a heart attack at a Paris hotel during a stopover after a promotional tour in Britain, manager Mick Cater said.

Sporting designer suits and a thick mane of hair, Palmer shot to fame in the mid-'80s with two videos featuring a "backup band" of dark-haired women in black miniskirts strumming guitars. They were directed by Terence Donovan, a prominent British fashion and society photographer who died in 1996 at age 60.

Other Palmer hits in his three-decade career included "Bad Case of Lovin' You (Doctor, Doctor)," "I Didn't Mean to Turn You On" and "Some Like It Hot."

"I don't think he was hugely influential to me musically, but he did something odd and unique," Bob Geldof, of the former Irish pop band Boomtown Rats, said in London. "You can visualize him singing with six babes in dresses."

Palmer died at the Warwick Hotel, just off the Champs-Elysees, after a relaxed night of dinner and a movie with Mary Ambrose, his longtime partner, Cater said. Palmer had received a clean bill of health in a medical checkup about two weeks ago, Cater said.

An autopsy confirmed Palmer died of a heart attack, Paris judicial officials said.

Born Robert Allen Palmer in Batley, England, in 1949, the singer spent much of his childhood in Malta, where his father was an officer in the British Navy.

Palmer, whose artistic influences included Lena Horne and Nat King Cole, released his first hit album and single, "Sneakin' Sally through the Alley," in 1974. He was said to be among the first musicians of his era to experiment with reggae, electronic sound and international folk.

In his 20s, Palmer worked with a number of small-time bands including Dada, Vinegar Joe, and the Alan Bown Band, occasionally appearing in opening acts for big draws including The Who and Jimi Hendrix. His solo breakthrough came in 1978, with the easy-listening tune "Every Kinda People."

Palmer returned to broad public view in 1985 in Power Station alongside John and Andy Taylor of '80s supergroup Duran Duran. Power Station scored three U.S. Top 10 hits, including "Communication" and "Get it On."

Andy Taylor said he was "shattered" by Palmer's death.

"He was just one of the greatest British acts and a really close friend," Andy Taylor told Britain's ITV News Channel. "There's a few people you meet in life who really touch you ... Robert was one of them."

'Duplex' takes easy way out

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

Drew Barrymore was adorable and goofball funny in "The Wedding Singer." Ben Stiller's unusual good looks and quirky acting style had audiences gasping for air between laughs in "Meet the Parents." Combine these two versatile stars in one film, and one would expect to laugh non-stop, like a kid who eats too much candy on Halloween.

'Duplex' Directed by Danny Devito Starring Drew Barrymore Ben Stiller Eileen Essel Miramax Rated PG-13 97 mins. Grade C

However, instead of procuring unstoppable giggles, "Duplex" was a sugar high that caused more nausea than anything else. High expectations for these much loved stars, makes it all the more disappointing that Danny Devito's newest directorial project didn't consistently deliver laughs.

This film is a dark comedy at it's darkest, but unlike "Death to Smoochy," which Devito handled with some comedy class, the majority of the punch lines in "Duplex" are coldhearted and gross. The humor, blatantly disgusting, brings a new meaning to the term comic gag. It seems that comedy writers are catering more than ever to an audience that enjoys crass humor, like that found in "Jackass."

Potty humor can be funny in small doses and/or when executed by eccentrics like Johnny Knoxville. However in essence, it's cheap and not very clever. It doesn't take much skill to tango with a toilet; it's too easy. This film is dependent on the nervous laughter inevitable when watching the grotesque behavior. It's not real laughter.

It's certainly a shame that Barrymore and Stiller wasted their valuable time on a movie of this nature. Perhaps if the lead roles of Alex and Nancy were given to less renowned stars, the movie wouldn't had suffered from unmet viewer expectations. Particularly in the case of Barrymore, for an anxious fan base who love her for her cutesy style, "Duplex" veers too far off base.

Granted, it is at this point in Barrymore's career that perhaps she should try something new — a less typical role. Fans might still appreciate a failed attempt to deliver a difficult, non-typecast role. However, a failed attempt to deliver a flat, one-dimensional character is a reflection on the actor/actresses own ignorance. Fans don't want to support celebrities who have difficulty selecting quality material to work with. Perhaps it's equally the writer and director's faults. In the case of Duplex, one has to wonder why two comic heroes would sell themselves so short.

"Duplex" is overall comedy in bad taste. It's sad that so much humor can be derived from American's uneasiness around the elderly. Like potty humor, comedy based on devastating societal issues is problematic. Beneath this humor resides the filmmaker's uncomfortable feelings about these very issues, masquerading as something to joke about.

Similarly, humor is usually at it's best when you can sympathize with the protagonist. In the case of "Duplex," emotional confusion was distracting when sympathy takes an unexpected turn and resides with the supposed antagonist. Anyone with a beloved grandparent might question the motives behind the two protagonists' bizarre hatred for the woman upstairs. The character of Mrs. Connolly simply wasn't diabolical enough for the majority of the audience to share the young married couple's death wish for her.

Another huge dilemma of this movie was the "surprise" false ending. "Duplex" is yet another movie that should end five minutes before it actually does. The most brilliant art is derived from the artist's ability to make good stylistic decisions. All too often, when a filmmaker refuses to choose an ending the result is a series of tacked on endings that fail to resolve and/or bring coherence to the film.

Hollywood has to learn (and quickly) that surprise endings, like potty humor, are best if delivered in small doses. Two surprise endings, one false and one contrived, makes the ending of "Duplex" worthy of flushing the whole kit and caboodle down the toilet.

Ben Stiller, left, and Drew Barrymore star in the toilet-humor filled comedy, "Duplex."

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondaySeptember29

POETRY

The Odyssey Book Shop of South Hadley will hold its monthly open-mic poetry tonight, hosted by poet Sean Vernon. Readers will be given five minutes each and are encouraged to sign up early. Sign-ups begin at 6:30 p.m. The Odyssey Book Shop holds its open-mic poetry night on the last Monday of every month. The event is free and open to the public.

TuesdaySeptember30

PERFORMING ARTS

The Asian Arts and Cultural Program will perform "Hachioji Kuruma NinGyo," a Japanese puppet theater tonight. The performance will be held at the Rand Theater in Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts. The performance will feature singer Mr. Wakasanojo Tsuruga, who has been designated a living treasure by the Japanese government. General admission costs $25, $20 and $15. Five College student tickets cost $15, $10 and $7 and are on sale through the FAC box office. For more information, contact the Rand Theater at 413-545-3490.

BOOKS

The Odyssey Book Shop in South Hadley will host local poet, short story writer and children's book author Leslea Newman. Newman will read from her new collection, "The Best Short Stories Leslea Newman." The reading will begin at 7 p.m. and admission is free.

WednesdayOctober1

BOOKS

Long-time National Public Radio foreign correspondent Anne Garrels will host a discussion at the Chapin Auditorium on the Mount Holyoke College campus tonight. Garrels will discuss her work, "Naked in Baghdad: The Iraq War as Seen by NPR's Correspondent." The discussion will begin at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free. For more information and tickets, call 413-545-2511 or 800-999-UMASS.

ThursdayOctober2

ART

The R. Michelson Gallery, Gallery A3, The Fiber Arts Center, Alfredo's Photographic Art Gallery and the Burnett Gallery will host their October Gallery Walk. These five art galleries located in downtown Amherst will open their doors to the public for free exhibitions of their art work. The art exhibited in this event will range from abstract paintings to classical sculpture and will be the products of local artists as well as some professional artists. All of the galleries participating in the Gallery Walk Program are located along East Pleasant Street, except for the Burnett Gallery, which is located within the Jones Library. The event is free and begins at 5p.m.

MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open their 2003-2004 season with an All-Beethoven Program. The show will feature guest conductor Bernard Haitink, Slovenian pianist Dubravka Tomsic and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. The works performed will include Beethoven's "Fantasia for piano" in C minor, "Choral Fantasy," as well as the other works performed in Beethoven's Symphony No. 5. The performance will begin at 6:30 p.m. Tickets range from $75 to $150 and are on sale through the Boston Symphony box office at 888-266-1200 or 617-266-1200 or by visiting www.bso.org.

SaturdayOctober4

MUSIC

Pop-rock band Train will perform at the Calvin Theater in Northampton as part of their release tour for their new album, "My Private Nation." The show will begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are $25 and are on sale through the Iron Horse box office at 413-586-1162.

weekly pinup

Latin Explosion

Panamanian pianist and composer, Danilo Pérez will perform at the Bowker Auditorium on Thurs., Oct. 2 at 7:30 p.m. His jazzy sound combines Latin rhythms with Panama folk songs. Get Tickets by calling 1-800-999-UMAS.

Field hockey continues slide

Continued from page 8

Minutewomen seemed to lose focus in the second half, becoming more desperate as their opponent continued to rack up goals.

"When we don't commit ourselves to the type of defense we need to be successful, we don't do well," Shea said.

There were a few key flaws in UMass' play on Saturday. Despite working hard to penetrate the Husky defense, The Minutewomen often found themselves in the unenviable position of sending the ball backwards, where defender Kristin Hopwood was given the task of restarting the offense.

"There are times when we forget how hard we worked to get where we are, and we forget to continue working hard," Shea said. "When we've made a decision to transfer the ball and we haven't all decided collectively as a group, that's when we get stuck. When everyone's clicking and on the same page, that's when we're successful."

Shea remains optimistic about her team, and UMass already has more wins than it did at this time last year.

"We just need to be consistent," she said.

Unconcerned about this weekend's loss, the team is preparing for its upcoming game against Syracuse this Friday at 7 p.m.

"We're in it for the marathon, not the sprint," said sophomore Katelyn Woolfrey.

Minutemen drop Dukes, 31-26

Continued from page 8

and the Dukes nearly one-upped the 17-point comeback that was good enough to topple Hofstra a week ago.

LeZotte was a perfect 5-for-5 in spearheading a six-play, 74-yard drive on the ensuing possession, which culminated with a 7-yard touchdown catch by receiver Tahir Hinds.

Then, with the score 31-20, JMU turned what was potentially a rout into the nip-and-tuck battle Matthews had expected, as Isaiah Dottin-Carter picked off a deflected Krohn pass and rumbled 22 yards to narrow the margin to just 31-26.

The two-point conversion attempt failed, however, and a UMass defense which was in the JMU backfield consistently all afternoon, held the Dukes on consecutive drives and forced LeZotte into a Hail Mary that fell incomplete.

"I think we fell asleep with the score 31-13, but you have to credit JMU," Whipple said. "When we went ahead like that ... there was an attitude like 'they're going to roll over for the mighty Minutemen.'

"I did not have a good feeling in my gut ... they have a good team, and they came fighting back. They came off a comeback win last week and it gave them confidence to come back down the stretch."

Massachusetts got on the board first, as Krohn found fullback Rich Demers for a five-yard scoring strike with 6:47 remaining in the first period. Following a missed 32-yard field goal by JMU kicker Burke George and a 43-yard scamper by Baylark down to the JMU 32 yard line, true freshman placekicker Michael Torres made the score 10-0 in favor of the Minutemen with a 46-yard field goal.

"Special teams always shows up in the end." Matthews said. "We missed an extra point and a field goal, and [Torres] hits a big field goal for them and we lose by five. It's something that really hurt us."

LeZotte finally got JMU on the board late in the second quarter, as the junior signal caller took the Dukes 61 yards in just four plays, capping the drive with a 21-yard TD pass to wide receiver Nic Tolley. George missed the extra point, making the score 10-6 with 3:13 remaining in the half.

The Maroon and White immediately answered, however, as Krohn marched the offense 71 yards in just over three minutes, concluding the seven play drive with a three-yard touchdown pass to Peebler to up the score to 17-6 just before halftime.

On James Madison's first possession of the second half, UMass quickly regained possession as cornerback Steve Costello forced Harrison to fumble into the hands of freshman Charles Walker. UMass immediately capitalized on the turnover as Baylark found the end zone from five yards out for his second touchdown of the day, making the score 24-6.

The Dukes narrowed the margin to 24-13 when LeZotte hit Harrison for his second touchdown pass of the day. JMU seemingly tacked on a crucial two-point conversion when LeZotte found Tahir Hinds, but the play was negated following an illegal receiver downfield penalty, and the Dukes settled for the PAT to make the score 24-13.

Baylark concluded UMass' scoring nearly on his own early in the fourth quarter, carrying the ball six times for 37 yards in an eight-play drive that resulted in the sophomore's second and final touchdown of the afternoon.

Linebackers Isai Bradshaw and Trey Townsend led the way for James Madison defensively, as the duo recorded 13 and 11 tackles respectively. Tri-captain Anton McKenzie paced the UMass unit with 11 tackles, nine solo.

Massachusetts returns to action next Saturday to host New Hampshire at McGuirk Alumni Stadium for Family Day.

Offense comes together in win

Continued from page 8

time to get back to work. But for that moment, it was clear: this week, Baylark officially got the keys to the offense.

Baylark also wears No. 5, the very same number worn by the '98 team's stud tailback, current Arizona Cardinal Marcel Shipp.

At quarterback, senior Jeff Krohn provides an exemplary reflection of 1998's Todd Bankhead. Bankhead went 303-for-525 (57.7 percent), threw for 3,919 yards and 34 touchdowns – all UMass records – and led the team into the post-season. While Krohn hasn't quite amassed those numbers – and probably never will – he is on track to eclipse '67 graduate Greg Landry (3,131 yards) for fourth on the all-time passing yardage list, and he's gotten there in just 14 games under center for the Maroon and White.

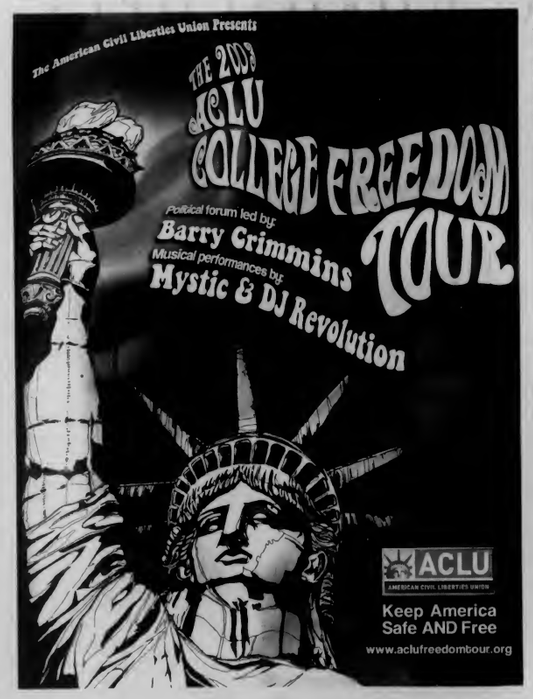
Any Krohn naysayers can forward their gripes to any one of the Pac-10 defensive coordinators who had to deal with him in his two years at Arizona State.

But until Saturday's performance against James Madison – one that included miscues and failures – the offense wasn't really clicking, to use again the oft-overused cliché. Saturday, it all began to come together, and the weapons on the Minuteman offense looked to be locked and loaded, just in time for the conference season.

The hallmark of the "O's" performance was its three-minute, 71-yard drive at the end of the first half. It began with a bang, as Krohn found junior Jason Peebler for 23 yards, bringing the Minutemen into JMU territory on the first play of the drive. Krohn then hit Jimmie Howard for nine more yards, before handing off to junior transfer Rich Demers, who took it 19 yards to the Dukes' 16.

An illegal procedure penalty took the Minutemen back to the 21, but Krohn quickly threw to Baylark, who rumbled to the JMU 2-yard line. Baylarks first two attempts at paydirt were stopped, the second of which ended with the sophomore gobbling up his own fumble. Then Krohn went back to Peebler, who began and ended the drive, for the scoring play.

Throughout the drive the Minutemen, and especially Krohn, worked at an efficient, professional level, exhibiting plenty of comfort in the two-minute drill. That, according to Peebler, was no fluke.



"We go through our two-minute drill once or twice a week in practice so it clicks to us pretty good, and once we get going, it's pretty hard to stop us," he said.

Peebler and the rest of the receiving corps also had an extra incentive to beat the Dukes Saturday, after a tough pregame review by JMU coach Mickey Matthews.

"He did make a lot of comments toward us," Peebler said of the four-yard Duke coach, "saying that some of our receivers weren't as fast as some of the receivers they've seen in the past, and it just motivated us to step up our game that much more."

According to his play, Peebler especially took offense to Matthews apparent understatement. The junior from Modesto, Calif. eclipsed the century mark, getting his money's worth on just eight catches to the tune of 116 yards.

Even the kicker got into it. Freshman Mike Torres kicked his longest field goal in a UMass uniform, a 46-yard boomer that went well past the goalposts and cleared the curved wall sitting roughly 15 yards behind them.

Tuesday, September 30, 2003 at UMass, Bowker Auditorium.

7pm-10:30pm. Tickets available at the box office and at the door event day.

Doors open at 6:45pm.
Tickets and admission are first come first served.

paper · Rolling Stone · Mother Jones · Las Gatillo Films · Wonderland

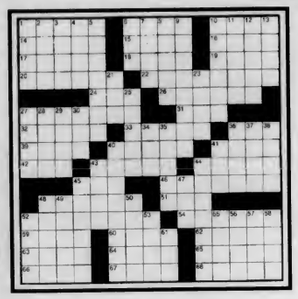
Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZ HI-DEF FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS · University Drive · UMASS

Clip Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Featuring Aveda and Paul Mitchell Products
Fall Special
Take $5 off any coloring highlights in auburns, golds, or beiges starting at $50!
Waxing Special
100% Organic NuFree wax!
Take $5 off 3/4 leg or lower leg!

MUSIC · SOFTWARE · MOVIES · BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

Quote for the Day

"Politicians hide themselves away
They only started the war
Why should they go out to fight?
They leave that role to the poor..."



-Black Sabbath

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
FREE BUFFET DURING RED SOX PLAYOFF GAMES!
Call for info
(F%@# THE CURSE!)
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Mamou
- Southern Fried Steak
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 69
- Low: 43

TUESDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 39

WEDNESDAY
- High: 62
- Low: 36

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF Sarah Lloyd / Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Make sure you get some praise for your work today.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you want to be a star, this day could be a milestone, if not find another sign.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you lose today tomorrow will only be better.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Since people always gossip, try to make it positive rumors.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
The difficult decision you've been stressing over is out of your hands.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Take what you want, don't hold back. It was put there for you.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't let others take you down, hit the gym to be strong enough to stand it.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Try the stocks today, there is fortune in your future.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You were wild this past weekend, make it up by starting this week off moderately.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Nothing will stand in your way, but don't forget to compliment others.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your activist side is on overload, don't dream too big.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try to show that you're not as selfish as people think.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Apartment for Rent

2 Bedroom, 1 Full Bath, Loft Style apartment, Washer/Dryer in unit. $1300/month. Downtown Amherst 978 546-5243

Auto for Sale

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Merc Sable Wag. '94 Runs Great. Gd. Cond. Reliable trans. Recent Sticker. $1050. B/O Call 549-7455

Auto Repair

Imported cars a specialty. 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PCs guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

International Sales for consulting/software firm. Multi-Lingual Telephone skills required. Economics a plus. Early AM hours required. Full or part time. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Employment

Mad Science: Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Sale

Classic Slingerland Drum Kit. Bass pair Toms Snare with Stand etc. Extra Snare. Pair Zilgian cymbals with stand Throne with brushes, sticks, etc All in good condition. $450.00 O/B/O Call 253-2967

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Furniture

Futon great condition Thick Mattress $150.00 O/B/O KariSlyn@aol.com

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.western-massboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

Services

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free Legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa Services Two for one Tuesday Bring a friend get 1/2 off on the best full service haircut in town Call 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplash-tours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.Epicurean Tours.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED, non-smokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@gbnlaw.net, www.robertmichelesq.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen Duke it out

Shades of 1998 as 'O' comes alive

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

No rings are being cast, and no banners are being sewn yet, but the similarities between the 2003 and 1998 editions of Massachusetts Football are striking already, especially when it comes to the guys given the job of scoring.

True, the '98 National Champions never faced the loss of their two top running backs before a conference game was even played, as this year's squad did with sophomores R.J. Cobbs (out indefinitely due to academics) and Raunny Rosario (still recovering from an injured knee that could keep him out another two or three weeks).

Still, those two injuries could, in the eyes of the most optimistic fans, be seen as an odd alignment of the stars that has thrown young Steve Baylark into full-time duty, where he has blossomed in his first four games on the job. Not sure if Baylark can handle the load? Witness the following:

In 3 3/4 games as the prime tailback, Baylark has amassed 436 yards in 100 attempts, and his 109 yards per game average puts him second best in the Atlantic 10 behind Maine's Marcus Williams, considered to be among the best athletes in the conference.

Saturday was also the third time this season Baylark has rushed for over 100 yards. The only other A-10 player to do that thus far is Marcus Williams, who holds a scant 57-yard edge over Baylark on the top 10 rushing yardage list.

The A-10 brass is also beginning to recognize his abilities, as the sophomore was awarded Rookie of the Week honors for his performance against James Madison. Baylark rushed for 140 yards with two touchdowns on a career-high 35 carries against James Madison – a sign that Mark Whipple is starting to accept the fact that the Apopka, Fla. native has to be the workhorse, even if there isn't much depth left on the tailback chart.

Baylark provided a perfect image of his current situation just after the 70 bands – counting UMass – had completed their Band Day show at halftime. The soft-spoken 6-footer casually sat in the driver's seat of the injury cart, his hand draped over the wheel. He didn't stay long though; it was soon

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

L.A. Love sacks James Madison quarterback Matt LeZotte for an 8-yard loss. Although the sack was negated by a five-yard offside penalty against UMass, the Minutemen put LeZotte on the ground two more times in their 31-26 win over JMU.

UM downs JMU, 31-26

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Mickey Matthews said he "didn't understand at all" why a win Saturday for the Massachusetts football team over James Madison (2-2 1-1 Atlantic 10) would be considered an upset.

The veteran Dukes' coach felt the Minutemen (3-1 2-0 A-10) were quite similar to his own outfit, as both teams featured injury-prone, veteran quarterbacks, experienced receivers and talented first-year performers in the backfield.

James Madison	26
UMass	31

So following UMass' 31-26 win over JMU before a capacity home crowd on Band Day in Amherst, Matthews was correct on many fronts. While UMass' Jeff Krohn was good on 18-of-34 for 214 yards and three touchdown passes, Matthews' own fragile quarterback, junior Matt LeZotte, completed 21-of-38 for 248 yards and a career-high three scores as well.

Along the same lines, Minuteman receiver Jason Peebler was hauling in eight catches for 116 yards, while Dukes' counterpart Alan Harrison snagged nine balls for 78 yards.

As is often the case, though, the effective difference between the two teams came on the ground. Sophomore tailback Steve Baylark finally emerged as a workhorse, tallying 146 yards on 35 carries and two touchdowns, and an aggressive Minuteman defense knocked highly-touted freshman tailback Alvin Banks out of the game in the first quarter after gaining just seven yards, allowing the Maroon and White to hold off a late JMU charge and preserve the victory.

"I'm really happy with the win," Whipple said. "We did some good things and played well enough to win. It's been five years since we've been 3-1 and 2-0 in the Atlantic 10, and I feel a lot better now than I did outside North Carolina State a year ago. That's the bottom line."

Massachusetts finished with 385 total yards while JMU totalled 319 yards, despite UMass out gaining JMU 171-71 on the ground. The Minutemen were, however, flagged for season-high fourteen penalties for 140 yards.

"At times, we played as well as any team I've had at UMass," Whipple said. "But other times we did some things out there that were just dumb."

The Minutemen made a late bid to fall victim to complacency following Baylark's 1-yard touchdown plunge that made it 31-13 at the 13:37 mark of the fourth quarter.

Continued on page 6

Late rally dooms Minutewomen

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team is experiencing a bit of a slide. The Minutewomen came into Sunday afternoon's contest against the Binghamton Bearcats, struggling through a three-game scoreless losing streak.

The Maroon and White broke the goalless streak early and led 2-1 late in game in the pouring rain. But the Bearcats wouldn't back down, stepping up their physicality and netting two unanswered goals to surpass the Minutewomen 3-2 in heart-breaking fashion for the Maroon and White.

Binghamton	3
UMass	2

"It was a disappointing finish," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Although we are definitely showing positive signs from the Central Connecticut game to now."

UMass controlled the tempo and momentum in the second half as it held onto a 2-1 lead, but that would soon change at around the 80-minute mark. The Bearcats physical play was turned up a few notches, as they began making an excessive amount contact and committing multiple fouls. Binghamton tallied up 16 fouls in the game — nine of which came in the latter part of the second half.

Finally, Binghamton caught a break. Freshmen forward Danielle White streaked past the defender, racing to ball and sending it home to tie the game 2-2 at 80:15.

Just two minutes later, the Bearcats netted the game-winning goal. With under eight minutes to go, Vicky Vernicek floated a corner kick to Kelly Burnham, who headed it in to put the Bearcats up 3-2, a lead that would last until the final whistle.

The Minutewomen tried to rally with under two minutes left, heightening their offensive attack, but were unable to find the back of the net. The Binghamton defense ensured that the ball stayed out of its zone in the last minute, and as the clock read zero, the Maroon and White were astonished to see that they weren't victorious in this heartbreaker.

UMass held the upper hand in shots, outshooting Binghamton 21-10, and had seven corner kicks to the Bearcats' six.

Maroon and White goalkeeper Kelly Nigh racked up a total of six saves in the contest. Her counterpart for Binghamton, freshman Kristie Bowers, put forth an impressive showing, notching nine saves in the win.

UMass stormed out of the gates in the first half, bombarding Bowers with a wide array of shots. Leading the Maroon and White on the attack was junior Lindsey Fairweather, sophomore Morgan Czaja (three shots in the offense half) and freshman defender Nadia Villarroel, along with the other offensive players.

The Maroon and White struck first, with 13:03 showing on the clock, when sophomore Adair Blyler, in her first game back since injuring her knee (eight points), controlled the deflected ball off of Bowers and punched it home to give UMass the 1-0 lead.

"Breaking out of our [scoring] slump," Rudy said, "was definitely a positive today."

Binghamton wasted no time in returning the favor, with 10:33 remaining in the half, Vernicek booted the free kick past Nigh to deadlock the game at one a piece.

UMass took the lead in the second only 6:07 into the half, when Fairweather scored on a free kick from sophomore Lindsey Bellini to give the Minutewomen the commanding 2-1 lead. Fairweather tallied up a total of 10 shots on the afternoon.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Adair Blyler's goal in the 32nd minute wasn't enough to beat the Binghamton Bearcats yesterday.

Downward spiral

Slide continues with 7-0 loss

By Paula Aden
Collegian Correspondent

STORRS, Conn. With a 7-0 loss to the University of Connecticut Saturday, the University of Massachusetts (2-8) field hockey team's losing streak extended to six games. UConn (6-3) scored five goals in the second period, and goalie Maureen Butler blanked the Minutewomen for her sixth shutout of the season.

UMass goalie Christine Tocco had her work cut out for her, facing 22 shots from the Husky offense. In the first half, Tocco blocked five shots, holding down a 2-0 UConn lead at halftime.

UMass	0
UConn	7

Becky Helwig dribbled through the Minutewomen's defense to score the first goal of the game 10 minutes into the first period, granting UConn a lead it would continue to hold for the remainder of the game.

With the clock running down on the first half, UConn had its sixth penalty corner. Lauren Henderson was unable to score on her initial shot, but with an assist from Laura Thibodeau, Henderson managed to score on the rebound with only nine seconds left in the period.

"That was an inexcusable goal," Massachusetts coach Patty Shea said.

The Minutewomen were playing well during the first half, but the final UConn goal of the period seemed to be more of a careless mistake from the Maroon and White. The Huskies had made stronger offensive strikes earlier in the period that had been successfully stopped, but with only seconds remaining until halftime, the Minutewomen stopped focusing on their defense, and allowed the UConn goal.

The first half was marked with especially good defensive playing from UMass. Halfway through the period, the Huskies had three penalty corners in 1:1/2 minutes, but Tocco earned a save on the first, and the defense protected successfully against the next two.

When the second period began, it became clear that UConn was controlling the tempo of the game.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Kristin Hopwood was given the task of keeping the Minutewomen out of hot water against UConn.

Although the Minutewomen managed a few strong offensive maneuvers early in the half from Patricia Borneo and Caitlin Beresin, the Huskies quickly took charge of the field.

With virtually all the second half action happening in the UMass end, Connecticut had an offensive explosion, scoring five goals in just over eighteen minutes. The strike began with a goal from Mary Jo Malone off an assist from Kelly Stolle. Stolle scored three minutes later, assisted by Laura Puddle.

Henderson scored her second goal of the game, unassisted, barely four minutes after Stolle's goal. Cea Fong came up with the final two goals of the game, the first one coming on a near baseball swing at her waist.

There was little help for Tocco in the second half, though she managed seven saves in the loss. The UMass defenders were not sticking with specific targets, and allowing the Huskies to escape them. The

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 20

UMass to host open meeting

Forum to aid in ongoing search for new president

By Kochnov Jean-Noel
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, in conjunction with the President Search Committee, is encouraging the UMass community to attend an open forum addressing the search for the next president of the UMass system.

The Amherst campus will host its open forum today at 3 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The purpose of the open forum is to allow students, faculty, staff, alumni, parents and all other interested constituents of the UMass community an opportunity to lend their voices to the search for a new university president.

Those who attend the forum are asked to consider three questions: What are the most important challenges and opportunities facing the new president; what kind of person is best prepared to address these challenges and opportunities; and what kind of experience, management style and other characteristics and traits would the ideal candidate possess?

R. William Funk, the national managing director of Korn/Ferry International, will moderate the forum. Korn/Ferry International is the executive search firm hired by the University to aid in the process.

The University Board of Trustees appointed the 28 members of the President Search Committee on Aug. 28. The committee consists of Board of Trustees members, University of Massachusetts faculty, alumni, staff, students and community leaders. The committee is co-chaired by Diane Bissonnette Moes, an attorney with Donoghue Barrett & Singal, and Dennis Austin, the director of state government relations with the Raytheon Company. Both are UMass alumni and serve on the Board of Trustees.

The five-campus University of Massachusetts system has been without a president since the resignation of William M. Bulger on Sept. 1. Bulger held the post since January of 1996.

Currently mired in a budget crisis, the University of Massachusetts system has come under fire by Governor Mitt Romney, who, as part of his administration's 2004 fiscal budget proposal, sought to eliminate the president's office while also privatizing the Amherst campus in an effort he said would improve the system's efficiency. The bid was rejected by the Massachusetts House Ways and Means Committee and did not make the final budget.

Nonetheless, the University of Massachusetts system eventually received an $80 million budget cut.

The Amherst campus will be the first stop in a three-day tour of open forums, which will be held until Oct. 2.

On the Net: www.massachusetts.edu.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
HANGING UP
TELEMARKETERS SILENCED
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
KING OF THE MUSICAL
"TITANIC" STEAMS THROUGH WORCESTER
SPORTS PAGE 8
SQUEAKER
UMASS DOWNS UNH 1-0
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

Schwarzenegger campaign accused of 'dirty tricks'

By Erica Werner
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — The feud between Gov. Gray Davis and Arnold Schwarzenegger escalated yesterday as the governor's campaign accused the actor's handlers of engaging in "dirty tricks" by plotting to disrupt a Davis event.

Davis spokesman Peter Ragone said the campaign had obtained an e-mail showing that the Schwarzenegger camp was trying to stack one of the governor's town-hall meetings "with shills for their campaign, Republicans who would disrupt and attack the governor."

"We find that deeply troubling and deeply disrespectful to the process," Ragone said, terming the tactic "dirty tricks."

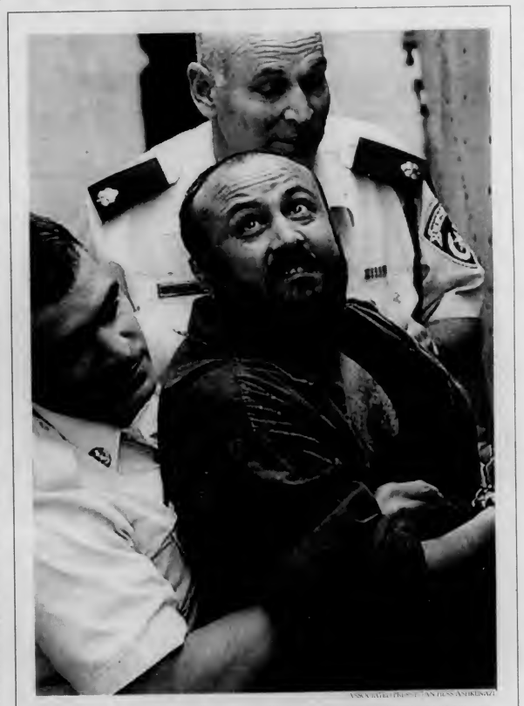
Schwarzenegger spokesman Sean Walsh said he would have to check on whether the campaign was playing any role in getting Republicans to attend the town hall meeting being broadcast Monday on the Spanish-language network Univision.

"Our response is it sounds like the wheels are flying off the car of the Davis campaign, and if this is a town hall open to the public, why shouldn't voters if they're Republican voters go hear what the governor has to say," Walsh said.

Although more than 100 candidates are running in the historic recall election next Tuesday, Davis and Schwarzenegger have been casting the final days of the campaign as a two-man race, trading several barbs and airing attack ads.

Schwarzenegger struck first by launching a negative ad a week ago and Davis responded with his own attack ad and a challenge to Schwarzenegger to debate him. The former bodybuilder has rejected the debate request and forecast "hand-to-hand" combat in the final days of the chaotic race.

Davis renewed his debate dare yesterday as he campaigned at a public health clinic with New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson — the latest in a series of campaign appearances with prominent out-of-state Democrats.



"I don't know what Mr. Schwarzenegger is afraid of," Davis said Monday. "I mean, I never participated in a Mr. Universe contest. I weigh maybe 165 pounds on a good day. I'm ready to go to him toe-to-toe but he seems to be the one on the run."

Schwarzenegger spokesman Rob Stutzman said there would be no debate, adding the candidate had turned down broadcaster Larry King's offer to meet Davis on CNN.

"We've declined. We have our final week of the campaign schedule locked in," Stutzman said. "Gray Davis didn't want to debate Arnold Schwarzenegger until Gray Davis realized he was dead in the water."

As long as Schwarzenegger refuses to debate, Davis said he will correct the actor's misstatements on a daily basis until the election.

He was asked by one person if that indicated Davis, who has long been known for directing attack ads at political opponents, had abandoned a recently adopted "kinder, gentler" approach to politics.

ASSOCIATED PRESS / ANTHONY MAIRINAO

Israeli policemen push Marwan Barghouti, a prominent leader of the Palestinian uprising, onto a police vehicle as they leave Tel Aviv district court yesterday. Barghouti is on trial on 26 murder counts.

First lady pushes education

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

PARIS — Laura Bush ushered the United States back into the U.N.'s main cultural agency yesterday and urged the organization to work to make education accessible to all the world's children as a weapon against terrorism.

Mrs. Bush also offered a firm defense of U.S. policies in Iraq, an issue that has divided the Bush administration from many of the countries represented at the meeting of UNESCO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

On the second day of a five-day foreign trip, Mrs. Bush whirled through Paris, opening the crisp fall day at the Elysee Palace with a social call on President Jacques Chirac and ending it with an evening reception at the residence of U.S. Ambassador Howard Leach. She leaves early today for Moscow to attend a book festival sponsored by Lyudmila Putin, wife of the Russian president.

Chirac, accompanied by greeters in white tie, red waistcoats and tails, joined Mrs. Bush at her limousine in the gravel palace courtyard and bent low to kiss her hand. He sent her off 40 minutes later, after discussions in his ornate palace office that aides said stuck mostly to pleasantries, by repeating the gentlemanly flourish.

With both aware of the tensions between the French and U.S. governments over the American-led war in Iraq, Chirac seemed determined to wear his most charming, welcoming face, a White House official said.

For instance, when Leach mentioned Iraq, Chirac said quickly, "Let bygones be bygones — we all agree we need to rebuild Iraq," then quickly steered the conversation to Mrs. Bush's travel plans and charity work, the official said.

Mrs. Bush likewise appeared eager to take on the role of emissary of good will between America and France, telling reporters traveling with her later that she of course agreed with Chirac's Iraq comments.

"I fully expect the relationship between the United States and France will continue to be very strong," she said. "Sure, we'll have disagreements, but we'll have disagreements with a lot of people but continue to have strong relationships."

As for those kisses, Mrs. Bush just laughed. "I think that was French hospitality," she said.

Though discussion of Iraq went no further with Chirac, it figured prominently in Mrs. Bush's remarks at the UNESCO gathering.

"Surely we can agree that rebuilding [Iraq] ... is in all of our best interests," she said in a speech that received only intermittent, polite applause. "The presence of a peaceful, stable Iraq at the heart of the Middle East will be a powerful beacon for freedom — and example of hope — in that vital region."

After her speech, Mrs. Bush also met briefly with Iraq's minister of education, Alaudin Abdul-Saheb al-Alwan.

Palestinian official calls violence a mistake

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — The Palestinians were better off before they launched their uprising against Israel, the ousted Palestinian security chief said yesterday, as thousands marched to mark the three-year anniversary of the revolt.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Mohammed Dahlan also said the Palestinians misread the dramatic changes brought by the Sept. 11 terror attacks on the United States, and that hurt their aspirations of statehood.

It is rare for Palestinians to openly criticize the "intefadeh" despite growing misgivings among some, especially those whose lives have been severely disrupted by Israeli travel bans and military raids aimed keeping suicide bombers and gunmen out of Israel.

In Tel Aviv, a prominent leader of the uprising, Marwan Barghouti, said he had no regrets about the past three years. "To die is better than living under occupation," Barghouti told an Israeli court, delivering closing arguments in his murder trial. Israel accuses him of involvement in attacks that killed 26 Israelis.

"I am proud of the intefadeh, I am proud of the resistance to the Israeli occupation," Barghouti said, addressing the judges in Hebrew.

Also yesterday, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat emerged smiling from his battered West Bank compound after a bout with the flu.

Aides said Arafat, 74, sent for his personal physician, Dr. Ashraf al-Kurdi, who lives in Jordan. Arafat had been ill for three days and was unable to keep down food, said his aide, Nabil Abu Rdeneh.

Smiling at reporters after descending the steps slowly, Arafat thanked King Abdullah II of Jordan for sending al-Kurdi and three other doctors, adding, "but now the illness is over, thank God."

The Palestinian uprising broke out Sept. 28, 2000, after Israel's then-opposition leader Ariel Sharon, now prime minister, visited the hotly contested Jerusalem holy site known to Muslims as Haram as-Sharif and to Jews as the Temple Mount.

Violent clashes followed, and grew into violence marked by repeated terror attacks against Israelis and Israeli military strikes into Palestinian areas. A total of 2,477 people have been killed on the Palestinian side and 860 on the Israeli side.

Anniversary rallies on Sunday and Monday were relatively muted and small in scale compared to previous years.

Yesterday, about 3,000 supporters of the Islamic militant group Hamas, which has carried out scores of suicide bombings, rallied in Gaza City. A Hamas leader, Ismail Hanieh, said the group is ready to halt attacks on Israeli civilians "if the Zionist occupation stops killing civilians."

However, Hamas founder Sheik Ahmed Yassin said last week his group is not interested in a truce deal the incoming Palestinian prime minister, Ahmed Qureia, wants to negotiate with Israel.

Dahlan, who served as security chief under outgoing Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas, said the Palestinians' first uprising, from 1987-1993, in which demonstrators faced soldiers with rocks and bottles, was much more effective than the current revolt. The first uprising "brought us back to our homeland," said Dahlan, who along with Arafat, returned from exile in the mid-1990s.

"We were in a better position [then] than we are now, politically and internationally," Dahlan told AP in an interview at his Gaza City office.

Doctor supports use of medical cannibus

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Correspondent

Studies have shown that patients with incurable pain have substantially benefited from the use of cannabis while avoiding the side effects of many FDA-approved drugs, Dr. Ethan Russo said in his lecture on medical marijuana last night.

Russo, who practiced clinical neurology with a specialty in child neurology, migraines and chronic pain in Minnesota for 20 years, gave a medical history of cannabis to a crowd of about 60 at Stockbridge Hall.

Russo said there are records that show that cannabis was used to reduce excessive menstrual bleeding as far back as ancient Egypt and 13th-century Italy. Medical texts claiming that cannabis diminishes menstrual cramping and bleeding have persisted until today. According to Russo, 51 percent of Australian women now reportedly use medicated cannabis to relieve cramping.

Russo said that many of the women in Jamaica smoke cannabis throughout their pregnancies; they have no evidence of miscarriage or negative effects on the birth weight and growth of their children. However, he said Jamaican women report increased appetite, sleep duration and energy, and diminished symptoms of morning sickness during their pregnancies.

Russo also said that cannabis has been shown to reduce symptoms of asthma, bone disorders, multiple sclerosis and glaucoma. He performed a study on four subjects who were legally receiving medical cannabis from the government for years. Russo said that one subject suffered from a long-term addiction to heroin because it was the only way he could control his pain. This subject, who he said was formerly wheelchair-bound, now walks and uses cannabis as his only painkiller.

Russo said he found no negative side effects caused by cannabis in any of his subjects. He tested for all the rumored side effects, but found no evidence to support any of them.

For example, he tested for brain shrinkage using magnetic resonance imaging, and found that none of the subjects suffered from this problem. His studies further showed that none of the subjects were depressed, and that the rate of acquisition of complex new verbal material was normal.

Russo said cannabis was an improvement over the best available standard medications in all cases.

Marcy Duda, a woman who attended the lecture, said she has been smoking cannabis since the age of 12 and believes it saved her life. She said she had two sisters, both who died of aneurysms (blood clots in the brain) at young ages. Duda had five aneurysms, none of which ever popped. She said she credits this to the fact that she smoked cannabis.

Since having brain surgery to remove the aneurysms, Duda said, she suffers from headaches so painful they make her want to slam her head against a wall. She said she didn't know what she would do without cannabis, which she smokes and takes in the form of tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC.

"I always say 'either give me a gun or give me a joint,'" said Duda, who is an activist for the legalization of marijuana.

Duda has been testifying at the Statehouse for the last four years to try to legalize marijuana. She said congress is one vote away from decriminalizing marijuana, which is "the first step on the ladder."

There is no reason cannabis should be illegal, Russo said, since it is less harmful than other legal, addictive substances like nicotine, alcohol caffeine.

There is no evidence — such as tolerance or withdrawal — that cannabis is addictive, Russo said.

He said none of his subjects ever had to increase their dosages, and that if anything, some of them improved and were able to decrease their intake amounts. The patients had "cannabis drought," meaning they suffered from pain related to their illnesses if their cannabis shipment was late, but there was no evidence of withdrawal, he said.

Russo ended his lecture by saying the audience should be open-minded.

"You don't need to believe anything I say tonight, but read what is out there and see if there might be a different way of thinking about these issues. Make up your own mind."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COPY EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crain
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT NEWS Ferron Salniker
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marrelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Bob McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED. ADVERTISING, REVENUE AND CIRCULATION FIGURES FOR PAPER RELEASED IN AUGUST 2003. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ABSOLUTELY SPACE FREE SINCE 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 M-THURS 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

For the Record

Correction & Clarification: Due to inaccurate information provided by the Amherst Police Department, there were several errors in Friday's brief about the three arrests in Amherst Center in the News section. Robert Rizzo was booked only on charges of disorderly conduct. He was not intoxicated at the time of the arrest, he said. He is also not a brother of fraternity Zeta Beta Tau. His arraignment is on Wednesday.

Correction: In a Page One story yesterday, it was incorrectly reported that the Office of ALANA Affairs won about 25 percent of the Student Government Association Senate in Thursday's Senate elections. However, it was the ALANA Caucus that won the seats.

police log

TUESDAY, SEPT. 23

11:19 a.m. A video camera worth between $1,500 and $2,000 was reported stolen from the Computer Science building.

11:30 a.m. A cell phone and textbooks were reported stolen from a teaching assistant's office in the Isenberg School of Management.

1:32 p.m. A caller reported that her vehicle had flooded during the heavy downpour earlier. UMPD reported assisting numerous motorists during the torrential downpour.

7:28 p.m. A report of a vehicle on fire in Lot 11 was received. Amherst Fire Department and Environmental Health and Safety responded. The owner was notified and the vehicle was towed.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 24

12:40 a.m. Douglas Horne, 18, of 136 Eastbourne Rd., Newton, Mass., was arrested in Lot 11 for possession of a Class D substance.

12:57 a.m. Multiple calls were received regarding a vehicle rollover on Massachusetts Ave. Amherst Police department reported that the vehicle was stolen. Amherst Fire Department responded and no personal injury was reported. Amherst Police assumed arrests.

6 a.m. Eight vehicles were found vandalized in Lot 22. Three of the vehicles had broken rear windows, three had missing side windows and three of the vehicles' stereos were removed. The owners were notified.

11:45 a.m. A caller reported that the back window of her vehicle had been smashed within two hours of her report in Lot 32.

12:03 p.m. A report was received of a break-in of a car in Lot 12. One hundred CDs in a case and a radar detector were reportedly stolen.

2:16 p.m. A caller reported a fight between two people in Lot 45. Officers reported that all was quiet and arrested Nicholas Rivard, 29, of 10A Karin Dr., Plainfield, Conn., for misdemeanor larceny.

8:25 p.m. A resident assistant reported a subject duct taped to a pole in the Orchard Hill Residential Area. Responding officers found that the subject was able to free himself and had apparently allowed his friends to duct tape him to the pole after losing a bet.

9:12 p.m. A party reported that someone had entered her unlocked room in Coolidge Hall. Two purses, a wallet, credit cards and money, valuing $1,000, were reported stolen.

11:54 p.m. A party reported that her vehicle's rear window was smashed out in Lot 32.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 25

9:25 a.m. Montague Police reported that a missing person had last made a phone call from the UMass campus. Telecom was advised and was able to trace the call. Officers were shown photos and searched the area but no one was found. Montague Police were advised.

4:32 p.m. Parking Services reported that an unoccupied vehicle had rolled out of a space and struck a state vehicle. The vehicle was towed and the party advised to take insurance information to the Parking Services office.

10:16 p.m. A report was received of fireworks in Lot 50 between John Quincy Adams Tower and Patterson Hall. The responding officer reported that all was quiet upon arrival.

11:50 p.m. The resident director of Cance Hall requested assistance for a check on a resident. The officer reported that the student was not there, and that the mother will call UMPD if the resident was not located by the morning.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 26

2:05 a.m. Environmental Health and Safety reported that a fire alarm in Gorman Hall was apparently caused by someone attempting to light the smoke detector on fire.

9:50 a.m. A party reported that there was a suspicious Fed-Ex truck with no rear plate and two occupants hiding inside. The responding officer reported that the vehicle was moving.

4:11 p.m. A caller reported that since he last parked his car in Lot 12, someone had replaced the right front tire with a flat spare tire.

8:16 p.m. Lauren Macdonald, 18, of 21 Heather Dr., Wilmington, Mass., was arrested for being a minor in possession of alcohol.

8:34 p.m. A resident assistant reported that he could hear glass breaking outside Patterson Hall. Police cadets reported finding broken bottles outside and the fourth floor bathroom window broken. Housing Services was notified.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 27

12:55 a.m. A resident assistant reported swastikas drawn in the sixth floor hallway and stairwell. Housing Services was notified.

1:08 a.m. A transit dispatcher reported that there were several subjects tearing down fencing near the Haigis Mall.

1:12 a.m. An officer noticed several subjects carrying fencing in Lot 62. Brett Danahy, 21, of 21 Parsons Dr., Swampscott, Mass., and Christopher Harrsion, 21, of 143 Spring St., Fairhaven, Mass., were arrested for misdemeanor destruction of property and misdemeanor larceny.

1:22 a.m. An officer responded to a report of a robbery in Kennedy Hall. The party stated that he had been assaulted by three men in an elevator. The subject was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

2:15 a.m. A cadet reported a group of three males rummaging through a car on Fearing Street. An officer issued trespasses and the suspect vehicle left campus.

2:43 a.m. A resident assistant reported hearing glass breaking in the fourth floor men's bathroom in John Adams Tower. The responding officer found a broken window and Housing Services was notified.

5:51 a.m. A party stated that most of the doors on the third floor of Pierpont Hall had offensive writing on them. An officer reported that 40 doors had obscenities written on them. Housing Services was notified.

5:15 p.m. Individuals on roller blades riding the rails near Kennedy Hall were sent off campus.

9:23 p.m. Joshua Pereira, 20, of 1010 Maple St., Palmer, Mass., was arrested for driving with a revoked license and failure to stop/yield.

10:43 p.m. A resident assistant reported that someone threw an object through the windows in the lobby of John Adams Tower, shattering glass all over the receptionist. The responding officer reported that the receptionist was not injured and Emergency Housing was notified.

10:52 p.m. Large windows in the lobby area on the Sunset Street side of Patterson dormitory were smashed. Housing was notified.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 28

12:15 a.m. An officer reported that the Amherst Police were breaking up a party in the area of the fraternities. UMPD reported a large crowd moving down Fearing Street. Officers then reported about 60 subjects in the area of the pyramids and about 100 students in the Southwest Residential Area.

1 a.m. Officers responding to a report of a fight in Lot 32 arrested Mathew Enegess, 21, of 343 Boylston St., Newton, Mass., for disorderly conduct.

1:57 a.m. A resident assistant reported that a student had beaten on and ran a knife down her door. Services were rendered.

11:53 a.m. UMPD served a warrant in Brooks Hall. Kyle Albertini, 18, of 74 Cox St., Hudson, Mass., was arrested.

6:25 p.m. A subject came to the station wishing to speak with an officer. Jonathan Schwall, 19, of 186 Randall Rd., Stow, Mass., was arrested on a warrant.

Student duct-taped to post

Fencing stolen from FAC plaza

compiled by Tom Coyle

Tomorrow

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Service
presents
SOM CAR
2003
All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!
Date: Wedne
Place:
Time: Begins at 12:00 NOON - Ends at 5:00 P.M.

For your convenience, there will be a free shuttle leaving Haigis Mall for the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from Noon to 5:00 P.M.

Companies Attending

1-A Auto, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning
American Express Financial
American Express Tax & Business
BDO Seidman
Becker Conviser
The Boston Beer Company
Cambridge Associates
Deloitte & Touche
Decathlon Sports USA
Enterprise Rent-a- Car
Ercolini & Co.
Ernst & Young
Feeley &Driscoll
Ferguson Enterprises
Filene's
Follett Higher Education Group
Frito-Lay
General Dynamics
General Electric
Hannaford
Hertz Corporation
Hilco Appraisal Services
Huron Consulting
Internal Revenue Servicec
Investors Bank & Trust
J.C. Penney
Jeld - Wen
Johnson & Johnson
KB Toys
Kmart Corporation
Kohl's Department Stores
KPMG LLP
Liberty Mutual
Maxim Healthcare Services
Moore Wallace North America
Moriarty & Primack
Morris & Morris
Needel, Welch & Stone
Northwestern Mutual
O'Connor & Drew
The Pepsi Bottling Group
PETsMART
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Putnam Investments
Raytheon Company
The Sherwin-Williams Company
Staples
Stop & Shop Company
Sun Life Financial
Target Stores
TJX Companies
Travelers
United Technologies
U.S. Marine Corps
Vitale, Caturano & Co.
Waddell & Reed
Walgreen's
Wells Fargo Financial
Wolf & Company

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men; dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Today: The solution to music piracy surfaces

The battle over music piracy might reach an armistice on Capitol Hill today. After a battery of lawsuits were handed out across the United States to music lovers, neither the young nor the old are safe from the wrath of the Recording Industry Association of America.

CD sales have slumped by 8 percent this year, and the RIAA is pointing fingers at the music swapping systems of the Internet, such as Kazaa and Bearshare.

This month alone, 260 people have been slapped with lawsuits by the RIAA, but not without heavy protest from consumers. Some people claim that they have been wrongly accused. Some are in this predicament due to children who swapped music without their parents' permission, others due to technological glitches. More than 50,000 signatures protesting the RIAA lawsuits have been gathered by a foundation called the Electronic Frontier Foundation.

The opinions of music artists remain divided. Rap artist Nelly firmly believes that people should pay up. "If you can afford a computer, you can afford a CD."

On the other hand, some musicians believe that downloading music is a freedom that should be enjoyed. Artists are already able to make millions in movies, ticket sales and merchandise even with a slight slump in overall album sales.

This dilemma will be examined today when music labels and music sharing services face off in an attempt to find a way to halt music piracy. A new solution may be just what William Fisher, a professor at Harvard University, has created. In his proposal, all Internet users would be charged an additional tax on their monthly Internet bill to cover music sharing. This plan would keep the downloading consumer happy and allow recording industries to allot a portion of these fees to the artists, which will cover above and beyond the losses in CD sales. This would also eliminate the need to sue 10-year-olds for $3,000 over a few Hillary Duff tunes.

The rewriting of the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act could also be in order. However, the music industry does not want its rules and regulations imposed upon, nor does it believe that Fisher's proposal is a fair one. If there are to be new rules for music sharing, what about other media sources such as software and movies, which can also be illegally exchanged through the music piracy world?

This battle closely mirrors one that was once fought between the music industry and the radio. Eventually it was decided that radio stations could play music as often as they wanted, in exchange for royalties.

Windows is already one step ahead of the game. Yesterday, a new service called MusicMatch Downloads opened, which allows customers to purchase each song they want to download for 99 cents. This mirrors Apple's service called iTunes Music Store, which has sold 10 million tracks to date. More online downloading stores are expected to open by the end of the year.

These online stores may be the solution to our problems. If you have not received a lawsuit yet, and like most everyone, you are still downloading from Kazaa, you are breaking the law, like it or not. Paying nearly a dollar per song is not cheap, but it may keep us $3,000 dollars richer in the long run.

Information from www.usatoday.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Do-not-call day is the demise of the telemarketer

Erika Lovley

"Hello?"

"Hello, is Eureka Looley there?"

Tomorrow will be a day that lives in infamy; a day that America is reborn. No longer will we hesitate to pick up the phone, glancing suspiciously at the blinking "Unidentified Caller" sign on the Caller ID box.

October 1, 2003 is the day the national Do Not Call Registry activates its list of Do Not Call members — or in plain English, people who are sick of running for the phone, only to hear their first name grossly mispronounced by the incompetent telemarketer on the other end of the line.

This calling list is one you want to be on. The Federal Trade Commission is actually going to make telemarketers stop calling you at those awkward moments, like right when you're standing naked in front of the bathroom window. My mother is going to cry tears of joy, for her home-cooked family meals will no longer be interrupted by Bob selling Supervacs, and my roommate will no longer be forced from her nap to answer questions about her life insurance (she's 19).

It took the FTC three years of polls, tests and 64,000 public comments (most of which were ironically gathered by telemarketers) before someone came to this brilliant conclusion: telemarketers are the most despicable creatures on the planet. Therefore, by plea from the general public, there are new rules to restrain them through the phone lines.

The Do Not Call policy will be enforced by everything from the Consumer Protection Agency to state law enforcement. That's right. If that Buy-one-get-12-free CD clearinghouse keeps calling, you can help send them and their outdated music to the tank.

If the telemarketers don't get shut down permanently by your complaints, they will be forced to pay as much as $11,000 per call.

I firmly believe that money should be allotted to the poor people who put up with these calls in the first place. Us.

If you sign up on the Do Not Call website today, your name and number will be added to the list tomorrow. This registration lasts for five years. Telemarketers have exactly three months to take your name off their calling lists. Even your cell phone can be signed up. You can register up to three numbers, except business phone lines.

Unfortunately, this program does not exorcise your phone

Telemarketers are not human beings; they are trained barbarians, ready to do anything and everything to get your credit card number.

from the evils of political organizations, research surveys or those awful charity calls. For these nuisances, there is a simple cure. If you don't want the peons to call, all you have to do is tell them. It seems too easy, but even the subhuman telemarketer has to listen and respect your wishes. If they don't do your bidding, they are subject to prosecution by law.

If you don't have time to register on the Do Not Call list, there are a few home remedies to ward off any batch of phone solicitors. The general rule of thumb: do not be afraid to be rude.

Telemarketers are not human beings; they are trained barbarians, ready to do anything and everything to get your credit card number. The key to ridding yourself of these pests is giving them a taste of their own medicine. If all they do is ask you questions, why not ask them a few right back?

For instance: "Are you a telemarketer?" They have to say yes. "Are you trying to sell me something?" No gimmicks here. "What is your first and last name, phone number and home address?" Does the phrase sound familiar?

If you don't like the idea of questioning these strangers (you'd make a poor telesoliciter), throw out a silencer. By a silencer, I mean a retort that will suck the wind right out of their swindling sails.

"I do not speak the English language particularly fluently, thank you," is a great one.

When someone asks for me, I often reply "I'm sorry she's dead." The caller stammers out an apology and hangs up.

At least everyone has the option to not to sign up. My roommate and I will not be signing up anytime soon. Telemarketers serve as a unique source of dorm room entertainment on a dull afternoon.

When the magazine people call, I tell them the high quality paper from my free issues made excellent bedding for my pet rabbit. I've asked the knife company if their blades slice through human bone and if John Deere makes a mulcher big enough to fit my boss.

"I'm sorry," I told an SPCA-type caller, "but there's a big juicy possum caught in the grill of my car, and he's still wiggling."

A self-employed man named Tom Mabe has taken a similar approach to terrorizing telemarketers. He has made a killing in CD sales on his albums, "Revenge on the Telemarketers" and "Revenge on the Telemarketers, Round II." The albums feature a series of real phone conversations between Mabe and telemarketers.

Running a business out of his home office, Mabe found that his business calls were constantly being blocked and interrupted by the chronic nagging of salespeople. Mabe didn't get mad. Mabe got even, and recorded the calls on his answering machine. In one act, he asks the carpet cleaners what the fee is for removing human blood stains from his living room carpet.

Stunts like this have made Mabe's CDs the best selling underground comedy albums of last year. And who can blame him? Telephone solicitation is a $400 billion industry. It's about time someone started talking back.

Information from www.donotcall.gov was used in this column.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

Words and meaning

Robert Carey

Using words is a tricky business, trickier than one might expect. In our daily discourses we use verbs, nouns, adjectives, prepositions, all of which are placed in certain tenses, numbers, clauses, declension and cases. We do this all without much thought or effort, and though our usual conversations are filled with small vocabulary and grammatical errors, we get along just fine.

However, there is one important aspect of word usage that we use on a daily basis, which has a profound impact on how we think and express ourselves. A word's connotation — whether it be negative, positive or somewhere in between — can have drastic consequences when it comes to how it gets used in speech, and how people view the thing or action the word represents.

Take for instance the two words "strange" and "unique," words that could probably be synonyms of one another if it wasn't for their opposite connotation. Unique is a word used by a lot of people to describe themselves to others, even though most of those people are ironically quite ordinary. Many of these allegedly unique people would never admit to being strange. However, isn't it true that both words stripped of any kind of connotation mean the exact same thing — that is to stand out from others, thus making the self-described non-strange, unique person a prattling hypocrite?

Patriotism is a word as highly valued in our country as philanthropy, and is looked upon as a grand attribute worthy of having a sports team named after it.

Therefore, one can see how using words with a precise connotation can be quite dangerous. On a broader scale, word connotation can be used effectively to vilify people, actions and ideas. Look at communism, for instance, which was vilified to the extreme for over 50 years by the American government and media. For many people, it still carries a connotation that is downright sinister. To some, the word communism brings up an image of a demonic figure standing over a young by while he downloads free music off the Internet, or they just stupidly mistake communism with Stalinism. It was this kind of enforced mentality on the word communism that kept people needlessly terrified over a mysterious notion that they choose to learn nothing about.

If people had taken the time to learn what communism was about, they would have learned that it was an idea of an economy based on egalitarianism (positive connotation in that word) where people would work collectively for a society that wouldn't need the wage-slavery system.

Instead of spitting every time Americans heard the word Karl Marx, they might have learned that he was not an unkempt political radical with absurd and evil notions, but a brilliant economist who spent most of his time classifying and critiquing the capitalist system.

Often, negatively ascribing such words is done to bring people together, to boost their unity and sense of patriotism. Is that in itself a positive thing? Patriotism is a word as highly valued in our country as philanthropy, and is looked upon as a grand attribute worthy of having a sports team named after it.

By loose definition, to be a good patriot, a person must follow the creed of his own people without question. But what about the creeds and ways of life of other people — how does one account for them? Does that mean that to be a good patriot, one must put him or herself on a pedestal in order to justify his actions? If this is the case, does being a good patriot also mean to be a bigot, or at least to be prejudice?

Strip a word of its popularly perceived connotation and you can whittle it down to its basic form, and judge it for the most accurate meaning. As you can see in this editorial, when this process is done, an array of questions emerges. Questions that are too mentality taxing for some to address.

In a perfect world, questioning the positive and negative emotions brought up when mentioning a particular word wouldn't be necessary. But we live in a world where language is bent and misconstrued in dubious ways by the powers at be to deceive the minds of the people using that language. And thus, in this endless world of toil, we all must work our minds, and examine this great tool of language that we take for granted, in order not to be lead astray by it.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

Regarding Joe Wilkens' "Beware of MassPIRG" — these comments are dead-on accurate. Considering MassPIRG claims to be a progressive group, the way they treat their workers is abysmal, and threatens the very stability and reputation of what should be an excellent group working for the public interest.

The pay process is indeed complicated, and glossed over so briefly during training that even months into working for the organization, many employees get the "facts" about their paycheck as gossip from fellow canvassers who have as little idea about where their money went as anyone else.

Questions to supervisors about missing pay typically result in a longwinded and illogical explanation about the missing funds, usually involving some sort of lip service to the organization as a kind angelic underdog worthy of our hard-earned dollars as well as our time.

In the end, a canvasser can expect to work between 50 and 60 hours a week. Yet most canvassers only ever make "base pay" — a measly $275, which works out to $5 an hour for a 55-hour workweek. Ironically, a group that pitches itself as one of the most progressive out there not only fails to pay overtime to its employees, but routinely pays them less than the minimum wage.

More insulting still, even if an employee works 60 hours a week or even more, they might get paid even less than this base pay if they fail to make "quota," the dreaded $85 that canvassers are expected to raise each night. If canvassers don't make quota, we don't really know what happens, except that chunks of $60 or even $75 can be subtracted from this "base pay," bringing that hourly wage even lower.

This routine disrespect is the sort of thing that may ultimately bring down a well-meaning, idealistic organization. If a supposedly progressive group can't even bring itself to listen to the concerns of some of its hardest working and lowest-paid employees, it may as well be a part of the harmful establishments it seeks to overturn.

Melissa Drysdale, UMass student

A deadly detention sprouts from Israel

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

You've just picked up this newspaper. Where are you? Eating in the DC, sitting on a park bench maybe? Might you be skipping a class this very moment? If so, the consequences must not be that grave. The likelihood is that you'll miss the day's notes, which you could probably mooch off your friend anyway. No big deal, right?

For 13-year-olds Koby Mandell and Yosef Ishran, this day-to-day triviality was far more precarious. On May 8, 2001 at approximately 7 a.m., the boys were brutally killed in a cave in the rocky countryside about 10 minutes outside the Mandell home in Tekoa, Israel. Carrying pita bread and tomatoes, Koby and Yosef were merely on their way to play hooky as we all have, when they were pummeled to death with bowling ball sized boulders by Palestinian terrorists.

This past month, I was privileged to meet a very special man. He was a man whose pain permeated the entire room, simply with a glance. His unassuming stance paired with his gentle features made me wonder why such a tragedy could ever have befallen him. Two years after his son's brutal murder, Seth Mandell spoke to me of his struggle, of both memorializing his son's life, while attaining the capacity to move on and not allow Koby's death to forever paralyze his and the rest of his family's lives. Only one man, yet his story alone provided more than enough heartbreak for a roomful. Sadly, his is a story that is not uncommon in Israel at all.

The aftermath from an experience such as the Mandell's is unending. Seth told me of the change that his family has undergone; how everything and everyone reminds him of his son. He described the heartache Koby's siblings experience each day as well. He recounted how his son would cry at camp upon watching a game of basketball in which he thought Koby would have liked to partake. Mr. Mandell and his wife had to undergo intensive therapy and grief counseling, and continue to do so to this very day. All this pain and suffering, for what?

Recently, I have read articles on the terror in Israel needing "to be put into context." In my opinion, there is no such need. There is absolutely no justification for tragedies such as the Mandells', period. This form of brutal assault is far too common and deeply rooted in nothing other than downright hatred. Allegations blaming the "oppressive" Israeli government, which happens to be the only democracy in a region surrounded by 22 military dictatorships, are just plain false.

Allegations blaming the 'oppressive' Israeli government, which happens to be the only democracy in a region surrounded by 22 military dictatorships, are just plain false.

If one were to truly delve into the roots of the dissention here in the Middle East, he or she would not find that the Israeli/Palestinian issue is one of any "logical questioning" or rationale. It is one of hostile intolerance pervading the mentality and spirits of the Palestinian people.

Not only is it a mindset of intolerance, but an entire movement, much of which is founded on the exploitation of children. Impressionable and without choice to protest, children are brainwashed to hate Jews and to strive toward their complete annihilation, by devoting their lives to martyrdom. Kids as young as three years old are sent to military training camps and the text books in their schools are infiltrated with hateful rhetoric, slipped in at every opportunity, down to the every math problem. It is simple to see that the problem is an infrastructure of hatred that must be broken.

What can we do until it is destroyed? For starters, we can follow the example of people like Koby Mandell's parents, who have used the energy from their grief for a positive cause. Since their son's death, they have created a summer camp for other children affected by terror, so they have a place where they can open up and feel more "normal" by sharing their respective stories.

Some other ways this problem has been approached is through the establishment of groups such as "Operation S.I.C.K.: Stop Inciting Children to Kill" on college campuses to educate and try to condemn the existence of these institutions. Other than that, we can only continue to support our governmental action and support of Israel, in their attempts to fight in the seemingly unending war against terrorism.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COURTESY FOOTHILLS THEATRE COMPANY

David Foley Jr., left, and Steve Pacek star in "Titanic, the Musical" at Wocester's Foothills Theatre this month.

A 'Titanic' affair

Musical debuts in Worcester

By Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — Despite sailing through James Cameron's Oscar-winning cinematic spectacle, documentaries and countless other depictions of the sinking of Titanic, people just can't seem to get enough of the tale of the doomed British luxury liner.

Launching the 2003-04 season of Worcester Foothills Theatre Company, "Titanic, the Musical" (running through Oct. 26) offers audiences another look at the thrilling tale of Titanic's tragic fate.

Not to sound icy, but a musical show of this great maritime disaster of 1912 sounds like a waterlogged idea. The idea of using water, lifeboats, coal bins and a, well, titanic ship sound like ingredients to put the production in dry dock before it even leaves its moorings.

Minutes into the show, those thoughts are washed away. "Titanic, the Musical" — much like the actual ship — floats like the biggest, grandest, prettiest and classiest musical around. The difference, of course, being that the ship sank while the show stays steadily afloat.

An extremely ambitious project, "Titanic, the Musical" steers itself through calm waters and clear skies. Directed and choreographed by Jennifer Waldman, "Titanic, the Musical," a 1996 musical and five-time Tony award winner, provides a highly entertaining 2-1/2 hours of theater — grave and somber at some points and entertaining and joyful in others.

A cast of 35 people (including several University of Massachusetts Amherst alumni) make up "Titanic, the Musical," with music and lyrics by Maury Yeston and book by Peter Stone.

Kevin B. McGlynn, who plays the ship's designer and builder Thomas Andrews, gives one a sense of the colossal dimensions of the ship through a bold prologue. The first half of the musical glides along rather breezily, introducing us to an array of characters and showing us some antics on board the ship, interspersed with some romping music.

'Titanic, the Musical'
Foothills Theatre
Worcester
Sept. 19-Oct. 26

The play's best moments, fittingly, rarely involve dialogue. It's the songs that run the show. Navigating calmly through the mid-Atlantic, the production is also carried by the personas of the protagonists. Alice Bean (Carrie Pine), for example, is a hoot as a second-class passenger with her insistence to crash the first-class activities.

The only drawback to introducing us to so many characters is that the musical never offers us the chance to connect to people in enough detail to emotionally feel for them. But why harp on such details? After all, we have the Leonardo DiCaprio-Kate Winslet love story in the 1997 blockbuster movie for that anyway.

Picking up after the iceberg hits the R.M.S. Titanic, the second half shows the nature of the tragedy itself. Here, perhaps, is the most spectacular part of the show where the production never relies on chaos, pity or drowning (with the exception

Continued on page 5

COURTESY FOOTHILLS THEATRE COMPANY

Tom Henry, left, Jim Burkholder, center, and Kevin B. McGlynn play the ship's owner, captain and designer, respectively.

COURTESY FOOTHILLS THEATRE COMPANY

"Titanic" ladies from left to right: Stephanie Pam Roberts, Maddy Wyatt and Stephanie Biernbaum.

Lubes, rubbers and why vegetable oil is meant for cooking

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) branch at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity
Julia Kristan

Q: My boyfriend and I want to use lube with condoms. Does hand lotion make condoms break more easily or is this an old wives tale?

A: Yes! Hand lotions and other oil-based lubricants will make condoms break more easily. The oils in these products quickly break down the latex in the condom, making it far more susceptible to tearing. When putting on and dealing with condoms, it is important to have clean, dry hands for successful contraceptive protection. If you've put lotion on your hands, wash them thoroughly before touching a condom.

Here's a checklist of proper condom usage:

After making sure your hands are clean and dry, check the expiration date. Squeeze the individually wrapped package a little between your fingers to make sure there is no hole in the wrapper. Carefully open wrapper, there should be a "tear here" mark to guide you. Take the condom out of the wrapper and gently unroll about a half an inch so you can pinch the top. The pinching helps keep condoms from breaking upon ejaculation and leaves a "reservoir" space for semen.

Place the tip, while still pinching it, on the top of the erect penis and unroll the condom. If you have the condom upside-down, it will be at this point where you cannot unroll it. It should look like a donut on the outside of the rubber. If it doesn't, don't simply flip over the condom; get another one and try again. There are sperm in the pre-ejaculate fluid males emit when aroused, and yes, those little guys can get you pregnant, not to mention they can transmit STDs. As you unroll the condom, make sure there are no air bubbles as these also can cause breakage. Unroll the condom all the way to the base of the penis.

After intercourse, may it be vaginal, oral or anal, remove and dispose of the condom properly. To remove the rubber correctly, take the penis out still erect while holding onto the condom. This prevents the condom from slipping off and allowing semen to spill back onto the vaginal area. Throw away the condom and do not use again. Never re-use a condom, ever. In addition to being difficult to get back on, the effectiveness of the condom will be naught.

Continued on page 5

Big names but no big winners

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"The Fighting Temptations"

You get three movies for the price of one in "The Fighting Temptations," and not one of them is very good. There's the underdogs-triumphing-against-the-odds story, the fish-out-of-water story and, as the base for them all, the yuppie-redemption story. If this is Cuba Gooding Jr.'s attempt at atonement for the one-two suckerpunch of "Boat Trip" and "Snow Dogs," then he better get on his knees and plead for the audience's forgiveness.

Not unexpectedly, Gooding mugs his way through the role of Darren Hill, a soulless New York ad exec (the go-to occupation for yuppie soullessness) who loses his job for lying on his resume, and returns to his small Georgia hometown to collect a $150,000 inheritance left to him by his recently deceased aunt. It should be said that the only way for Hill to earn his inheritance is to lead the town's misfit church choir into a state competition.

Now everyone can let out a heavy sigh. "The Fighting Temptations" is one of those predictably inspirational hackjobs that doesn't so much inspire as lead to eye rolls and maybe some ulcers. It's as if the filmmakers were deathly allergic to any kind of creativity or originality; this is a textbook example of how to do a movie by the numbers.

Mike Epps, as a local "playa" and Steve Harvey, as a dry-witted radio DJ, do most of the heavy comic lifting and earn most of the movie's meager laughs. That's because Gooding does his usual yelping, frantic shtick instead of acting, while Beyonce Knowles, as the love interest, tamps down her natural charisma until it doesn't exist.

Pokey and overlong, "The Fighting Temptations" aspires to be this year's "Barbershop" but it comes closer to being another notch in Gooding's belt of misfires.

'The Fighting Temptations'
Directed by Jonathon Lynn
Starring Cuba Gooding Jr. Beyonce Knowles
Paramount
Rated PG-13
123 mins.
Grade: D

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

Beyonce Knowles struts her stuff in "The Fighting Temptations."

"The Rundown"

In the opening scene of "The Rundown," The Rock, playing a "retrieval expert" named Beck, enters a nightclub to confront a debt-skipping football star and passes Arnold Schwarzenneger in the hall. The aging action star and current gubernatorial candidate tells him to "have fun," almost as if he's passing the action hero baton to the younger generation.

"The Rundown" is a passable action-comedy that cements the fact that the former pro-wrestler known as The Rock is a genuine star. Unlike most athletes, the man also known as Dwayne Johnson has the charisma and screen presence that befits a movie star. Even in dreadful schlock like "The Scorpion King," The Rock was eminently watchable.

"The Rundown" is a small step in the right direction, even if it visits a decrepit cinematic terrain commonly referred to as the buddy film. Here, The Rock is sent to the jungles of Brazil to bring his boss' wayward son (Seann William Scott) home. Scott is looking for a mysterious golden treasure called "El Gato del Diablo," a treasure also sought by a ruthless land baron played by Christopher Walken with full Walken-esque loopiness.

It's part of the film's obtuseness that the small town where the action takes place is called El Dorado. Casting Walken as the heavy is just this side of lazy, as it requires no amount of characterization whatsoever; Walken already comes complete with the necessary tics and twitches. Ditto for Scott, whose character is nothing more than a plot device fleshed out with the usual Scott mannerisms.

Director Peter Berg — what a letdown after "Very Bad Things" — tries to pretty things up with flashy direction, but all that does is make "The Rundown" into another live action videogame. There are some moments of humor here, and The Rock has a keen sense of timing, but the standard genre clichés and the movie's confused stance toward guns — Beck says he doesn't use them, but then the movie all but eroticizes them in the climax — dampen the amusements on display.

'The Rundown'
Directed by Peter Berg
Starring The Rock Seann William Scott
Universal
Rated PG-13
98 mins.
Grade: C+

COURTESY UNIVERSAL

The Rock displays his superstar screen presence in "The Rundown."

Continued on page 5

'Anything Else'
Directed by Woody Allen
Starring Jason Biggs Christina Ricci
Dream Works
Rated R
108 mins.
Grade: C

COURTESY DREAMWORKS

Jason Biggs, left, and Christina Ricci star in Woody Allen's new movie "Anything Else."

Matthews makes solo debut

Long awaited release of 'Some Devil' brings fans back

By Joe Piedrahita
Collegian Staff

Probably one of the most anticipated albums released this fall, Dave Matthews' long awaited solo debut "Some Devil" proves to be a smash.

Dave Matthews
'Some Devil'
ATO/RCA

Matthews puts forth his own masterful effort following the current trend of testing out solo waters as set by Justin Timberlake of N*SYNC, Beyoncé Knowles of Destiny's Child, Trey Anastasio of Phish and even fellow Dave Matthews Band-mate Boyd Tinsley. Joining Matthews on the project were frequent collaborator Tim Reynolds, who backs him up on numerous tracks, Anastasio, Brady Blade, Tony Hall and the Seattle Music Group, all of whom contributed to a sparkling solo debut.

Matthews' signature raspy voice is at its finest on this 14-track disc, which clocks in at just under an hour, a rarity by today's standards. The music evokes a giant spectrum of emotions. The light and sugary sounds of "Dodo" and "So Damn Lucky" will definitely find appeal in the masses, and will probably get a considerable amount of radio play once released.

Also impressive is the low-key, summery "Grey-Blue Eyes," which comes courtesy of Anastasio. The laid back title track, "Some Devil," is quite catchy, ditto for the epic sounding "Up and Away" and "Too High," which fit quite nicely into Matthews' signature effortless style.

Matthews uses a variety of instruments on this album, ranging from the standard guitar, to percussion, to the eclectic and exotic electric sitar. He also uses a gospel choir and the Dirty Dozen Brass Band.

The piece de resistance on this package however has to be the first single to be released, "Gravedigger." Matthews is in top form on this track, and is arguably at his creative best. "Gravedigger/When you dig my grave/Could you make it shallow/So I can feel the rain" are beautifully written lyrics that rank right up there with the likes of "Bartender" and "Tripping Billies." This haunting ballad is not only beautifully written, but it's also handsomely orchestrated with the help of the aforementioned Reynolds, Anastasio and the Seattle Music Group.

There are two versions of "Gravedigger" on the album. The second one is an acoustic version. While the acoustic version is not as complete as the full electric version, it is just as lingering and powerful. Matthews' massive talent as both a lyricist and a musician is fully unleashed with this amazing single.

Fans may have begun to lose faith in Matthews & Co. with the 2001 release "Everyday" and 2002's "Busted Stuff," but fear not DMB lovers — Dave makes a tremendous return with his latest effort. Matthews is spectacular with "Some Devil," and hardcore fans will definitely appreciate his freshman solo CD.

One can only hope that the creative juices overflow into the group's upcoming studio album.

Word on the street has an expectant release date sometime during the summer/fall of 2004. Until that day comes, thousands of Matthews fans everywhere will have to chew on "Some Devil" — waiting, salivating for a second helping of this revitalized genius that is Dave Matthews.

COURTESY JASON SQUIRE/ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Dave Matthews gets a little help from his friends on his first-ever major solo release "Some Devil."

'Titanic, the Musical' playing at Foothills Theatre of one brief part near the end). Interestingly, the production never resorts displaying water, either. Instead, the audience is required to use its imagination, only helped through the use of sound effects.

Continued from page 4

The interaction between Andrews, the captain (Jim Burkholder) and J. Bruce Ismay (Tom Henry), the ship's owner and most colorful character, provides a strong wave of drama throughout the musical as Ismay urges more speed to set a trans-Atlantic record. His insistence to increase knots from 17 to 23 offers us interspersed drama throughout the production. But it is the number "The Blame," in the company of the telegrapher, where the three argue about who is at fault that helps the production reach its dramatic crest.

Beautiful costumes that show the different class statuses of the passengers are captivating. The brilliant set quickly takes us from the bridge of the ship to the third-class passenger cabins or to the boiler room. The sound, too, is clear and loud, oftentimes aided by the strong voices of the cast.

A close-to-full house of 349 people gave the production a standing ovation at the end. The destiny of the queen of the White Star Line is one of the great stories of last century, and the Foothills production is now awaiting your arrival. Board now.

For tickets contact the Foothills Theatre box office at (508) 754-4018 or online at www.foothillstheatre.org.

Why lotion can't be your best friend in bed

Continued from page 4

Now hand lotion and vegetable oil might be handy around the house, but they should not under any circumstances be used as personal lubricants with condoms (or without them for that matter; irritation, ladies and gents!).

There are a wide variety of lubricants on the market that are water-based, making them safe to use with latex condoms. Search for them online, check in pharmacies or drop into your local sex shop. There's a world of possibilities out there; experiment with what works best for you. In addition to being fun, lubricants aid in protecting you, your partner and the condom. They reduce tearing and can ease pain, especially for women.

There are also lubricants that contain Nonoxynol 9, which is a spermicide. This can be a beneficial second measure to utilize in your quest for the contraceptive methods that work for you and your partner. There are condoms that have Nonoxynol 9 on them ready-to-go, or you can buy gels and foams containing the spermicide. The Nonoxynol 9 works to kill sperm in case of a tear in the condom. However, if a tear or break in the condom is suspected or confirmed, a call to your doctor or local Planned Parenthood is wisest. The sooner you act the better, no matter what your decisions will be.

Unfortunately, Nonoxynol 9 has been found to increase the risk of STD transmission in several studies. This may be due to the fact that using Nonoxynol 9 can increase vaginal irritation, thereby increasing the odds of a tear in the vaginal lining and transmission of an STD. While it is far better to use a condom with Nonoxynol 9 on it, or a product containing the spermicide, you might want to read about other options.

Condoms can be great for contraception and STD prevention. Remember, cook with vegetable oil and lube with products designed for that task!

Questions? Comments? E-mail arts@dailycollegian with the subject "Sex-iversity." Confidentially is respected.

Triple threat of mediocrity opens over weekend

Continued from page 4

"Anything Else"

It counts as a small miracle that Woody Allen doesn't take the usual Woody Allen role in the director's latest comedy "Anything Else." That role goes to Jason Biggs, the "American Pie" star who's probably better suited for the romantic lead opposite co-star Christina Ricci than the aging filmmaker. After all, the Allen-as-a-romantic-hero angle has long ago lapsed into creepiness.

But that's virtually the only consolation that comes from this lethargic anti-romance. "Anything Else" lasts only 108 minutes, but with the few laughs it engenders and snail's pacing, it seems to last for about two hours more. It numbs the audience into submission.

"Anything Else" comes across like the efforts of an old man cynically attempting to court the more youthful demographic. Which may be why the young characters seem more like ancient Woody Allen caricatures being playacted by Generation Y celebrities. Biggs is the resident nebbish here, a writer who falls in love with an exotic and sexy actress played by Ricci. In typical Allen fashion, Ricci turns out to be more trouble than she's worth and the movie follows the disintegration of the relationship along with Biggs' attempts at maturing and being less spineless.

Ricci is fine, and there are lively comic turns by Stockard Channing and Danny DeVito. And while it's nice to see Biggs growing up from pastries, he seems tentative and unsure in the role. With Woody Allen himself taking on a role as a nutjob mentor — an anti-Allen character no less — Biggs seems to be cowed under by the presence of a more legendary actor. Biggs' awkwardness may also stem from the cast, which is severely underserved by Allen's yammering, uneven script and static, basic direction.

It's a Great Time to Apply a New Coat of Success to Your Career!

SHERWIN WILLIAMS

The Sherwin Williams Company is a $5 billion, Fortune 400 leader!

MANAGEMENT TRAINEES NEEDED THROUGHOUT NEW ENGLAND

Our Management Training Program is designed to provide you with all the skills necessary for a successful career in management and/or outside professional sales. The Program includes self-study modules, structured on-the-job training, classroom instruction at our regional training facilities, and job certification, as well as ongoing education throughout your career. Training topics include: credit management, human resources management, professional sales, profit and loss, merchandising, inventory management, and customer service.

Visit us at the career fair at the Mullins Center on Wed. Oct. 1st or Send your resume to Michelle Fischman, Recruiter, 226 Talmadge Road, Edison, NJ, 08817, Fax: 732-248-9730, E-mail: michelle.fischman@sherwin.com.

www.sherwin-williams.com
EOE

uptown or round robin?
pink or clear lipgloss?
mid or knee length boot?

STEVE MADDEN

1 unique you.

ZANNA downtown
Amherst

The
BLUE WALL
PUB

THIS WEEK at
The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Karaoke 7-11

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 7-11

WEDNESDAY — Rhythm Systems - DJ Bill Arnold 9-1

THURSDAY — DJ M'peli Mwakaliku Dance Music of the African Diaspora 9-1

FRIDAY — DJ Aquarius 9-1

SATURDAY — Live Music 9-1

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.

OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!

ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

Cross country runs in Orange Classic placed second with 54 points.

Continued from page 8

"The team just fell short of a win," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "At the midpoint of the race, things were looking good." Alexis Anzelone was on the heels of the first two Binghamton runners, and Tricia Silva, Kate Markopoulos and Cuisle Kierans were in front of Binghamton's third, fourth, and fifth runners.

"We were well-positioned to win the meet. But over the next 1.2 miles and the final stretch, Binghamton put all five in front of our second runner to grab the win," said LaFreniere. "Their runners were stronger and faster at the end of the race."

Alexis Anzelone continued to lead the team, placing fourth overall. Silva and Markopoulos followed, finishing 10th and 11th. Kierans and Amanda Dahlberg finished 13th, and 16th respectively.

While LaFreniere is proud of the team's accomplishments, she acknowledges that they still have a ways to go. The meet on Saturday provided her with some insight into what the Minutewomen need to concentrate on improving: the second half of the race. This is especially important because the season only gets more challenging in the coming weeks, when the Minutewomen up the ante and make the transition from 5,000- to 6,000-meter races.

"It was a very good effort for our women and they competed like a team," LaFreniere said. "We have to work on finishing the second half of our race. We still have time and a lot of hard work ahead of us to prepare for the championship part of our season."

The team next competes at Franklin Park in Boston, on Friday, Oct. 10.

UMass ends UNH's home winning streak opportunities," Koch said. "That's what you want to do. Can we finish a little bit better? I think so."

Continued from page 8

Freshman keeper Nick Billman recorded his second shutout of the year, and is currently on a four game winning streak. Billman recorded six saves on the day and continues to be consistent staple in the cage. He was named the A-10 Rookie of the Week for his performance and has pleased Koch.

"He's been doing very well, I'm very pleased with what he's done," Koch said. "To come in as a freshman and do what he's been able to accomplish has been very refreshing and we're pleased."

For the Minuteman defense, the shutout was their third of the season. The squad, led by sophomore Craig Canavan and junior Chris Camerota, has been shutting down opponents since UMass lost 4-0 to UAB.

They have only allowed three goals during their current five-game winning streak and have been a vital cog in the team's success. Koch is excited with how his defense has progressed after a shaky start to the season.

"We are doing a better job than we were. We're still making mistakes, and we still have things we have to get better at," Koch said. "The attitude and direction that they are in has been very good. I feel that they are working hard on the areas that we need to work on and each week we seem to be getting a little bit better."

Prior to the game, the Wildcats were ranked third in New England, with UMass on their heels in fourth. Koch didn't give too much credence to the rankings, though.

"The ranking doesn't mean anything until the end of the season. Right now we're playing on Friday and we're 0-0 in the conference," he said.

GERALD H. DINGLE/ COLLEGIAN

Chris Camerota and UMass improved to 6-2 overall on the season following a 1-0 victory over UNH.

Forecasting the MLB Divisional Series

Continued from page 8

one that can be taken over by one man, and Bonds is capable of doing that to the Fish.

Brady: The Marlins lost A.J. Burnett early in the season, but Dontrelle Willis stepped it up big time. He's not as good as the press he's gotten, but he's easily the number three on the staff. Brad Penny is untouchable when he's on and Josh Beckett has been one of baseball's best two pitchers (along with Mark Prior) in the second half. He can — and will — strike Barry Bonds out in a key situation.

Moderator: Well gentlemen, in the first three series, you have agreed across the board on the winners, varying only on the number of games it would take. Does the trend continue here?

Marzelli: Felipe Alou has done a masterful job in San Francisco, but without Robb Nen, the Giants bullpen isn't a sure thing. The lineup is hardly Murderer's Row either, but all in all this is the most well-rounded team in the playoffs. With that said I think the Marlins will be as energized as any, and will steal two games in South Florida before Jason Schmidt restores order and gives San Fran the series in five.

Brady: God no, and not only because I don't want to agree with my cohort. The Marlins have so little to lose and the Giants are old and worn down at this point in the season. Sidney Ponson has been good, but not the pitcher the Giants needed to fill out their staff. The Marlins will split in SF and sweep South Florida to win in four.

Mike Marzelli and Matt Brady are Collegian columnists.

They can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com and Brady_collegian@yahoo.com, respectively.

$$ HIPPODROME $$

EARN UP TO $40 PER HOUR

Nightclub Now Hiring

Bartenders, Cocktail Servers, Cashiers, Floor Staff, Barbacks, Coat Checkers

Apply In Person Only

Dates: Tue-Sept. 30th and Wed-Oct. 1st 2003

Time: 6:00 - 8:00 p.m

Place: 1700 Main Street, Springfield, MA

www.hdrome.com

Also Hiring: Marketing and Promotions Manager

Responsibilities include providing marketing leadership planning and support for growing Nightclub Company. We're looking for an outgoing, self-starter that feels comfortable creating their own opportunities and has the ability to drive results as an individual and as a team leader. Effective communication skills are critical and competent working knowledge of windows based graphics applications required. Fax resumes to 413-734-2312

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

MUSIC • SOFTWARE • MOVIES • BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

There's nothing funny about sex with pies.

Don't download movies from college.movielink.com, Sept. 15th - Oct. 15th.
STUDENTS AGAINST MOVIELINK
COLLEGE FILM FESTIVAL

STUDENT TRAVEL
elevate
as seen on MTV's the Real World Paris europe
This is THE trip of the season! Follow the cities' Footsteps From Paris to » Nice » Florence » Rome » Zermatt
Experience beach fun, city nights and mountain dreams in 2 weeks or less! starting at $607* *airfare not included
STA TRAVEL www.statravel.com we've been there.
ENTER TO WIN THE trip For 2 at your local branch or www.statravel.com!
Lufthansa airline special Take a Friend For $99!* *see your branch for details
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL WE'VE BEEN THERE.

Rejuvenate
WITH OUR FALL $PECIAL
Restore the fullness and shine and replenish the moisture to your hair with our patented Color Touch conditioning treatment...that lasts four to six weeks...a $50 value
~ AND ~
Sooth you dry hands with out Citrus & Aloe Paraffin treatment...a $20 value
ALL FOR ONLY $30 ncluding FREE all-nutrient hand & body lotion! a $70 value
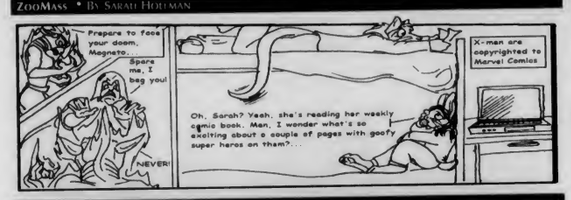
PATRICK & Company
Open Tues. thru Fri., 9:30-7:00 Sat., 9:30-4:30
102 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley • 586-7477

IN 40 BILLION • By Mark Stivers



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Stivers

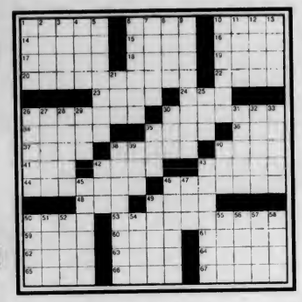
THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Gibson

ZOOMASS • By Sarah Hoffman

ELSIE HOOPER • By Robert D. Krzykowski

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"I don't know half of you half as well as I should like, and I like less than half of you half as well as you deserve."



-Bilbo Baggins (The Fellowship of the Ring: J.R.R. Tolkien)

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Dirt
6 Practice boxing
10 ___ bar grille
14 Mail for Pablo
15 Ethiopian
16 Fabric's rim
17 Popular pork
18 Ear — Guatemala
19 Grant territory
20 Baseball feat
22 Comedian Danny
23 Fearful shouts
24 Mediocre grade
25 Bird's beak
26 Excited (with 34)
34 Signs of the future
35 "How ya ye —?"
36 Investor's Fannie
37 Boathouse gear
40 Chimneys
41 Electric output
43 Greek letter
45 Leather
50 Star in Orion
51 Lot's "beacon"
54 Most profound
58 Barest of humor
59 — -lang syne
60 House pest
63 Hannah Arendt's
64 Like eggs
65 Moby Dick's foe
66 Seaweeds
67 Respiratory organ
68 Sheepskin
69 Sailor's
70 March 15, in Rome
71 Leered at 72 Noblemen

DOWN
1 Balkanic
2 Frankenstein's gofer
3 Patty of "Tank Girl"
4 Snare
5 Reverses
6 Fuel
7 Bother-some people
8 Domain
9 Uses again
10 Green Bay player
11 On the bony
12 Female
13 Fencing sword
21 Forest grazer
25 L-o-n-g time
28 Heelfot
27 Connhusker city
29 "Great Blue" bird
29 Quiks comeback
30 "Wow"
31 Picture
32 Roof overhangs
33 Handed out, as cards
35 Hook
36 Ship's rig
38 Pigmassive
40 Mouth part
42 "Most Wanted" org.
43 Bureaucrat's delight
46 Resides
48 Added to a database
47 Bulldogs' fan
49 Subside
50 — Beira
51 Roman poet
52 Garden green
54 Manner's hello
55 Ms. Fitzgerald
56 Pen-dot
57 Sandwich
57 Train's need
58 Mounts gems

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 42

WEDNESDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 39

THURSDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 35

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd

COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Simmons

PRODUCTION STAFF
Dave Pessah/
Nikolas P Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
That jerk outbid you on eBay again, don't you hate that?

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
People aren't really out to get you, sometimes things just don't work in your favor.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Take a trip, you're getting restless with your daily schedule, and need a change.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Turn your cell phone off. Forget your responsibilities for a while and relax.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your charming nature will get you out of serious trouble.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Today is a good day to finish that project you haven't worked on for a while.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You had a very random surprise yesterday, but it will work out.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your day sucked yesterday, but today will be better.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your unusual interests will get you a job by the end of the month.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't take everything you read too seriously, it's just someone having fun.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Work hard all this week, by the weekend you'll really appreciate those parties.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're a red headed teddy bear that everyone wants to hug today.

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
September Special! Labatt Blue: $1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom, 1 Full Bath, Loft Style apartment. Washer/Dryer in unit, $1300/month. Downtown Amherst 978-546-5243

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power MustSell $1500 B/O 253-5537

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Merc.Sable Wag. '94 Runs Great. Gd. Cond. Reliable trans. Recent Sticker. $1050. B/O Call 549-7455

AUTO REPAIR

Imported cars a specialty. 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

International Sales for consulting/software firm. Multi-Lingual Telephone skills required. Economics a plus. Early AM hours required. Full or part time. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Mad Science: Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chestnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed: $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Classic Slingerland Drum Kit. Bass pair Toms Snare with Stand etc. Extra Snare. Pair Zilgian cymbals with stand Throne with brushes, sticks, etc All in good condition. $450.00 O/B/O Call 253-2967

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

FURNITURE

Futon great condition Thick Mattress $150.00 o/b/o KariSlyn@aol.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Private Boxing Lessons-w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. In Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

SERVICES

Legal Questions? We have answers. Student Legal Services Office 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa Services Body Sugaring (Waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Exam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions Rep Positions and FREE trips Available 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commission 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED, nonsmokers. Ages 21-32. Generous compensation & expenses paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781)769-6900, Rnichols@pnlaw.net, www.robertnicholsesq.com.

Place your Classified Ad in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Just visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Streak busters

UM ends 'Cats' winning ways

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

In its last non-conference game of the season, the Massachusetts men's soccer team gave Atlantic 10 opponents something to think about.

The Minutemen traveled to Durham, N.H. on Saturday, and squeaked by with a 1-0 victory over New Hampshire on a goal from Dan Colwell. With the victory, UMass remains unbeaten over its last five contests.

The win snapped a 14-game home winning streak for the Wildcats, the sixth longest streak in Division I men's soccer. Ironically The Maroon and White were the last team to win in Durham, beating UNH 2-0 back in 2001.

UMass	1
UNH	0

Massachusetts head coach Sam Koch recognized the difficulty of playing in Durham. The Maroon and White came away with the victory, but not without playing one of its hardest contests of the season.

"It's a very tough place to play," Koch said. "They were fired up, playing at home and they had a very good crowd."

The first half was a defensive struggle for both sides. The Minutemen were outshot by the Wildcats 9-6 in the period, but neither squad was able to break the ice. The UMass defense was once again stifling and shut down the few attempts the Wildcat offense could muster.

"Defensively we played very well and that's what we needed to do to put ourselves in a good situation at halftime to be able to win the game in the second half," Koch said.

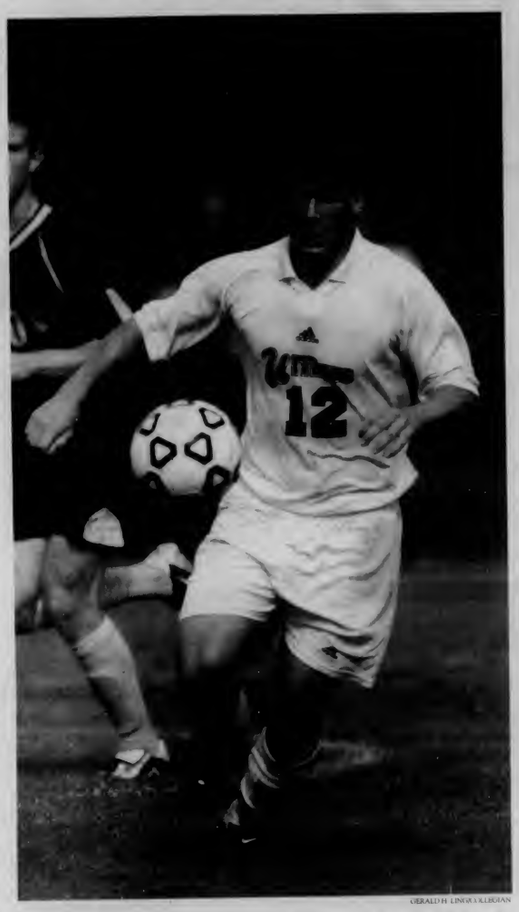
The offensive production increased in the second half, but neither team could capitalize on their opportunities. For UMass, Colwell and Ernie Billittier had several attempts on goal but it wasn't until late in the half that the Maroon and White struck first.

The duo of Billittier and Colwell connected for the games only goal at the 74th minute of play. Billittier lobbed the ball to Colwell who one-timed the ball past UNH keeper, Brian Levey.

Levey had a career game with seven saves in the contest. Colwell's goal was taken from five yards out on a nearly uncontested shot, leaving Levey defenseless.

The Wildcats had an opportunity to answer Colwell's goal with four minutes left in regulation. Nicholas Mello laced a shot on target nearly 30 yards away from goal that skimmed the top crossbar, inches away from being the equalizer. UNH wouldn't get another chance.

Koch had his defense geared for the long ball, as the Wildcats have had a tendency to create scoring attempts from further down the field than the Minutemen are used to seeing.



"They're a very direct team. They put balls into the box," Koch said. "They create havoc by hitting long balls and looking for knockdown, they are a hard team to play against."

For the fifth straight game, the Maroon and White outshot their opposition. UMass had 19 shots to the Wildcats' 15, but only one made the difference.

Even though their shot count is high, the Minutemen haven't been the most efficient team this season.

"We're outshooting the opponents so we're creating

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Jason Scudamore and the Minutemen snapped New Hampshire's 14-game home winning streak. It was the sixth longest streak of its kind in the nation.

The Major League Baseball Divisional Series at a glance

Two of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's brightest baseball minds were able to clear their busy schedules to prognosticate Major League Baseball's upcoming Division Series. The following represents their opinion, and is not necessarily the opinion of this newspaper or its editorial board. Not that it matters; it's just baseball.

Mike Marzelli

New York Yankees v. Minnesota Twins

Moderator: Alright, we'll open things up with a look at the AL matchup between the Yankees and Twins.

Mike Marzelli: The Yankees are considered by many to again be the odds-on favorite in the American League, but this is certainly the weakest Bomber team in recent memory.

Matt Brady: Agreed, but the pitching staff is definitely something to be reckoned with. The Twinkies will surprise people once again. Yankees fans are confident, but they should remember what A's fans saw last year.

Moderator: Arguably, neither one of these teams is as strong as they were last year. Will this be a battle of attrition?

Matt Brady

Brady: I think the Twins are better than they were last year. Sure the pitching staff isn't what it used to be with Joe Mays exploding, but having Eric Milton back should be huge. Shannon Stewart was probably the best deadline pickup. You can see a difference in Minnesota's swagger since they got him.

Marzelli: Stewart has certainly been the table-setter they've lacked, but without Torii Hunter swinging a potent bat they wont put the runs on the board that will be necessary to get into New York's most glaring weakness: the bullpen.

Moderator: So, series prediction?

Marzelli: The Twinkies will steal one at the expense of the Yankees 'pen, but that'll be all. Yankees in four.

Brady: If the Twins take one in New York, it could be lights out. They won't, and the Yankees will win in five.

Oakland Athletics v. Boston Red Sox

Moderator: Sticking with the AL, we'll move onto the other AL series, the Boston Red Sox and Oakland Athletics.

Marzelli: The Athletics save the Twins from the distinction of "worst playoff-bound offense," and without Mark Mulder their pitching staff is Hudson and Zito and pray for rain; they cannot take over a series without their third thoroughbred. The Sox, on the other hand, have pitching problems of their own and must get quality starts across the board. Offensively Boston must continue to do as it has done all season long.

They should look for a split in Oakland against Hudson and Zito and take their chances with Derek Lowe regaining control of the series in game three at Fenway.

Brady: The A's offense is definitely weak, but the big guns in the lineup have perked up recently. Ted Lilly has been a bold, brash, excellent number three for them, which is definitely the stuff of playoff magic. Whoever wins game one is definitely in the driver's seat, as Hudson v. Pedro is definitely the marquee matchup.

Moderator: Series predictions in this one?

Marzelli: This series is going to come down to each team's respective weaknesses. The A's must get offensive production from a punchless lineup, and the Red Sox must get quality work from their starters and a much-maligned bullpen. The Sox have the horses in the 'pen, and they simply must perform. The A's, on the other hand, are severely mediocre at the top and bottom of their order. Sox in five.

Brady: Pedro will take game one in an "Instant Classic" and the Sox will bash Oakland's pitching at Fenway to take it in four.

Atlanta Braves v. Chicago Cubs

Moderator: Moving on to the National League, the East Champion Atlanta Braves square off with the Chicago Cubs, kings of the Central.

Marzelli: You hear it all the time: "pitching wins championships," and that's no different here. The Cubbies have their ducks in a row, starting with ace Kerry Wood in game one against an up-and-down Greg Maddux. For the Braves to win, they have to keep it a short series. If they see Wood and Mark Prior twice, they are out of luck.

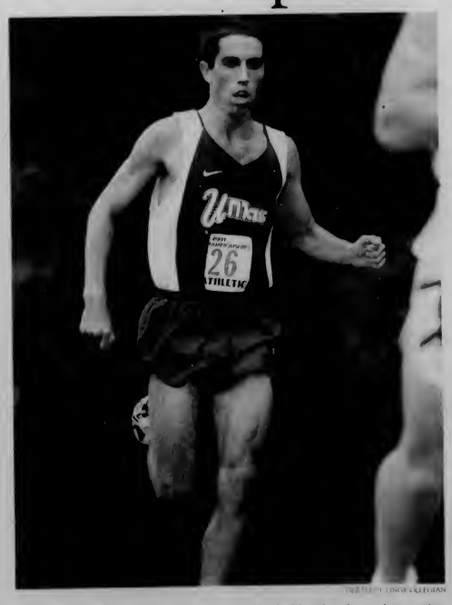
Brady: Maybe three people will show up for the games in Atlanta this year. Seriously, the Braves are the NL version of the Red Sox with a nasty offense, questionable starting pitching and a woeful bullpen. Prior and Wood may be the scariest one-two in the majors, but can they handle the Braves' mighty bats?

Moderator: Prediction for this series?

Marzelli: Good pitching always beats good hitting, and the Cubs lineup rivals the A's and the Twins for mediocrity, but don't ever discount a Dusty Baker team in the playoffs. If the Cubs swing the bats -- at all -- Dusty will find a way to win. Cubs in four.

Brady: My heart sides with the Cubs, and to some extent so does my brain. Without John Smoltz, the Braves could be in serious trouble. This is the only NL team that the Cubs really matchup favorably against. The Cubbies will fight nail and tooth and take it in five.

San Francisco Giants v. Florida Marlins



Moderator: Finally, in a story of a feel-good wild card winner and the NL West's crown jewel, the Marlins take on the Giants.

Marzelli: "Trader Jack" McKeon will have his team, and his staff, ready to go, but nothing will prepare any of them for facing Barry Bonds on a playoff stage. A five-game series is

Continued on page 6

XC competes in Syracuse

Men finish in fourth, women in second

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

The men's and women's cross country teams finished fourth and second, respectively, at Syracuse's Orange Invitational.

By Matt Barstow and Leah Wyner
Collegian Correspondents

The Massachusetts men's cross country team finished fourth out of seven teams in Saturday's Orange Classic Invitational, held in Syracuse, N.Y.

Delhi College won the meet with 35 points, upending second-place Syracuse by four. Le Moyne College finished third with 67 points, and the Minutemen finished more than 30 points ahead of S. Rose, Binghamton and Niagara, in its first ever Orange Classic Invite.

Youth prevailed at the Orange Classic, as freshman David Wishart of Syracuse won the race with a time of 27:24. Wishart was one of eight underclassmen to finish in the top-10.

"It's hard to say what we expected because we were unfamiliar with the competition. This is the first time we've been to this particular meet, and I was surprised to see how close the race turned out," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said.

Sophomore Ryan Corbett and junior Andrew McCarron, who were acting as captains for the race, finished first and second among UMass scorers, with times of 28:25 and 28:40 respectively.

"It was a tough five-mile course. We raced on Drumlin Golf Course, which is known for its hilly terrain. We had some guys battling a flu this past week, and I thought we held up well," O'Brien said. "Any loss of strength from the flu would have showed up when they had to dig down deep for an extra boost. It wasn't bad during the week, but you never know until you're under the gun."

The Minutemen raced as a team for the first time this year, finishing with four runners in the top 25, and all runners within 29 places of each other.

"We don't have one or two runners to necessarily win every race, but it's a team game and when we finish as a group we get good results. Our top three runners, McCarron, [Ryan] Corbett and [Sean] Corbett all finished within 15 seconds of each other," O'Brien said.

Freshman Michael Dulong finished fourth for the Maroon and White, with a time of 29 minutes. Junior Joshua Williams finished 11 seconds behind Dulong, followed by juniors Matthew Thomas and Matthew Clark who brought up the rear for Minutemen scorers, with times of 29:42 and 30:01 respectively.

"I'm impressed by the way we're starting to come together as a team. I think this was our strongest meet, and coming in second among the [4] D-I teams, shows that we can compete," O'Brien said.

The Massachusetts women's Cross-Country team competed in the Orange Classic Invitational this past Saturday. Binghamton won the meet with 27 total points, and UMass

Continued on page 6

OCTOBER

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 21

GOP pushes $87 billion Iraq bill

By ALAN FRAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Republicans muscled President Bush's $87 billion plan for Iraq and Afghanistan through a Senate committee Tuesday but signaled that they may ultimately defy the White House and structure some of the aid as a loan.

The Senate Appropriations Committee approved the bill 29-0, with Democrats reluctant to oppose a bill dominated by funds for U.S. troops. But the unanimous tally belied sharp partisan divisions over $20.3 billion included for Iraqi reconstruction, and the fight on the Senate floor seems likely to last until after lawmakers return from a Columbus Day recess in mid-October.

With even GOP senators flashing signs of unease over the Iraq rebuilding money, the panel's chairman said a bipartisan compromise was being explored to provide some of the rebuilding assistance as loans that Iraq eventually would have to repay.

A compromise might be included when Congress considers the bill in coming weeks. It would envision that "part of it should be considered repayable when oil comes out of the ground" in Iraq, said Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Ted Stevens, R-Alaska.

Administration officials have opposed strongly transforming the reconstruction spending into loans. They say it would make it harder for Iraq's economy to grow and would fuel Arab arguments that the United States is interested chiefly in Iraqi oil.

The willingness of some GOP lawmakers to strike a deal, however, underscores how effectively Democrats have turned the plan's $20.3 billion for Iraqi reconstruction into a political issue.

"We oughtn't be too fast to give away $20 billion if we can find a way not to," said Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who is up for re-election next year.

Democrats have built their political case, in part, by arguing that with record federal deficits and a weak domestic economy, Americans should not foot the entire cost of rebuilding a country with the world's second largest oil reserves.

"The president squandered the good will of our allies after Sept. 11, and now he is asking Congress to shovel money into the hole he has dug for himself in the international community," said Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia, the Appropriations panel's top Democrat.

By a party-line 15-14 vote, the committee rejected an amendment by Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., to remove the reconstruction money from the bill. Dorgan's measure would have used Iraq's potential future oil revenue to leverage loans and other investments it could have used for rebuilding in place of the $20.3 billion.

The panel also voted 15-14 against a Byrd amendment that would have split the rebuilding funds into a separate bill. With support questionable for that portion of Bush's request, the maneuver could have dealt a fatal blow to the money.

By the same margin, the committee killed a proposal by Byrd to erase provisions giving Bush flexibility on precisely how the $20.3 billion – and other portions of the bill – would be spent. In one of the few Democratic wins, the panel accepted an amendment by Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and others creating criminal penalties for war profiteering in Iraq.

The faster the $20.3 billion is provided, the safer American soldiers there will be, and the sooner they can get home, Republicans said.

"Our troops become larger and larger targets as more and more dissidents come out into the streets as a result of living conditions," Stevens said.

The overall bill mostly rubber-stamps the request Bush announced Sept. 7.

Members of both parties are strongly behind its $65.6 billion for U.S. military operations in Iraq and Afghanistan during the government's new budget year, which begins Wednesday. Of that total, $51 billion for is for Iraq, $11 billion for Afghanistan and the rest for Pentagon efforts against terrorists elsewhere.

EMILIE DOUGAN/COLLEGIAN

Freedom Now!

Barry Crimmins, a nationally known political satirist and stand-up comic, speaks last night during the 2003 ACLU College Freedom Tour at Bowker Auditorium.

Bush raises reelection cash, assures stability in Iraq and on home front

By TOM RAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO – President Bush pledged to finish what his administration had begun, both abroad and at home, as he raised $5.3 million more for his re-election campaign with visits to two electorally pivotal Midwestern industrial states.

Brushing aside rising Democratic criticism about his handling of the economy and Iraq, the president told supporters on Tuesday, "We're laying the foundations for greater prosperity and economic vitality and more jobs across America."

The president spoke following disappointing reports on consumer confidence and Midwest business activity.

Bush was traveling later to Cincinnati for another fund-raiser, and was expected to have raised his campaign bank account to more than $82 million by the day's end. The $5.3 million take at the two events was the most raised in one day since Bush announced in May that he would seek another term, according to a Bush-Cheney '04 spokeswoman.

Together, Illinois and Ohio, two Rust Belt industrial states, have lost 280,000 manufacturing jobs since Bush took office.

"So long as anybody in America who wants to work is looking for a job, I will work hard to make conditions for economic growth positive," Bush told about 1,700 supporters at a hotel luncheon.

He also addressed business leaders at the University of Chicago School of Business.

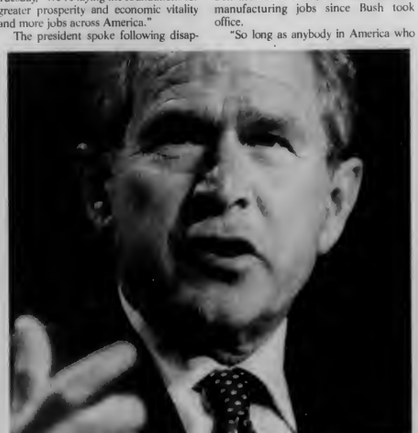
Bush pressed ahead with his re-election fund-raising tour in the face of slumping job approval ratings and new questions about his administration's conduct in making its case for war in Iraq.

Before leaving Washington, Bush instructed his staff to cooperate with a Justice Department investigation into whether the administration improperly disclosed the name of a covert CIA officer whose husband had criticized Bush's war rationale.

"If there's a leak in my administration, I want to know who it is," Bush told reporters during a picture-taking session with business leaders.

Earlier, Bush did not mention the issue in his speech at the fund-raising luncheon, nor the demands from Democrats for the appointment of a special outside counsel to investigate the leak.

But he did tell his audience that he and GOP leaders such as House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., were working with him to try "to get rid of this needless partisan bickering that dominates the Washington, D.C., landscape and the zero sum politics of Washington."



Hastert introduced Bush at the luncheon, calling the president "a man of his word. He does what he says regardless of which way the political winds might be blowing."

Bush acknowledged gloomy unemployment statistics amid other signs of a recovering economy.

But, he suggested the impact of the two major tax cuts he pushed through Congress would eventually help to lift the overall economy.

"When Americans have more take-

Continued on page 3

CHARLES CHERNEY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush speaks at a Bush-Cheney 2004 campaign fudraising luncheon in Chicago yesterday.

Open forum yields low student turnout

EMILIE DOUGAN/COLLEGIAN

Dennis Austin, co-chair of the Presidential Search Committee, participates in yesterday's open forum to discuss the search for a new UMass president.

By KOCHNOV JEAN-NOEL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Despite light attendance at the Presidential Search Committee's open forum Tuesday afternoon, search committee members were encouraged by the attendees, who each lent different perspectives to the search for the next president of the five-campus University of Massachusetts system.

In opening the forum, Chancellor John Lombardi joked that a smaller room wasn't booked out of fear of having too great a turnout, so a larger one was booked to keep things manageable. But even though about 40 people nestled into the Student Union Ballroom, which is capable of holding 500 people, many felt the forum was a success.

"The questions and the comments that were made by the people here today were very thoughtful," said John Armstrong, a retired Vice President for Science and Technology for IBM. "I would comment on the quality of the turnout which I would say was very high. I had no idea what the quantity should be so I was perfectly satisfied with the turnout."

> "I don't feel connected to the president. I don't feel connected to the president's office."
>
> -David Carr, Student Government Association president

Armstrong was one of five search committee members on the panel that ran the forum.

Faculty, students, University staff and even the Amherst Chamber of Commerce were represented as concerns, suggestions and opinions were voiced.

"I don't feel connected to the president. I don't feel connected to the president's office," Student Government Association president David Carr said. He added that student ambivalence toward the office, as apparent with the low student turnout at the forum, was because "they just don't see it on a daily basis."

Dennis Austin, co-chair of the search committee and director of state government relations with Raytheon, explained that "the president acts very similar to a CEO of a major company. He oversees up to a large part the central office and the major duties that are involved with the governance. He assists the chancellors to do their jobs, and then his particular job is to help them on the more functional issue of getting them funding nationally and within the state. A lot of people wouldn't understand that. The students wouldn't understand that because they don't see the day to day activities that he has at the legislature or at the congress."

Austin added, "We've got to do a much, much better job of publicity, not only to our students, but to our alumni, to the legislature and to the citizens of Massachusetts. We haven't done that the last couple of years. We get too much into showmanship that Bill Cosby came here or Jack Welch came here."

Ed Cutting, a graduate student in the School of Education, cited grievances about the costs of attending the state's flagship Amherst campus and the possibility of the future president looking to shift the flagship status to one of the university system's eastern campuses.

"I think the entire Board [of Trustees] would agree [that the move] would be over my dead body," he said.

Of the rising costs of attending the University, Cutting said that the future president must understand that, "if the public education in the Commonwealth is not affordable, it is irrelevant." But Cutting also admitted that balancing costs and the academic integrity of the University would be no easy proposition. If UMass raises assistance with financial aid, Cutting said, "You'll have a low income ghetto."

Austin said that the student fee increases made by the Board of Trustees over the past year were to make sure that 91 percent of current student aid need was addressed.

In September, The Collegian reported that costs of attending the University would see a minimum $750 dollar increase per semester beginning in the spring of 2004. This was done to counter a $21 million cut to the university budget, allowing the University to recoup nearly $18 million.

Ultimately, the consensus was that a future president would have to be able to bear many trying moments in balancing educational excellence and issues of diversity, along with fiscal issues – particularly state funding.

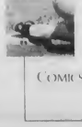
The Board of Trustees and the president's office "have to be advocates for the system," Austin said, "but the problem is while we are lobbying for you, there are others [also lobbying]."

R. William Funk, a consultant of Korn/Ferry International, which was hired to assist in the presidential search, spoke about the difficulty he faces in recruiting a candidate for the post of president amidst the university system's current budget issues.

"For those who live here and hear that all the time, it becomes a bigger issue in the minds of many people, but coming from the outside as I do, the good news, if you can call it good news, is that state resources are very limited and have been curtailed...across the country. So in that regard, our challenge is not different than any place else."

The search committee encouraged those aware of the search for the future president to contact their offices with suggestions for candidates.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4



COMING OUT
SPORTS WRITER ED GRAY ASSOCIATES HIS SEXUALITY

ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5

WALK OF THE TOWN
TRAVEL THROUGH AMHERST'S FINEST ART AREAS WITH THE GALLERY WALK

SPORTS PAGE 10

YANKS LOSE
TWINS COME AWAY WITH COMEBACK ONE

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

TODAY

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Service
presents

SOM CAREER DAY 2003

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!

Date: Wednesday, October 1, 2003
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at 12:00 Noon - Ends at 5:00 P.M.

For your convenience, there will be a free shuttle leaving Haigis Mall for the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from Noon to 5:00 P.M.

Companies Attending:

1-A Auto, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning
American Express Financial
American Express Tax & Business
BDO Seidman
Becker Conviser
The Boston Beer Company
Cambridge Associates
Deloitte & Touche
Decathlon Sports USA
Enterprise Rent-a- Car
Ercolini & Co.
Ernst & Young
Feeley &Driscoll
Ferguson Enterprises
Filene's
Follett Higher Education Group
Frito-Lay
General Dynamics
General Electric
Hannaford
Hertz Corporation
Hilco Appraisal Services
Huron Consulting
Internal Revenue Services
Investors Bank & Trust
J.C. Penney
Jeld - Wen
Johnson & Johnson
KB Toys
Kmart Corporation
Kohl's Department Stores
KPMG LLP
Liberty Mutual
Maxim Healthcare Services
Moore Wallace North America
Moriarty & Primack
Morris & Morris
Needel, Welch & Stone
Northwestern Mutual
O'Connor & Drew
One-Stop Business Center
The Pepsi Bottling Group
PETsMART
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Putnam Investments
Raytheon Company
The Sherwin-Williams Company
Staples
Stop & Shop Company
Sun Life Financial
Target Stores
TJX Companies
Travelers
United Technologies
U.S. Marine Corps
Vitale, Caturano & Co.
Waddell & Reed
Walgreen's
Wells Fargo Financial
Wolf & Company

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men; dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available

Career Services hosts engineering job fair

Today, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, the Career Services Office at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will host more than 40 employers at its annual Career Fair.

Companies attending the event will be looking to fill both co-op and full time positions with engineering and computer science majors. Employers participating in the career fair include General Electric, Microsoft, Texas Instruments, Inc., Raytheon Company, Gillette Company, Liberty Mutual and Shawmut Design and Construction. In addition, the U.S. Coast Guard and the U.S. Department of Energy will be present.

In a recent press release, Tina Acker, the Associate Director and Career Fair coordinator stated that the career fair is not only useful for the prepared individual who knows what he or she is seeking, but also for the person who wants to browse what kinds of jobs exist for new technology graduates.

Career Services is designed to help students and alumni identify and pursue satisfying careers through a variety of programs and services. They frequently offer programs like the Annual Engineering Career Fair to assist employers who are seeking talented students or alumni.

For a complete listing of the employers who have registered for the fair visit the career fair website. For more information on the career fair, contact the Career Services Office at 545-2224.

On the Net: http://www-ccn.acad.umass.edu.

- Ferron Salniker

Bush raises campaign funds

Continued from page 1

home pay to spend, save or invest, the whole economy grows, and more people are likely to find a job," he said.

Earlier Tuesday, the New York-based Conference Board reported that consumer confidence, which had rebounded in August, took a bigger than expected drop in September due to the sluggish job market.

Also, the Purchasing Management Association of Chicago said its index of area business activity fell sharply in September.

Outside the Chicago hotel, about 80 demonstrators protested the war in Iraq.

On Iraq, Bush said, "Saddam holdouts and foreign terrorists are desperately trying to throw Iraq into chaos by attacking coalition forces and aid workers and innocent Iraqis." "This collection of killers is trying to shake the will of America and the civilized world. But America will not be intimidated," he said. "We will finish what we have begun and win this essential victory in the war on terror."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamas
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Logatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marselli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. Free copies do advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

News meeting are held every Monday at 6 p.m. New writers welcomed.

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Wednesday|1

The Isenberg School of Management will host its Annual Career Fair from 12 to 5 p.m. at the Mullins Center. Doors will open at 11 a.m. For further information, call 413-545-3001.

Fred Basbach of Dicut, Inc. will host a chemistry seminar entitled, "The Tortured Landscape of Interference Design for Chemical Prediction" at Mount Holyoke College. The Seminar will begin at 4 p.m. in Cleveland L1.

As part of the Faculty Colloquium Series, professor Catherine Sanderson of the psychology department will give a lecture at Amherst College entitled, "Why I'm Not As Thin As You Think I Am: The Role of Norm Misperception in Fostering Disordered Eating." The lecture will begin at 4:30 p.m. in Porter Lounge of Converse Hall.

At 5 p.m., Hillel House's Hebrew Speaking Group, Sababa, will host their first gathering. Sababa offers students the opportunity to practice their Hebrew without judgment, as well as discussing Israeli music, culture and film.

Thursday|2

The German department will show Die Abenteuer des Barons Münchhausen (The Adventures of Baron Münchhausen) at 4 p.m. and at 7 p.m. as part of its Fall Film Series at Amherst College in the Stirn Auditorium.

At 4:30 p.m., painter Joseph Ablow will speak about his faculty exhibit which is titled "Joseph Ablow: A Retrospective." The lecture will occur in 115 Fayerweather Inside of Pruyne Lecture Hall at Amherst College.

Professor Harold Metcalf of SUNY-Stonybrook will give a lecture titled "New Kinds of Optical Forces for Atom Manipulation." The lecture will take place at Amherst College at 4:45 p.m. in Merrill 3.

At 8 p.m., the UMass Visiting Writer's Series presents a poetry reading by Lavan Younger Poet Award winner, Pete Grizzi, author of "Artificial Heart" and "Periplum." His most recent book published is entitled "Some Values of Landscape and Weather." The reading will take place in Memorial Hall at UMass.

Friday|3

Mount Holyoke College's Film Board will be showing "Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle" in Dwight 101 at 7 p.m. Admission is $2.

The Middle East Festival of the Arts kicks off on the UMass campus with a women only dance workshop entitled, "HAFLI: Women Dances from the Gulf and Saudi Regions" in Bowker Auditorium at 5:30 p.m. Participants will be introduced to dimensions of the life of women and dance expression in the Middle East. Admission is free for UMass students and tickets from Tix Unlimited are available for $5 for other five college students and $10 for adults.

At 6:30 p.m., the event will continue with a feast of Middle Eastern foods available. The feast will be followed by a musical concert at 8 p.m. that will feature Arab and American musicians in a Middle Eastern Fashion and Dance show. Tickets for the second portion of the events run $15 for adults and $7 for five college students.

Saturday|4

Smith College will host the First Annual Symposium in Plant Biology from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in McConnell Auditorium. The event will feature lectures on various areas of plant biology.

The first session of the Princeton Review LSAT preparation course will meet at 6:30 p.m. at UMass. The course will be run every Tuesday through December 2. Those interested can call 800-2REVIEW or register through www.princetonreview.com. Class size is limited.

At 11 p.m., Mount Holyoke College invites all to come listen and dance to soca, hip-hop, R & B and reggae music at the Betty Shabazz House. Admission is $5.

Sunday|5

All are invited to an African-American worship service, followed by a fellowship dinner at Amherst College. The event will take place at 1 p.m. in Chapin Chapel. For more information call 413-542-8489.

Monday|6

For Yom Kippur, Hillel House will host events from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Student Union Ballroom at UMass. The service will start at 10 a.m. followed by the Book of Jonah at 3 p.m., then Tshuvah Exercises at 4 p.m. and Mincha and Neilah will be at 5:30 p.m. Those seeking information can contact Hillel House at 413-549-1710.

Woojin Kim will present an entomology seminar entitled "Genome analysis of Hz-2V, a virus that causes sterility in the corn earworm moth" in the Alexander Conference Room on the second floor of Fernald Hall. The seminar will be held at 3:30 p.m.

Tuesday|7

At 12:30 p.m., Smith College will host "Music In the Noon Hour" at the Sweeney Concert Hall. The show will feature duet sopranos Jane Bryden and Kristen Carmichael-Bowers along with Clifton J. Noble on piano. They will be performing various works of Purcell, Brahms and Schumann.

John Dobson, creator of the Dobsonian telescope mount and co-founder of the Sidewalk Astronomers organization, will host "A Sidewalk Lecture on Astronomy" at 7 p.m. in Franklin Patterson Hall of Hampshire College. Dobson will discuss some of his own unorthodox theories on cosmology.

Susanne Zwingel, a political scientist from Bochum, Germany, will be sharing her research in international relations, international law, and human rights in a lecture titled "International Women's Rights and Domestic Change" at Smith College.

The lecture will take place in the Wright Hall Common Room at 7 p.m. This event is co-sponsored by The Sierra Club and the Smith College project on women and social change.

visit www.dailycollegian.com

LSAT
GMAT
GRE
MCAT
DAT
OAT

higher test scores guaranteed

or your money back

Attend all required classes or make-up sessions, complete all scheduled tests, and do your homework. If your score doesn't improve on test day from your Kaplan diagnostic or a prior official test score, you can choose to repeat our program for free or get a full refund of your tuition. It's that simple.

World Leader in Test Prep and Admissions

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST
kaptest.com

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.

To be eligible for this offer, you must be enrolled in Kaplan's full classroom, tutoring, or online courses. In addition, you must present a copy of your official score report and your course materials within 90 days.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Homophobia in the sports world: Ed Gray comes out

Ed Gray, sportswriter for the Boston Herald, announced in his column yesterday that he is gay. Gray said that he finally decided to come out because he was tired of the "unabashed homophobia" that is tolerated in the world of professional sports, and he is hoping that his announcement will help people to reconsider their mindsets.

It is a bold and admirable move that Gray has made; very few sportswriters are open about their sexuality, partly because appearing macho is such an important part of professional sports. But this is one of the stereotypes that Gray is hoping to put to rest: a gay sports writer or athlete can be just as masculine as a straight one. Not all gay men are Robin Williams in the "Birdcage" or Jack from "Will & Grace," and the sooner people start to realize that, the sooner more people will feel comfortable about their sexuality, no matter what field they work in.

Another thing that makes coming out extremely intimidating to anyone involved in sports is the attitude taken by most athletes and coaches. Homophobia runs rampant and anti-gay comments and slurs are often permitted without any reprimanding. This is another thing that Gray would like to put a stop to. He wants the "major league sports [to] address the issue of homophobia and people who make overt homophobic remarks or actions [to] be held accountable."

With his column, Gray has taken a courageous stand that will hopefully inspire others to follow. The more people that speak out, the more the gay community will benefit, and it is commendable that Gray was willing to be one of the first in the sports arena.

The reaction to Gray's announcement remains to be seen. He is supported by his editor and fellow workers at the Herald, but the larger picture is still unclear. Gray's column is fairly popular, and one would hope that his coming out will not change that. But there are many, especially in the world of professional sports, who may be turned off, not only by Gray's sexuality, but also by his desire to be open about it. There are many who will think that if he kept quiet about it, no one would care.

But the point is that no one should have to hide who they are in order to be accepted. No one should have to keep quiet just so that other people won't feel uncomfortable. The problem is not with those who come out, but with those who experience the discomfort. People are people, whether they are tall, short, black, white, gay or straight. And we, at the Collegian, would like to congratulate Ed Gray for attempting to help people to realize that.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.

Guns don't kill children

Children kill children. Is that how the popular saying goes? It seems after this past week that gun enthusiasts may need to revamp their sarcastic mantra "Guns don't kill people, people kill people" to the prior mentioned slogan.

Elizabeth Carter

Shocked are you, possibly a little taken aback by this? Well so was I when last week in Landover, Md. a 4-year-old boy happened upon a loaded gun and subsequently shot and killed his 5-year-old sister, also wounding his 7-year-old brother, when the three children were left home alone. Take a moment to let that really sink in. Once you do, you might realize that the implications of something this unbelievable go slightly beyond the initial disgust we all feel towards their neglectful parents.

For me the first thing that crossed my mind when learning of this was sheer outrage over what kind of terrible people would leave their barely adolescent children home alone. Then further outrage over the fact that these people left a loaded gun in enough of a conspicuous area for their children to find and fire it.

Yet when the question is raised as to who is at fault, I would have to answer that the parents are those who should be held directly responsible. Their negligence is totally inexcusable, and although I'm sure they will be tried and punished, the problem does not stop there. That is the problem; it neither stops with their being brought to justice nor it did it begin with their 4-year-old pulling the trigger of a gun. The reality of the matter is if it weren't for the loose gun control laws in this country, such a tragedy would never have occurred at all. From this, the only conclusion that I can reach is that the system itself is innately flawed.

The Second Amendment is incredibly controversial. Gun advocates often cite the Second Amendment making the argument that they have the implicit right to defend themselves and their homes by bearing arms. They lead you to believe that if the Constitution says they can have their guns, then damn it all to hell if in these changing times, such an amendment has become obsolete and unrealistic in the high tech violence-laden age that we live in today.

The reality of the matter is if it weren't for the loose gun control laws in this country, such a tragedy would never have occured at all.

Yes, people have the right to defend their homes, but with things such as security systems, locks and 911. In reality, no one other than the police (you know, those professionals who are tested and trained before they receive their firearms) needs or requires a handgun or an assault weapon. Quite frankly, I do not understand why the common man or woman really needs a gun of any kind other than a hunting rifle that should be too massive for a child to operate anyway. It seems to me that even with the gun control laws we have, such events as the tragedy in Landover will only continue happening so long as handguns and assault weapons are legal in this country.

My major argument is that the right to bear arms was given to the citizens of this country 200 years ago, when this country was in its infancy. Without an organized police force or a united standing military, it was necessary for the people of colonial times to form militias and bear arms. Yet, as we can see with a military budget that's greater than the GNP of most small countries, and with police forces that haunt us at every party we go to and every red light we run, there is no longer a shortage of people who are trained to protect us.

So I say that it's about time that our legislators stopped catering to organizations such as the NRA and lunatics like Charlton Heston (Not from my cold dead hand? Seek help Mr. Heston). Rather, they should start stepping up and start protecting our nation's children as well as other innocents from becoming victims of gun violence.

Quite simply if there had not been a gun in that house, the 4-year old boy from Landover would not have to be labeled a murderer for the rest of his life, and his 5-year-old sister would not be resting in a grave. No one, I repeat no one, needs or requires a firearm that has the implicit purpose of killing another human being. So, if you want protection, go get a guard dog and an electric fence, not a gun that could accidentally kill me.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

It's the only way out

Yousef Munayyer

Last week, the Palestinian cause and the world lost a great intellectual mind. Edward Said, the renowned advocate for the Palestinian cause, Professor at Columbia University, and author of the influential "Orientalism", passed away at the age of 67. I need not, nor have the space to, give a synopsis of the accomplishments the Palestinian scholar has achieved. Rather, my focus is on another issue that Professor Said was known for, his opposition to the two-state solution. In "Power, Politics and Culture," he says "the only conclusion to be drawn from this is to devise a means where the two peoples can live together in one nation as equals, not master and slave, which is the current situation."

Growing up as a Palestinian child, you are most likely surrounded with the conflict in one way or the other. When you hear about all the troubles and irresolvable quarrels, you may tend to think, "can't we all just get along?" This thought constantly crossed my mind during childhood.

However, once the ideology of Jewish nationalism was forced upon the land through the influx of European Jewish immigrants, the religious divide was invoked. Suddenly, after the creation of the state of Israel, identification cards marked you as Christian, Muslim or Jew. The Arab and Palestinian identity was forced into disappearance.

Honestly, what need is there for the land to have a purely Jewish character? Why can't a secular bi-national country exist governed democratically by the people who live on it? Who cares if a different flag flies over the land as long as all people have the right to live on the same land in which their ancestors have been buried for centuries? That is true nationalism, not some colorful banner reminding us that we are different, but a connection to the land that reminds us that we are the same.

The argument that a national "Jewish" homeland is necessary is no longer as powerful as it was directly after World War II. Am I to believe that such homeland is necessary for those fleeing genocidal persecution today in the 21st century? Palestine/Israel is not some remote African nation that we, in the west, tend to ignore when genocide is occurring; rather, it is the most watched conflict in the world. Also, if a solution to the conflict is finally at hand, every leader, NGO, nation, and citizen will be watching to make sure everyone is on his or her best behavior so that this conflict stays resolved. The genocides of the 20th century have opened the eyes of the world.

The one-state solution solves the conflict and is only opposed by radical petty arguments that no longer are relevant in the world we live in today. The ideology of zealous nationalism and religious national identification is a phase that is passing, and has to be for the world to logically progress. The one-state solution will work because it has to; honestly, it's the only way out.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Ollieism: a new philosophy

This is a tribute to my friend Ollie. Now, most of you are wondering, great, another boring article about something pointless. Whereas this may be true, ask yourself, when have you read anything worthwhile in the past two weeks? It certainly hasn't been in that "Text Wrestling" book of yours. So let's get started.

Ben Feder

First off, the reason behind this article is that Ollie is one of the most interesting, preposterous, borderline insane people I know. His collegiate wisdom, philosophies and insight in the human experience and moral standards are enough to be the foundation of his own religion: Ollieism.

Now besides his forthrightness and saturated self-confidence, Ollie makes sure that his presence is known. Not simply by walking up to a stranger at a party with extended hand and greeting smile, but by carrying around a legal pad and writing personalized notes to the person he is meeting. "To Katie, I'm Ollie. Love Ollie," read one of these letters that he used to seal a lasting impression on an unsuspecting freshman.

For his friends, a more sincere and kind voice is ascribed in his notes: "Glenn, you are an attractive collegiate male that has the world in his hands. Choose. Choose wisely."

This gets into one of his main creeds – the aspect of "choosing" – basically, the belief that one can simply choose their path in life and any detail within that path. For instance, you can choose to feel sick, or not. You can choose to ask that cute person across the bar on a date, or slip them a 20 and hope they go with you anyway.

It's a watered down version of a black or white principle that makes Ollie happy to know he can choose his own destiny and control anything that crosses his path. This may sound obsessive, but it simply means taking things as they come, a quality in life that most people could abide by since it helps the more controlling to let go and relax, even though one can say that some situations get so completely out of control that merely choosing one option to another is ludicrous. However, you can break that situation into smaller more manageable parts to choose your way to a positive remedy.

His collegiate wisdom, philosophies and insight in the human experience and moral standards are enough to be the foundation of his own religion: Ollieism.

Ollie enjoys life, and living it as well. Ask his friends about his personality, and all you will hear is praise for his positive, comical, devil-may-care attitude. Wherever he goes, it's always with a Cheshire grin plastered on his face. His loud, audacious voice can be heard echoing off the Franklin DC's walls or bellowing through the concourse of the Campus Center.

He is an unselfish person in a selfish world, always going out of his way to greet all his friends and make sure their day is going as well as his. With a hearty handshake and a drink extended to you, Ollie knows a good time.

Delve deeper into the Zen of Ollie, and you will find a sense of humor unrivaled by many. For example, Ollie's dorm number is similar to the Domino's Pizza number. So when careless students neglect to press nine before dialing Domino's number, they happen upon Ollie's phone. Instead of Ollie explaining their error, he takes the order pretending to be the pizza establishment's delivery person. When the student calls back wondering where their pizza is, Ollie continues with the ruse assuring them that it is on the way. Now this may seem cruel, but understand that anyone's patience would be wearing thin after the 30th late night pizza order, so you need to entertain yourself somehow.

For those of you who have read this and don't know Ollie, I'd like to apologize for the absurdity of this article. It's one giant inside joke and most likely left people confused and feeling like someone just punched them in the face. But consider the humor in the fact that I just wrote an artlcle on one of my friends amidst the ones about war, politics, and other observations.

What does this matter, you may be wondering. Well, in explaining my man Ollie to you, hopefully you've wondered what aspects of Ollie do you exhibit as well. Or maybe you've learned something about yourself. So when confronted by those hard to answer questions, just ask yourself: "What would Ollie do?"

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An honest look into Hollywood

Welcome to the inaugural edition of "Ask Johnny," a biweekly forum for curious moviegoers who want to know anything (within reason) about movies. This is your chance to find out the name of that movie you saw over the weekend, why Hollywood acts the way it does and why do I review movies. It's anything you want. If you have a question, just email askthecritic@yahoo.com. Please do not send comments – positive or negative – about any review that runs in the paper; just send your questions and marriage proposals please.

Ask Johnny

Johnny Donaldson

Why does Hollywood keep making so many Freddy Krueger movies? – Cam

It's all about the marketplace, Cameron. Hollywood wholeheartedly believes that old "Field of Dreams" chestnut that says if you build it they will come, and when audiences flock to a movie en masse the first thought is to give it a sequel. The success of the recent "Freddy vs. Jason" movies ($80 million and counting) practically ensures that there will be another one, mainly because Hollywood executives think that initial monetary success means immediate audience loyalty (which is hardly the case – no one wanted to see "Tomb Raider 2," after all.) It also helps that these kinds of horror movies are often cheap and easy to make (which goes along to explain why they are as slapdash as they are ubiquitous.)

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE MOVIE? – Ferron

Wow, Ferron, thanks for giving me such a hard question right off the bat. Since there are literally thousands of movies existing in some form since the advent of cinema, it would take me eons just to parse the list down to one singular achievement. At the risk of losing my license in the movie critic's club, I'll have to say the movie that brings me the most joy when seeing it has to be "Tremors," the 1990 Kevin Bacon homage to '50s giant monster flicks, about very large, very carnivorous worms living under the Nevada desert. It isn't great moviemaking, but it does exactly what a movie should do and make you forget about everything except the movie itself.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

Ivana Trasson opened Gallery A3 in 2001 after the events of Sept. 11. The three featured artists this month are Helena Dooley, whose show will consist of large duckie paintings contrasted with glittery paintings on glass which she has entitled "Breakable Rules for Behavior." Tom Morton, with a focus on using materials he found, such as dirt, leaves, flowers, beans, rice and paint, has created an anticipated floor piece accompanied by the audio recording of loons chirping. Lastly, Guru Karam Singh Khalsa will round out the feathery theme with his depiction of mixed media paintings of flying birds and winged figures at night.

Alfredo's Photographic Gallery

This month, the photographs of the Dutch photographer Peter van Bolhuis will be featured. This exhibit includes aerial pieces of locations including the Dutch lowlands and Cape Cod. The University of Massachusetts Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning has worked in cooperation to complete the feature piece entitled "Grace to Water."

Burnett Gallery

Located inside the Jones Library on 43 Amity St., the Burnett Gallery will feature two shows of new work by artists Marlene Rye and Chet Cramer. Rye's "Intimate Immensities" and [illegible] of rice paper and paintings and

The Fiber Art Center

Fiber is the medium of expression among the artists featured each month in The Fiber Art Center located along South Pleasant Street. This month the exhibition is titled "Felt So Good" and was put together by internationally acclaimed felt artist, teacher and Northampton resident Beth Beebe. Sculptures and two-dimensional pieces resembling paintings have been made out of wool material, which has been moistened, soaked and heated.

Mead Museum

Thirteen artists will be included in the Mead Museum show titled "Off the Beaten Track: Contemporary Mindscapes." A series of landscape paintings will examine land, city and dreamscapes of the modern era. The Mead Museum is located at Amherst College.

R. Michelson Galleries

R. Michelson Galleries located at 25 South Pleasant St. will feature new miniature oil paintings by Richard Baldwin this month. Baldwin's paintings are of local landscapes, detailed objects and strange circumstances. The R. Michelson Gallery typically shows Realist works and has another location in Northampton.

Underworld resurrects rock and roll

Soundtrack boasts classic gothic sound

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Correspondent

Sometime shortly after April 20, 1999, being goth became not only grounds for social ostracization, but suspension from high school. Trenchcoats were indicative of involvement in dangerous mafias. KMFDM quotes in your profile were secretly placed in FBI files around the globe.

All ambiguous poetry censored, trenchcoats were locked away and part of the culture's innocence was gone. Most of the excommunicated goths turned to a place even darker than the brutal confines of the industrial revolution – techno.

Various artists, including Maynard James Keenan — 'Underworld' Soundtrack — Lakeshore

Some people, like Danny Lohner, the live guitarist for Nine Inch Nails and mastermind behind the historically underpromoted "Underworld Soundtrack," never left their trail of tears too far in the past. As producer and composer of several of the film's incidental pieces, Lohner hammered together a motley lot of celebrity friends to produce what could have been a cutting edge lineup – in 1996. This whole project, despite appearances by contemporary talent like the Dillinger Escape Plan and the Icarus Line, smells like a love letter to people whose major purchases in the past five years have been any Maynard James Keenan project and the last appropriate NIN release in 1999.

The movie itself is being promoted as combining equal elements of The Matrix, The Crow and Blade for two hours of nauseating music video editing and an unsurprising amount of style over substance. Each of those three films had their respective soundtracks scrambled together from the hip music of the day and the Underworld soundtrack is no different.

It's a surprisingly low-key affair though. Sure, there's a good deal of energetic material here, but the latter half especially sinks into the more ethereal piano-led gothic territory. It's hard to imagine a pre-certified blockbuster like Underworld eliciting so many somber moments (especially without falling into a pit of Keanu-style awkwardness). Still, big names and relative unknowns alike till the grave, as one of the two A Perfect Circle remixes exclaims, of 4AD artists like Dead Can Dance and This Mortal Coil.

Speaking of graves, Helmet's Page Hamilton, a Crow soundtrack alumni, reappears after years of inactivity with a solo effort called "Throwing Punches." It's unfortunate that these petty jabs don't compare at all to the better works of Helmet. Hamilton's a dinosaur here, croaking through dirty 5:4 and elsewise-odd tempo hits of guitar. This proves he has not followed much music since Helmet's terrible 1997 album "Aftertaste" almost completely overturned the band's solid reputation. In fact, this song belongs back on that album, vying for space alongside the other nu metal throwaways. Hamilton's forced staccato sounds are nothing more than a pale imitation of his former self. His new band gluts out such a predictable footnote that it kind of sounds like a Midwestern garage band who downloaded a Helmet mp3 and then immediately decided to steal some ideas for their new P.O.D cover band.

Then there are the collaborations. The album starts with a spanking-new track by The Damning Well, another name for the so-called synergy of Filter's Richard Patrick and Wes Borland, formerly of Limp Bizkit. Has-beens? Not necessarily so.

It's got all the trappings of what churned the stomachs of hardcore industrial fans when the genre went pop in the mid '90s, though: that sweltering and melodramatic chorus, the melodic riff-based guitars that rock you and the clever studio effects. It's not a bad track for this specific class of music. It's just unfortunate for all those involved that this particular class of music exhausted all its redundant ideas shortly after its inception into mainstream culture.

Track two features the first of the four Maynard James Keenan songs featured on this album. Tool fans will find this reason enough to purchase the album without thinking twice. Puscifier, Keenan's pet project with Lohner, will not disappoint. It's a sweet little slice of burlesque about a sexy little devil that's got an element of folkish storytelling that has been absent in any Keenan project to date. He proves himself to be up to the task though, rollicking along simultaneously tempting and warning you that "she'll suck you dry."

Next, Keenan joins the Red Hot Chilli Peppers' John Frusciante in helping out David Bowie for a slow ballad called "Bring me the Disco King." On the surface, the track sounds like a dream come true. Of course, it falls below expectations, like collaborations of this caliber usually do. It's quite a lovely song actually, executed with reservation by the three superstars. The ageless Bowie swoons a mournful tune while Frusciante plucks lightly above the obligatory string section. The wood instruments avoid Spector-like bombast and instead provide a raft for the song to float along. It is actually Keenan, rel-

Continued on page 6

Life for rent but Dido not for sale: New album hits all the right notes

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Dido's 1999 debut "No Angel" was the perfect backdrop music for a quick SUV run to Starbucks. But her smooth mix of folk, chill-out and electronic music – dubbed folk-tronica by some enterprising souls – was hardly the most likely music to catch anyone's attention. The unruffled contours of "No Angel" were more suited to playing inside yuppie hangouts than rocking the radio airwaves, especially since this was the era of teenybopper pop and angry nu-metal.

Dido "Life for Rent" Arista

Not exactly the perfect environment for releasing a record by a former trip-hop chanteuse who could convey chilliness and warmth often at the same moment. That is, until Eminem sampled her song "Thank You" in his deranged fan epic "Stan," which led to the left-field success of "No Angel," that is, worldwide sales of 12 inillion, making her one of the most successful solo female singers from Britain – ever.

The British babe that snuck into fame may have changed her appearance a bit but not her tune.

How do you follow up that kind of pressure? For Dido, you wait four years and release an album that doesn't differ that far from the formula of the former, but perfects it with a newer musical skills and emotional maturity, as well as letting the darker hues edge their way to the forefront.

The songs on "Life For Rent," like those on "No Angel," focus on romance, but with Dido breaking off an engagement to her former fiancé last year, the focus is on the darker aspects of love and romance. Heartbreak, loneliness and romantic obsession – they are all on display in Dido's world, and they lend the music a clearer edge than the sometimes-mushy sentiments found on songs like "Thank You."

A dying romance haunts her on "White Flag," the first single: "I will go down with this ship/ and I won't put my hands up and surrender/ there's no white flag above my door/ I'm in love/ and always will be," she sings in the chorus, surveying with a reluctant heart the damage done by an ending relationship. She chastises an emotionally calcified lover on "Stoned," while in "Mary's In India," she sings a story about Danny, whose love is abroad. In an edgy turn, the song ends with Dido snagging the man for herself. In "See You When You're 40," she laments the loss of dreams when she realizes her lover is a fake and a sham.

As emotionally tortured and wrenched in the heart "Life For Rent" is, the music sidesteps the need for making the music equally depressing. That's not to say that Dido is matching despondent lyrics with booty-shaking club beats; she's always been too classy and elegant to make dance floor anthems. She favors more ambient textures and cushions, a more relaxed vibe even on the spikier songs, such as on the house sound of "Stoned." Once again, the folk-tronica label is well placed, as the songs often employ simple acoustics along with the chill-out beats.

The producers include her brother Rollo and underground hip-hopper P'Nut. Dido's beautiful, crystal-clear vocals are placed high in the fold. She has one of the most gorgeous, ethereal voices in modern pop music today, so it's a joy to hear her wrap her tender vocals around new music. The title track, for example, is a warm and lovely pedestal for her talents, and she's able to give the cold electronic sounds a humanity they may have otherwise lacked. At times, she embraces the cliches of trip-hop too closely, but she also evokes a delicate expanse of majesty.

On "Life For Rent" Dido wanders down a road paved with broken hearts and regrets, yet the sounds are never heartbroken themselves. There are edges here, but they don't cut so much as cry. It's the dichotomy of Dido – sadness and beauty, hope and heartbreak that can mingle in the same land. Its pristine, its exquisite, its absolutely breathtaking.

Dark movie brings an equally rich soundtrack

Continued from page 5

egated to whispers in the background, that nearly ruins the song in a slightly pompous reprisal of the call and response method utilized by Richard Patrick and he on the Damning Well track. Luckily, Bowie saves the day.

Lohner's instrumental music as Renholder shows that while he may have a few ideas up his sleeve, most of them are on loan from his buddy Trent. "Down in the Lab" is essentially the coil remix of NIN's "Closer" (as featured over the opening credits of David Fincher's "Se7en") and the link between "Now I Know" and NIN's "Pilgrimage" is only a hop, skip and a jump away.

The Underworld soundtrack also contains the long-awaited return of industrial's godfathers, the PETA-worshipping, Kubrick-sampling, stilt-wearing band of power electronic assassins that could only have come out of the snowy terrain of Canada. Of course, I'm talking about Skinny Puppy. In the vein of frontman Nivek Ogre's recent dancey electro unit Ohgr, "Optimissed" is easily the most accessible thing that Skinny Puppy has done. Oddly reunited a good eight years after programmer Dwayne Goettel's sudden death, Skinny Puppy combine a seemingly nonsensical cut-up pattern of syllables together at a rapid-fire pace. It doesn't take a Quaalude popping Chicago Wax Trax veteran to realize that these old dawgs are still ahead of their game.

There are some decent bits of new material by younger talent that overcome the soundtrack's stuck-in-1995 feel. The Dillinger Escape Plan, the most progressive band in hardcore, churns out a bipolar piece of noise candy that hurls from anguished scowls to lush passages of actual singing. The ensemble obviously picked up some tips from Irony is A Dead Scene's guest vocalist Mike Patton. Songs by Finch and The Icarus Line also provide nice melodic diversions of pure timeless melodic fuzz rock. Not exactly five star material, but welcome polarity shifts with no excess eery synth to boot.

The piano-based tracks by Sarah Bettens, Lisa Germano, Johnette Napolitano, Milla (kovavich, the redhead from The Fifth Element) and even Trust Company are pretty good, sometimes though, they are tedious pieces of melancholy and gloom. However, they all act as different parts of the same blue path of heartbreak and self-pity.

Milla kovavich's humble attempts to mime Elysian Fields' Jennifer Charles are cute. In all honesty, Trust Company should go back to the headbanger's ball where they belong. There's just only so much that a sun drenched 21-year-old boy with no foreseeable romantic calamity can endure.

This is virtually how the entire album feels in general. That black nail polish is empty, those Poppy Z. Brite books are dusty, and that Marilyn Manson lunchbox is long lost. Why won't they let dead goths rest in peace?

UMASS Campus Recreation

Get those forms in by:

Foul Shooting (M/W/C)	10/6
3-Point Shootout (M/W/C)	10/6

Still Time To Enter:

Tennis Singles	A.S.A.P
Ultimate Frisbee	A.S.A.P
Weekend Softball	A.S.A.P
Volleyball	A.S.A.P

On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

New network ready to roll

Automobile channel begins to take motion

By John Porretto
Associated Press

DETROIT – Add 24-hour automotive news and consumer programming to the list of cable networks hoping to find a niche among those already airing round-the-clock shopping, cooking, golfing and other interests.

Wheels TV, based in Acton, Mass., outside Boston, plans to launch in the first quarter of 2004 with a lineup of original and acquired programming focusing on cars, trucks and motorcycles – but not on competitive racing, the niche of Fox Cable Networks Group's Speed Channel.

"Wheels TV is all about our enjoyment of the automobile," said Wheels TV chairman and founder Jim Barisano. "That runs the gamut from the wind in your hair with the top down to safety and performance and resale value. We're more on the road than on the track."

The channel will cover topics such as technology, history and traffic. A sampling of shows includes Wild About Wheels, Muscle Car Crazies, Import Tuner Time and Auto-Biography.

Barisano said Wheels TV also will feature coverage from various international auto shows, classic movies, manufacturer-sponsored programming and daily news segments. The network will have field offices in New York, Detroit and Los Angeles.

Stan Soocher, an associate professor of music and entertainment industry studies at the University of Colorado at Denver, said the concept has potential but starting a new cable network is a difficult task.

"We're a car culture, so you really have quite a vested interest in most of the audience," Soocher said. "But you can end up in 100 million homes and still not be successful. You have to have the eyeballs on your channel, and to do that you need an attractive product."

Wheels TV, which is privately held, aims to be in 5 million to 6 million homes when it launches early next year, but that will depend on how many cable systems decide to offer the channel.

The network is in the early stages of trying to forge relationships with cable company giants such as Comcast Corp. and Time Warner Cable, as well as satellite television providers DirecTV and EchoStar, Barisano said.

He said the idea for the network evolved over 20 years as he and others produced automotive programming for networks such as Discovery and Speedvision, the predecessor of Speed Channel.

Speed Channel, which carries primarily NASCAR programming and a variety of other racing, is in more than 58.8 million U.S. homes and 4.5 million more in Canada, the network said.

Barisano declined to discuss Wheels TV's finances, but he said it typically takes upward of $100 million to $125 million to launch a cable network and reach profitability.

Each year, a dozen or so proposals like Wheels TV make their way before cable operating companies, said Rob Stoddard, spokesman for the National Cable & Telecommunications Association.

At the start of 2003, there were 308 nationally delivered cable channels, and another 40 to 50 regional channels, Stoddard said.

"Admittedly it's a challenging environment, because there's always more supply than demand," Stoddard said. "But cable operators would be the first to tell you they're more than willing to listen to new ideas. If that weren't the case, we wouldn't be watching channels like ESPN and CNN today."

'The Station Agent' makes a runaway hit

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

A reticent dwarf, a grieving mother and a chatty hot-dog vendor walk into a bar. Actually, they drink beer on a porch, but you get the idea.

It sounds like the setup to a joke, but it's the premise of "The Station Agent," a small film bursting with insightful humor, unforced poignancy and beautifully drawn characters.

Peter Dinklage (who's extraordinary), Patricia Clarkson and Bobby Cannavale vividly portray three lonely people in rural New Jersey who form an unlikely social circle, despite their anti-social tendencies.

In the tiny universe writer-director Tom McCarthy has created in his auspicious film debut, they keep running into each other sometimes literally whether they want to or not.

Fin McBride (the 4-foot-6 Dinklage) is more interested in trains than in people, and has recently moved into the empty, dilapidated train depot he inherited when his only friend died. He spends his days walking the rails alone, smoking and thinking, and when he opens his mouth, his deep, assured voice comes as a surprise.

During one of his walks, he's nearly run over by Olivia (Clarkson), a spacey artist who's easily distracted behind the wheel of her sport utility vehicle. When she knocks on his door later in a hesitant attempt at befriending him, she divulges that her son is dead and that she and her husband have separated then passes out.

When she leaves hastily the next morning, it sparks the imagination of Joe (Cannavale), who sells coffee and hot dogs from the truck he parks outside Fin's depot. Joe wants to make friends with Fin and Olivia, but is so hyperactive and overeager in his approach, he causes them both to retreat.

"You're my hero, dog!" Joe gushes. "You wanna cold one?" Fin politely, but firmly, declines.

Because of his small stature, Fin has spent his entire life fortifying himself against menacing advances from people who treat him like a freak. So when Olivia and Joe approach him with kindness, he doesn't quite know how to respond.

Fortunately for him (and for us) he slowly lets his defenses down, and the three form a friendship that's awkward at first (which McCarthy's observant script depicts with small talk and painful silences) but evolves in time.

That they're all oddballs and misfits may sound a bit too precious, but McCarthy has developed the characters so fully, you'll want to hang out with them long after the movie's ending, which seems to come far too soon.

'The Station Agent'
Directed by Thomas Mccarthy
Starring Finbar McBride, Olivia Harris, Mirmax, Rated R, 90 mins, Grade B+

Courtesy Amazon.com

Peter Dinklage, Patricia Clarkson and Bobby Connavle form a loose-knit group of social oddballs.

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS
Present
FREE HELICOPTER RIDES
Thursday, October 2, 2003 11:00 am - 3:00 pm
Parking available by permit or meter only
Open to all students and faculty interested in learning more about what the Marine Corps Officer Programs have to offer!

www.marineofficer.com

Cubism isn't square

Picasso work shown from a different angle

By Carl Hartman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – When Pablo Picasso was 27 he spent the summer in a village in his native Spain, drawing and painting odd angles and curves that looked only a bit like his beautiful French mistress.

They ended up helping inspire the cubism that defined his career.

"When we invented cubism we had no intention whatever of inventing cubism," he said many years later of the movement that moved far beyond the tradition of art that tried to reflect the world as it appeared to the human eye.

The National Gallery of Art has assembled 60 related sketches, drawings, paintings and sculptures for a show that opens on Wednesday: "Picasso: the Cubist Portraits of Fernande Olivier." It will be on view until Jan. 18.

Jeffrey Weiss, curator of the show, noted that cubism was not Picasso's own name for the style.

"Picasso didn't name things," Weiss said.

Trying to create an entirely new kind of painting, Picasso had been experimenting with geometric shapes. The pictures that resulted had less and less resemblance to realistic art though their subject was usually identifiable as a person or object. That's not the case with some later abstract artists, who often put nothing at all recognizable into their works.

As an introduction to the show, wall notes explain that mistress Fernande became "less a subject than a motif" and that Picasso sought more an "allegorical representation" than a likeness.

Weiss doesn't see the pictures as an attempt to portray a particular woman, as artists had been doing for centuries. Though a professional model, the "languorous, auburn-haired" Fernande – as Picasso biographer John Richardson describes her – apparently did not sit for them. In her many letters to Gertrude Stein, the American writer who was Picasso's patron, she complained that a kidney ailment was so painful that she could hardly sit at all.

She spent much of the time at the village of Horta de Ebro stretched out and reading novels by Charles Dickens. They were sent from Paris by Alice B. Toklas, Stein's long-time secretary-companion.

Picasso usually put one or more of Fernande's characteristics into the pictures, such as the deep cleft between her nose and upper lip, or the bun that was her favored hairdo.

Her illness and the cooling of her long romance with Picasso, may be reasons for the figure's bent head in many of the pictures.

Courtesy media.mit.edu

With La Joie di Vivre the abstract nature of Picasso's style is expressed to an extreme.

The victim of an abusive husband she was afraid to divorce, Fernande had been living with Picasso since shortly after he settled in Paris. His family in Barcelona, whom they visited before going to the remote village, had thought they would marry and turned against her when they didn't.

Villagers in the northeastern province of Catalonia were shocked by their unmarried state. One night demonstrators stoned their room at the inn, and Picasso scared them off with revolver shots.

Stein and Toklas promised to visit. Picasso got the pianola fixed in the local bar so they would have something to dance to, but they never came. Stein later bought two landscapes Picasso also painted in the village.

Three years after that Fernande and Picasso broke up, both having taken new lovers. Another of his mistresses later said that he had two successive ways of dealing with a woman: the first was to put her on a pedestal and the second was to use her as a doormat.

Courtesy Courtauld.it

In Les Demoielles d'Avigron Picasso shows his trademark perception of reality.

Week four: a musical tribute

Continued from page 10

Buffaloed Soldier

Well, it was nice of Chicago to open up such a beautiful new place for the Packers to play in. Too bad the Bears didn't want to join in on the festivities. Yikes. It really is a shame, because 'Da Bears' offense actually put in a somewhat solid night in the 38-23 loss Monday night. Unfortunately, all those Soldier Field ghosts Kordell Stewart thought he saw were just apparitions due to the five sacks he endured.

Maybe the Bears just don't like to stop people from what they're doing. They didn't keep the Pack's defense from giving Kordell a few hundred new grass stains, and they didn't stop Brett Favre or Ahman Green, well, at all. Green got everything out of his 19 carries, rumbling for 176 yards and a pair of touchdowns, while Favre distributed the ball pretty evenly to six different guys, three of which caught for TDs.

Anthony Thomas, who put in an otherwise decent night, opened up for 67 yards in the fourth quarter, but that was the first time the Bears saw the endzone the whole game.

The stars at night, are big and bright…

Honestly, the best game of the weekend for the average fan had to be the Texans thrilling last-second win at home over Jacksonville. Reliant Stadium definitely turned into a rocking college-like arena, with the noise reaching such a high level that David Carr and a half dozen of the Houston offensive players had to step out of the huddle and quiet the fans down.

But that was just the finish. First, you had the coming-out party for Marshall's Byron Leftwich, and while the youngster didn't exactly get off to a great start, he kept the Jags ahead for much of the game. Leftwich is not the second coming of Michael Vick, but with a little polish, and maybe a better team, he's got a good chance in the league.

Back to the Texans: All those fans who prayed that David Carr would finally become not just a rookie who fills the jersey, but a bona fide playcaller, well, you got your answer on Sunday. Carr's inspirational work in the waning seconds, and his gutsy take-one-for-the-team leap across the goal line to win the game was enough to make even Patriots fans – who got the tail end of the game after the Pats' loss – emotionally involved.

No heart in San Francisco

How ugly is the situation in San Francisco right now? Nevermind the subpar effort the 49ers are putting in for Dennis Erickson's rookie year at the helm, the infighting and controversy is getting out of hand.

There's no reason to glorify an athlete for being brash and egotistical, but Terrell Owens has a point. His stats on Sunday were quiet, yes. He gained just 55 yards. But that came on only five catches. Seems like you'd want to send the ball T.O.'s way a few more times than that, doesn't it? The fact that he took out his rage on offensive coordinator Greg Knapp might not be excusable, but someone ought to light the fire under this team. Even worse is the fact that Knapp didn't seem to have any answers, and was in fact shocked by Owens' blowup. Unhealthy things coming out of the Niners camp indeed.

Goodnight, Cincy

We'll finish things off this week with the 0-fer watch, and now it's finally an interesting race, with all the only-mediocre teams finally out of the picture. Special thanks to the Bengals, who were kind enough to give up the top spot this week with a 21-14 win over Cleveland.

The Jets are going to be stuck at zero for at least another week thanks to the bye they'll enjoy on Sunday. It might be a good thing, because this will be the last chance for master motivator – and media critic – Herman Edwards to rally the troops and make 2003 at least respectable.

The 0-fer watch gets a treat this week, with a crucial battle between two members of the NFL's dregs. Jacksonville and San Diego, both with four losses, meet up at ALLTEL Stadium.

Rounding out the non-winners are those hapless Bears (0-3). They might have a pretty decent shot at a W this week, though, against the Raiders, who are making it harder to believe they played in the big one last year on a weekly basis.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Merritt_Collegian@yahoo.com.

ENGINEERING CAREER FAIR
TODAY!
Wednesday, October 1
Campus Center Auditorium
10 am - 3 pm

co-op and full time positions for engineering and computer science majors of all degree levels

For more information (and to see who's coming!) go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

CareerServices

Author Signing
Meet author
Sabina Murray
Thursday
October 2
12:00pm–1:00pm

in the University Store

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

GERALD HEINZ/COLLEGIAN

Still rolling

Senior Dan Colwell scored the game-winning goal against UNH on Saturday. He and the Minutemen open up their Atlantic 10 conference schedule against St. Bonaventure on Saturday.

Same Beck, different team

Continued from page 10

ing for the fans. As reported by Wayne Drehs from ESPN; Beck lived in a trailer 400 feet from Sec Taylor Stadium, where he set up a postgame barbecue for fans, along with burgers he would also distribute a few adult beverages for anyone of age who happened to stop by. Only Rod Beck would be able to pull this off.

Beck put up some impressive stats while in the minors, performing well enough to grab the attention of the Padres' organization.

Trading in his beer-fest barbecue in America's heartland, Beck headed to the west coast for some fun in the Caslifornia sun. He was thrust into the closing role when Padres reliever Trevor Hoffman was forced to sit out the majority of the season with a serious injury.

As if the situation for San Diego wasn't grim enough, the loss of Hoffman being substituted by a questionable Beck left the few Padre faithful with onrush of headaches.

The tenacious Beck, rose to the occasion. In his first 20 save opportunities, he was flawless, not blowing a single opportunity. He has been one of the most positive highlights of the lowly Padres season.

Beck started his professional baseball career with the San Francisco Giants. He got his feet wet in his rookie season for the Giants with the role of being a middle-reliever. His ERA was in the high threes, earning only one save.

Beck's sophomore season in the majors was arguably his best year. Beck held an ERA below two and tallied up a shade fewer than twenty saves. This is what launched the beginning of his career as a closer, which lasted from 1993-1997

The Chicago Cubs acquired Beck in 1998 to be in command of the closing responsibilities. Beck stepped up to the challenge on his way to a career high 51 saves on the year. He also led the Cubs to a huge Wild Card victory.

Midway through the 1999 season Beck packed his bags, as he was shipped off to the hub.

Who knows what the future will hold for Rod Beck? Fans know one thing for sure; whether he is pitching games in the majors or partying it up in the minor leagues, the name Rod Beck will always be remembered in a positive light for his unique antics.

Matt Stewart is a Collegian columnist.

Thrashers' all-star in car accident

By Keith Parsons
Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — Atlanta Thrashers star Dany Heatley was charged Tuesday with reckless driving after his sportscar swerved off a road and careened into a wall at about 80 mph, breaking his jaw and critically injuring a teammate.

Dan Snyder, a backup center, underwent a two-hour surgery for a skull fracture. Heatley, the MVP of the 2003 All-Star game, was hospitalized in stable condition.

At a news conference at Grady Memorial Hospital, the neurosurgeon who operated on Snyder said he was still unconscious but that there wasn't any bleeding into the brain.

"It'll be a few days before we know we can even tell a prognosis," Dr. Sanjay Gupta said. "The underlying brain actually looked pretty good."

Heatley also has a minor concussion, a contusion on his lung and a bruised kidney, according to the team's physician, Dr. Scott Gillogly. None of the injuries appeared to be career threatening, Gillogly said.

Heatley lost control of his 2002 Ferrari 360 Modena on a curve on a two-lane road Monday night in Atlanta, police said. The vehicle crossed into the other lane, left the road and struck a wrought iron and brick wall in front of an apartment complex. The car was ripped in half and the players were thrown onto the road.

Heatley also was charged with serious injury by vehicle — a felony — and three misdemeanors, police spokesman Sgt. Kevin losty said.

"Our preliminary reports indicated speed may have been a factor," he said.

Officers estimated the car was traveling about 80 mph. Heatley took a blood-alcohol test, but results will not be available for weeks, police said.

Heatley, 22, and Snyder, 25, had been at an event for season ticket holders at Philips Arena.

The Thrashers canceled practice Tuesday and were considering canceling Wednesday night's exhibition against Florida. Their season opens a week from Thursday.

"Nobody's really thinking about hockey," team captain Shawn McEachern said. "We're thinking about the guys."

The usually energetic Thrashers coach Bob Hartley was sullen as he answered questions at the team's training headquarters in Duluth, in suburban Atlanta. His voice often wavered with emotion, and tears welled in his eyes.

"Right now, our thoughts and prayers are just with the two [players] and their families," Hartley said. "We're a big family. ... When you face adversity or tragedy like we are now, you get even closer."

Heatley and Ilya Kovalchuck are the cornerstones of a franchise that hasn't made the playoffs in its first four seasons but has plenty of young talent.

Hartley and team president Stan Kasten would not discuss how Heatley's injuries or charges against him might affect his role with the team.

"Our focus is on our two guys," Hartley said. "We're praying about their health, to overcome this tragedy."

Kasten spoke with Heatley when the players arrived at the hospital.

"His first concern was about Danny Snyder," Kasten said.

Snyder, a center who scored 10 goals and added four assists in 36 games for Atlanta last season, had surgery on his ankle in September before the start of training camp.

Snyder signed with the Thrashers as a free agent in 1999 after playing four seasons of junior hockey for Owen Sound in the Ontario Hockey League.

Twins take series opener

Continued from page A1

up in the dugout.

"The one thing you try to do is not show panic to your players," Gardenhire said.

So he told them: "Here we go, have some fun."

It was somewhat similar to the night of June 11, when Roy Oswalt got hurt and Houston's bullpen beat the Santana Yankees in the first six-pitcher no-hitter in major league history.

"We pieced it together as best we could," Gardenhire said.

New York had rolled over the Twins during the past two seasons, going 13-0 and outscoring them 90-36. But Minnesota wasn't fazed by Santana's injury. Hawkins struck out four over two innings for the win, and Guardado hung on for the save.

Santana had thrown just 59 pitches when he cramped up. The Twins' bullpen was shocked.

"Wow! What happened," Hawkins said to himself. "He totally caught the bullpen off guard."

Eliminated in the first round by Anaheim last year after winning the opener, New York has lost four straight postseason games for the first time since the 1981 World Series against the Dodgers, not exactly what owner George Steinbrenner was looking for when he set payroll records last winter in an effort to get the Yankees their first Series title since 2000.

sports@dailycollegian.com

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Tee · Potato Skins · Chicken Fingers · Mozzarella Sticks · 30 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-8017

Clip Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Featuring Aveda and Paul Mitchell Products
Fall Special
Take $5 off any coloring highlights in auburns, golds, or beiges starting at $50!
Waxing Special
100% Organic NuFree wax!
Take $5 off 3/4 leg or lower leg!

$$ $$
EARN UP TO $40 PER HOUR
Nightclub Now Hiring
Bartenders · Cocktail Servers · Cashiers
Floor Staff · Barbacks · Coat Checkers
Apply In Person Only
Dates: Tue-Sept. 30th and Wed Oct 1st 2003
Time: 6:00 - 8:00 p.m
Place: 1700 Main Street, Springfield, MA
www.hdroni.com
Also Hiring: Marketing and Promotions Manager
Responsibilities include promotional leadership planning and support for Crown Nightclub Corporate Events as well as an outgoing, self starter that is comfortable working in new opportunities and has the ability to drive results in an individual and as a team leader. Ability to communicate well in verbal and competent written knowledge of window based graphics applications required. Fax resume to 413-747-3949

No one knows what the future will bring.
Except those creating it.
Visit our Career Booth on Wednesday, October 1.
Opportunities are available in the following areas:
Computer Science · Computer Engineering · Electrical Engineering
Mechanical Engineering · Math · Physics
Systems Engineering · Aeronautical Engineering · Optics
Check out our website at rayjobs.com/campus for further information, including our Campus recruiting Events
Start your job search by clicking find Job Search our job database
The power of applied intelligence.
One of the most admired defense and aerospace systems suppliers through world-class people and technology. Our focus is developing great talent.
© 2003 Raytheon Company. All rights reserved. Raytheon is an equal opportunity employer and welcomes a wide diversity of qualified applicants. U.S. citizenship and security clearance may be required.
Raytheon
Customer Success Is Our Mission
College Publisher - Univ. of Massachusetts, Amherst
9/24/2003, 10/1/2003
73629-HO42851
RAYCOM
8" x 10"
Cynthia Kinnett v.2

1 in 40 Billion • By Meghann Rosales

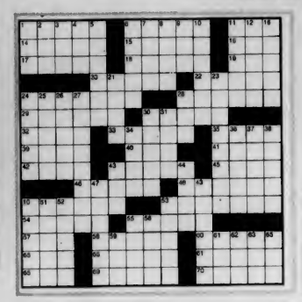
JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Velard

Trapped in Suburbia • By Brendan Mruk & A. Michael Gardner

ZooMass • By Sarah Hollman

Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Krzykowski

Today's Crossword Puzzle



Across
1 Fix, as in garment
6 Find the sum
11 Hallway
14 Purple shade
15 New Zealand native
16 A Gabor
17 Yang
18 "— Came Jones"
19 Shiny metal
20 Tough question
22 Leggy bird
24 They tickle us
25 Hallway
28 Women's dress size
30 Dress style
32 Annoyed
33 Is bold enough
36 Recedes
37 Apiece
38 Teachers' org.
41 Bowling stalls
42 Average
43 Fish homes
45 Easy by-line
46 Spa amenity
47 Spooker
50 Totally shocked
53 Peruse
54 Presents
55 Refrigerate
56 Bogs down
57 It's charged!
58 Get away from
60 Kind of pool
66 Hound for payment
67 Waste of time
68 Author Jong
69 Crafty
70 Nudges
71 Had status

Down
1 Big bird
2 Impair
3 Moth or ant
4 First lady?
5 Tyrant
6 Gather together
7 Cowgirl Evans
8 Fuel
9 40-cub brewer
10 Urban bird
11 Feria subway
12 Some vines
13 "Divine Comedy" author
21 Pan up a tab
23 Eyeglasses: Ipr. short
26 "Hi!"
27 Mercator's home
27 Kitchen appliance
29 Sickle notes
30 Stadium
31 Clue
34 Unknown auth.
35 Connected
37 Prickly twig
38 Flies high
40 Deposited
43 Overdresses
47 Zonked out
48 Spring holiday
50 Sour substances
51 Horror-movie extra
52 Horse and donkey hybrid
53 Visitors
58 Darkness
59 Between pigs
59 Tin neighbor
61 Retiree's bday
62 Morse code dot
63 Make an "A"
64 Schoolboy

Previous puzzle solved

10-1-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
WED. Reggae Night!
TH. Special Brew (Groove Rock)
FRI. Open Irish Seisuin!
SAT. Urban Family Band (Reggae, Roots, etc.)
September Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
Don't Forget FREE Pool Size Parking!

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Popcorn Shrimp
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 63
- Low: 41

THURSDAY
- High: 58
- Low: 33

FRIDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 45

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lindsay Clark/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Careful where you walk, you never know whose toes you might be stepping on.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Things could always be worse, just ask the person next to you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Swing by a hockey rink, you'll pick up a cute player.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Take some time for you. Put your feet up and relax.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Beware of men who are intimidated by tall women.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Take a trip to an exotic island, what you find might surprise you.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
Your friends are getting mad at you. You're never around, you work too much.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You handled yourself well in that uncomfortable situation.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be understanding of those around you, things aren't always what they seem.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
No matter what anyone says, you're not perfect, and that's ok.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Laugh, it'll make you feel better.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Go to the store. You're running low on Lean Pockets and frozen pizza.

Quote for the Day

"We ride and never worry about the fall. I guess that's just the cowboy in us all."

-Tim McGraw

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Apartment for Rent

2 Bedroom, 1 Full Bath, Loft Style apartment, Washer/Dryer in unit, $1300/month, Downtown Amherst 978-546-5243

Auto for Sale

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Auto Repair

Imported cars a specialty. 20 years experience. Honest Service, straight-forward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

International Sales for consulting/software firm. Multi-Lingual Telephone skills required. Economics a plus. Early AM hours required. Full or part time. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Mad Science Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Rent

Ski House For Rent So. Londonberry, VT: 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30 $1,000/week. Katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jaffy.com or (413)253-0051.

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital-Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa Services *Top Hair Colorist *Full Spectrum Botanical Hair Color *Touch-ups, Party Colors, Hi and Low lites, etc. 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.springbreakvacations.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlife vacations.com

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.sunsplashtours.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED! 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Twin killing

Minnesota takes one-game lead

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Those pesky Minnesota Twins quickly put the big, bad Yankees in another post-season funk.

Torii Hunter circled the bases when his line drive resulted in a pair of misplays and the Twins finally beat New York, defeating the stumbling Yankees 3-1 in Tuesday's AL playoff opener.

Despite their troubles, the Yankees threatened to pull off yet another memorable ninth-inning comeback. But a spectacular catch by Shannon Stewart helped Eddie Guardado escape allowing only one run, and the Twins beat New York for the first time in 14 tries.

Twins starter Johan Santana left after four innings because of a leg cramp, but Rick Reed, J.C. Romero, LaTroy Hawkins and Guardado cobbled together a nine-hitter that gave the AL Central champions a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five series.

"We have to be aggressive," Twins manager Ron Gardenhire said. "We run around the bases hard, try to take extra bases."

Despite all the playoff preparation, he had to scramble after cramped

Continued on page 8

AP PHOTO/KYLE ILAGUSHON

The Minnesota Twins' Cristian Guzman, right, slides into third ahead of the throw to the New York Yankees' Aaron Boone, on a single by Shannon Stewart in the third inning at New York's Yankee Stadium yesterday. The Twins won, 3-1.

Cobbs is suspended for season

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple had planned on R.J. Cobbs making a large contribution for his football team this season as a tailback, wide receiver, kick returner and defensive back.

Instead, the reigning Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year will make no contribution whatsoever, as it was announced Tuesday that the Parsippany Hills, N.J. native will not play for the remainder of the season.

Cobbs, who had missed the Minutemen's first four contests due to what was deemed as "academic discipline," is now academically ineligible, according to Whipple. He will continue to practice with the team, and will have two years of athletic eligibility remaining at University of Massachusetts.

The 5-foot-11, 190-pound sophomore came to Amherst as a defensive back in 2001, and was redshirted before being moved to tailback prior to the 2002 campaign.

The move proved fruitful for Whipple and the Minutemen, as Cobbs broke Marcel Shipp's freshman rushing record in amassing 1,067 yards on 192 carries. He became just the third rusher in A-10 history to break the 1,000-yard mark as a freshman, joining New Hampshire's Jerry Azumah and Connecticut's Tory Taylor. His 15 touchdowns led UMass in scoring, as did his 1,268 all-purpose yards. In his final game of 2003, he put up five scores, tying a conference record.

Whipple had intended to use Cobbs as the Maroon and White's first regular two-way player, at cornerback and as a flanker, since Don Caparotti split time between receiver and defensive back in the early 1990s.

The Minutemen are currently 3-1 (2-0 A-10) on the season, with wins over conference rivals Maine and James Madison, and are ranked ninth in The Sports Network's I-AA poll.

Sophomore Raunny Rosario began the season as Cobbs's replacement in the backfield, but was injured early in the team's season opener and is out indefinitely.

Fellow sophomore Steve Baylark, who is in his first season with the Minutemen, is currently the team's starting tailback, and has rushed for 436 yards on 100 carries with four touchdowns on the season. He was named A-10 Rookie of the Week following a 35 carry, 146-yard performance against James Madison Saturday.

Massachusetts returns to action this Saturday, as they will host New Hampshire at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium for Family Day. Kickoff is slated for 1 p.m.

Matt Brady contributed to this article.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Sophomore R.J. Cobbs

Rod Beck: the mullet man

Matt Stewart

Under Review

Beantown was home to Rod Beck for a little over two short seasons, but when he started to show signs of struggling, the Red Sox organization decided to cut him loose.

Beck was released and found himself playing triple-A ball for the Iowa Cubs, where he was given the chance to refine his pitching skills and shave off his legendary mullet. After this short stint in the minor leagues, Beck has made a phenomenal comeback to the majors for the lowly San Diego Padres. It's been a long journey, but who could forget his days in Boston.

Rod Beck was a classic member of the Red Sox' storied bullpen. Perhaps he didn't put forth an outstanding performance every night for the rotation, but at least you could expect to be entertained.

Beck was the setup man. In the late innings of a ballgame when the starter was showing signs of fatigue, the manager wasted no time waiting to make the call to the pen. Fans glanced out to right field to see Beck making a stride to the mound.

Once on the hill, the game belonged to Beck. He stared down his opponents, chewing on an extremely oversized wad of gum, waving his throwing arm back and forth in the breezy air, waiting for the perfect moment to deliver the pitch. The sweat poured down his face after every batter he faced, adding to his intimidation.

Unfortunately for Red Sox Nation, Beck's magic would soon wear off. Instead of coming off the bench and ensuring victories, he started to blow ballgames by throwing muffins that the hungry batters would devour, rocketing them over the fence. It was a sad sight to see and fans knew in the back of their minds that the end was near for Beck.

Today when Sox fans hear the name Rod Beck, the first thing that pops in their minds is his outlandish appearance instead of his pitching ability. The fans hold no animosity toward Beck, which is quite different in contrast to some of the other characters who have passed through the Boston pitching staff.

2002 wouldn't be the best chapter of Rod Beck's professional baseball career. Due to a deteriorating body, Beck had to take some time off from the game to heal. He sat out the entire 2002 campaign due to reconstructive surgery on his elbow.

The next stop, and first step in making the big comeback to the major leagues, was out in the heartland of America, playing for the Iowa Cubs. Beck as usual made the game entertain-

Continued on page 8

A lyrical tribute to NFL Week 4

Andrew Merritt

Slip sliding away

The Patriots and Redskins locked up in a classic battle of two teams trying desperately to let the other side win, and it came out awful. Especially for New England fans, who had to ride the roller coaster of watching the 'Skins give the game away at every step, and yet come out with the three-point squeaker when the Patriots coaching staff decided to go for an unreasonably long slant pass, when a quick 5-yard dart route from the likes of Larry Centers or even underachieving Daniel Graham would have done the job, putting the Pats in good enough position for Adam Vinatieri to redeem himself for an earlier miss.

That was a rough thing for N.E. fans to take, too, seeing Mr. Automatic miss a field goal that, while not a chip shot for any NFL kicker, is certainly within his range. Doesn't seem like there's much doubt that, had Vinatieri gotten the chance, he would have put the tying field goal into the Potomac, but that's for Belichick and his ilk to lose sleep on all week.

Sure, the Patriots are depleted, and sure, the inconsistent running game was exposed on Sunday, leaving Tom Brady to step up and lead the air attack – something he failed at with untimely incompletions and awful decision-making – but the real onus of the loss falls in the hands of the coaches. The game may have been decided by the three points Vinatieri couldn't come up with earlier in the game, but there was still plenty of time to make it happen in the final moments.

Continued on page 7

Giants sink Fish

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Jason Schmidt aced another test.

Schmidt pitched the San Francisco Giants to their first playoff shutout in 16 years, throwing a three-hitter for a 2-0 victory over the Florida Marlins in Game 1 Tuesday.

Schmidt outdueled Josh Beckett while Barry Bonds and the Giants took advantage of a costly error by Florida fill-in third baseman Miguel Cabrera to score the go-ahead run.

At 68, Felipe Alou wound up a winner while managing his first postseason game and 72-year-old Jack McKeon lost in his playoff debut.

Bonds barely had two feet in the batter's box when catcher Ivan Rodriguez's glove shot out to signal an intentional walk.

Bonds wound up 0-for-1 with three walks. Chad Fox intentionally walked Bonds with nobody on base in the eighth, and he came around to score on Edgardo Alfonzo's double.

On a day the teams combined for only six hits, the Giants scored a run on a misplay.

Cabrera, starting in place of injured All-Star Mike Lowell, charged in on Alfonzo's fourth-inning bunt and made a wild throw to first. By the time the ball had stopped it was in the bullpen dirt and Rich Aurilia was headed for home.

Alou had said the key for Schmidt was to keep his pitch count down _ and that happened. The lanky right-hander with the league's lowest ERA worked ahead in the count and was at 79 pitches through six.

After Alex Gonzalez reached on an error in the fifth, Schmidt retired the final 14 batters. Schmidt walked none and struck out five.

Schmidt pitched the first postseason shutout for the Giants since Dave Dravecky beat St. Louis in Game 2 of the 1987 NL championship series.

Beckett gave up two hits in seven innings, striking out nine and walking five.

Tuesday's Sports Transactions

American League

KANSAS CITY ROYALS – Named Brian Poldberg bullpen coach.

SEATTLE MARINERS – Announced the resignation of Pat Gillick, vice president and general manager, who will remain with the team as a consultant.

National League

COLORADO ROCKIES – Announced RHP Jose Jimenez and LHP Jesus Sanchez both declined their outright assignments to Colorado Springs of the PCL and declared for free agency.

NEW YORK METS – Announced Vern Ruhle, pitching coach, will be reassigned within the organization.

PHILADELPHIA PHILLIES – Named Milt Thompson first base coach and Mick Billmeyer minor league catching coordinator. Announced Tony Scott and Clemente Alvarez, coaches, have been offered positions in the team's minor league system.

National Hockey League

BOSTON BRUINS – Agreed to terms with D Nick Boynton on a two-year contract.

COLUMBUS BLUE JACKETS – Loaned D Alexander Guskov to Yaroslavl of the Russian Elite League.

NEW YORK RANGERS – Claimed D Shawn Heins off waivers from Atlanta and F Jeff Heerema from Carolina.

PITTSBURGH PENGUINS – Assigned F Colby Armstrong, D Patrick Boileau, F Kris Beech, G Andy Chiodo, D David Koci, F Tom Kostopoulos, D Ross Lupaschuk, F Eric Meloche and D Rob Scuderi to Wilkes-Barre/Scranton of the AHL.

ST. LOUIS BLUES – Recalled F Jeff Panzer from Worcester of the AHL.

-Associated Press

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Running the Gauntlet

Wide Receiver Jason Peebler and the Minutemen have won their first two A-10 conference games. The Maroon and White takes on New Hampshire this Saturday at 1 p.m.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 22

Senate to focus on the language requirement

By DAN O'BRIEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Changes to the foreign language requirement and revisions to the hospitality and tourism management major are two of the major issues to be discussed at the next meeting of the University of Massachusetts faculty senate, the legislative body that focuses on a wide range of issues that affect the University's students and faculty.

The proposed change in the foreign language requirement applies to the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics. Currently, the college requires that all students demonstrate foreign language proficiency in one language at the fourth-semester (Intermediate II) level.

The proposed requirement offers students more options to complete the requirement. The proposal states that a student may either demonstrate his or her ability by reaching the fourth-semester level of a language, or by reaching the third-semester (Intermediate I) level in one language and the second-semester (Elementary II) level in a second language.

The reasoning behind the new proposal is that some students face a heavier burden than others in regards to the foreign language requirement. The proposal addresses the fact that it may be difficult for students to complete their foreign language requirement in the time frame that they were allotted.

Another major issue that is expected to come up at the meeting is a revision to the Hospitality and Tourism Management major. There is a proposed restructuring in terms of the concentrations within the major.

The Senate met for the first time this semester on Sept. 18 to discuss the University's budget shortfall issue.

Massachusetts Society of Professors President Jenny Spencer brought up the budget issue at the beginning of that meeting. She inquired as to what was being done at a state level to solve the problem of the faculty contracts that have not been funded by the Commonwealth in about a year and a half.

State senator Stanley Rosenberg fielded the question, explaining that the word from the state's House Ways and Means Committee has not been positive.

Continued on page 3

Townehouses face legal issues

By BARBARA LOTTO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A recent complaint about increased parking permit fees at the Townehouse of Amherst apartments has led to the discovery of multiple instances of possible breach of contract on behalf of Townehouse management.

Townehouse tenants may be entitled to one-third of the money they paid toward each parking permit this year. While most tenants received a notice regarding increased parking permit fees and are subsequently paying $150 for each one, they are only obligated to pay $100 according to their lease.

Lyndsey Fluxgold, a senior journalism and legal studies double major, informed The Massachusetts Daily Collegian of the situation last week. Fluxgold discovered that her lease, which had already been signed by all required parties, was written on in pen, signifying an agreed change in the cost of parking permits.

The problem was that the inflated cost was not agreed upon, Fluxgold explained.

"A week after we moved in, they put flyers under everyone's door saying that if you haven't registered your cars you have to register them," she said. "If you have more than two cars you have to pay $150 per vehicle for the year."

Fluxgold was unsure about the amount, so she and her roommates decided verify the information on their lease. That is when it became clear that they signed the lease with a clause in the agreement to pay only $100 for each additional permit.

One of the roommates, Jennifer Clark, a junior psychology major, went to the office to discuss the discrepancy. There, Judi Johnson, the agent for the Townehouses, pulled out the original copy of their lease from on top of a shelf. "[Johnson] was like, 'No, your lease says $150.' So I told her I wanted to see it, written in ballpoint pen over the typed text was the number "5," Clark said. "I told her that she obviously changed the lease and she denied it. She proceeded to pull out other people's leases to see if they had been changed, and she started changing them right in front of my face."

Clark went on to say that she recognized that Johnson's actions were illegal.

"I told her, 'You can't do that. You're changing a signed contract right in front of my face. You realize what you're doing is 100 percent illegal.'"

Johnson defended her actions by saying that she knew those tenants only had one car each, Clark said. Johnson then said they made a mistake when they wrote up the contracts for this year, and that the cost of the permits should have been printed as $150 rather than $100.

"I said to her, 'So because you made the mistake we need to pay for it?'" Clark explained. "We're not paying the extra amount."

According to Courtney Fredericks, a junior psychology major and the third tenant on the lease, when she brought in the photocopy of the document to prove the pricing discrepancy to Johnson, she was told: "OK, I guess I'll let you get away with it."

Fluxgold and her roommates said the Townehouse management is also trying to increase their rent. As a result, they are requesting them to pay more on their security deposit — a payment that has already been made in full.

According to their lease, however, their rent may not be changed under any circumstances until the contract term is over — in their case, in August of 2004.

"Courtney and I paid out the deposit before they raised our rent, so we have papers signed by us and our parents based on the original price," Fluxgold said. "And now they say that we owe them money because the rent went up."

Fluxgold and her roommates have had several other problems with Townehouse management since signing the lease to live there. They have argued over filthy carpets on their floors, missing blinds and drapes from their windows, cracked and broken countertops in their kitchen and disconnected phone lines.

The neighbors in the adjacent apartment said they were not required to pay the increased amount to purchase two additional parking permits. They said because they lived there last year, Johnson did not make them pay more; they were "grandfathered in," in a sense.

Emilia Clancy, a junior biology major, and her roommates did not receive a flyer under their door notifying them of any changes in parking permit prices; but they did get the copy of their lease with the altered numbers.

"We got the yellow copy that had $100 typed in with a '5' marked over it," Clancy said. "There was no notice about it or anything."

Thinking it was unusual, she showed Wanda

Continued on page 3

EMILIA CLANCY/COLLEGIAN

The Townehouse Apartments in Amherst face potential lawsuits from current residents due to an alleged price change to the 2003-2004 lease.

Members of the SGA Senate walk out of first meeting in protest

EMILIE H. GLASSER/COLLEGIAN

"If we aren't taking into account the public opinion, then we aren't doing our jobs," said SGA President David Carr of the response to the SGA's elimination of the appointed ALANA caucus seats.

By ED HUDSON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Amid a police presence and flared tempers, the first Student Senate meeting of the year survived a mass walkout and many strays from parliamentary procedure. The meeting, which featured among other things, a plea in the form of a rap song by one Senate hopeful who was bidding to avoid elimination by way of a tie-breaking vote, also featured a strong presence by members of the ALANA caucus and a motion to impeach Senate Speaker Jared Nokes.

Called to order by Senate President David Carr at about 7:30 p.m. in room 168C of the Campus Center, the meeting lasted nearly three hours. New members of the Senate were sworn into office by oath, and two attendees involved in tie-breaking motions lost their bid to be Senators.

Speaking to the new members, Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi said, "You've been elected, and you have the power to make change on this campus."

"If we aren't taking into account the public opinion, then we aren't doing our jobs," said President David Carr. Carr said he is supporting ALANA appointed seats, although he does not necessarily personally agree with them. "I cannot and will not ignore the student voice. I will do everything in my power to make sure students get what they want. It's my job to do what they want."

The motion by ALANA representative Gladys Franco to impeach Senate Speaker Jared Nokes occurred about halfway through the meeting. "If [Nokes] is not doing his job, he shouldn't be the Speaker," Franco pleaded. "I hope you support me in asking him to resign."

When the motion failed, it led to a massive walkout by members of the Senate and other attendees, many of whom had ties to the ALANA cause. Nokes will be meeting with each of the 66 members for up to 15 minutes during the next week to discuss Senate committee appointments.

"We shouldn't be closing doors to anyone," Franco said, regarding the decision by Nokes to not recognize appointed seats for the ALANA caucus. According to Franco, certain members of the University's Republican Club within the Senate were most responsible for this ruling. "We were denied this right," Franco said. "That is basically an attack on the ALANA community."

Franco believes it is an attack not only on the ALANA community, but the campus as a whole. In defense of Nokes, Chair of University Policy Olaf Aprans said, "[Nokes] can't recognize appointed seats by his own will."

According to Aprans, the coordinating council mandated Nokes' motions. "It's in the will of the Senate," he said. "The Senate left us no will, no decision."

"We're trying to do the best with what the Senate left us," Aprans added, pointing out that the ALANA caucus won 25 percent of the Senate. "I believe I acted properly when I said I would not recognize appointed seats. Often times, we see members of the [U.S.] legislature acting in a way that citizens might not agree with, and that appears to be what happened here last year."

"The sentiment was that this was not in the constitution for a reason," Nokes added. Nokes said he believes that a portion of the Senate was uninformed as to the magnitude in which

Continued on page 2

Career fair offers up host of opportunities

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Campus Center Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts Amherst bustled with activity yesterday, as students and employers participated in the Career Services Office's annual Engineering Career Fair.

Over 40 employers spoke to and collected resumes from hopeful engineering students looking for internships, summer co-ops and full time jobs. The most well known companies participating in the fair included General Electric, Raytheon, Texas Instruments, Inc. and Microsoft. Other employers such as the U.S. Department of Energy, the United Postal Services and the U.S. Coast Guard were also kept busy recruiting.

"We have three more employers than last year, which is good given the economy," said Tina Acker, the associate director and Career Fair coordinator. "The most popular employers are well-known names like General Electric, names that we see everyday on the products we use, but the companies that have received the most attention have been the ones that have a lot of internships and full time jobs available."

Acker also said that she was pleased with the student turnout.

"We've had a large number of students come in early, which is good," she said in the beginning of the day. "We changed the day this year; last year, it was on Tuesday. [On] Wednesdays, there are more frequent class changes, so we thought it would be better."

Employers were also pleased with the number of students participating.

"It's going excellent, we've got a lot of different folks coming up to talk to us," said Kevin Binette, a staffing consultant from the company

Raytheon. "We've gotten a good balance of people looking for summer internships and people who will be graduating in May."

Raytheon Company, a global leader in defense electronics and complex integrated information systems, has attended the Career Fair every year.

"Today we've talked to a lot of people who are interested, knowledgeable about the company and know what type of work they would be expected to do," said Binette. "We consistently see qualified candidates; UMass is among our top three schools for recruits."

Other employers agreed that the fair was a great opportunity to find qualified students.

"We are having a great time. We've had a lot of talented people coming to talk to us," said Al Arcese, a UMass alumnus and a civil engineer for the Federal Aviation Administration. "It's encouraging to see sophomores; we want to get them thinking about us early on."

Arcese was not the only UMass alumnus recruiting employees; he was joined by several, most of whom found employment through past Career Fairs.

"I feel bad; they all look so nervous," said Allen Mackey, a recent graduate. "It's a tough time for finding employment. I've seen people here who didn't graduate with me trying to find a job."

Mackey was an intern for two years at the Volpe Center, an innovative, federal, fee-for-service organization within the U.S. Department of Transportation. He is now an electrical engineer for the airport service division.

"I get to travel to different parts of the United States," said Mackey. "Next month I'm going to San Diego to do some testing."

Although many students were forced to wait in lines to speak to employers, most found the experience a valuable one.

"I'm here to look for a summer co-op," said Rami Harawi, a senior mechanical engineering major. "I've looked at Texas Instruments [TI], Saint-Gobain High Performance Materials and Skanska. TI was very interesting."

He explained that most recruiters were helpful and inviting.

"They were all very friendly, they seem interested because they know they are doors to our careers," he said.

Some students found the fair to be overwhelming and frustrating.

"I think I came way too underdressed," said Christopher Coletto, a mechanical engineering major. "I came because I feel like I need to be here; I don't really want a job."

Mike Ditton, a senior chemical engineering major, said he thought the process of handing in resumes and talking with employers was useless.

"You're only one in a million. The only way you'll get a job is if you have a connection," Ditton, who visited the General Electric and Department of Energy stations, said. "They were all very friendly, but it's all fake."

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
THE REAL WORLD
WHAT WOULD IT BE LIKE TO MAKE IT?
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
MARCH ON
UMASS MARCHING BAND ENDURING BUSY FALL
SPORTS PAGE 10
CAT FIGHT
UM TO HOST NEW HAMPSHIRE
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

Both full-time employment opportunities and summer internships were available to interested students at this year's career fair for engineering students.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Robert Krzykowski
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Courtney Charles
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Jessica Pelletier
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant News Ferron Salzliker
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Specialty in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1958 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sister of slain former priest requests fair inquiry

Geoghan urges unbiased look into death of convicted child molester

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The sister of slain former priest John Geoghan said she feared that an "honest inquiry" into her brother's prison death would be undermined because of punishment and intimidation of inmates interviewed about the case.

Catherine Geoghan released her first public statement yesterday since her brother, a convicted child molester and a central figure in Boston archdiocese's clergy abuse scandal, was killed in his prison cell in August. A fellow inmate has been charged with his murder.

"I break my silence today to express my concern that the process not be impeded or undermined through the intimidation of the prisoners and staff whose observations are critical to an honest inquiry," Catherine Geoghan said in the statement. Leslie Walker, executive director of the prisoner rights advocacy group Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services, read the statement aloud.

Walker said yesterday that guards have threatened inmates interviewed about the slaying, charged them with prison rule infractions, put them in solitary confinement, and "locked down" Geoghan's former ward, allowing inmates out of cells for only a few minutes each day.

Catherine Geoghan, a staunch defender of her brother, reported in her statement that while she was visiting him, a guard assaulted John Geoghan. After she complained, Catherine Geoghan wrote, her brother was accused of attacking the guard.

"John always conducted himself respectfully and as a gentleman and received fair treatment from many prisoners and guards. Other guards abused him terribly and with seeming impunity," Catherine Geoghan wrote.

Justin Latini, a spokesman for the Department of Correction, declined to comment. Public Safety Secretary Edward Flynn, who has appointed a panel to investigate Geoghan's death, asked that investigators "be given the courtesy of completing the investigation they have been working on."

"It is my hope that anyone who has information relative to this matter speak openly and honestly with members of the investigative team. If anyone believes that they are being prevented from speaking, then I would encourage their attorneys to contact my office directly," Flynn said in a statement.

The panel has come under criticism from prisoner's rights groups including Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services, state lawmakers, and the prison guard's union. Flynn and Gov. Mitt Romney have defended its impartiality and promised an aggressive investigation.

The Massachusetts Correction Officers Federated Union, which represents prison guards, released a statement Wednesday saying the union supports "any inquiry or investigation undertaken by the state."

"Until a thorough investigation is complete, it would be irresponsible for us to address accusations made by prison inmates or their family members," the union statement read.

John Geoghan was serving a nine- to 10-year prison term for groping a 10-year-old boy, but he was accused of molesting nearly 150 boys over three decades as a Boston-area priest.

The revelation that the church knew of the alleged abuse and nonetheless moved Geoghan between parishes triggered the clergy abuse scandal in the Boston archdiocese in January 2002.

On Aug. 23, fellow inmate Joseph L. Druce, 37, allegedly beat and strangled the 68-year-old Geoghan in his prison cell at Souza-Baranowski Correctional Center in Shirley, where Geoghan was transferred because of what prison officials described in part as discipline problems. Druce has pleaded innocent to murder.

After Geoghan's death, Flynn appointed the three-person panel comprised of State Police Maj. Mark Delaney, Department of Correction investigator Mark Reilly, and prison expert George Camp to investigate the slaying. The investigation is pending.

Walker said she feared a "whitewash" by the state panel, and urged the creation of a separate panel to look into the state's prison system as a whole.

"The only thing that separates John Geoghan from countless other prisoners is that he died. Many prisoners experience the same abuse and mistreatment ... It is imperative that numerous critical, systemic issues be reviewed in depth by a blue ribbon commission," she said.

OLIVIA NOBLE | ASSOCIATED PRESS

Attorney Leslie Walker, right, the executive director of the Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services answers questions from reporters yesterday in Boston. Walker read a statement from Catherine Geoghan regarding the treatment of her brother, the murdered John Geoghan, and other prisoners at Massachusetts Correctional facilities.

For the Record

Correction: Due to an editing error, there was a misattributed quote in yesterday's story on the Presidential Search Committee's open forum, held Tuesday. Dennis Austin, co-chair of the search committee and director of state government relations with Raytheon, said at the meeting, "I think the entire Board [of Trustees] would agree [that the move] would be over my dead body." University of Massachusetts graduate student Ed Cutting was mistakenly credited as making this statement.

Motion to impeach Senate Speaker Nokes fails

Continued from page 1

the amendment to not recognize appointed seats affected the Senate. However he does believe it to be understood by those who voted for it.

"The Senate last year chose not to recognize them," Attorney General Mark Morrison said regarding appointed seats. "You guys can change that." However, he added, the people voted, and for now it's a standing rule. "[Nokes] had to listen to the Senate last year."

But when asked whether or not he felt Nokes had engaged in any actions that he considered impeachable, Morrison said, "Yeah, I'm sure he's done stuff. I'm looking into it. If any Senator is breaking the rules, I'm looking into it."

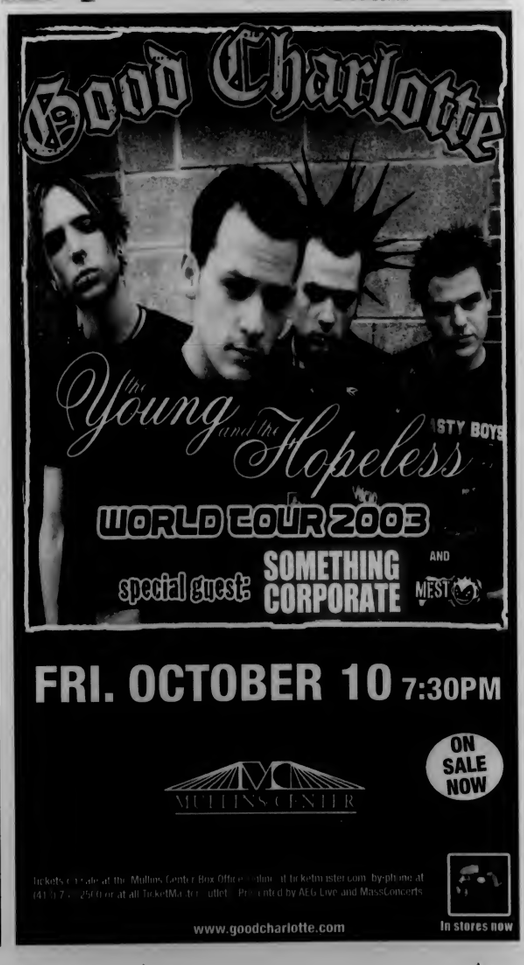
Though, according to Morrison, most everyone serving on the Senate breaks some rule everyday. Morrison noted that to his knowledge, "no one is attacking the [ALANA] caucus for what they stand for; they are attacking it because they [the seats] are appointed."

Collegian news

Interested in an Internship for Spring Semester?

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Monday, Oct. 6
3:00 pm



Thursday, Oct. 9
3:00 pm

Tuesday, Oct. 14
10:30 am

All Welcome Sessions take place in 104 Career Services Bldg. (across from the Newman Center)

For more information about Internships and Co-ops, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-6265

CareerServices

Legal issues plague apartment complex

Continued from page 1

Benoit, an employee in the main office, the copy of the lease. She has still not heard back from anyone about the issue.

When Bruce Cote, a junior mechanical engineering major, and his roommates received the carbon copy of their signed lease in June, they immediately noticed that the numbers were written over in ink, but they decided not to question it.

"UMass students get hosed for all the money we're worth," Cote said. "We're used to prices going up every year for everything. It's the UMass trend."

They own four cars, which means they had to purchase two additional parking permits this year. Cote and his roommates decided to split the total cost. Rather than having two people pay the $300 charge, they each paid $75 to split it evenly.

However, according to their original contract that they signed, they were only obligated to pay a total of $200.

Jon Contrada, a senior legal studies major and one of Cote's roommates, was concerned that the extra money paid for the parking permits would not be applied to improving the Townehouse property. He explained that large potholes were a potential hazard to his vehicle, which he drives to and from his apartment everyday.

As for other problems they have had with Townehouse management, Cote explained that there have been issues concerning the higher prices on rent.

"We've gone down there [to the office] before and I've had different prices quoted to me," Cote said.

Cote explained that while he felt that the tenants was being taken advantage of, that it would likely not make an impact unless several students spoke up.

"It's one of those things that if everyone did it, it's great," he said.

Attorney Charles DiMare, director of Student Legal Services, said the lessor is "committing breach of contract by enforcing the changes" that were made to the leases — the lessor is illegitimately charging $150 for additional parking permits when the agreement with the tenants was to charge $100 each.

"It is unenforceable as a matter of law," DiMare said. "It is an unfair or deceptive act and practice in violation of Mass. General Law, Chapter 93A, the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act."

The Consumer Protection Act prohibits deceptive and unfair acts such as this to be performed by landlords.

DiMare recommends that tenants who have had their contracts unlawfully altered should seek legal advice. They will be advised to send a letter to the agent of the condominiums (in this case, Johnson) or some other member of management. The letter should explain that the tenants have seen a lawyer and would like their overpayment returned by some specified date (usually between a week and month from the date of the letter). It should also state that if the money is not returned within the specified time frame, appropriate legal action will be taken.

From there, lawyers will threaten litigation, or sue if necessary. Possible consequences in this case include the Townehouses owing triple damages and attorney's fees, DiMare said.

Several attempts were made by The Collegian to contact Johnson and the owner of the Townehouse apartments, S. Starr, neither of whom were available for comment, according to Benoit. Benoit said she was not authorized to speak to the press.

To speak with a member of Student Legal Services, call 413-545-1995 or visit the office in Campus Center room 922. The student-funded law office provides legal assistance to fee-paying UMass students.

Language requirement

Continued from page 1

"They are sick and tired of me talking about it," Rosenberg explained. "I bring it up at least every other time and the last couple of times I brought it up, some people started pushing back and saying, 'Hey, don't those people still have a job? You know, my people are losing their jobs. I have x-people laid off.'"

Another issue that was discussed at the Sept. 18 meeting was the Student Government Association elections, which took place last week. Brian Long, SGA secretary, spoke for the Association saying that this year's senate will focus on, among other issues, organizing activities on Friday and Saturday nights in an attempt to keep more students on campus during the weekends. Long said this is an attempt to curb large parties such as last year's "Hobart Ho-Down."

ASIAN ARTS & CULTURE PROGRAM
In Collaboration with the Department of Theater and the Arab Student Club
MIDDLE EAST FESTIVAL

HAFLI: DANCES FROM THE GULF REGION
FRIDAY OCTOBER 3
Bowker Auditorium
5:30–7PM
"Women only" dance workshop

chocolate IN HEAT
CONVERSATIONS WITH PLAYWRIGHT BETTY SHAMIEH
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8
Thompson 104, UMass
3:30PM
TV Studio, Smith College
7:30PM
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9
Rooke Theater
Mount Holyoke 9:00AM
FREE

CHOCOLATE IN HEAT
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9
Bowker Auditorium, 8PM
A provocative play by Betty Shamieh on growing up Arab in America

DAANAH
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3
Bowker Auditorium, 8PM
All Women Middle East ensemble playing the sounds of traditional and popular melodies

IN STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
Middle Eastern food will be on sale at 6:30. An Arab fashion show and dance begins at 9:30.

FUNDED BY SAFC
FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
FOR TICKETS CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999 UMAS
FOR INFORMATION CALL 577-2486 OR GO ONLINE AT WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM/ASIAN

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS
Present
FREE HELICOPTER RIDES
Thursday, October 2, 2003 11:00 am - 3:00 pm Fields Behind Mullins Center, UMass
Parking available by permit or meter only
Open to al students and faculty interested in learning more about what the Marine Corps Officer Programs have to offer!
Marines: Superior Thinking Has Always Overwhelmed Superior Force

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Liquor:	Wine:
Long Trail 24 btl case...$19.99*	Chivas Regal 750 ml...$24.99	Talus Chard., Cab., Merlot, Pinot Grigio 1.5 lt...$10.99
Miller Lite 24 pk cans...$15.99*	Bushmills 1 liter...$22.99	Jacobs Creek Reserve Chard., Cab., Shiraz 750 ml...$9.99
Icehouse 30 pk cans...$12.99*	Wild Turkey 1 liter...$21.99	Casa Lapostolle Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Coors Light 20 pk btls...12.99*	Captain Morgan 1 liter...$15.99	Beaulieu Vineyards Costal Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Seagram's Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$14.99	Carlo Rossi All Flavors 4.0 lt...$7.99
Heineken 12 pk btl...$9.99*	Rubinoff Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99	Nathanson Creek Chard., Cab., Merlot 750 ml...$3.99
Corona 12 pk btl $9.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

SALE 10/02 THROUGH 10/08
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm

Are you interested in a career in International Affairs?

Learn more about International Affairs Graduate Programs

Thursday, October 9, 2003
5:00-7:00pm
Radisson Hotel Convention Hall "A and B"
200 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
617-482-1800

PRE-REGISTRATION FOR THIS EVENT IS NOT REQUIRED

- Discuss admissions requirements, curriculum, joint degree program options, and careers opportunities.
- Collect application information on a range of graduate programs.
- Meet admissions representatives from the following universities:

American University
University of California, San Diego
Columbia University
University of Denver
Duke University
Georgetown University
The George Washington University
Harvard University
The Johns Hopkins University
University of Maryland
University of Michigan
University of Minnesota
University of Pittsburgh
Princeton University
Syracuse University
Tufts University
University of Washington
Yale University

Sponsored by the Association of Professional Schools of International Affairs
For additional information, please contact APSIA at:
info@apsia.org, 301.405.7553, www.apsia.org

APSIA

A calling plan that will make your day!

Unlimited
Night & Weekend
Airtime Minutes when on the America's Choice Network
Plus
1000 Anytime Mobile To Mobile
Minutes to call any of our 12.5 million customers on our nationwide mobile to mobile network

Fall into Savings!
Get up to 4 FREE Motorola V120E Phones!
Ask about the $ simply SmartPlan
New 2 year annual agreement required. While supplies last. Limited time offer.

America's Choice
400 anytime minutes FOR $39.99 monthly access Web 1 or 2 year agreement
Unlimited nationwide long distance. No roaming charges coast-to-coast.
All when calling on the America's Choice™ network
The America's Choice network covers more than 265 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas. Calls placed outside the calling plan area are 69¢/min. Mobile to Mobile not available throughout the America's Choice Network.

@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
HADLEY
322 Russell St • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500
Stop in and ask how you can keep your same phone number and switch wireless carriers. Coming this fall!

verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer

Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri. 9:01pm-5:59am, Sat. 12am-Sun. 11:59pm. Taxes & surcharges apply & may vary. Federal Universal Service Charge of 9.06% (varies quarterly based on FCC rate) and a $6 Regulatory Charge per line/month are our charges, not taxes.
Important Consumer Information: Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused plan minutes lost. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See brochure and sales representative for details. ©2003 Verizon Wireless.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

More active role needed in president's search

The search for a new president at the University of Massachusetts is starting to pick up speed, and students had a golden opportunity Tuesday afternoon to weigh in on whom the next leader of the University system will be.

Nearly no one took it.

The empty turnout could be blamed on numerous things. Having an open forum at 3 p.m. made little sense to many students, considering that is during the middle of many students' busy class schedules. Staff members at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian heard many complaints that the forum was too early for them to attend — that if it had been at 7 or 8 p.m., they would have taken an interest.

That point is debatable. One of the biggest complaints against UMass students for years has been their general apathy toward many issues, especially politics. Tuesday bears that out. Students had a chance to meet with Chancellor John V. Lombardi and many of the high-profile executives from the business world that are on the search committee, including John Armstrong, a retired vice president at IBM, and Dennis Austin, the director of state government relations with Raytheon.

Lombardi admitted that when working out the details of the forum, the group planning it chose the Student Union Ballroom for fear that turnout would be too great to fit into a smaller venue. So what did the forum end up with? Less than 40 people, and that's including members of the Student Government Association, the Amherst Chamber of Commerce and other various members of faculty and staff. That leaves little more than a handful of students who took the time out from their schedules to voice concerns on who next president of the University will be — a man more powerful than any other in the University system.

"We've got to do a much, much better job of publicity, not only to our students, but to our alumni, to the legislature and to the citizens of Massachusetts," Austin said during the forum. "We haven't done that the last couple of years. We get too much into showmanship that Bill Cosby came here or Jack Welch came here."

It's a valid point. Nevertheless, the forum had a different sense to it. Lombardi's office made several efforts to make sure that students knew about the forum, including sending out a bulk e-mail to all students and taking the steps to contact The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and SGA President David Carr. Every effort was made for the forum to have been a comfortable student-friendly atmosphere.

So why didn't anyone go?

In the last year, UMass has seen over $20 million in budget cuts, dozens of layoffs and several public embarrassments, including the legal troubles of our own retired president, William M. Bulger. Even Lombardi said that, financially, at least, we are nearing our breaking point.

The Collegian encourages students to take a more active role in the search for our new president and in politics in general. The selection of a leader is no easy task, and doing it with a student voice that is near silent only makes it more difficult. The student body will have no place criticizing the next president if they take no active role in selecting one now. The option is there. It needs to be utilized.

Shouldn't now be the time to pay attention?

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Rejuvenating political interest

Michael Lenz

With the democratic nomination less than one year away, five of the nine candidates vying for the coveted position have emerged as plausible contenders. However, one candidate in particular, the insurgent former governor of Vermont, Howard Dean, appears to have a distinct advantage in fundraising. But the latest polls suggest that the socially-minded liberal has also drawn an adoring following from the men and women of Generation Y.

What has Dean done differently than his fellow rivals, Joseph Lieberman (D-Conn.), Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.), John Kerry (D-Mass.), and John Edwards (D-N.C.)? Simple. The former governor has utilized the Internet better than any of his counterparts. In struggling through a lackluster first quarter, where he only pulled in $ 2.7 million, Joe Trippi, Dean's campaign manager, arrived at a creative, yet basic solution: Why not encourage voters to visit Dean's Web site: www.deanforamerica.com?

By dropping e-mail messages into potential voters' inboxes, proclaiming, "Every little bit counts," Dean raised a staggering $7.4 million for the second quarter, topping even Kerry, who was thought to be the early favorite.

So what does this all mean? In the last 30 years, or maybe longer, political races have been dominated by corporate donations, and "big money" spending. However, with the recent success, Dean has enjoyed from mostly $10 to $20 contributions, Americans — especially those between the ages of 18 and 29 — are re-engaged in the democratic process. After all, our founding fathers envisioned a system that allowed its citizens to participate directly in the elections of its leaders.

In a recent poll, conducted by www.gallup.com, it was determined that 92 percent of men and women between the ages of 18 and 25 have access to the Internet. This data raises the following questions: Has the Internet emerged as a new forum for political engagement; and more specifically, can the Internet actually rejuvenate the minds and passion of an otherwise apathetic Generation Y?

Can the Internet actually rejuvenate the minds and passion of an otherwise apathetic Generation Y?

In the 2000 presidential election between then Vice President Al Gore and George W. Bush, only a fraction of Americans actually voted. The figure among young adults (18-25) was even lower. However, thanks to the excitement generated by the Internet, apathy may soon be a distant memory.

Web sites like deanforamerica.com both informs Americans about critical issues such as the disaster in the Middle East, economic policies and defending civil liberties, and also encourages young Americans to get involved. One common Dean slogan found on his website that has "fired up" the constituency is, "Together we can take back our country."

Another positive aspect about the emergence of the Internet in the democratic process has been the substitution of grassroot campaigns in place of the ever popular corporate spending that has derailed politics. For example, while our own president plans to buy the next election (he may raise $200 million by late 2004 by taking money from his oil-rich, corporate allies), candidates like Dean are pursuing the White House with integrity. The president may be raising millions of campaign dollars by the week. However, in doing so, he is alienating the average voter who has lost hope that their vote no longer matters.

Thanks in large part to the Internet, candidates like Dean are drawing the support of lower and middle class Americans (the other 99 percent of the population). One can imagine if each and every American felt included, then our national voting turnouts would be reminiscent of the '60s and '70s.

To those in despair, do not lose hope. You are just one click away from directly impacting a pivotal election that could potentially decide the fate of our nation.

Michael W. Lenz is a Collegian columnist.

The failure of UMass Food Services

Gilad Skolnik

Most students who haven't been "convinced" that an unlimited meal plan is best for them will agree that they usually have anywhere from 20 to 80 (or more) meals left over each semester. These meals don't get rolled over to the next semester, nor does one get a refund — even a partial refund. With each meal coming out to be between $5 and $6.50, 40 meals left over by the end of the semester is over $200 down the drain.

One could argue you can't get your money back because Food Services has already spent that money on food for you, but then why can't one purchase less than 163 meals a semester? If someone goes home on Fridays, that's an extra two meals a week they don't use — $10 lost every week. You'd have to be pretty intoxicated to flush a $10 check down the toilet every seven days.

What if someone is sick for a week or two and doesn't eat a lot, or has to go home for a week for a wedding? Making students pay for meals that they don't intend to use is not only not very nice, but being forced to pay money for goods and services that you do not want and have no intention of using isn't that far a step from stealing from you.

At least the thousands upon thousands of dollars spent putting up unneeded ads about the YCMP meal plan on the PVTA and other various areas isn't a waste. That's about the only way that Food Services could convince you to get their YCMP plan, where you are allotted about $6.50 per meal yet can only buy $5.75 worth of food in the Bluewall. If these meal plans were a truly good deal, then Food Services wouldn't need to blow all that money on advertisements. They are a monopoly on campus; if it's good food, people will come.

Even worse, Food Services has prevented Jewish students who wish to keep to a strict kosher diet from doing so. Numerous Jewish students who have appealed to Food Services to be able to observe their religion and eat at Hillel's kosher kitchen have been denied. As if this wasn't enough, they were charged without their consent several hundred dollars to be put on Food Services' "kosher" meal plan, which as a UMass Jewish chaplains stated, does not strictly keep kosher.

Freshmen and sophomores are forced to spend over $1,000 eating in UMass' greasy saturated fat-ridden cafeterias whether they want to or not.

Moreover, Food Services fails to provide the nutritional information for the food near the location where they serve their food. Instead, they put it in a clumsy book in the inconvenient area outside the seating area, making hungry students walk in to see what is being served and then walk back out to look in the book in order to see the nutritional information.

Freshmen and sophomores are forced to spend over $1,000 eating in UMass' greasy saturated fat-ridden cafeterias whether they want to or not. Students already distraught from not being able to use up their meals try to get their money's worth by eating a lot. Additionally, pounds upon pounds of unused food get thrown out as students pile as much food in their plate as they can fit.

UMass Food Services has failed in its mission to serve students and has succeeded in wasting their hard-earned money. Even McDonalds posts its nutritional information near where the food is ordered, and it doesn't make you buy 163 meals at a time.

UMass Food Services needs to apologize to students who are forced to pay for more meals than they can use, to students who wish to keep kosher and to all other students who have been victims of UMass Food Services incompetence. They should reform their ways, but before that, Food Services needs to either change the wording of their goal or start aiming to achieve it. On their Web site it states, "Our goal is to provide you with the best dining experience on campus." Either those who manage food services are lying to us, or are, to put it nicely, truly unskilled at what they do.

Gilad Skolnik is a Collegian columnist.

'Real World,' here I come

Stephanie O'Shea

MTV held an open casting call in the Campus Center basement for "The Real World" and "Road Rules" last week, and I was fourth in line with giddy excitement at the thought of all expenses paid debauchery. I am no bowser, but my choice between hitting the gym and stretching out on the futon usually ends up with a "Growing Pains" re-run and me thinking it is hilarious that Mike Seaver's best friend is named Boner.

To ensure myself a fraction of a chance at being noticed, despite my realistic looks, I therefore had to shift focus from my body and promote myself with the aspects of my personality that most other girls do not exude.

Samuel L. Jackson defines "cool" in a way only he and I can — or at least that was the scheme I was going for when I stapled a photo of myself "telling dirty jokes" into the ear of his wax replica to my application. If you see me on digital cable surrounded by Ikea furniture, it will most likely be as the just-one-of-the-guys type of girl with a dulled sense of what it means to be a lady despite her cranberry crème nails and refrigerator full of diet soda.

If you see me on digital cable surrounded by Ikea furniture, it will most likely be as the just-one-of-the-guys type of girl with a dulled down sense of what it means to be a lady.

Attention is the Luigi to my Mario, and my favorite way to get it is when people dignify my off-kilter sense of humor with a response. If my life was put between commercials, the promos would show me in public licking my two index fingers and making a sizzle noise as I touched my nipples, a move that has somehow evolved from a victory dance to a shamefully all too familiar sensory-motor skill. Much of the show's filler would be close-ups of my instant messages edited to make it look like all I ever talk about online falls under one of the three general categories of sexual behavior, food that tastes good, and how I desperately want to be the female Conan O'Brien. Song and dance would also get significant air time.

The substantive part of the half hour, however, would be the underlying social dynamic concerning my recent realization that, as a general rule, nobody lusts after female comedians. My eyes would be shown rolling out of their sockets each time my best guy friends discussed with me such subjects as how they develop crushes on girls after seeing their underwear. "Stephanie Says" by the Velvet Underground would fade in as I sullenly sipped my beer and ran my fingers through my hair in slow motion, bothered that because I am privy to locker room talk, I will never be the subject of it.

Straight-to-DVD footage would involve me trying to act like a business diva, which ironically would work against the show's initial vie for commercial success. I can imagine myself screeching at producers that product placement does not come for free as they tried to unload 20 cases of Sprite Remix inside of my kitchen. I would then put my hand over the microphone and inform them that I will be their puppet on strings if it involves free burritos or anything branded American Eagle Outfitters.

Director commentary would point out how I purposefully placed graphing calculators and copies of The Wall Street Journal around my apartment in an effort to send subtle messages to the youth of America that there is no shame in turning down the television and dorking it up a little.

As you read this, my Real World/Road Rules application is probably on the bottom of a huge reject pile in gross violation of Los Angeles County fire code, and Samuel L. Jackson has a Starbucks order for three mocha lattes scribbled across his designer suit. I have most likely been passed over in favor of girls who never eat carbs, who cannot exist without drama, or who were savvy enough to maintain that the kiss between Madonna and Britney Spears gave them ideas. I have accepted the reality that if I want my life exposed to the public it has to be done the old fashion way with Microsoft Word and an adequate supply of Ellio's Pizza.

Just promise me that if I do get picked, you will buy me a drink and beg me to do my nipple thing when I get back to Amherst.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian columnist.

Actions speak.

Words are louder.

Write for Ed/Op.

Be heard.

Philosophical thoughts from Down Under

World Perspectives

Adrienne Bossi

My aunt thinks I am "going to be a new person in December" when I come home. I believed her at first. Now, I am not so sure.

I have been in Australia for about two and a half months. I expected to come here and find a great adventure with someone or something new and exciting around the corner. I'm still the same old me, just in a new atmosphere whose newness alone doesn't seem so foreign anymore.

I want to enjoy every day and make the most out of every second I am here. After all, this is a very unique experience. But I'm finding that to be a cliché impossibility to actually live by. I have classes to attend, homework to hand in and tests to study for.

Maybe I expected too much. There is only a small time frame before the novelty and newness of a situation wears off. When I first got here, I was overwhelmed with trying to meet everyone, absorb the atmosphere and acclimate myself to the accents. Two months later, I am still noticing the differences instead of acknowledging the beauty of each moment that passes during my limited time here.

Life gets in the way of enjoying every passing moment. Daily annoyances are sometimes unavoidable: People disappoint us, situations aggravate us, and before you know it you're flipping the calendar forward. There are only specific moments that grip you. You can't have every second at its best.

There are only specific moments that grip you. You can't have every second at its best.

Every now and then, I get hit with the realization of, "Oh my god, I am in Australia right now!" I'll roll over on the beach and realize that it's really amazing that I'm on a tropical beach on the Great Barrier Reef in northern Australia in October! But then life happens again.

It is the same with any big life event. Going away to college was a huge change from living at home and going to a high school incomparable in size to UMass. Before college, teachers knew your name and you recognized every face in the halls. But it grows on you. You forget that your time is limited, and you're supposed to be living your youth to the fullest, acting out scenes from "Animal House" and "PCU."

But, as the story goes, time passes and then you realize you've taken this amazing experience for granted. You have not enjoyed every infinitesimal moment. You haven't lived by the revered and highly preached cliché. We are led to believe that we will have regrets if we don't wring dry every moment of all of its goodness. But does that mean you haven't enjoyed it?

After all, if life were just one magical moment after another it would seem pretty mundane. It is the humdrum drone of daily life and the occasional bad times that allow those special moments to shine through so brightly.

Therefore, I think the cliché is misleading. I don't like thinking I am ungrateful, because I sometimes have complaints while I am in Australia. I don't like feeling guilty that this semester abroad I am not cultivating a four-month long epiphany.

Or maybe this is my epiphany... hmmm. Wouldn't that be ironic? Maybe my aunt is right, and I am a changed person, because I now realize that it is naive to hold on a pedestal the idea that the right way to live life is by lathering yourself in every moment.

That is not to say that you shouldn't be careful what you take for granted. I certainly have found a plethora of things I appreciate much more now than I am without them; like fast restaurant service, the resources of a big university, 24-hour anything and free local calls.

I am not simply trying to make myself feel better about having bad days while I am away. I do have a point. The same goes for all of us in college. It's only four years (well, for some of us it is). It is a shame to let it fly by without noticing how great it is that we are 20-somethings living it up in a situation unlike any other we have experienced or ever will experience again. But at the same time, screw those who try to tell us that we are not living right when we do have complaints, when life gets in the way and when months pass right under our noses.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Australia.

It's time for us to grow up

Becky Martins

College may be a time to experience new things, make lifelong friends and finally reach maturation. Yet, sometimes, students lose sight of one major purpose of school... of the education that will determine the course of our future.

As freshmen, we enter college with big ideas. Certain people cannot wait to recreate themselves and leave high school stereotypes behind. Some look forward to leaving home for the first time and experiencing adulthood for themselves. But other students look at university life as a prepaid vacation arranged by their parents. It becomes too easy to slip up when no one is there, constantly nagging us to do well. Going to class is suddenly an option rather than a requirement. Curfews become non-existent. For many, irresponsibility becomes a familiar companion.

But for all the fun students should have in college, these years do not have to end in failure. If we have priorities, balancing work and play will not be such a challenge. We should know when it is appropriate to let go, as well as when it is time to be serious. After all, that twinge of guilt we feel when we skip out on homework or class may not be as nonsensical as we think.

That twinge of guilt we feel when we skip out on homework or class may not be as nonsensical as we think.

A good way to get out of the rut of indolence is through time management. Each semester, students are faced with new roommates, new schedules and new problems. A loss of focus becomes more common than keeping focus. But if students manage time wisely, many conflicts could prove avoidable.

Enjoy Greek life, play a sport, and get a job. However, make sure to do these things while remembering that other aspects of college are equally as important. Make sure to plan classes, so an undergraduate degree does not take over four or five years to attain. Do not skip or fail classes and lessen the chances of reaching graduation. Try not to make dim-witted decisions that can ruin chances of a good future. By simply looking out for our own wellbeing, we increase our likelihood of being more successful in our post-collegiate years.

It is also important to remember when we enter college that there are few things to fall back on. Throughout high school, it was not hard to attain mediocre grades and still get into a university. The future never felt as real as it does today, because then, our options appeared endless. We believed we could have any job in any field, because that was what we were always told.

But now, in college, we have to prove we are capable of achieving great things. There are no teachers or guidance counselors warning us when we skate too close to failure. We must do well every semester in order to fulfill our requirements to graduate on time. We are also paying for our education, housing and books, so unless someone has unlimited amounts of money, or very understanding parents, wasting whole semesters is not an option. It is time to really figure out what we want from life. If we hope for a rewarding career, this is where we start building one. If we wish to own that luxury car, build a grand home and provide a comfortable lifestyle for our future families, college is where that dream begins. We just have to make goals and work toward them.

College students have never been so close to the real world, as we are today. We do not have to just dream about what we want to be when we grow up. Now, we finally have the chance to act on that decision. So take the initiative and grow up. Remember that while college is supposed to be the best years of our lives, there is much more to it. Have fun, and enjoy it while we can, but do not forget why we are here in the first place.

In a few years, the time will come to put our abilities to the test. The job market will eat up those with skills to succeed, while others may flounder after realizing they are unqualified due to lack of self-preparation. Do not be the person who lives a life of regret and what could have been. Instead, do well from the beginning, and reap the rewards of hard work and effort when they come.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Letters to the Editor

The other way out

To the Editor:

In his article entitled "It's the Only Way Out," Yousef Munayyer attempts to explain away the necessity of Israel being a Jewish state. He asks rhetorically "Am I to believe that such [a] homeland is necessary for those fleeing genocidal persecution today in the 21st century?" Well Mr. Munayyer, the answer is yes.

Here is why: In the aftermath of the Holocaust, there has been a myriad of books, articles, movies and documentaries about the genocide that took place in the Nazi death camps. But the press has done a despicable job of covering the terrorizing acts being committed against Jews to this very day. As a matter of fact, were one to look closely at international news stories, one would clearly see that there is a sickening wave of anti-Semitism sweeping western Europe, just as it was in the years leading up to the rise of Hitler.

Throughout France and Germany, synagogues are being burned, and Jews are being terrorized on the streets. Even here, in the land of the free and the home of the brave, racism is rampant. At Rutgers University in New Jersey, Jewish students cannot observe their Sabbath without protestors standing angrily outside attempting to intimidate those inside. On Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year that was celebrated this past weekend, a rabbi in Brooklyn found a bomb on his doorstep. A friend of mine in Haverhill, Mass. went to synagogue on Rosh Hashanah only to find the area littered with fliers inciting Jew-hatred. Even I, home in Manhattan this past weekend, got yelled at on the sidewalk. "Do you like being a Jew? They cloned Hitler!" This is what a young man shouted at me as I walked by him Saturday night.

With Mel Gibson's latest product, an inaccurate and strongly anti-Jewish rendition of "The Passion," is about to be released in theaters across the country. It is difficult for me to see how a man who claims to be as educated as Mr. Munayyer does can fail to see the necessity for a Jewish State in Israel.

I saw something incredible a few weeks ago in The Valley Advocate. It was an article about a Palestinian man who is working with children in the West Bank to channel their frustration into artwork instead of violence. What we need on all sides of the conflict is this constructive form of expression and education toward the ideals of peace and the needs of all parties involved. Only in this way can any solution be reached. Let us begin this year on the right foot, working toward mutual understanding, not mutual ignorance, and may we all merit to see peace in the Middle East speedily in our days!

Ben Nathan
Concerned sophomore
University of Massachusetts

Seeking a truthful solution

To the Editor:

Leah Vitale wrote Tuesday about the suffering of a Jewish family due to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. She expressed deep sympathy over the tragic event of children lost to violence. Many people share this sympathy and are working to bring people together to overcome a history of conflict. I greatly respect the strength required to endure such a tragedy.

Even greater than surviving through a tragedy is the ability to withstand the pain without allowing it to become a reason to hate. Leah seems to desire peace in the area. However, she did not express true understanding of the intricacy of the situation. She spoke as though Palestinians are the only people involved, as if the conflict is one-sided. This is not the case and is rarely the case in any conflict.

Leah has overlooked that Israel has invaded Palestinian territory. Many Palestinians feel desperate to protect themselves, their families and their land from the push of Israeli soldiers. Consistent with human response throughout history to a threat on their homeland, Palestinians are taking drastic measures to force their message on a deaf ear. This is not to say that violence is ever a virtuous way of achieving any goal. Yet, it is necessary to look at the history and facts, if one wants to understand the situation and seek resolution.

Tens of thousands of Palestinians have left their homes this year to escape persecution. Israel receives much financial support from the U.S. government, including help from our military that is the most powerful in the world. Who supports Palestine with such power? Now Israel is building a wall to barricade exchange between the two peoples. Palestinians are being cut off from their land. This is a just solution?

Meanwhile, Jewish residents are being cut off from their nation. Yet the push from within the Jewish nation to block out Palestinians is so immense that the wall is going up anyway. Surely this is widespread prejudice on the part of those Jewish people. Even the Bush administration frowns upon this act, urging Israel to leave passageways in the wall. Still, any openings are to be guarded by armed soldiers at all times.

Though I feel the need to defend Palestine from Leah's rash accusations, I am writing in support of unbiased observance, with the hope that truth can lead us to a solution. Blaming or hating either party involved will steer us anywhere but to the truth. For how can truth reveal itself when one's mind is shadowed by preconceived negativity? In the future, perhaps Leah will not fall to such biases in her writing but will seek out evidence from all sides of a situation. (See www.newint.org/issue348/refuse.htm for some examples of people working for peace without hatred.)

Deanna Levanti
University of Massachusetts student

Stripped of creativity at a young age

Sanam Hakim

The modern school systems follow a basic pattern. As the grade increases, the fun and games decrease, and the readings increase. Children who look forward to waking up early, getting on a big yellow bus and going to school slowly start to despise alarm clocks, beg for rides to school and fake illnesses to not even go to school in the first place. Progressively, fun turns into hell. But why?

Preschool kicks off the education cycle with short days full of fun. The foundation of preschool education is based, primarily, on symbolism and creation. Through the media and the arts, children are given a strong knowledge of the basic functions of society. Simple games keep children involved and under control, yet they also plant seeds of knowledge into their minds, which blossom in the near future. Preschool is fun, because it is entirely planned to be pleasing, educational and beneficial to all of the children attending.

As children grow, creative restraints get stronger. In preschools, strange shapes and random color schemes labeled "my family" are cherished and encouraged. The next year, kindergarten teachers will draw shapes and colors on the board and give them names like "square" and "yellow." Kids are taught to use these shapes to draw a family. They take home stick figures that are equally as cherished as the indistinguishable shapes they brought home from preschool. In time, these family portraits become three-dimensional. Children are given materials and shown how to use them. The yarn is the hair; the cloth is the dress; the buttons are the eyes.

Eventually, these children begin to function like robots. They take home pictures that look exactly like all the other pictures, aside from minor details. Johnny draws his people with red hair, Annie draws her people with yellow hair, Tommy draws his people with black hair. All the kids draw square houses with a triangle roof. Cars have four wheels; bikes have two.

When children reach high school, this concept becomes clearly evident. Papers are not graded on creativity, but rather on the usage of another person's thoughts. Projects are rare, and little thought goes into them. There is no material usage, aside from markers and paper.

Instead of closing the door to creativity, it should be thrown open for when we enter society after college.

College is even worse. All you do is read, then take a test. Then you read some more, and take some more tests. Then you take a new class, read some more books, and take some more tests.

When you graduate, you are put into the workforce. The people with the new ideas are the ones who lead our nation toward advancement — not the ones who do exactly what has been done in the past. Creativity gets you rich overnight if you use it the right way. People like Gary Dahl come up with the idea of selling rocks as pets and end up selling millions of them for $4 a rock.

I think if we start raising our children with a stronger focus on creativity, it would greatly benefit society. It's OK to teach them the names of shapes and colors, but when we hand them a pile of materials, they should figure out themselves how to turn it into a person. Circular houses should be encouraged. People with square heads are OK. Cars with wings are cool, too. As children get older, they should be encouraged to work outside of the usual marker and paper for projects. They should write about things they never thought about and draw things they never thought they would see. Instead of closing the door to creativity, it should be thrown open for when we enter society after college.

That way, we would have more cures for diseases. Dr. Takahashi came up with a chicken pox vaccine, not only because of his education and observation of the chicken pox virus, but because he was creative.

Technology would be more advanced, too. Dr. Percy Spencer invented the microwave, not only because of his knowledge of magnetron, but because he was creative.

Even food quality would improve. Jimmy Dewar invented the first Twinkie 70 years ago, not only because of his knowledge of the culinary arts, but because he was creative.

I really hope that, in time, education systems turn away from just books and tests, and teachers start to use different techniques of teaching. The more creativity is stripped from us as children, the slower our world will advance. We are living in a world that demands a generation of creators, but raises generations of the created. Something is very wrong with that.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Power and Class of New England

UMass Marching Band living through its busy schedule

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF DIRECTOR GEORGE N. PARKS, THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MINUTEMAN MARCHING BAND HAS DOMINATED THE COLLEGIATE MARCHING BAND SCENE FOR DECADES, AND 2003 IS PROVING TO BE NO EXCEPTION.

After 10 grueling days of practice at Band Camp, the students of the UMMB wasted no time hitting the field. They premiered their show at a barbeque for family and friends on Aug. 29 and then welcomed the UMass class of 2007 just two days later at Frosh Fest with a powerful and electrifying performance.

Receiving national recognition for their continued excellence, the members of the marching band are the recipients of the prestigious Sudler Trophy and have performed at two Presidential Inaugural parades. This season, they have already traveled to such exotic locations as Allentown, Penn. (pictured above) and Piscataway, N.J. Known as the "The Power and Class of New England." Clearly, the UMMB has yet again secured its place on the top-rung of marching bands nationwide.

As the season goes on, the band will be headed down to the University of Delaware to perform, as well as putting on an exhibition performance at the Massachusetts Instrumental and Choral Conductors Association High School Band Festival in Framingham, Mass. But for those who would like to catch the band on their own turf, the Minutemen can be found at almost any of the upcoming home football games, bringing excitement and enthusiasm to the crowds at McGuirk Stadium.

— Meghan Healy

And the band plays on...

GERALD H. KING/COLLEGIAN

Minuteman Marching Band director George N. Parks has his performers working hard all fall.

October
- 4 University of New Hampshire (Parents Day)*
- 17 Multibands Concert (Fine Arts Center)
- 18 Hofstra (Homecoming)*
- 25 BOA (Bridgeport, CT)
- 26 MICCA (Framingham, MA)

November
- 1 Northeastern University*
- 8 Richmond University*
- 15 @ University of Delaware
- 22 University of Rhode Island*

December
- 5 Merry Maple (Amherst, MA)
- 6 Band Banquet

 Home Football Game*

All photos Gerald H. King/Collegian

Grunge rockers switch it up

By DAVE PLISKY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In 1993, Matt Cameron and John McBain created Wellwater Conspiracy. Cameron was the longtime drummer for Soundgarden ... Bain Monster Magnet's lead guitarist. Both are currently members of Pearl Jam.

A decade later, Transdreamer Records has released a new self-titled and innovative effort from the band, considering their Seattle rock music backgrounds. Wellwater Conspiracy's mixing and matching of genres within almost every song makes for an ambiguous rock product.

Wellwater Conspiracy
Transdreamer

The first five tracks fall somewhere between '60s or '70s English pop rock without the hooks, electric, progressive and jazz-rock. When you consider the songs' diversity and technical aptitude, they are listenable, if not friendly.

The band's jazzy-rock sound usually accompanies long songs and jam sessions, but WWC keep the tunes curtailed. No tracks are over five minutes long, and the first major departure from their norm starts out with a spacey, synthesized bass duet more likely heard at a rave than a rock concert. The instrumental song is too upbeat to be a ballad, but might have otherwise been considered one, leaving the listener the static feeling of euro-pop.

The trend of departure continues into the next two tracks. In "Something in the Air," the bridge is a crazed digression of synthesized sound effects, abstract drumming and two aimless guitar melodies all at once. Then, "Sullen Glacier" might be another instrumental if you don't consider animalistic roaring/grunting in the background to be vocals.

Unfortunately, these are the kind of songs that define WWC. In the album's release statement, Matt Cameron refers to the self-gratifying nature of the music.

"We just do what we want to do," he said.

Though this new release is self-titled, often signaling a band's new beginning, WWC seems to want to do the same old thing with this side-project of a band. Cameron, the spokesperson for the band, put it simply.

"We don't have to write a hit single or any of that kind of junk," he explained. "In that respect, it's great."

The band also claims to have no outer motivations for the music. It must be nice not to have the pressure of anyone's standards to live up to, but not at the expense of the listener. It's almost as if they want to ensure their obscurity, making noises not because they think they should, but because they know they can.

Wellwater Conspiracy's name comes from a 1970's myth that said, "When a free-spirited person put LSD in the drinking water in Minnesota." This is interesting, since for quite some time during this album, the only way the listener might be enjoying the record was if he or she was on LSD back in the '70s.

At the very least, WWC is candid with you. The cover art is the organic color of parchment paper containing ancient maps of the sky and a superimposed painted sketch of Neptune in the sea. The song titles, like "Galaxy," "Night Sky" and "My Darker Bongo" certainly don't detract either.

So if a-grunge-goes-to-space sort of genre appeals to you, this might be just the thing. Most modern rock fans, however, need not bother. It will take more than an untitled album to pull the "Conspiracy" up out of the well.

Wells flick barely under the sun

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Frances Mayes needs a change. Her cad of a husband has left her, and taken the house with him. Despondent, she holes herself up in a depressing apartment complex full of the walking wounded — i.e. others who are going through divorce. Her best friends, a pregnant lesbian and her girlfriend, buy Frances a ticket for a 10-day Italian tour with a homosexual-friendly tour group, Gay and Away.

'Under the Tuscan Sun'
Directed by Audrey Wells
Starring
Diane Lane
Sandra Oh
Touchstone
Rated PG-13
113 mins.
Grade C+

"Under The Tuscan Sun" is a shallow and postcard-pretty fantasy celebrating the rehabilitating effects of living in a colorful foreign land. Mayes is an actual person, and this is more or less her story, based on her best-selling novel (be forewarned, however, as an end-credit disclaimer makes note of the dramatic liberties it takes). I have yet to read the book, but its safe to assume that it wasn't as puddle deep as the movie.

Your tolerance for "Under the Tuscan Sun" may depend on how much you can put up with the dreaded tag known as the chick flick. This is a fairy tale seemingly ripped from the pages of a glossy travel magazine. The camera loves the Tuscan countryside, giving it a honey-dipped glaze and seemingly photographing it for preservation in an art gallery. Except "Under the Tuscan Sun" is far from being art. It's cute piffle, armed with a charming star, but it has as much depth as a pudding cup.

The charming star is Diane Lane, the talented and beautiful actress who has toiled away in near-obscurity since making her debut as a teen in 1979's "A Little Romance." With last year's Oscar nomination for the adultery drama "Unfaithful," the long lost Lane finally found herself a spot on the A-list of actresses, and with "Under The Tuscan Sun" she continues her (relative) winning streak. If there's anyone you'd want to watch for two hours letting go of her sadness in the hills of Tuscany, it's Lane.

And Lane gives as good as she's got, even if the movie is another film beneath her talents. It's hard to make despondency compelling to watch for the length of an entire movie, but Lane is one of the few to pull it off, mainly because she finds notes of grace amidst all the blarney. Lane finds varying degrees amidst her sorrow; she may be one of the few actresses who can make even depression appealing.

Director Audrey Wells turns her Tuscan travelogue into a heavy-handed metaphorical collage. In true Hollywood fashion, Wells — who did right by her indie romance, "Guinevere" a few years ago — ladles on the most obvious of symbolism she can find. Wells practically beats the audience over the head with her rubber-mallet obviousness, such as the rusty faucet that goes from stopped drip to raging flood by the end. It's as if no one on the creative side trusted the audience enough to "get" the movie.

Wells surrounds Lane with the usual assortment of quirky characters, such as the pregnant lesbian friend (Sandra Oh, who's quite funny), the cutesy Polish contractors renovating the rundown villa Frances buys and the eccentric British women who claim to have had an affair with Fellini. And then there's the boy, played by Raoul Bova, and named — get ready for this folks — Marcello.

It's enough to give the chick-flick phobic hives. However, Lane makes the whole enterprise go down a lot easier, and the scenery is quite lovely to look at. Unfortunately, that's not enough to base a recommendation on.

COURTESY FRANCO BICOCCA/BUENA VISTA INT.

Francis (Diane Lane, right) gets a lift from a Positano policeman (Emiliano Novelli, center) in "Under the Tuscan Sun."

National Geographic Channel sends American families to Third World

By JANICE RHOSHALLE LITTLEJOHN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Russell family likes comfort: their three-bedroom, three-bathroom suburban home in Birmingham, Ala.; a packed refrigerator with an automatic ice machine; central air conditioning, and, when mom doesn't feel like cooking, fast food restaurants.

So why would they trade all these middle-class amenities for a sweltering mud hut in Lungu, Ghana, with no electricity, no plumbing, and no golden arches for thousands of miles?

"It just sounded like it would be a blast," said Lynne Russell, who with husband Scott and their two children signed up for one of the cross-cultural adventures on the National Geographic Channel's "Worlds Apart." The 13-episode series premieres 8 p.m. EDT Monday.

Each week, one American family spends 10 days with a local household in a remote Third World village, participating in their customs, rituals and livelihoods.

"We thought, wouldn't it be amusing if we took a whole family and all of a sudden their neighborhood was totally different," said Glenda Hersh, the series' co-executive producer.

Added partner Steven Weinstock: "You take away some of the basic things we're familiar with, and project them into an environment that is culturally distinct and interesting, you're going to put them through both a psychological and emotional journey that's going to give them an appreciation of what really matters and what's important."

Lynne Russell said she jumped at the chance for what seemed the vacation of a lifetime, but acknowledged "I had no idea of what we would be going into. Even what I imagined was not exactly what we encountered." The Russells' journey to northwestern Ghana is featured in the series' premiere episode.

For the first few days, the Russells had to adjust to the culture shock of living in a primitive village with extreme poverty, unappetizing food, rudimentary toilet facilities, horrendous smells and harsh terrain.

"The pen for the livestock — the cows, the goats, the chickens, and all of that — was about 15 feet from our room," recalled Scott Russell, a financial planner. "Where they cooked was no more than three or four feet from the livestock. It all hit me, it was really kind of a shock."

"Essentially these families are cultural explorers," said Andrew Wilk, executive vice president of programming and production of the Washington D.C.-based National Geographic Channel.

"On the face of it, it might seem like, 'Oh, what a great romantic cultural idea for me and my family,' but in essence, this is real cultural diversity," he continued. "Watching these various individuals going through their own personal catharsis ... it's pretty amazing television."

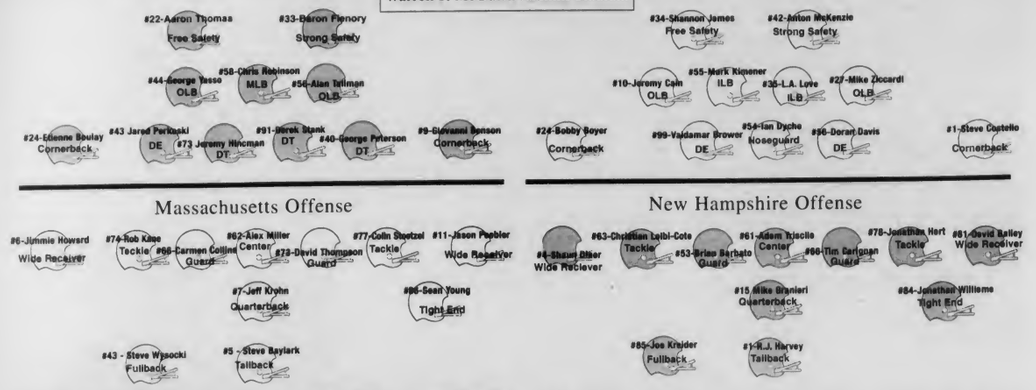
One reality that didn't sit well for the feminist-minded American women in the series was the gender bias inherent in many Third World cultures: The women do the bulk of the work — the cooking, cleaning and child rearing — while the men have the luxuries of free time.

"There was definitely a division," said insurance agent Deborah Johnson-Noble.

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5. Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS
Hampshire Mall
University Drive
UMASS
Route 9



Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*SUSHI BAR!
*TAKE-OUT ACCEPTED
*DELIVERY AVAILABLE!
Location: AMHERST: 103 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

Rejuvenate
WITH OUR FALL $PECIAL
Restore the fullness and shine and replenish the moisture to your hair with our patented Color Touch conditioning treatment...that lasts four to six weeks...a $50 value
~ AND ~
Sooth your dry hands with our Citrus & Aloe Paraffin treatment...a $20 value
ALL FOR ONLY $30 a $70 value
including FREE all-nutrient hand & body lotion!
PATRICK & Company
Open Tues. thru Fri., 9:30-7:00 Sat., 9:30-4:30
102 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley • 586-7477

The 18+ College Night
$4.00 over 21
$10.00 under 21
$2.00 off cover with this ad
HIPPODROME
1700 MAIN STREET
DOWNTOWN SPRINGFIELD
(413) 787-0700
www.HIPROME.com
Featuring The World Famous Hot Body Contest
$100.00 Weekly Prizes
Male and Female
Must Have Valid ID
Dress to Impress

New Hampshire Vs. Massachusetts Saturday 1 p.m. Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Tailback Steve Baylark was named Atlantic 10 Offensive Player of the Week after he rushed for 140 yards and two touchdowns on 35 carries against James Madison.

UMass to face New Hampshire

Continued from page 10

the football game. I'd like to think it was a one-game thing."

The other demon the Minutemen will have to fight, should they find themselves up by 18 points late in the game as they were against James Madison, is complacency. While the Band Day festivities of last week's game put 10,196 fans in the McGuirk stands, much of that number was missing by midway through the fourth quarter due to the comfortable lead.

Whether it was a result of the departing fans or not, UMass' play downgraded significantly, allowing the Dukes to get back in it.

"I mean, everyone in the stands was leaving, everyone was saying this is over. And our guys haven't been in that situation in a long time, and the problem is only if they haven't learned from it. I doubt we'll get in that situation again, but we'll see."

The top weapon on the UNH sideline is undoubtedly quarterback Mike Granieri. The junior is not only an air threat (17-for-26, 176 yards, two touchdowns against Dartmouth), but can hurt teams on the ground. His mobility gives the Wildcats an extra dimension that Whipple was careful not to dismiss.

"He's playing as well as anybody in this league that I've seen," Whipple said of the 6-foot-1, 210 lb. signal caller. "He understands what they want. He makes all the throws, and he's very athletic in the run game, he's making a lot of big plays running the ball."

The Minuteman offense continues to improve, with Baylark the shining example of a UMass attack that faced early adversity and developed into a smooth-running machine. However, the 36 carries that the sophomore received against JMU will not be a trend.

"Last week, when the score was 31-13, there was no momentum," Whipple said. "But [Baylark] was just dead tired, and we've never said we wanted to give him the ball 35 times."

For his efforts, Baylark earned the A-10's rookie of the week award.

The UMass receiving corps is also beginning to step up of late. Junior Jason Peebler had eight receptions for 116 yards last week, both career highs, and leads the team with 18 catches for 290 yards.

"I think [Peebler is] very much like our entire offense in that he's getting better, but he has to focus more and become a better all-around player," Whipple said. "But I think he's talented, he's faster than people think he is, so I think it's helped his confidence, and it's helped him get his legs back. He and [senior] Jimmy Howard are more than solid players in our league, and I think as we get better with practice, Jason will continue to make plays."

Become a
Judicial Hearing Board Member

A great experience for students who:
are interested in law, social justice and student's rights
are interested in student leadership
wish to enhance communication skills
want to build their RESUME

Requirements include:
full time enrollment
at least a 2.0 G.P.A.
no current judicial sanction

Training Sessions held in 903 Campus Center
October 14th @ 7:00 to 9:30 P.M.
October 20th @ 7:00 to 9:30 P.M.
(you will need to attend both sessions)

Applications available at:
Residential Cluster Offices
The Dean of Students Office
Student Government Association

Deadline to apply:
5:00 P.M. October 9, 2003

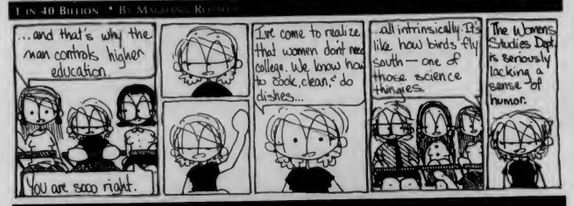
Any questions? Please contact: Patrick Higgins, Brian Long or Rhys Livingstone
Dean of Students Office 545-2684

The BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY Karaoke 7-11
TUESDAY Open Mic from 7-11
WEDNESDAY Rhythm Systems - DJ Bill Arnold 9-1
THURSDAY DJ M'peli Mwakaliku Dance Music of the African Diaspora 9-1
FRIDAY DJ Aquarius 9-1
SATURDAY Live Music 9-1

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.



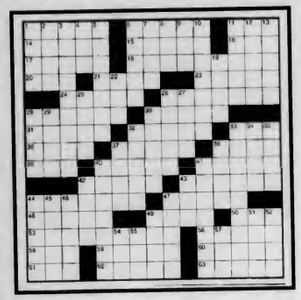
ZooMass • By Scott Hodges

Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Kirchner

1 in 10 Billion • By Maggie Rosen

JawHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Vetardi

That's What She Said • By Derrick Genova



QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"You will never silence the voice of the voiceless."

-Rage Against the Machine

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Amherst Brewing Company
Silver Medal Winner at Great American Beer Festival
BURGERS • WINGS • BEER
LATE NIGHT MENU 'TIL MIDNIGHT
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
PING PONG DARTS POOL
LIVE MUSIC NO COVER CHARGE
JAZZ • BLUES • FUNK • KARAOKE
EVERYTHING UNDER ONE ROOF OCMP
24 North Pleasant Street • www.amherstbrewing.com • Amherst Center
October 2nd
Silent Groove
Hip Hop Funk
October 4th
Stymie
Hard beat Funk
No Cover
October 5th
Adam Kolker Quartet
Jazz

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarter
- Baked Chicken Quarter
- Old Fashioned Beef Stew
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 57
- Low: 33

FRIDAY
- High: 58
- Low: 45

SATURDAY
- High: 66
- Low: 52

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Barabara Lotto
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Katie Dwan/ Dan Simmons

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's a tough day. Just get through it, tomorrow will be better.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
People really are stupid, sometimes even to the point of amazment.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The wrap you had for lunch today had a little something special added for you.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Sometimes people mess up your work. It sucks but it happens.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Just put your head down and work until all your tasks are completed.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't put too much faith in people you barely know. They'll fail your trust.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be suspicious of your hunches. Think things through betore acting.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
I don't think it's very natural for you to act like that.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
People find it difficult to handle your annoying personality.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Take that extra 20 minutes to nap today. You need it.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If one thing isn't going wrong, another thing is.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Where do you think your lazy ways are going to get you? It won't be far.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom, 1 Full Bath, Loft Style apartment, Washer/Dryer in unit, $1300/month, Downtown Amherst 978-546-5243

APARTMENT FOR RENT

6 Room-4 Bedroom apt. $1200/month plus utilities. Northampton- 584-4920

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Acura Integra LS 4Dr. Grey $500.00 413-883-1835

Honda Accord LX 1991 Auto 154K Power $1600 413-546-5537 nedkem@larp.umass.edu

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

COMPUTERS

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for TJ.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

International Sales for consulting/software firm. Multi-Lingual Telephone skills required. Economics a plus. Early AM hours required. Full or part time. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time. Responsible student to post flyers on campus. Must be dependable. Call 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. Ask for Ted.

Mad Science: Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

Visa/MasterCard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Archos Jukebox 6000 6 GIG mp3 player/HD $85.00 413-883-1835

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.university-bartending.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for quiet, non-smoking female roommate. 2 share 2 bedroom apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

Sheer Bliss Day Spa Aveda Facials Includes makeover session 253-2322

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Form Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-2 31-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Spring Break Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else' Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Family Day affair

UMass to face rival UNH

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It's a distraction that Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple's team needs to get past.

Then again, the R.J. Cobbs situation has been a distraction the entire season, so perhaps it's now finally over. Cobbs was formally suspended for the season this week, but the sophomore tailback hasn't taken a snap all season, handing the spotlight over briefly to classmate Raunny Rosario, and then to newcomer Steve Baylark, who was pressed into service after Rosario injured his knee in the first game of the season.

Cobbs was kept out of that first game due to "academic discipline," and missed the next three weeks; but his status was never fully defined, rather accepted as a "if he's there, he's there" situation. Now, the sophomore's season, one full of promise, is officially over, and the Minutemen must move on.

Although Whipple and the squad recognize the weight of losing Cobbs for the season, there's no doom and gloom coming from the UMass camp, especially with the performance of Baylark behind it.

"I just addressed it Tuesday morning," Whipple said. "It's not a big deal, it is what it is. There's no question he would have given us a boost, but you don't worry about things you can't control."

Cobbs will practice with the team for the rest of the season, but his academics will come first before he can return.

"That was already in place from the first of the year," Whipple said. "I addressed it with the team. We're most concerned about R.J. and just see that he does the work he needs to do to stay on track to graduate. He's been practicing and running the scout team, helping our defense."

Their next task comes Saturday at 1 p.m., when they'll host the New Hampshire Wildcats at McGuirk Alumni Stadium for Family Day. The Wildcats (2-3, 0-2 Atlantic 10) come into the game off a 42-17 win over instate rival Dartmouth, but have been struggling against the Atlantic 10 this season, with losses against Villanova and at Rhode Island.

UNH has done well against UMass (3-1, 2-0 A-10) recently, though. The Wildcats have taken the last three meetings, and three of the last four in Amherst.

The Minutemen are coming off a 31-26 win over James Madison that only got that close at the end. The Dukes scored 13 points in the fourth quarter to get within striking distance, as 16 penalties called against the Maroon and White kept JMU in the game. The penalties were enough to cancel out the 140 yards that Baylark put in, although his two touchdowns were crucial in the victory.

Still, the penalties came against the Minuteman starters, and Whipple isn't too concerned about a replay of last Saturday's miseues.

"I'd be more concerned, but it was all of our best players. I told them it was personal; it almost cost us

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Jason Peebler comes off a career-best game catching the football. The junior had eight receptions for 116 yards in UMass' win over James Madison.

Maine downs W&M by way of forfeit

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Maine, which saw its Atlantic 10 contest with William & Mary — scheduled for this past Saturday canceled due to effects of Hurricane Isabel in Williamsburg — has been awarded a win by forfeit, as decided by the conference.

The move is drawing the ire of coaches and administrators around the league, as the Tribe chose to remain inactive despite being offered the use of Richmond's facility, and the financial means to fly to Orono and have the game at Harold Alfond Stadium.

Notebook

Nonetheless, coach Jimmye Laycock chose not to play despite being able to practice at points during the week. The Tribe will not be tagged with a loss, and will instead have the game erased from their docket and not included in their league record.

This effectively eliminates W&M from league title contention, as they will play one less contest then the A-10's other nine members. It also hinders the efforts of senior wide receiver Rich Musinski.

The All-A-10 performer currently has 3,484 receiving yards, good for sixth on the conference's all-time list.

He needs 460 yards in his remaining games to break former URI standout Brian Forster's record of 3,944.

Top Guns

The Sports Network, presenter of the Walter Payton Award given to the nation's top offensive player at the Division I-AA level, has added a pair of potent Atlantic 10 signal callers as candidates based on their early season accolades.

Villanova first-year starter Joe Casamento, as well as Delaware junior Andy Hall, have been placed on the award's "Watch List" after passing for 1,035 yards and 786 yards, respectively.

Casamento has completed 93-of-126 passes and thrown nine touchdowns and only one interception in leading the No. 3 Wildcats to their first 4-0 record since 1997.

The sophomore leads the A-10 in passing yards per game (258.8), completions and completion percentage (73.8), in his first season under center following the departure of the graduated Brett Gordon.

Last season, Gordon was the runner-up for the Payton Award to Eastern Illinois quarterback Tony Romo, in the closest vote in the history of the award.

Hall, who is ranked second nationally with a 174.1 passing efficiency, leads a Blue Hen offense that is seventh nationally with a 455.0 yards per game average.

He has completed 58-of-86 passes and thrown nine touchdowns, and has also run for 260 yards and a pair of touchdowns.

Movin' On Up

Impressive quarterbacks aren't the only things keeping the Villanova and Delaware programs in the news.

Coming off a 28-7 win over Northeastern, the 'Cats have moved up to No. 3 in the Sports Network Division I-AA poll, their highest ranking since 1997, when they spent six weeks ranked No. 1 overall.

The Huskies, meanwhile, have fallen to 10th in the poll following their loss to the Wildcats.

Delaware, which is ranked 4th, joins 'Nova in the top five, while Massachusetts, ranked ninth, gives the Atlantic 10 five teams in the top 10. This is the first time the conference has accomplished this since the Sports Network poll became official in 1993.

Minutewomen hit the road

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Lindsey Fairweather hopes to return this weekend.

A-10 foes GW, Richmond on tap for pair of weekend games

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team is hitting the road this weekend for back-to-back Atlantic 10 Conference games, including a highly anticipated match-up against a George Washington team that features Kim Warner, arguably the best player in the conference.

The Minutewomen head down for a 4 p.m. match-up in Mount Vernon, Washington, D.C. against the Colonials tomorrow and then travel on Saturday to First Market Stadium to square off against the Richmond Spiders at 7 p.m.

UMass (2-4-3, 1-0-0) has its work cut out for it in game one of this double header. The Colonials (6-1-2, 0-0-1) are on fire, having not suffered a loss in their past seven games. The pressure is on the Minutewomen to break this four game slide. If UMass hopes to stay in contention for an Atlantic 10 title, it must get past the favored GW squad.

The biggest weapon in the GW arsenal is Warner. The senior forward leads her team in goals (eight), as well as points (17) and also currently leads the Atlantic 10 in points, points per game, goals and goals per game. Warner was named the 2002 A-10 offensive player of the year, among other notable awards she had compiled over her career.

Also a major contributor to the offensive attack is Sarah Sample, who has notched eight points this season.

Anna Handzlik will be between the pipes for George Washington. Handzlik is having an outstanding season. Her statistics are an accurate representation of her performance: .78 goals against average, 91.1 percent saving percentage, a perfect record of 4-0-2, and she is currently leading the Atlantic 10 in saves per game.

The Colonials are blessed to have a solid backup goalkeeper in Kelly Paolucci, who has a .33 goals against average, 91.7 percent save percentage, a 2-1-0 record, and currently leads the Atlantic 10 in shutouts per game.

The Spiders (1-5-2, 0-0-1) are in a slump, unable to win a game in the last six. Liana Wooten leads Richmond in points, tallying five on the season thus far.

Megan Cox has been taking on the goaltending responsibilities for the Spiders this season. Cox has posted decent stats; 1.36 goals against average and a 79.2 percent saves percentage.

The Spiders and the Colonials battled to a double overtime 0-0 tie on Sept. 26. Richmond held the advantage in shots 25-15. Handzlik held down the fort for GW, stoning 15 saves.

The Minutewomen are injury-plagued, but are finally starting to show signs of recovery, with the return of two of their brightest stars, sophomore forward Adair Blyler and junior forward Lindsey Fairweather. Albeit both aren't at 100 percent, they are showing consistent improvement in their play on the field.

Blyler netted a goal in the heart-breaking loss to Binghamton on Sunday afternoon, raising her total to four goals and maintaining her status as points leader (eight). Fairweather also put forth an impressive showing in the Binghamton game, notching 10 shots and a crucial goal in the beginning of the second half.

The Minutewomen defense must step up to the challenge this weekend, especially against the high octane Colonial offense. Freshman Nadia Villarroel and the rest of the UMass defenders must gel together to form an impenetrable wall in front of senior goal keeper Kelly Nigh.

Nigh looks to have another outstanding game in net for the Minutewomen. Nigh racked up a 1.80 goals against average, 78.3 percent save percentage, and has played every minute of every year this season for the Maroon and White.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 23

OIT wrestles with Internet worm

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Office of Information Technologies has not gotten off to an easy start this semester due to challenges posed by the MSBlast virus, which has infected more than 3,000 computers on the University network since Aug. 11.

The virus exploits a security loophole in the Microsoft Windows operating system, announced Microsoft the day before the University experienced its first bout of infection.

Also known as LoveSan, the virus infected 2,638 residential systems, 188 dialup systems, and 233 academic systems.

"MSBlast works like a worm," said Kenley Obas, the Software Support Manager at OIT. "It finds flaws in the security operating system and hooks into those holes."

The most damaging part of the virus is that it sends itself to other systems.

"The virus replicates," said Jake Cunningham, Network Analyst at OIT. "It becomes an exponential problem."

Cunningham explained that to the user, the virus' presence is not obvious at first; the only signs are that the system may run a little slower.

The infection, which began spreading through window-based systems, as students returned to campus for early arrival, only worsened when a second virus appeared.

"Somebody wrote a virus in an attempt to fix the other virus," said Obas. The second virus, called Nachi, was designed to remove MSBlast, clean the system and download the security patch. Unfortunately, Nachi did not function correctly and only created more network traffic.

In an effort to stop the spread of the viruses, OIT staff quickly met, and made a number of attempts to warn students. On Sept. 10, a Microsoft security bulletin was posted advising students to download the security patch. OIT then sent an email to all incoming students, advising students to clean their systems and run the patch.

"Also, using the net registering system we posted a virus alert and made information available," said Cunningham. "Most people probably skipped through it though."

The email, sent to students' UMail address was also not as effective as OIT staff had hoped. The majority of UMass students have other email accounts and check their school accounts less frequently, he said.

By the next staff meeting the number of infected systems had risen to 1,600. Software Support, which normally has three technical consultants, became flooded with students asking for explanations and the OIT help desk was receiving hundreds of voice messages every day.

"We did everything we could. Users have the responsibility to patch their systems," said Cunningham. "Our next option was to shut off the systems."

OIT then took measures to systematically remove infected systems from the network. Users received an email informing them that their system would be shut off. OIT began the rolling process of disabling systems in Northeast, to Sylvan, continuing to Central and Orchard Hill and then finishing in Southwest. The last 80 systems were shut off Wednesday.

As students began coming in to the help desk to reconnect their systems, Software Support provided students with a $3 compact disk to assist them in removing the virus and cleaning their systems.

In addition to the eight students working at the offices, two temporary workers were hired last week to help with the process. In addition, OIT reduced the price of cleaning the student systems themselves from $40 an hour to $25 an hour.

"Students were confused with the response time," said Mike L. Davis, help desk coordinator. "The help desk has X number of people; people aren't aware of how flooded we were."

Davis, Cunningham, Obas and Kenyon Fairey, director of Hardware and Software Support all agreed that although students were frustrated, they were all patient.

"The vast majority were really understanding and more than accommodating," sad Fairey.

"I called them and I wasn't

Continued on page 2

Police fight crime with cyberspace

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Officer Allen R. Silva, of the University of Massachusetts Police Department, demonstrates one of the new PDAs. According to Police Chief Patrick Archbald, the UMPD is one of two departments in western Massachusetts to use these devices in the field.

New technology pushes UMPD ahead of the game

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Correspondent

Outfitted with some of the latest in technological crime-fighting devices, University of Massachusetts police officers investigating potential suspects and witnesses are now capable of accessing records with much greater ease. Personal touch-screen computers capable of tapping into state and federal databases are now featured in five of the seven university police cruisers. In addition, specialty units such as foot, horseback, bicycle and motorcycle-patrols are equipped with five hand-held computers providing access to information such as the FBI crime database and outstanding warrants.

The hand-held computers, known as Personal Digital Assistants, are one of the hottest trends in Web development. According to Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald, it is the greatest advancement in technology for police officers in 10 years.

"These PDAs are cutting edge," Archbald said. "The only other department in western Massachusetts that I know of that has them is Springfield. ... A large percentage of [police] departments simply have one computer."

"We're ahead of the pack," Archbald said. "We're in a position where 10 officers out on the street can run criminal checks as well as motor vehicle registry checks simultaneously."

With help from the Everywoman's Center in the form of $7,800, the police department was able to purchase computers that also allow access to stolen property records, gun registrations, and more. According to Archbald, the major grant from the U.S. Department of Justice for the new technology was $53,000.

Combined with the donation from the Everywoman's Center, the final amount spent for the new computer equipment, including the software that powers it totaled $60,800. Both Panasonic and HP/Compaq supplied the computers, while the software is a product of Public Safety Inc. According to Archbald, they were both the lowest bidders for the contract and the department has been working with them for the past few months in order to get the systems up and running.

"The initiative behind this is that these tools give officers the ability to do what once had to be done over the radio," Archbald said.

According to Archbald, the new computers allow for more flexibility, enabling officers to conduct their business without having to use the radio or tie up the dispatcher with detailed information that can clutter the airwaves. Archbald believes those days are over.

"I think one of the driving forces behind this effort was that we were transmitting information over a public frequency that can be heard on scanners," he said.

Archbald believes the trend among police departments is to limit the amount of personal information transmitted out over the airwaves into public realm as much as possible as newer technology becomes available.

"Our detectives can use [the new computers] as well," Archbald said. "It makes it that much more of a secretive operation — a safer operation for the officers and detectives," he said, speaking specifically about undercover operations.

Archbald thinks the equipment offers a major amount of flexibility for officers working at concerts and events. The high-tech computers also provide Miranda warnings and other procedural readings in multiple languages, in addition to e-mail access, electronic interviews and incident report forms. As technology becomes more readily available, video transmission and fingerprint recognition systems are other possibilities for the department.

"Operationally speaking, this is just a huge win for us," he said.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Mokhtar Atallah, a nutrition professor at the University of Massachusetts, responds to opposition to the reconstruction of the Hospitality and Tourism Management major.

Faculty senate puts academic requirements on drawing board

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday met for the second time this semester, focusing on the revisions to the foreign language requirements for the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics and the reconstruction of the Hospitality and Tourism Management major.

It is possible that 1,800 students in the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics and 500 students in Hospitality and Tourism Management could be affected by the meeting.

Before the Senate vote, the Natural Sciences and Mathematics' foreign language requirement asked that all students take a fourth-semester (Intermediate II) level in one language. The change now says that students can take a fourth-semester (Intermediate II) level in one language, or take a third-semester (Intermediate I) level in one language and a second-semester (Elementary II) level in a second language.

Proponents of the change say that the new requirements will give students more flexibility. A reason for this change is that many students stop taking a language their junior year of high school and do not begin fulfilling their language requirement until their sophomore year at the University. A result of this is that some students have a larger burden of the language requirement than others, solely due to timing constraints.

Many foreign language classes do not have room for students until their sophomore year. Students may have to take on a heavier foreign language course load because of this.

The vote passed the Senate with little opposition. One member raised concern over whether or not the college should join two other colleges to create a three-college wide foreign language requirement. Senate Secretary Ernie May replied by saying he would look into the issue.

The vote to restructure the Hospitality and Tourism Management major passed with almost no opposition. Previously the major consisted of three concentrations, which were: Lodging Administration; Food Service Administration; and Travel and Tourism Administration. The revamped major will now consist of five concentrations, which are: Lodging Management; Food and Beverage Management; Tourism, Convention, and Event Management; Club Management and Casino Management.

Other campus issues were also raised at the meeting, including what is being done about the loss

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
WE HOLD THE POWER
RESPONSIBILITY LIES IN OUR HANDS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 4
READ YELLOW
UMASS-BRED BAND READY TO BLOW UP
SPORTS PAGE 8
REVISITING GW
MEN'S SOCCER SEEKS REVENGE
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

Two peacekeepers killed in Kabul land mine explosion

By Daniel Cooney
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A land mine hidden in a sandy track in the Afghan capital exploded yesterday, killing two Canadian peacekeepers and wounding three others.

The blast came 24 hours after engineers checked the road for explosives and found nothing. However, officials said it was too early to determine whether the explosion was caused by an old land mine or one laid recently in an effort to target international peacekeepers.

"It was an explosive device of some magnitude," Gen. Raymond Henault, the Canadian chief of defense staff, said in Toronto.

The peacekeepers were on a routine patrol about two miles southwest of their camp, in foothills where attackers have previously launched rocket attacks, said Canadian Gen. Andrew Leslie, the deputy commander of the NATO-led peacekeeping force.

The explosion comes as NATO leaders are considering expanding the peacekeeping force and deploying to regions outside the capital, Kabul.

Canada's Defense Minister John McCallum said "this tragedy will in no way lessen our commitment" to the peacekeeping mission and that "the security of Canada and of the greater international community depends on it."

The Canadian government identified the dead as Sgt. Robert Alan Short and Cpl. Robbie Christopher Beerenfenger. The injured were Master Cpl. Jason Cory Hamilton, Cpl. Cameron Lee Laidlaw and Cpl. Thomas Stirling.

Two of the wounded had light injuries while the third was "seriously ill" but not in life-threatening condition, said peace force spokesman Squadron Leader Paul Rice.

Afghanistan is among the most heavily mined countries in the world. A German peacekeeper was killed and another wounded in May when their vehicle ran over a land mine apparently left over from decades of war.

In addition to the peacekeepers, there are some 11,500 U.S.-led coalition troops in Afghanistan focused on hunting down the Taliban and remnants of al-Qaida.

Insurgents, believed to be a mix of Taliban rebels, al-Qaida fighters and supporters of renegade warlord Gulbuddin Hekmatyar have been intensifying attacks on government forces and coalition troops in recent months. Peacekeepers have also been targeted.

Associated Press writer Tom Cohen in Toronto contributed to this report.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Ferron Salnaker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editor Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Bob McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. Renamed the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Requirements questioned

Continued from page 1

of the Campus Chronicle, which was eliminated this year due to the state's budget cuts. The Chronicle was the faculty newspaper, and listed many campus events.

University Chancellor John V. Lombardi addressed the issue, saying that an online calendar would be available by the beginning of next semester. The calendar would list events by individual departments, which would solve the problem of the "failure of the campus to have a decent calendar." He also said there would be helpful sections of the website such as a "Frequently Asked Questions" button.

Also addressed at the meeting was an announcement made by Jenny Spencer, the president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors. She said that her organization is seeking a full reimbursement of the faculty contracts that have not been funded in a year and a half. She also said that former Massachusetts gubernatorial candidate, Robert Reich, has accepted an invitation by the University to speak. He is being paid $2,000 by the University to speak at the Lord Jeffrey Inn Ballroom.

Internet access denied

Continued from page 1

there when they called back, it was a back and forth ordeal but they finally got in touch with me," said Caitlin Gillespie, a sophomore living in the Central residential area.

Some students told the staff that they thought the University gave their systems a virus.

"By no means was this a UMass internet problem," said Fairey. "People were probably infected before they got to campus."

One student threatened to sue OIT, arguing that the offices did not have the right to turn off her port.

"We have policies that clearly state our right to shut off systems," mentioned Fairey. "It's not something that we want to do. It's a nightmare."

Students agreed. "There were tons of people around me who had it — at least five or six people on my floor," said Gililespie.

The staff warned students of incidents like this one occurring again. "This was a rude awakening to the average user," said Obas.

Fairey suggested that computer users pay attention to operating system patches.

"They need to regularly get updates for anti-virus software, and should have them run automatically," said Fairey.

On the Net: www.oit.umass.edu.

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What was the last concert you went to?"

Sociology major

"The last concert that I went to was Radiohead."

Anna Sample

English major

"I snuck into the Bob Dylan show at Look Park in August."

Sarah Krill

Chemistry major

"The last concert I went to was the Spring Concert."

Trudy Smith

Economics major

"Tool, last year at the Mullins Center."

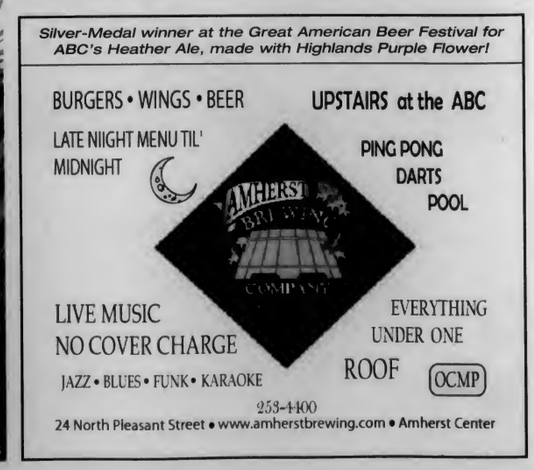
Tom Holley

Theater major

"Ben Folds in Central Park."

Zach Linder

Linguistics major



"I don't remember the last concert I went to, but the next one I'm going to is Mike Doughty at Pearl Street on Oct. 15."

Liz Caradonna

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Friday, October 3, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Arnold's campaign: avoiding the media

Arnold Schwarzenegger's status as a celebrity provides no justification for why he has eluded the media on his campaign to become California Governor. Since his announcement on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno," the Terminator has gone around the prets, staging glitzy photo opportunities instead of sitting down for serious one-on-one interviews regarding his qualifications and long-term views.

In a lengthy story that appeared in yesterday's Los Angeles Times, six women accused the actor-turned-politician of sexually harassing and groping them. Although rumors of Schwarzenegger's behavior have come up in the past, this story is much more crucial, as it comes days before the Oct. 7 recall election. The gubernatorial front-runner had denied the allegations in the past. Yesterday, however, he acknowledged he has "behaved badly" to women, apologizing and promising that he has changed.

The misconduct dates as far back as the 1970s and as recently as 2000, according to allegations. Three of the women quoted in the Times said Schwarzenegger grabbed their breasts. Another said he reached under her skirt and grabbed her buttocks. Another woman said Schwarzenegger tried to remove her bathing suit in a hotel elevator, and the sixth said Schwarzenegger pulled her onto his lap and asked whether a certain sexual act had ever been performed on her.

This may have been one of the reasons for Schwarzenegger's evasion of the press. It would have better served Schwarzenegger, however, to have admitted to wrongdoing when he stepped foot in the election. It is now uncertain as to how the public will react to the news.

Schwarzenegger spokesman Sean Walsh said yesterday that the statements are a political attack in the days leading up to the recall election. Perhaps, but Schwarzenegger's continued refusal to meet with the press is suspicious. For instance, Walsh had earlier denied the women's allegations in comments to the Times, saying the actor had not engaged in improper conduct toward women. The public may not know other things Schwarzenegger's camp may be covering up.

More importantly, however, the public has little information about any ideas he'd like to implement in California. Schwarzenegger has held press conferences and given some interviews, but he has not been forthcoming with details on his budget plan for the state. As an actor Schwarzenegger has entertained millions of people. His repertoire of films includes quite a few blockbuster hits, such as "The Terminator" and "Kindergarten Cop." But his qualifications for a position as a governor are less certain. And it will take much more than special effects to govern the 35 million people living in the Golden State.

Schwarzenegger proved that he could garner intense — and often flattering — media attention simply because of who he is. The Times story may open everyone's eyes. If he fails to win the election, his cowardly ways with the press will be one of the reasons why.

If he does get elected, we hope Schwarzenegger will cease his childish ways with the media. After all, this isn't some Hollywood movie. This is real life.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

We are all responsible

Jeff Napolitano

We all have responsibilities. By "we," I include students and faculty members alike. By responsibilities, I mean civil and social responsibilities to people in our community, people in our country, and the people of the world.

Because we are all part of a university, we are all in a particular position of privilege, and with that comes responsibilities beyond that of those who are not. Accordingly, we are all afforded resources that are not available to most others. This demands an increased responsibility to use these privileges for the benefit of others who lack them.

How much responsibility do we have? Certainly those who are oppressed bear less of a burden than those who live in a free country. The underprivileged, with little or no control over their lives and communities, have little responsibility for the improvement of them and for the actions of their leaders.

For example, the people of Iraq, under brutal tyranny, are obviously less accountable for the crimes of Saddam Hussein than the people of Germany, under the democratically elected Gerhard Schroeder. The people of democracies must be held to a greater degree of responsibility than their counterparts in totalitarian states. If this is indeed the "Land of the Free", we must accept that we have a greater liability for the actions and crimes of our leaders and popular institutions.

These actions have been significant and their consequences have not been trivial. In the last two years, our government has violated the U.S. Constitution, international law, Geneva Conventions, and committed international aggression, resulting in the murder of thousands, if not millions of people.

Our government has used illegal, low-grade nuclear weapons, forms of biological warfare, and supported mass deprivation of food and supplies in order to achieve its goals. Adding insult to injury, our leaders have done this in opposition to the opinion of the people of the world and their representatives in the United Nations, leading this country into singular isolation.

Our leaders and institutions are not abstract entities, without name or form. Our leaders consist of not only George W. Bush, who clearly bears much of the responsibility for the crimes of the U.S., but all of Congress, Democrats and Republicans alike, with very few exceptions. They are complicit in his actions, as they gave their overt support of these actions. The U.S. military is also complicit in these crimes, as the institution which enforced the illegal aims of the government.

But international affairs is not a domain to which our leaders and institutions are limited; our government obviously has a great role within our borders. When our government enacts such laws as the Patriot Act and otherwise abridges our human rights and liberties, we have a duty to every other citizen, especially those with fewer opportunities, to take back those rights.

Another example, closer to home, is the budget cuts, enacted by the state government, which not only raised the cost of our school, but also lowered the quality of our education, evidenced by classes of 350-plus students. We must be aware that such increases in costs prohibit poorer students from attending higher education, thus increasing the inequality of our society.

These are our leaders, this is our government, and if we truly live in a democratic society, then every wrongful death incurred, or job lost, or child who suffers, by its effects is our responsibility.

These are our leaders, this is our government, and if we truly live in a democratic society, then every wrongful death incurred, or job lost, or child who suffers, by its effects is our responsibility. Our obligation as students is more substantial. We belong to the intellectual community, and thus possess an increased ability to critically examine the policies, statements and lies of our government and others who hold power. We are in a position to bear an intense light on whatever problems we find.

This is not a responsibility limited to students; faculty should act as more than merely passive educators, and encourage students. I know several members of the faculty who actually engaged their students, led them in discussion of the rather dramatic events of last semester, on campus as well as in the world, but sadly, they were in the minority.

On the day of protest against the budget cuts last semester, only one out of my five professors even acknowledged the issue. If most of our faculty have not the conviction to address the issue of even the survival of their own school (and ultimately, their jobs), how can we expect the student body to be so inspired?

And now? How do we meet that obligation, as free people, as burgeoning intellectuals? First of all, professors should not be afraid to bring up glaring political and social issues, even if they come from outside of the classroom. We do not exist in a vacuum, so to teach a class on a day in which our country massively bombs another, in the same fashion as any other day, is to become amoral, and defeats the purpose of "higher education."

Secondly, students must come together to address the issues which are relevant to them. We must recognize our role as whole human beings, people with a conscience, and more importantly, a will to enable that conscience. There is perhaps no better opportunity to fight for your convictions than here at the University, and no shortage of people to do it with.

In a year in which our country has illegally invaded another country, in which the government has given to the most wealthy and taken away from the most poor, in which the nuclear threat has once again become heightened, in which our very school has been fragmented, there is no shortage of work to be done. It is time for all of us to live up to our responsibilities.

Jeff Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Both sides of the story

Emilie Duggan

Part of being a student of journalism is learning when — and how, sometimes — to apologize when you have made a mistake. Having professors who beat the concept of accountability into your head helps, but it is the practice that truly teaches the lesson.

Before I go any further, I have to say that I do not take back anything I have written in my columns. I still believe that Student Government Association Speaker, Jared Nokes, did not handle the refusal to recognize the ALANA Caucus as diplomatically as he could have. It is also certain to me that there are members of the SGA that prefer to follow their own agendas and push through their own motions, rather than pay attention to anyone with a dissenting opinion.

However, I was present for parts of the first SGA meeting of the school year Oct. 1, and I saw the utter hatred that spewed from the mouths of some of those in attendance. The loathing was not one sided.

Gladys Franco stood up and gave her account of what happened this summer, to a rather tepid showing of support from senators both new and old. Olaf Aprans, the Chair of University Policy, managed to offend senators from ALANA, newly elected senators who ran because of the ALANA crisis and Nokes, in a speech that was more convoluted than coherent.

While I completely agree that Nokes isn't brave enough to have acted alone in the decision-making, Aprans hung himself out to dry with the use of phrases like "let's not hang ourselves." Not a smart thing to say to a group comprised of some very angry senators who are crying racism in senate proceedings.

My job as a columnist is to opine on issues of importance to me, but this does not mean that I have to be biased. Some of my favorite columnists in mainstream media are unabashedly one-sided in their writing. I admire that, and I admire their writing, but that is not who I am, nor who I wish to become.

It has become startlingly clear to me that my knee-jerk outrage at Nokes' announcement at the beginning of this semester blinded me from seeing the truth about others' behavior.

I have been decrying the lack of equality in the SGA, but I haven't been practicing what I preach. Jared Nokes could very well be the scum of the Earth, but it is not my place to call him that. My job is to try to draw attention to whatever issue I choose to write about. But, that doesn't mean that I shouldn't take into consideration an opposing view or opinion.

The members of ALANA who serve as senators have acted as despicably as Nokes, and they should have been publicly called to the carpet as well.

The behavior at the first SGA meeting — not just of Nokes and his crowd, but also of the ALANA Caucus — made me see that I may have unfairly singled out someone to blame for a situation that is not solely his fault. While Nokes certainly didn't help the situation with his constant contradictions and flat-out lying, there was no need for me to add to the persecution of a boy who might not have the chutzpah to act independently of his lackeys. Especially when it's clear that Nokes and his crew are not the only ones with their own agendas.

Members of the ALANA Caucus attempted to verbally lynch Nokes at the first SGA meeting. They called him racist, they called him fascist, and they called for his resignation as Speaker. They ignored parliamentary procedure, and they cut down and insulted anyone who tried to make a point that opposed theirs. In short, they did everything that they have been accusing Nokes and his boys of doing.

It was wrong for Nokes to announce that appointed seats would not be recognized in the way that he did. It is true that he contradicts himself every time he opens his mouth and that he has probably done something worthy of impeachment. But the members of ALANA who serve as senators have acted as despicably as Nokes, and they should be publicly called to the carpet as well. Until now, they have successfully hidden behind the title of "the oppressed," and had I not gone to the first SGA meeting, I might not have seen the truth.

It is not time for only Nokes to shape up or ship out. The members of ALANA need to realize that they are not being taken seriously because they act in a manner that is unbecoming of a large university senate. This is not high school. The SGA is charged with making pretty serious decisions that won't get made as long as there are petty disputes taking up the majority of the meetings.

This is not to say that I do not support ALANA in their quest for equality in the senate. I do. This is also not to say that I support Jared Nokes, at all. I don't.

But, it's hard to watch someone get reamed without defending himself because he is trying to be professional, and follow parliamentary procedure. I'm sure Nokes would like nothing more than to speak his mind on all of this, but he hasn't. He has been publicly silent, letting everyone else tear him apart without retort. That makes him better than most, and I almost admire him for that.

I have always rooted for the underdog. There are those that are predicting that Nokes will be impeached, and leave in disgrace. After witnessing members of the senate trying to tear Nokes down, I have one thing to say: I may not agree with everything Nokes says or does, but here's to him proving them wrong.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

31 Days of October

Jen Hodson

I am so happy to announce that we have officially entered the month of October. October is by far my favorite month of the year. New England's beautiful foliage is always a breathtaking sight. When thoughts of fall come to mind, I think of great outdoor activities, such as playing in the leaves and apple picking. Apple cider's sweet, unforgettable taste is so hard to pass up, as are other fun activities like pumpkin carving and face painting.

Amherst Center usually has some sort of weekend activity brewing, like carnivals or fairs that are always fun to attend. I love the weather in October, too. The cool, crisp air is so refreshing because the temperature is not too warm and not too cold either, leaving it comfortable enough to run outside with a sweater on and feel snug. These are all great reasons in my mind to love the month of October, but the real secret behind why this month is such a great one, is actually quite plain and simple: Halloween!

Halloween is by far my favorite holiday of the year. In this day and age, the holiday gives people a chance to look forward to such traditions as dressing up, eating bulks of candy and having good old-fashioned fun. Dressing up as anything you want can make for some really creative ideas. Over the years I've seen a variety of costumes from my group of friends alone. Different ideas for costumes that I've seen firsthand are ones that involved a cheetah, sailor girl, butterfly, '80s dresser, piglet, cowboy and even a naughty schoolgirl. The list is endless, but once you have that perfect Halloween costume, it's all worth the while.

Remember when we were kids and we used to participate in such fun activities like bobbing for apples, shaving cream fights, toilet papering and egging houses, face painting, smashing pumpkins and going to haunted houses? Those were definitely good times and I will never forget them. But these traditions are nothing without the one key ingredient.

That's right, the Halloween party! You can't have a Halloween without one. It just wouldn't be the same and that's why every year the University of Massachusetts has unforgettable Halloween parties. They're usually pretty wild and entertaining. My favorite part is seeing all the different costumes that people come up with. Ideas range across a wide spectrum. Last year, I noticed a lot of Avril Lavigne wannabes walking around, whereas the year before I witnessed a good amount of "Hooter's girls."

Either way, Halloween sure makes for an interesting holiday. If you're not one who is up for all that participation, then there's always other ways to celebrate the nightmarish event, which can still be exciting and fun. Baking Halloween cookies or treats or even passing out candy to children are all good ways to celebrate. Also, making decorations for your dorm room, apartment, or house can be fun too.

What I like to do, and suggest others try, is to pop in a good horror flick. I am huge fan of horror movies and they create a mood unlike any other. Last year, my roommates and I began watching a series of scary movies a month before Halloween season even started. This helped to build suspense and to get each other ready for the major event. We watched the entire "Halloween" collection with killer Mike Myers and some movies from the "Friday the 13th" series.

Remember when we were kids and we used to participate in fun activities like bobbing for apples, shaving cream fights, toilet papering and egging houses, face painting, smashing pumpkins, and going to haunted houses?

I know that this year there will be no problem finding a good horror flick, as a slew of great movies have been coming out recently. This weekend, I saw "Cabin Fever," which was super-gory and definitely freaky. The main character is played an ex-"Boy Meets World" actor, but don't let that throw you. It's definitely a good flick to catch before the end of the month. Also, recently released "Cold Creek Manor," which I hear is really suspenseful, and the soon-to-be-released vampire movie "UnderWorld" are definitely worth checking out.

So, whether you're a Halloween-junkie like myself or are just looking to have a little fun this year, make sure you find a way to celebrate this long awaited day in whatever style serves you best. Happy Halloween!

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion
editorial@dailycollegian.com
413-545-3699
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BRITAIN BOUND

UMASS-BRED BAND READ YELLOW FINDS INTERNATIONAL FAME

By Kendra Smalter
Collegian Correspondent

Half of Read Yellow is sitting under a skull and cross bones flag in the kitchen of a small apartment on Main Street in Amherst. The glowing red eyes of the skull above their heads emulate the fiery attitude the band has onstage. But, on this Monday evening, far from the thrill of the stage, lead singer Evan Kenney and bassist Michelle Freivald are complaining about their day jobs.

"I basically work in fast food!" yells Freivald.

The daily life of the Amherst band may not be glamorous, but their plans to tour England, where the press is beginning to build, is anything but ordinary.

The August issue of New Musical Express listed Read Yellow on their "What's on the NME Stereo?" segment of their weekly magazine. Here in America, NME may not ring a bell, but in England every new band waits to be noticed by the publication. Just one mention on its pages and the rest of the reviews come rolling in. Two months later, The Independent, a large newspaper in London, chose the band's song "Read Yellow" as the single of the week. When asked about this publicity across the Atlantic, Kenney said, "I had no idea. I thought The Independent was just some kid's website, or something."

Three years ago the four band members, Jesse Vuona, 22, Worcester, Paul Koelle, 23, East Haven, CT, Freivald, 20, Franklin, and Kenney, 22, Norwood, began practicing in the Van Meter dormitory basement of the Central residential area.

"Evan and Jesse came up to me and a group of my friends in Franklin Dining Hall and asked us if we knew anyone who played bass," said Freivald. "Someone at the table told them I did and I just kind of nodded my head and said 'yes.'"

Shortly after some initial practice and gigs at parties, they stole Koelle from another band and the Sharks were born. Yes, the Sharks. The name Read Yellow came from a song title and became the band name in 2002. Just a few months after the band formed, they spent three hours in a studio and $100 to record their EP at Dead Air Studios in North Amherst. This recording landed Read Yellow a deal with Boston label Fenway Recordings. In a situation just out of a movie, they were "discovered" by the same A&R executive that signed Sonic Youth, Beck and At the

Continued on page 5

PHOTOS COURTESY READ YELLOW

Paloalto pay tribute to its 'Heroes' on new album

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Correspondent

Almost every article written about California quartet Paloalto focuses on their love of the lush British rock sound. One listen to their sophomore album, "Heroes and Villains," and it is clear that the band is guilty of cribbing from both their Britrock forefathers as well as their peers. Paloalto have the songwriting and technical talent necessary to allow them an eventual escape to the comparisons that have dogged them thus far in their career. They have run upon a fair amount of trouble in their short time in the music industry. Aside from record-label troubles, Paloalto went through a tumultuous upset in the lineup in the past few years, leaving singer/guitarist James Grundler as the only member remaining from the days of their last album. Since Grundler is the solitary songwriter as well, Paloalto seems to have become defined as a singular vision; luckily, he has no problem carrying that burden.

Most reviewers take great joy in holding Paloalto up against Coldplay, Travis, and Radiohead, but aside from slight vocal similarities to Thom Yorke, the band is actually somewhere in between U2 on not quite a "Beautiful Day" and Ours on "Prozac" (in fact singer/guitarist/songwriter James Grundler sounds more like Bono or Jimmy Gnecco than he does Yorke). It's Grundler's stunning Gnecco-esque vocals on songs like "Breathe In" and "Last Way Out Of Here" that make the sometimes eye-rolling lyrics bearable. "How do you feel suffocated/ Breathe In/ Look what's all around you" from the former and "When all your walls are down/ There's love" from the latter.

Paloalto 'Heroes and Villains' American

Luckily for the listener, lyrics like the above are rarities on the album. On the leadoff single "Fade Out/In" Grundler expresses his frustration with the music industry: "I don't want to fade out/ I don't want to fade in/ Like everybody should/ I don't want to fade out/ I don't want to fade in/ Like everything before." The harshest critic of this album could find that sentiment ironic, arguing that "Heroes and Villains" is only a little bit more than a tribute to bands like The Smiths and My Bloody Valentine who came before Paloalto.

COURTESY AMERICAN RECORDINGS

California-based band, Paloalto, is dedicated to developing their British-rock sound on "Heroes and Villians."

Grundler compliments his lyrics with superior musical arrangements. Musically, Paloalto is also much more reminiscent of Ours or Johnny Marr's solo outfit than they are of Coldplay or Travis. Their layering of textural electrics and strumming acoustics might not be new, but the band makes it work for them. The group's fetish for strings and atmospheric, swirling guitars also brings to mind Cinerama in top-form. Grundler seems at home doing both the slightly more upbeat, rocking songs such as "Fade Out/In" and "What You Are" and the softer, more melodic songs such as "Throwing Stones" and "Sleeping Citizens," and his ability to switch between tempos and moods makes the songs on the CD flow much more easily than an album in which there is, say, an awkwardly placed power ballad mid-way through.

Paloalto is a band that has stumbled upon a very unique problem. They have constructed a very good album; the melodies, harmonies, instrumentation, and lyrics all go together nicely. Rick Rubin, known mostly for his work with rap acts like Run-DMC in the '80s and harder rock acts like System of a Down currently, did an excellent job producing "Heroes And Villains," making it one of the best sounding albums of the year. Listeners won't be skipping a single song on the album and it can withstand multiple replays; songs such as "Going Going Gone" will stick in your head days after you've played it. The problem with "Heroes and Villains" comes with its heavy reliance on the influence of other bands' sounds. Additionally, the fact that other bands such as Cinerama and Ours exist today and are doing similar things, only better and with infinitely more original sounds, only serves to make Paloalto more generic.

Paloalto have shaped a very good album; in fact it would take a lot of work for them to upstage "Heroes And Villains" and if you have the ability to look at the album as a single piece, ignoring all the comparisons and influences that the band has endured, you will find work that is far superior to most of the pop-rock bands that clutter the compact disc racks today. Paloalto has found a sound that they seem comfortable with, and if they never evolve far beyond this then they will surely continue to make good records. But if Grundler finds a way to take a couple of extra steps in the "inventiveness" department, Paloalto can become a band that plays on the same field as similar, yet superior, acts such as Marr, Cinerama, and Ours.

New console more than most can 'N-Gage'

Press Start to Play
Reid Davenport

The wait for one of the most mind-blowing handheld systems to ever show up on the gaming market is almost over. On Oct. 7, Nokia will release the N-Gage, a brand new design that consists of a cell phone, wireless Internet device, gaming system and MP3 player all in one.

This is undoubtedly the single most anticipated handheld system to ever be released onto the electronic market. The Nokia N-Gage is everything a gamer would possibly want in a handheld and more. With games like "Tomb Raider" and "Splinter Cell" available for the system, it easily makes leaps and bounds over the Game Boy Advanced SP. The graphics are very good for a handheld and are almost as good as playing on your television. Games like "Tony Hawk 3" and "Monkey Ball" look extremely close to their consul counterparts.

The N-Gage looks confusing to use with all the buttons it possesses, but have no worries. The website can display exactly which buttons are used for gaming. Like any new system, it just takes time to get used to the new controller. If you are looking to play a game with your friend, who also owns the system, Nokia uses a program called "Blue Tooth" to eliminate having to use wires to play multiplayer games.

As for the other extras, they appear to be easy to use. The N-Gage has a USB port for the transfer of MP3s from your computer as well as an FM radio option. It comes with software for your PC to transfer files and information. This will be one of the major selling points of this power-packed system, as most handhelds currently available have functioned as gaming devices and nothing else. The system has its own small speakers, but unlike the GBA-SP, this system comes with an audio outlet. Nokia has also taken a step ahead of other handhelds by offering a special set of headphones for people with hearing aids. The headphones are designed to plug into a hearing aid so there are fewer problems with getting headphones on.

COURTESY NOKIA.COM

Nokia's N-Gage is the newest portable video-game player.

Similar to the GBA-SP, the N-Gage also has a rechargeable battery pack. It can last for around three hours of game or music play and two to four hours of phone usage with about an hour and a half of recharge time. It also has the optional car charger, like most phones, for those long trips back home from campus.

One aspect of this system that goes almost unnoticed is that the N-Gage is a cell phone as well. It does all the things that a normal cell phone would, including text messaging and more. From the looks of it, you need a headset to use the cell phone option. Plus, it would look ridiculous walking around with something resembling a gaming system, more so than a cell phone, to the side of your head. The N-Gage can also receive and send emails as long as the wireless network is available.

The N-Gage looks as if it will go uncontested on the gaming market for quite some time. They are already years ahead of its only rival, the GBA-SP, and looks to further its lead as the months pass. The Nokia N-Gage is priced at around $300 a pop. If you pre-order the system, you may be lucky enough to get it a day before it hits the market. For more information on N-Gage and the games available for it, go to www.N-Gage.com.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

Read Yellow enjoying success before trip across Atlantic

Continued from page 4

Drive-In.

"We were sitting upstairs at the Other Side Café in Boston when we saw Krist Novoselic from Nirvana sitting at a table near us," Freivald said. "A friend of ours who works at the café put on our CD and we noticed that Novoselic and the guy he was with were really listening to it. Then Jesse just walks over and says 'Hey, this is my band.' "

Vuona found out that the other man at the table was former president of Grand Royal Records (the Beastie Boys's label), Mark Kates. Kates has worked with bands like Nirvana, Siousie and the Banshees, the Sundays, White Zombie and Hole.

"Jesse gave him the CD without a lot of expectation, but he started coming to our shows and signed us to his label about six months later," said Freivald.

Freivald says the band has had a lot of success in their early career, but they have worked very hard to get where they are now.

"I get pissed off when a lot of bands are like 'uhhhh' [when trying to get signed], but you've just gotta do it."

Friend of the band and lead singer of emerging Amherst band, the Debras, James Patterson said, "Jesse has changed the face of self-promotion. He's pushy, but not annoying."

Is that the secret of Read Yellow's success? Innovative self-promotion? There must be more to it. It must be the music.

The mention in NME described the band "like Trail of Dead's little brothers (and sister)" and went on to say "Boston's extreemo screechers make an unholy racket."

That "unholy racket" refers to Kenney's wailing vocals and the frenzied lead guitar of Vuona as they collide in fevered atmosphere of their performances. With so much energy onstage, performing can be a dangerous job for Read Yellow. Freivald is constantly dodging Kenney's guitar, and with good reason. After the singer needed six stitches in his head when it slammed into Vuona's guitar, the stage is no longer a safe place. .

"We were playing a show in Northampton and I jumped down really quickly just as Jesse's guitar went up," Kenny said. "We went to the hospital around two in the morning after it happened at 10 that night."

When the nurse asked the blood stained Kenney why he hadn't come earlier he replied simply, "Oh, I was just hanging out."

Such is the life of a rock star.

COURTESY READ YELLOW

Read Yellow, originally called the Sharks, started playing in the Van Meter dormitory on the UMass campus three years ago.

The four songs on the Read Yellow EP share sounds with other rock stars like the aforementioned ... And You Will Know Us by the Trail of Dead as well as Sonic Youth and Fugazi. The slow build up of the song "Static" and the eerie guitar and disjointed, spoken lyrics of "The Association" sounds familiar of At the Drive-In. Screaming vocals pulsate between thrashing guitars in the single "Read Yellow." NME has chosen this two and a half minute song as one of the singles of the week for their Sept. 27 issue.

Freivald describes their sound as "post-punk" which certainly seems true with these four short, but intense, songs. The Independent says Read Yellow "extract the energy from garage rock and pump it full of punk emotion that maintains its power and awesome characteristics over all four songs." What does the band think of all this positive press coming from England?

"I think it's so funny, it's hilarious," says Kenney, who writes the majority of the lyrics. "When we recorded those songs we had no intention that they would ever be heard by anyone else besides the four of us."

The band has not gone unnoticed in their home country, either. The video for "The Association", filmed by University of Massachusetts graduate Adam Carullo, is currently playing on MTV2. The video debuted on Canada's Much Music station where it ranked on their top 20 list.

Less than a month ago Read Yellow was nominated for a Boston Music Award in the category of New Rock/Pop Band. Though the band did not win, they still enjoyed the recognition and the ceremony at the Wang Center ... to an extent.

"We got kind of crappy seats," Kenney said. "I think bands that weren't even nominated got better seats than us."

Read Yellow worked hard for those crappy seats. While students at UMass, they built up a fan base within a punk subculture, which went unnoticed by the university. When other, outside, bands are paid for their performances on campus, Read Yellow are refused. Frustration in Vuona's voice is noticeable. "We've put a lot of hard work and a lot of money into those shows and the university completely ignored us."

Small obstacles aside, Vuona said he wants to "become one of those bands that is respected, especially in a grassroots way."

Respect for the music is much more important to the band than having the right image. Many new bands in Britain, where the Read Yellow EP was released Sept. 9, seem to have a certain "hipster" look which NME is quick to praise. As single of the week, the review included a comment on the band's "correct hair."

"I wouldn't say we were a hipster band," said Freivald, "it's hip because it's new and original."

Before this properly coiffed band leaves for English shores for a week starting Oct. 27, they are playing at local favorite, Pearl Street Nightclub on Oct. 3. Read Yellow will open for rock veterans Mission of Burma, which formed in 1979.

"It's nice to be playing for people we know, said Freivald, "though it sometimes makes me more nervous when the crowd is a lot of our friends."

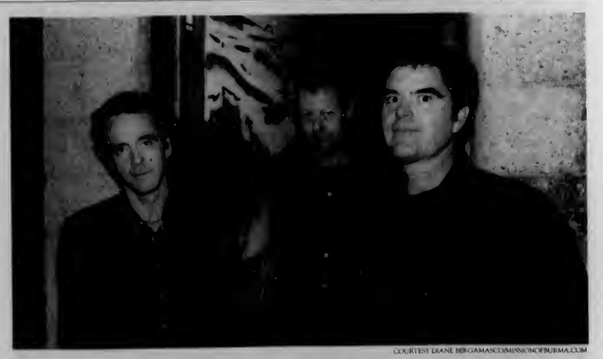
Friday at Pearl Street may be Pioneer Valley's last chance to see Read Yellow live before they're booked solid for the next ten years. With praise like "best, most recognized output that Boston has given the music world since the Pixies" and "intensity far greater that anything the Hives have done" from silentuproar.com, it will not be long before Read Yellow are headlining shows and asking the Hives to open for them.

Reunited: mission accomplished

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

In October of 1982, the New York Times called their debut album "A raw power dissertation ... a compelling piece of work." Countless bands cite them as a major influence and inspiration. Artists ranging from alternative rock legends R.E.M. to technophile Moby have covered and recorded their songs. Members of the band went on to record and produce albums with groups such as Yo La Tengo and dozens more. Tonight, they are playing in the Pioneer Valley.

Mission of Burma
Read Yellow
Friday Oct. 3
Pearl Street Ballroom
Northampton
$17.50 advance
$20 door



For the first time in almost 20 years, Boston rock pioneers Mission of Burma will take the stage in western Massachusetts. The recently reunited four-piece unit changed the landscape of American punk and provided a basis for the rise of the "college rock" sound of the mid-'80s.

"What's interesting is many bands cite Burma as an influence, but I can't think of too many bands that sound anything like them," says Al Quint, founder/publisher and editor of the venerable Boston scene diary Suburban Voice magazine. "Sure, they drew from the punk thing and a lot of people who were part of the late '70s Boston punk scene embraced them, but their appeal was further reaching than that."

The quartet formed in 1979, when ex-Moving Parts members Clint Conley (bass/vocals) and Roger Miller (guitar/vocals) started playing with drummer Pete Prescott. The musicians played as a trio until later in the year, when the addition of Martin Swope on "sonic manipulation and tape loops" filled out the angular, raucous Mission of Burma sound. The band waited until June of 1980 to release a proper debut, using the interim time to perfect their craft through endless rehearsals and live shows in Boston.

"Their first 7-inch 'Academy Fight Song/Max Ernst' totally lit up the airwaves in 1980," explained Quint. "I heard 'Academy' on the radio and it totally connected."

Over their short career, Mission of

COURTESY DIANE BERGAMASCO/MISSIONOFBURMA.COM

Legendary rock band Mission of Burma is making a stop at Pearl Street in Northampton tonight en route its 2003 reunion tour.

Mission of Burma reunion tour rolls through NoHo

Continued from page 4

Burma produced a handful of singles, EPs, and one full-length recording. In 1981, the band released the "Signals, Calls, and Marches" EP on Ace of Hearts Records. The album included a re-recorded version of their debut single "Academy Fight Song," which went on to be handpicked by Michael Stipe to become part of R.E.M.'s live set during their formative years. "Signals" also included the fiery "That's When I Reach For My Revolver," one of the band's defining songs, later covered (and significantly altered) by Moby. The album also included Burma classics "This is Not a Photograph" and "All World Cowboy Romance."

Following the release of their debut full-length "Vs." in the fall of 1982, the constant noise and stage volume of the band's live set began to cause problems for Roger Miller. He was diagnosed with a condition known as tinnitus, a painful and disorienting ear disorder brought on by unprotected exposure to high decibel noise. Mission of Burma broke up after a brief, but influential four years in 1983.

All four of the band's principal members stayed active in the music industry, leading to Burma reunion shows in Boston and New York City in January of 2002. They were headliners at this year's edition of the hipster gathering All Tomorrow's Parties in LA; they were added at request of festival curator and "The Simpsons" creator Matt Groening. After playing in Northampton tonight, the band will also be playing shows in Providence, amidst rumors of new recordings.

"The thing about Burma is that they didn't really 'fit in' with any set style," says Quint. "I think they're one of the most important bands in the history of Boston's music scene, period."

Mission of Burma plays at Pearl Street in Northampton, with opening act and University of Massachusetts alumni Read Yellow. Tickets are $20 and the show begins at 8:30 pm.

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Familiarity breeds content.
AMHERST downtown
We have it all!

Limbaugh explains resignation

By Jason Straziuso
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — One day after giving up his job at ESPN amid a fury of criticism over his comments about Donovan McNabb, Rush Limbaugh explained his decision this way: It was the path of least resistance.

Speaking at the National Association of Broadcasters' convention here, Limbaugh said Thursday he resigned as an ESPN sports analyst to protect network employees from the uproar.

But he still didn't back down from the remarks he made three days earlier, when he said the Philadelphia Eagles' quarterback was overrated because the media wanted to see a black quarterback succeed.

"The great people at ESPN did not want to deal with this kind of reaction," the commentator told the convention. "The path of least resistance became for me to resign."

Democratic presidential candidates and the NAACP had criticized the radio talk show host, calling on him to quit. And Limbaugh did late Wednesday.

It was on ESPN's "Sunday NFL Countdown" show — before McNabb led the Eagles to a 23-13 victory over the Buffalo Bills — that Limbaugh said he didn't think McNabb was as good as perceived from the start.

"I think what we've had here is a little social concern in the NFL. The media has been very desirous that a black quarterback do well," Limbaugh said on the show. "There is a little hope invested in McNabb, and he got a lot of credit for the performance of this team that he didn't deserve. The defense carried this team."

Limbaugh has denied that his comments were racially motivated. He said at the convention in Philadelphia that he had thought about the issue the night before making the comments and wanted to write an essay on it.

"It's something I have believed for quite a while," Limbaugh said. "I don't mean it to hurt anybody. ... It's just an opinion."

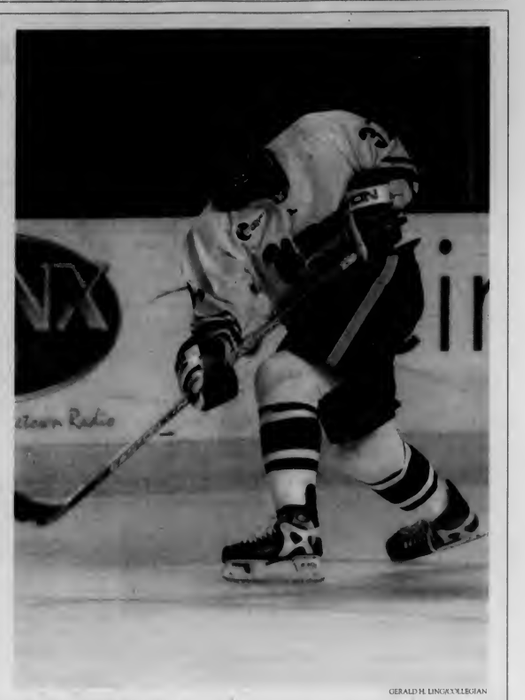
McNabb said Wednesday that he didn't mind criticism of his performance but was upset Limbaugh made his race an issue.

George Bodenheimer, president of ESPN and ABC Sports, accepted Limbaugh's resignation, saying: "We believe that he took the appropriate action to resolve this matter expeditiously."

Meanwhile, law enforcement sources who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity confirmed that Limbaugh is being investigated in Florida for illegally buying prescription drugs.

Limbaugh, the radio host of the politically focused "Rush Limbaugh Show," did not address the drug investigation reports in his speech to broadcasters.

Premiere Radio Networks, which syndicates the politically focused "Rush Limbaugh Show" to more than 650 markets, issued a statement from Limbaugh on Thursday saying: "I am unaware of any investigation by any authority involving me. No government representative has contacted me directly or indirectly. If my assistance is required, I will, of course, cooperate fully."



The allegations were first reported by the National Enquirer.

The Enquirer had interviewed Wilma Cline, who said she became Limbaugh's drug connection after working as his maid. She said Limbaugh had abused OxyContin and other painkillers.

Ed Shohat, a Miami lawyer for Cline and her husband, said Thursday, "The Clines stand by the story." Shohat said neither he nor his clients would comment further.

National Enquirer Editor in Chief David Perel declined to say whether the Clines were paid for their interview, but said the tabloid does "pay for interviews, photographs and exclusives — as long as they can be proven to be true." Referring to media reports saying the Clines were paid six figures for their story, Perel said, "People are just making things up."

Limbaugh skipped his radio show Thursday to attend the broadcasters convention. He was scheduled to be back on the air Friday.

Gerald M. Lingo/Collegian

'X' marks the spot
Senior Nick Kuiper and the UMass hockey team make their first return to the ice tonight, when it hosts St. Francis Xavier in a 7 p.m. exhibition at the Mullins Center Practice Rink. It will be the Minutemen's first action since their Hockey East semifinal loss to New Hampshire in March.

Baker makes return to camp

Continued from page 8

ed to the point where he was rarely used.

Danny Ainge, who took over the Celtics' basketball operations at the end of last season, said he doesn't doubt that Baker has the skills to contribute.

"I think the bigger question is: How Vin will deal with the attention, expectations, the pressure and the challenge ahead of overcoming any sort of addiction?" Ainge said. "I think those are his challenges."

But at least Baker has the team on his side.

"Everybody on this team, and in this ownership group, feels close to Vin. Vin is the most likable guy on the team," Grousbeck said. "Everybody's pulling for him."

Baker said he didn't know what kind of reaction to expect from the fans when the Celtics open the season at home against Miami on Oct. 29. Ainge said he thinks there is the fans are willing to welcome Baker back.

"I think we live in a society that's very forgiving, and everybody's looking for a feel-good story," Ainge said. "He has a chance to give us a real feel-good story this year."

Sox struggling in key situations

AP Photo/Doug Mills

Oakland Athletic's Pamon Hernandez bunts in the 12th inning to bring home Eric Chavez with the winning run in Oakland's 5-4 win over the Boston Red Sox in game 1 of the opening-round AL playoff series Wednesday, in Parkland, Calif. Red Sox catcher Jason Varitek is at left.

By Janie McCauley
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Things have become so desperate for Boston's loaded lineup, David Ortiz is giving Manny Ramirez hitting advice.

Understand, Ortiz is 0-for-9 with four strikeouts hitting behind Ramirez in two playoff losses to the Oakland Athletics — but Ramirez, the team's most dangerous batter, is 1-for-8 with two strikeouts and has stranded seven baserunners.

"I keep telling him to calm down, be patient out there," said Ortiz, who hit 31 homers during the regular season with the AL's third-best slugging percentage.

Ramirez and Ortiz aren't the only ones not producing for the powerful Red Sox so far in their best-of-five AL division series.

Todd Walker, a big bright spot with four hits and three RBIs for the Red Sox in Wednesday's 5-4, 12-inning loss, went 0-for-4 with four groundouts a day later in Boston's 5-1 defeat Thursday in Game 2.

AL batting champion Bill Mueller is 2-for-9 with two strikeouts in the series and Kevin Millar is 2-for-10 with three K's.

A failure to score is a big reason the Red Sox are headed home to Fenway Park with a 2-0 deficit in the best-of-five series. They desperately need to figure things out in a hurry or this team — like so many from Boston before — will be left to think about another year of postseason heartbreak for this frustrated franchise.

"The way things have been going all season long, I don't know what degree of disruption this is," manager Grady Little said. "It's a little uncharacteristic of our club. And now we'll be going back to Fenway and hope we can get it back on track right away, because we have no time to waste."

And all those Red Sox rooters insisted this was their year, too. With such a potent offense, they had reason to believe.

Boston led the majors in almost every offensive category this season — batting, runs scored, hits, doubles, extra-base hits, total bases, sacrifice flies, slugging and on-base percentage.

The Red Sox finished one home run behind Texas for the most homers in the majors with 238.

Eight players had at least 85 RBIs and the Red Sox broke the major league record for slugging percentage set by the 1927 New York Yankees. Six players hit more than 20 home runs.

Yet so far in the postseason, Boston can't get anything done. Pitching rules in these playoffs.

"Everybody knows our pitching is great," A's shortstop Miguel Tejada said. "That's why they're not hitting. But we can't think that they're not going to hit. They're the best team in baseball right now, and we can't go to sleep against those guys."

Old foes clash today at Rudd

Continued from page 8

Siena (2-1) and New Hampshire (1-0) — but they have been unable to convert on the majority of them. But Koch is unfazed by the Maroon and White's scoring struggles.

"You're going to have games where you have chances and you don't put them away," he said.

Seniors Dan Colwell (4 goals, 2 assists) and Ptah Myers (4 g, 1 a) along with junior Oral Bullen (3 g, 2 a) are all an intricate part of the Minuteman offense.

"I expect them to be there," Koch said of his leading scorers.

The Minutemen offense is deep, with seven different players marking the scoring sheet this season. Koch believes "there will be more people joining that group [in the future]."

"You will see [senior] Andrew Eicher get a few goals and [freshman] Richard Higa is certainly a scoring threat."

For all the variety on offense, the Minutemen have found a stable situation when it comes to defending their goal.

Freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman (4-0) posted his first career shutout last Saturday against UNH. "He's doing a good job proving himself and he will definitely be in goal for the first game on Friday," Koch said. "He's working hard and we're very happy with what he's done."

The Maroon and White will continue their homestand Sunday against Richmond. UMass leads the series 1-0-2, with a 0-0 tie in the 2001 A-10 finals. The Spiders haven't broken out yet, but have shown signs of life in beating national top-30 Coastal Carolina 2-1 on Sept. 13.

Struggling squads set to meet

Continued from page 8

than it is. This is a great group of young women; they're working their butts off, and are getting better every game. That's all I can ever ask for," Shea said.

Like UMass, the Orangewomen have been on a skid as of late, losing their last three. They also are coming off of back-to-back road losses to two Top 25 teams, having been edged by No. 6 Penn State and No. 18 Boston College. Against the Nittany Lions, 'Cuse took an early lead before being put to rest by four unanswered goals.

Also like the Minutewomen, the goaltender is the player to watch for Syracuse. Betsy Wagner, who earlier this year attained ECAC Goalkeeper of the Week and Big East co-Defensive Player of the Week honors, has been having a great year in the cage for the Orangewomen.

Wagner has halved Tocco in both saves (52) and goals allowed (22), but a slightly better save percentage (.703) should make this an interesting matchup. Nonetheless, it will be a goalie's duel tonight at J. S. Coyne Stadium.

Leading the 'Cuse offense will be seniors Jackie Sheaffer and Ann-Marie Guglieri, along with team points leader Meredith Gettel, a junior. Combined, the trio has tallied seven goals, which matches the UMass team total this season. Although they may have not turned heads in the statistics column, the Orangewomen offense is not to be taken lightly.

Also not to be overlooked is 'Cuse's defense. Thanks to the efforts of juniors Lindsay Kocher and Erin Fitzgerald, as well as sophomores Joanne Lombard and Michelle Sola, opponents are averaging just 13 shots a game on this backfield.

"Syracuse is an excellent team; they're going to be very good. We always have a great game with them," said Shea, alluding to the number of overtime and last-second wins in recent years. "We're both looking for a win right now, so I think it's going to be a great game."

Gerald M. Lingo/Collegian

Freshman Tracy Razzano and the UMass field hockey team will visit Syracuse tonight.

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Featuring Aveda and Paul Mitchell Products
Fall Special
Take $5 off any coloring highlights in auburns, golds, or beiges starting at $50!
Waxing Special
100% Organic NuFree wax!
Take $5 off 3/4 leg or lower leg!

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

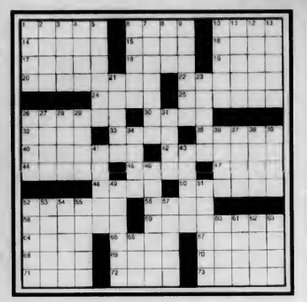
Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*OCMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

1 in 40 Billion • By

Billy of the Whale • By

JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark

ZooMass • By Sarah



Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Krzykowski

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Native: slangily
7 Flood controls
10 Fuel source
14 Employee
15 Mainline work
16 Cottontail
17 Hardware buys
18 Winter forecast
19 Coating of frost
20 Secretary or
22 Hardened to 24 Many wives
25 Not a soul
28 One called animal
30 "Othello" plotter
32 Were rivals
33 Nut phony
35 Kids' toys
37 Overstocked
42 Eyelash
enhancer
44 Take a break
45 Seafood choice
47 They give a hoot
48 Clairvoir
49 Businessmen
50 Dubious
prescriptions
52 Short jacket
56 Novelist Jean
58 Grownups
59 Plan
64 "Cheers" regular
65 Non-AKC dog
66 Weather saying
68 Forest plan
69 "Got it!"
70 Grow!
71 Former superpower
72 Singer Vitale
73 Partner a prop

Down
1 Western author
Grey
2 Gouda alternative
3 Object on radar
4 Stream
5 Sponge up
6 Cone medicine
7 Conclusion
8 Pasture sound
9 Planting
10 Bush
11 Egypt's capital
12 With weapons
13 Strapped for cash
21 Hunger for 23 Secluded corners
26 Bay for suns
27 Play charades
28 Eye, to Pierre
29 "Dare" author
Forbes
31 Sherwood Gluck
34 Wide with acid
36 Computer screen graphic
37 Playing machines
38 Hard wine in Portugal
39 Back talk
41 Put forth effort
43 More proficient
46 Turkey cooker
49 Type of dust
or sky
51 Lime, as lime
53 Alaskan native
54 Dumpling outputs
54 Entices
55 Genre of fiction
57 Out-and-out
60 Popular fan
61 Certain decades
62 Richard of Broadway
Bridges
63 Cheer
66 Can. neighbor

Questions? Comments? Interested in submitting comics?
comics_collegian@yahoo.com

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Dinner
- Dill Salmon
- Veal Madeline Supreme
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Friday
- High: 59
- Low: 39

Saturday
- High: 65
- Low: 47

Sunday
- High: 59
- Low: 37

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
Photo Technician
Amelia P. Lincoln
Copy Editor
Meghan Healy
Production Supervisor
Irene Ros
Production Staff
Scott Pihl, Shannon Farrington, Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Watch your back!

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Make me believe you. Work it like you mean it. Keep pushing and it will work.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Watch your money and stay in touch with elder family members.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Be social and creative and romance will evolve.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're feeling the financial crunch as much as UMass is, watch your money.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It's raining and cold. You're depressed - get out and party, you'll be glad you did.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
Oppurtunities abound, with your industriousness you'll take advantage today.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The cool New England autumn brings you new interests ... and new bedmates.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Welcome to family feud! Stay out of the conflicts around you.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Lose yourself in romance this weekend. Take that hottie out!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
As for a raise, you're at the top of your game. Your income will grow!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Reevaluate your partnerships. Take time making decisions.

Quote for the Day

"Music is well said to be the speech of angels."

-Thomas Carlyle

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

Apartment for Rent

6 Room-4 Bedroom apt. $1200/month plus utilities. Northampton- 584-4920

Apartment for Rent

2 Bedroom, 1 Full Bath, Loft Style apartment. Washer/Dryer in unit. $1300/month. Downtown Amherst 978-546-5243

Auto for Sale

1988 Acura Integra LS 4Dr. Grey $500.00 413-883-1835

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

1989 Toyota Camry New Engine + stereo Great Condition Must sell $1400. OBO 774-836-8539

Auto Repair

Imported cars a specialty. 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for TJ.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

International Sales for consulting/software firm. Multi-Lingual Telephone skills required. Economics a plus. Early AM hours required. Full or part time. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com

Employment

Mad Science® Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Employment

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Part-time: Responsible student to post flyers on campus. Must be dependable. Call 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Ask for Ted.

For Sale

Archos Jukebox 6000 6 GIG mp3 player/HD $85.00 413-883-1835

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Roommate Wanted

Looking for quiet, non-smoking female roommate. 2 share 2 bedroom apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

Services

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

Shear Bliss Day Spa As Seen on TV Ceramic Asian Hair Straightening *Smooth, Soft, Shiny, Straight Hair Call 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now . Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips/high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

Spring Break - Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airfare. Tickets to over 15 other national destinations including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean or hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else. Limited offer call now. Commission reps/positions also available. 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Room Parties, Free Drinks and Cover Admissions. Rep Positions and Hot Trips Available. 1-800-231-4388 www.EpicureanTours.com

Tutor

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel call Dr. Klime 413-552-8609

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Zito's night off gets a win for A's

By GREG BEACHAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Barry Zito got plenty of rest and no relaxation on the night before he dominated the Boston Red Sox.

While his Oakland teammates worked late for a 12-inning victory in the division series opener, Zito was wide-awake in bed. He turned the radio on and off, called his parents æ anything to stay occupied until the Athletics were finished.

On Thursday, Zito had a spring in his step and a nasty dip in his curveball — and he put the A's in command of the best-of-five series by striking out nine over seven impressive innings. Oakland sent bleary-eyed Boston to the brink of playoff elimination with a 5-1 victory in Game 2.

The teams took the field for batting practice slightly more than 10 hours after Eric Chavez scored the winning run in Game 1 on Ramon Hernandez's daring bases-loaded bunt.

"I think I pictured it pretty well," Zito said. "But I still came in the clubhouse and watched the tape of the last couple of guys, just to make it real and get me fired up for the game today."

Red Sox	1
Oakland	5

Mission accomplished: The Cy Young winner's looping curve was in top form, and Boston's record-setting offense spent the afternoon flailing at his best stuff. The A's didn't score again after an impressive second-inning rally, but Zito and relievers Chad Bradford and Keith Foulke easily made it stand up.

"Everybody was here early, even though it was a really tough night," said Hernandez, who had an RBI single in Game 2. "It's the time of year when you don't have to worry about getting tired. We're a young team, and we love it."

Zito allowed five hits and two walks for the A's, who have lost in the first round in each of the past three postseasons. Oakland finally can advance to its first league championship series since 1992 with one more victory.

"I think we definitely have something to prove," Zito said. "We realize our guys are not going to be coming back every year. We lost Jason (Giambi), and the whole (Miguel) Tejada thing, we don't know what's going to happen with that.

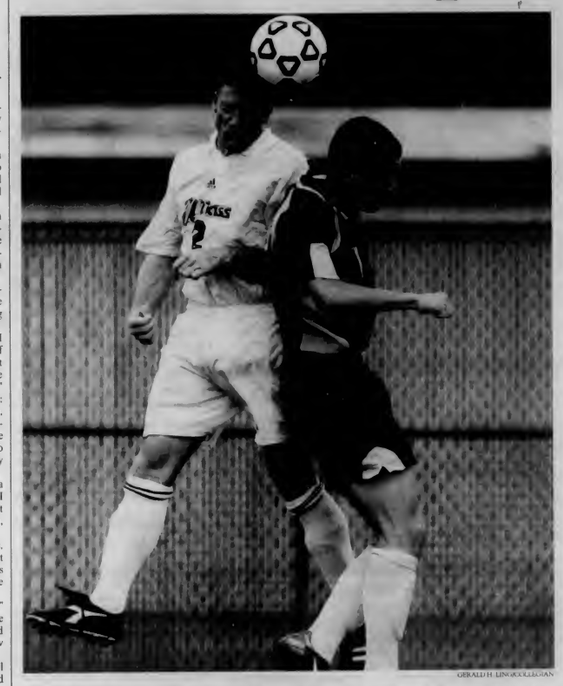
"We don't have a lot more years to say, 'Oh, we'll get them next year.' We have to really bear down and get this series as soon as we can."

Game 3 is Saturday at Fenway Park. Derek Lowe, the losing pitcher in the opener, will start against Ted Lilly.

"Zito pitched a great game," said Nomar Garciaparra, who went 1-for-3. "He put us against the wall, but we've been there before."

Eric Byrnes' first playoff hit was a two-run double during Oakland's rally against knuckleballer Tim Wakefield. Todd Walker, who hit two homers for Boston in the opener, made a comical throwing error that also allowed two runs to score.

Bradford pitched the eighth for Oakland — and one night after throwing 51 pitches over three relief innings, Foulke finished off the Red Sox in the ninth with 20 more.



After the complicated dramatics of the opener, Game 2 was fairly straightforward: The A's relied on the dominant starting pitching and big innings that have carried them to four straight postseasons.

Oakland has been in this situation before, however: The A's won the first two games of their 2001 division series against the New York Yankees, only to lose the final three.

"Anyone who was around in 2001 knows we can't take anything for granted," Byrnes said. "I guarantee that nobody in here has thought beyond today's game."

A few of the Red Sox have been here before, too: Boston trailed Cleveland 0-2 in the 1999 division series before rallying to win it in five games.

Old foes square off

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Craig Canavan has become the Minutemen's top defender this season, thanks to his hard-hitting style of play. The Maroon and White open up the Atlantic 10 season at home today against the George Washington Colonials.

GW visits Rudd today

By BECKY HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Call it a revenge game. Or just call it another weekend in the Atlantic 10. Either way, the real season starts now.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team (6-2) opens conference play today against George Washington (2-6) at Rudd Field. This is a highly anticipated rematch as the Colonials knocked UMass out of last season's A-10 tournament in the first round with a 4-3 overtime win.

"It's always easier to play at home," Coach Sam Koch said. "You're starting off against two of the best teams, but I think you've got to play them sometime so you might as well play them now."

The Minutemen continue conference play Sunday against Richmond (3-4-1).

The Maroon and White is looking to extend its five game win streak, while GW is starting to turn things around, coming off a 4-1 win over Towson.

"I don't think they're as strong in the back as they have been," Koch said, "but obviously in their last result over Towson, which is traditionally a strong program, they did a good job beating them. It was a convincing win."

Leading GW in scoring with seven goals is junior forward Arnar Johannsson, who according to Koch "is one of the best strikers in the conference." Johannsson was the 2001 A-10 rookie of the year, and is a vital cog in the Colonial offense.

Although GW is off to a slow start, Koch is still preparing his squad for the team that ended the Minutemen's hopes of a trip to the NCAA tournament. They'll get a chance at vengeance today at 3:30.

"We have to continue to improve on the areas that need improvement and if we continue to do that we're going to get better and better, and I think we'll be in pretty good shape."

UMass has had numerous scoring opportunities in the last two games — wins over

Continued on page 6

Similar squads meet up in Syracuse

By BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After suffering back-to-back road losses to two Top 25 teams, the Massachusetts field hockey team will breathe a bittersweet sigh of relief when they travel to Syracuse, N.Y. tonight at 7 p.m., to face an almost identical Orangewoman squad.

The Minutewomen (2-8) have lost their last two games by a combined score of 17-0, being outshot 52-4 and dominated on penalty corners 23-3.

The Minutewomen have been outshot 214-63 on the year, with only half of those 63 being shot on net. If they are to keep pace with Syracuse (3-6), regardless of the latter's talent, they will need to erase what's happened and make some things happen on offense.

But statistics seem to be nothing more than numbers, as UMass coach Patty Shea remains confident in her young squad. "It seems every team has their best game against us," Shea said. "In some respects it's a complement [because] it means we do bring out the best in other teams. They know that we come out to compete."

Leading the offensive charge for UMass are sophomore Jaime Bawden (1 goal, 1 assist) and freshman Marije Tigchelaar (1g, 1a), and the onus falls on them to score the team's first goal since Sept. 20.

As usual, the player to watch for the Minutewomen is goalkeeper Christine Tocco, who is second in the Atlantic 10 in saves (105). Although her save percentage has dropped (.700), Tocco is averaging 10.5 saves a game, which also ranks second in the A-10.

On the other side, Tocco has let up 45 goals over the first ten games, thanks in part to a defense that has allowed an average of 21.4 shots per game. The defense will rely on the backfield of lone senior Kristin Hopwood and sophomore Katelyn Woolfrey to put a clamp on the Orangewoman offense.

No matter what, though, Shea is ever the optimist for her squad. "[To] everybody in the outside world [our situation] looks worse

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Patricia Borneo has one goal in nine starts for the Minutewomen this season.

UMASS
Weekend Schedule

Friday, Oct. 3

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	Geo. Wash.	3:30 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at Geo. Wash.	4 p.m.
Ice Hockey	St. Francis Xavier	7 p.m.
Field Hockey	at Syracuse	7 p.m.
Tennis	at Eastern Invitational	All day

Saturday, Oct. 4

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. UNH	1 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at Richmond	7 p.m.
Tennis	at Eastern Invitational	All day

Sunday, Oct. 5

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. Richmond	1 p.m.
Tennis	at Eastern Invitational	All day

Baker makes return

By JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WALTHAM (AP) — Viewing his alcohol-related suspension as "a second chance at my career," Vin Baker returned to the Boston Celtics for the opening of training camp on Thursday and promised to show his teammates that his problems are in the past.

"I'm approaching camp like it's my rookie season in Milwaukee," he said on the Celtics' practice court on media day. "My after-care program's in place. Most of my therapy's going to be right here with my teammates."

Baker was in the middle of his worst season as a pro last year when he was suspended indefinitely on Feb. 27. He later admitted that he is a binge drinker and sought treatment.

With Baker in rehab, the Celtics made it to the Eastern Conference semifinals, where they were swept by the New Jersey Nets.

"The lowest point had to be when I realized I wasn't going to finish the season with the team," Baker said Thursday in his first public appearance since his suspension. "During the whole time, I just thought, 'This is going to make me a better person, a better father, a better son.' Ultimately, it will make me a better basketball player."

But he also added: "The situation is bigger than me — 18.6 million Americans were affected by it last year."

Baker said he is in the best physical and mental condition of his career. But he said the same thing at media day last year, after the Celtics brought the Hartford, Conn., native back to New England in a move they hoped would revitalize his career.

The former All-Star didn't thrive back home, though. He continued drinking and his game suffered, though he said Thursday that he was never under the influence while on the basketball court.

By February, he was rarely playing and contributing even less, averaging five points and four rebounds in 18 minutes per game. After negotiations with the team, he accepted a suspension that would give him a chance to get his life in order.

"We all figured out what was the right thing to do, as best as we could," Celtics owner Wyc Grousbeck said. "He's the one who gets the credit for sticking to his deal. I want to compliment him for rising to the occasion and really coming through a difficult situation."

Baker has three years and about $44 million left on his contract, a deal that makes it impossible for Boston to trade him. With Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce also making big money, the Celtics don't have room under the salary cap to add much to their roster.

Walker, for one, thinks things can work out to Boston's benefit.

"If he's on top of his game, the sky's the limit how good we really can be," Walker said. "To bounce back so quickly in a five or six month span is a tribute to him and I'm happy to see him smiling again."

The 6-foot-11 Baker was the eighth overall pick by the Milwaukee Bucks in the 1993 draft. He averaged 21 points and 10 rebounds over his last two seasons in Milwaukee before he was traded to Seattle for the 1997-98 season.

His first season in Seattle showed only slight dropoff, and he was good enough to be picked for the 2000 U.S. Olympic team. But by the time the Sydney games came around, his play had deteriorat-

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 24

Red Sox win leads to riot in Southwest

By MORRIS SINGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A celebration of the Red Sox victory over the Oakland Athletics turned ugly on Saturday night as students gathered outside of the dormitories in the Southwest residential area at the University of Massachusetts, lighting fireworks and overturning two cars.

The UMass Police Department made two arrests during the riot. Kevin Raposo of Somerville, Mass. was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct. Vincent Robert Mazza of West Springfield, Mass. was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and inciting a riot. Neither is a UMass student.

The riot started after the end of the game, students said, to praise Red Sox outfielder Trot Nixon's game-winning homerun. The UMPD sent about 30 officers to the scene at 11:23 p.m. in an attempt to break up the destructive behavior.

"After the game ended, [the riot] started as a celebration," said Barbara O'Connor, chief of the UMPD.

The crowd continued to build, and officers requested that people move along, she said. Some members of the crowd then began to riot against the police instead of following instruction. O'Connor said officers had to take action.

Five officers were injured while attempting to disperse the crowd, including four who were hurt by rocks thrown by students, O'Connor said. Three students were injured as well, including one who was hit in the face with a projectile and lost some teeth, she said.

Continued on page 2

KYLE MCCLELLAN/COLLEGIAN

Students riot outside of Southwest residential area after the Boston Red Sox defeated the Oakland Athletics in Saturday night's game.

Men's Resource Center marches to end violence

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

A participant in the Men's Walk to End Abuse marches down North Pleasant Street in Amherst Center on Friday.

By DEBORAH GEIGER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

AMHERST — Trailblazing the highway is usually left for hitchhikers and Chevy owners, but members of the Men's Resource Center in Western Massachusetts marched forty miles last week in an effort to raise public awareness about violence.

The four-day Men's Walk to End Abuse, which ran from Oct. 1 to Oct. 4, covered the areas serviced by the Men's Resource Center, from Springfield to Greenfield.

"This is a chance for us to be together and make a statement," said Steven Botkin, founder of the Men's Crisis Center. "To me, the walk is another way that men can make a statement publicly about being against violence and abuse in our families and communities."

The four-day, 40-mile trek across the three counties of Western Massachusetts began on October 1, from Springfield to Holyoke. It continued on Oct. 2, from Holyoke to Northampton. On Oct. 3, they walked from Northampton to Amherst and UMass, and on Oct. 4, from South Deerfield to Greenfield. The walk helped launch October as Domestic Violence Awareness Month, emphasizing that there are men who are taking responsibility to end male violence — not just women.

"This is a men's walk to end men's abuse," said Karen Fogliatti, a Men Overcoming Violence (MOVE) problem group co-facilitator. Fogliatti, the only woman who spent Friday walking from Northampton to the Everywoman's Center on the University campus, also walked the first route from Springfield to Holyoke.

"It's about bringing up that awareness. That [men and women] are of equal value," she said. "We teach ways of dealing with when they get triggered. Women are more verbally adept in arguments, so they get overwhelmed...and they just strike out... their anger just leads to a boiling point and then they just explode."

Fogliatti helps run the MOVE Program, a state-certified batterers' intervention program. MOVE focuses on those who have used physical, emotional, verbal, economic or sexual abuse as a way to control their partners or loved ones — and are taught specific alternatives to end the abusiveness.

"We teach them to take time outs," she said. "We teach them to learn to breathe, to deescalate their anger, to recognize their negative self talk. They address their sexist attitudes and 'tapes' that are running in their heads, and change it into positive self talk."

MOVE suggests an approach called "compassionate confrontation," where the abuse that already has been done is not shamed. The program emphasizes dealing with the problems not of the relationship but of the abuser.

"A lot of guys just stuff the anger," said Fogliatti. "Which just leads to that boiling point." Russell Bradbury-Carlin, also a MOVE group coordinator, runs fourteen groups in the Connecticut Valley once a week. For every group, there

Continued on page 2

Professor visits Afghanistan

By STEVE URBON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — It was early August, almost two years after the rout of the Taliban, and Afghan warlord Abdul Rashid Dostum was attending the wedding of one of his generals when he was informed that there was a man outside who wanted to talk to him, an American.

Americans simply are not supposed to be in northern Afghanistan these days. It's far too dangerous. The U.S. State Department advises everyone to stay away for their own good.

But Gen. Dostum soon found himself face-to-face with an unlikely visitor, 36-year-old Brian Glyn Williams, a history professor from the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth.

Dr. Williams somehow had bluffed, bribed and finagled his way into one of the most dangerous places on Earth — especially for an American civilian.

He not only wanted to talk to Gen. Dostum, he wanted to stay a while, to be "embedded," to use the phrase of the day, with the 25,000 nomadic Uzbeki soldiers who keep the peace and rule the countryside in the region around the sprawling city of Mazar-I-Sharif.

He wanted to know how the war on terror was going, how the rebuilding of Afghanistan was going.

"I'm here to tell your story," he told the skeptical general, who, Dr. Williams said, "hates being called a warlord. He doesn't like the word at all.

He'd rather be called the interlocutor for the community, defender of the ethnic Uzbeks. They call him 'Baba,' which means father."

The world still calls him warlord, responsible for the destruction of the Taliban and the capture of the "American Taliban," Johnny Walker Lindh. But it also blames Gen. Dostum for the deaths of hundreds of Taliban prisoners of war in storage trailers. He is now persona non grata for the U.S. government, and runs northern Afghanistan mostly on his own while the U.S. patrols the south.

The bear-like Gen. Dostum granted Dr. Williams a five-minute interview, which is about all he had ever granted to the small handful of foreign journalists who even spoke to him during the height of the conflict in November 2001.

"It became five hours," said Dr. Williams.

The Welsh-born UMass professor got everything he wanted: to stay with Gen. Dostum and his 25,000-man army for two weeks, to be shown the mountains and battlefields where American B-52s and Stealth bombers rained fury on the Taliban, directed by special U.S. "A-Teams" riding horseback and calling in airstrikes using laptop computers and satellite links.

The professor wanted to interview the Taliban prisoners, to walk the streets of the cities and ask people about their lives.

For the fast-talking Dr. Williams, language wasn't a problem. He had long since added Turkish to his native Welsh and adopted English. Turkish, as it happens, is Gen. Dostum's language. The eager American, carrying an indispensable accessory for the traveler in Afghanistan, his own AK-47 assault rifle, made himself right at home.

Dr. Williams intends, among other things, to write a magazine article describing how one goes about purchasing a machine gun in Kabul. (His was a used one, $250.)

But as a historian he has many stories to tell, and to date his career has included many trips to Asia, to Kosovo and Bosnia, to Crimea, to Uzbekistan in the former Soviet Union. His venture into Afghanistan, financed by a summer research grant ("They wanted me to keep receipts from Afghanistan for a mortar," he laughed), will become a book and the topic of lectures and courses.

This trip, to the northern provinces of one of the most inhospitable places on the planet, involved ingenuity and risk.

First off, Dr. Williams traveled as a British citizen (he holds dual citizenship), to avoid the interference of the State Department. He traveled first to London, then to Istanbul, and then to Baku, Azerbaijan, where he bribed his way into a round-trip ticket into Kabul on an aging former Soviet Aeroflot aircraft now flown by the Azerbaijan state airline.

In Kabul as a guest of the Turkish embassy, Dr. Williams made contact with a contingent of Gen. Dostum's army stationed at the nation's capital.

"I went to their compound with Turkish guards from the Turkish embassy. I told them, 'I'm here to meet General Dostum. If you can get me through the mountains safely I will recommend you to him personally, and you have my word that I will bring you to him.'" Dr. Williams said.

"These were lowly soldiers down in Kabul. I told them (falsely), 'I'm on his orders to come there.' So they believed me."

Soon the young professor was accompanied by "several truckloads of guys with machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades," and they set off for the forbidding mountains that bisect Afghanistan and isolate the northern provinces. They chose the treacherous mountain route, Dr. Williams said, because as bad as it was, it was still preferable to the eastern route around the mountains, close to northwest Pakistan.

There, the neo-Taliban, as Dr. Williams calls them, were busy attacking buses and police stations, burning girls' schools opened since the war and otherwise terrorizing the population. More than 60 people were killed in that region in one week during Dr. Williams' visit, he said.

The mountain route was no bargain, either. It included a long tunnel built by the Soviets during their disastrous occupation of Afghanistan— without lights, with lots of rubble and cleared of mines only two weeks earlier.

At one point in the trip the driver slammed on the brakes when he realized that there was no longer a bridge spanning a 2,000-foot ravine. The party needed to drive down the mountain, across the river at the bottom and back up again.

That was nothing compared to the checkpoint incident in which his bodyguards threatened to use their RPGs and machine guns if they weren't allowed to pass. The checkpoint guards, disbelieving their story about transporting an American, had even made the not-so-friendly gesture of spraying machine gun fire into the air to demonstrate their point.

But after Dr. Williams stepped forward and proved his identity by displaying his cameras and video gear, they waved his group through.

Continued on page 2

Romney appoints trustees

By JENNIFER PETER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Mitt Romney appointed a former university president, a national medical leader, and a telecommunications executive to the University of Massachusetts board of trustees Saturday, making his first imprint on an institution he's frequently clashed with during his first months in office.

In making his first appointments to the 22-member board, Romney said he was no longer seeking the elimination of the university presidency — a proposal that led to a drawn-out fight with former President William Bulger.

The three appointees, who will serve five-year terms, are: former Tufts University President John DiBiaggio, who also served as president of Michigan State University and the University of Connecticut; Dr. Christine Cassel, a UMass medical school graduate who is now president and chief executive of the American Board of Internal Medicine; and William O'Shea, president of Bell Labs, which is a division of Lucent Technologies.

"This is a major step forward in the mission of the University of Massachusetts," Romney said as he announced the appointments. "I'm confident that they will each make a positive and lasting impression on our great institution."

Board Chairwoman Grace Fey, who strongly supported Bulger against Romney's attacks, praised the governor's choices, calling them "a terrific triumvirate."

"We see the strength of Gov. Romney's commitment to the University of Massachusetts," Fey said. "I welcome my three new colleagues to the board. I appreciate your willingness to step forward and offer to the university and to the commonwealth."

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
RIOTS POINTLESS
BE SAFE, BE RESPONSIBLE
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
SPIFFY ART
OCTOBER GALLERY WALK A SUCCESS
SPORTS
PAGE 8
BEAUTIFUL DAY
SOX STAY ALIVE, PATS PULL ONE OUT
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney, right, applauds during Saturday's news conference at the statehouse in Boston announcing his appointment of three new UMass trustees.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Pierrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Dugan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR, EXCEPT DURING VACATION AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING AS A NOT-FOR-PROFIT CORPORATION. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500. PRINTED AT 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

MANDATORY NEWS MEETING TONIGHT AT 6 P.M.

Celebration turns into riot; students flip two cars, cause $20,000 in damage to DC

Continued from page 1

Students flipped over a gray Honda Prelude Special Edition and a red Toyota in Lot 50, which is located between John Quincy Adams tower and John Adams tower. The Prelude was flipped onto a gray Saturn with Massachusetts plate number "1833 NO." The Saturn's front windshield was smashed, and the front right corner of the car was damaged where the Prelude had hit it. A van was also parked in the lot, but was not visibly damaged during the riot.

According to John Tattersall, a freshman who watched the riot, the crowd was located in a different part of Southwest than where the cars were flipped. He said people moved to the lot during the riot specifically to flip the cars.

"All of a sudden, people were just like, 'let's flip cars,'" Tattersall said.

Joel Karas, a freshman, said the owner of one of the damaged cars watched as rioters flipped his car. The owner carried an aluminum baseball bat with him and punched one of the people who participated in overturning his vehicle, Karas said.

According to O'Connor, the Physical Plant estimated $20,000 of damage to the dining commons. Police estimate an additional $8,000 in overtime costs for the UMPD.

Fireworks were set off several times during the riot, especially near Coolidge Tower. A few loud explosives were detonated during the night as well.

At 1:30 a.m., many students had already left the riot, but a number of people remained in opposition to the police. The rioters threw glass bottles and rocks at the police officers. They also shouted offensive language at the police, calling them pigs and neo-Nazis.

"Shoot me, you fing bastards," yelled one student, as police shot rounds of their weapons into a crowd of students from several hundred feet away.

According to O'Connor, police discharged a type of paintball gun that shoots a ball filled with Oleoresin Capsicum, or pepper spray. This weapon is considered "less-than-lethal" in their force continuum, O'Connor said. Two sponge guns were also brought to the scene, although never discharged, she said.

The police held their position in lines at the north and south edges of the living area at around 1:30 a.m. The east and west sides were left unguarded and people came and went through these spots.

At 1:50 a.m., the police moved from their northern line, sweeping through the quad, turning right and moving down the stairs between Hamden and Berkshire DC. They met on the southwest corner of the living area for about fifteen minutes before continuing their patrol.

They proceeded back up the stairs into the main part of the living area at 2:05 a.m. People ran from the police as the officers moved in a coordinated fashion through Southwest another time. At one point, the police, having sped up, were told by one officer to slow the pace of their march.

A rioter ran across Lot 50 at 2:16 a.m. O'Connor chased him with the help of two mounted patrol officers. Other rioters cheered him on, encouraging him to run faster. The rioter reached the edge of campus, and police did not pursue him. Instead they returned to the lot.

Michael Gargano, the vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, told students who were standing around to clear the area. He walked with some of the police officers throughout the night.

O'Connor said the police department will identify perpetrators and bring forth charges. She said Gargano would take "swift disciplinary action."

The police will use a video camera they have installed above JQA to aid them in identifying rioters. The camera was used during one other incident with no success, but O'Connor is still optimistic about its use in this situation.

"This time we'll take a much wider approach to try to get these people identified," she said.

Amherst Police Department was present for some of the riot. They were dispatched early on and left before 1:30 a.m. During their time on the scene, they pursued stone throwers who were allegedly participating in the riot from just outside of campus on Sunset Avenue, O'Connor said. APD was not available for comment.

Onlookers were in disagreement about the appropriateness of police action.

"The police were irresponsible in their actions," said sophomore Gregory Forfa, who was present at the riot.

"I don't ... blame the cops," said sophomore Devin Kelly, after observing police action during the incident. "They have to do what they have to do."

This was not the worst riot the University has seen, said O'Connor, but noted that this was still a riot situation.

"They're all bad," she said. "Certainly when you get people losing teeth and ... people throwing rocks and bottles at the police and turning over cars, it's not good."

By 3 a.m., police had cleared the area of crowd activity. The living area was quiet, and the police presence diminished.

Men's group walks to end abuse are 12 men and two facilitators. "I think that most men have their hearts in the right place," Bradbury-Carlin said. "But men can be abusive, overtly sexist, say negative things about women, and make sexist jokes. A lot of men don't say anything about that. And in a sense, it kind of condones it."

Continued from page 1

While rape jokes or other jokes of veiled hostility may be unfunny to most men, Carlin suggested that the problem branches from no one speaking up.

"For instance, a rape joke. Most men don't agree with it, or will even find it offensive. But they don't say anything. By not saying anything, that kind of condones it," he said. "I'm hoping that being a group of men, and standing up visibly to these issues, that it might get other men to think, 'OK, I don't have to be silent about this. I can speak up. I can stand up to this.'"

Botkin said men's violence is not just a problem within our society in particular. He agreed that it branches out in all societies.

"We've had conversations with people all over the world. It's a very consistent problem with people all over the place," said Botkin, who is going to Japan next week to speak at seminars on domestic violence prevention.

"It's a tremendous problem in Japan. A year ago they passed their first domestic violence law."

Botkin said that domestic violence is coming into the light only now; it's something that wasn't really talked about until now.

"There are men all over the world who are starting to join women. They're taking the stand on the issue," he said. "This walk is one piece of it. It's men in particular who are violent: because of our shame, because of our fear. We learned to be afraid.

"A really important piece is about breaking the silence. It's a powerful thing to speak out. It makes a difference," Botkin said. "When men take a stand, it makes a difference. I don't think that every man is violent or abusive. I think that every man has witnessed, experienced, or perpetrated violence."

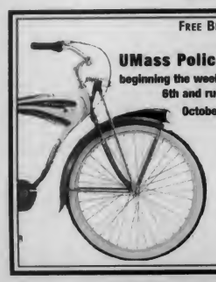
From whizzing cars on busy Interstate 91 to a serene and smiling photo-op in front of the Everywoman's Center on the UMass campus, the group's overall theme was to end violence by men.

"We're walking to express our concern to get the word out to the community that we're here," Fogliatti said. "To ask for everybody's support. To put our feet where our mouths are."

"The program makes people happier. You can be happier... the people you love can be happier. And that's what it's all about."

Professor visits Afganistan

Continued from page 1



"It was the most harrowing trip of my life," Dr. Williams said.

Upon his arrival, it was clear to his hosts what needed to be done. The American had to be kept safe. "General Dostum (pronounced "Dostoom") gave me some guards, some tribesmen to protect me," Dr. Williams said.

"He made a point of having these guys swear an oath, a bayat, to me that if anything happens to him it's on your head and your family's head. Your whole clan is responsible. Don't let any harm happen to my American.

"They all swore bayat. That bayat is more important than $25 million," he said, referring to the award money offered for the capture of Osama bin Laden. "These guys live on $25 a month. It means nothing, the $25 million. A Rolls-Royce, a swimming pool, it just doesn't matter.

"They're ethnic warriors from another era. They're primordial. When they swear bayat that means everything in the world. That means your soul to Allah. It means your tribal pride. It means your pride as a man. It means your honor. These people aren't from the line of Britney Spears from MTV and Kmart. Honor is everything," he said

FREE BICYCLE REGISTRATION
sponsored by the
UMass Police Department
beginning the week of Monday, October 6th and running through Friday October 10th at the Student Union Circle.
Hours of Program will be from 10:00 a.m.-2:00p.m. each day during the week. All bike owners are encouraged to register their bikes.

The BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Nancy Cole
Karaoke 7-11
Monday Night Football

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 7-11

WEDNESDAY — Bill Arnold
DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — Sony Music Night
-AJ
Lucky Caderra

FRIDAY — Richard Mwandemand
DJ-Aquarius 9-1

SATURDAY — Live Music 9-1

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

UMASS HOCKEY OPERATION 8K
DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE Sponsored by The Gazette and News 40
WE WANT 8,000!
TO BREAK THE UMASS HOCKEY SINGLE GAME ATTENDANCE RECORD
BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE TICKETS
UMASS HOCKEY vs. CONNECTICUT HUSKIES
THURSDAY • OCTOBER 9TH • 7:00 PM
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER
The Hampshire Hospitality Group · Coca-Cola · Monkey Bar Bistro · Northeast dental · Cobalt Club & restaurant
FREE T-SHIRTS FOR THE FIRST 2,000 FANS!
ONE LUCKY WINNER WILL WALK AWAY WITH A FREE SPRINGBREAK TRIP TO CANCUN
COURTESY OF FLIPNATION.COM • 1-877-4CANCUN
UMASS STUDENT TICKETS FREE!
with valid UMass Undergraduate Student ID
STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP LOCATIONS
MULLINS CENTER • CAMPUS CENTER
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS
TICKET OFFICE 545-0810

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Riots: another fee for UMass students

You've got a beer in your right hand; the chips are to your left. Your buddies are piled around you and the sound on the big screen television is up loud enough to hear the crack of the ball against bat. It's Saturday night at UMass Amherst – the flagship campus of the Massachusetts state system, home of the Minuteman, and of Red Sox mania. Campus may be two hours from Fenway, the lights, the Green Monster, and Pedro, but if you're not tuned into the Sox game, you might as well be a Yankees fan. Everyone is watching, parties are centered on the television instead of the keg, and everyone is united under one dream: win the games, break the curse, and take the series.

The Sox win their game against the Oakland Athletics, one step closer to the World Series and lifting that aged curse and the celebrations begin. You run outside with the rest of the crowd. You break out the fireworks; you gather and cheer with friends, peers, and people you don't know. You move with one group as they head towards the parking lot. Ahead you realize that the group has decided to flip a car — your car! You watch as they flip your sedan into another car. You try to stop them but it's useless. Your car is a mess.

The police arrive and the group who just turned over the car has swelled into a riot, angrily catcalling the UMPD. The police have weapons, aimed at you, which they shoot. Pepper spray flies into your eyes and skin, and you wonder why is this happening? What is the connection between celebrating the Red Sox's win and violence?

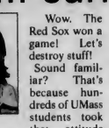
Soon rocks are being thrown, and not only are police injured, but your neighbor has his teeth knocked out by a rock. People who fifteen minutes before had been celebrating a successful athletic event are now taking part in a damaging and expensive riot.

Regardless of the UMPD and Amherst Police Department's treatment of students, the situation should never have become violent or dangerous. Nor should a Red Sox win move people to overturn other student's vehicles.

Additionally, the two arrests made by UMPD on Saturday were of non-students. These two men were guests of students on campus. As residents, we are responsible for our guests' actions. These two guests cost each UMass student by damaging the property that our fees pay for, and furthermore cost students the influence that this will have on our University's reputation.

There should be no connection between a Red Sox win and a riot at UMass. The riots in Southwest following Saturday's game were uncalled for and left an acrid mark on what could have been an awesome night. The riots on Saturday will cost the University, and therefore students, $28,000.

The message sent by riots is one of anger, immaturity, lack of respect for property value and for people's safety. This is not the message that UMass students should be sending to the Commonwealth or to the Red Sox.



Don't curse UMass with riots: enjoy the game, celebrate peacefully, and be safe.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor are currently open. Anyone interested in applying should contact Erika Lovley or Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

I'm surrounded by idiots

Paige Cram

Wow. The Red Sox won a game! Let's destroy stuff!

Sound familiar? That's because hundreds of UMass students took that attitude Saturday night when they decided to riot in front of John Adams Tower as a form of celebration. The crowd shot off fireworks, tipped over cars and lit fires, until the riot police finally stepped in and began spraying tear gas over the mob. It was an awesome sight, and by awesome I mean utterly ridiculous and embarrassing.

Now, don't get me wrong. I'm all for the Red Sox, and I'm all for having fun, but there was definitely a line crossed on Saturday night. I'm sure the entire student body doesn't agree with me. I'm sure some of you think that the riot was great, maybe even the coolest thing you've ever seen. Well, you're entitled to your own opinion, but I don't think I'm alone in saying that if you are one of those people, you are an idiot.

The Sox haven't even won the series yet. And what if they do? Or even worse, what if they actually beat the Yankees and make it to the World Series? What are you going to do then, burn down the whole campus?

First of all, the whole idea of wrecking and destroying stuff because you're happy and excited makes no sense at all. Okay, maybe the fireworks I can understand. Despite the fact that they are not allowed on campus, I'm sure no one would complain at seeing some fireworks while celebrating the victory. But there is nothing cool about destroying innocent people's property. How happy would you be if that was your car that got flipped over or set on fire?

Yes, it was a good game. A homerun in the 11th inning is definitely exciting, and if you're a huge fan of the Red Sox, as most people on this campus are, then it's definitely cause for a little hooting and hollering. But let's think about this for minute: the Sox haven't even won the series yet. And what if they do? Or even worse, what if they actually beat the Yankees and make it to the World Series? What are you going to do then, burn down the whole campus?

Apparently some of you, who I'm ashamed to call my classmates right now, would think that was a great idea. And you know what? You've gotten me, who normally wouldn't care one way or the other about who wins this series, actually hoping that the Red Sox lose because I'm afraid of what will happen if they win.

I don't buy the excuse that it's just some drunken fun. If you honestly believe that, then again, you are an idiot. I have had plenty of fun drunken nights without potentially injuring people and invoking a riot squad response. There are plenty of times when my judgement has been impaired and still never would have even dreamed of considering rioting fun. I'm sure that out of the 20,000 students here, I'm not the only one who feels that way.

I actually don't think this had so much to do with the Red Sox's victory as it did with the fact that, for some stupid reason, there are a group of people here who just look for an excuse to riot. It's not like this is the first time that UMass has seen this kind of thing. Can anyone say Hobart Hoedown? My god, we've got a yearly tradition of it. Then you wonder why our school has the reputation it has.

I'm sure some of you are proud of that reputation. You know what? Having a reputation for great parties definitely isn't a bad thing. But a reputation for being crazy and dangerous and full of people who like to damage stuff for fun? Who wants that?

I can honestly say that Saturday night, I was ashamed to even be associated in any way with people who do something like this. You may think I'm being extreme, but I don't like the fact that because there are a couple of hundred morons at the school, we all get a reputation for being "those crazy college kids that have no respect for other people or their property."

I'm not one of those kids, and neither are the majority of the rest of the students here. But, because those of you that do fit that profile make such a huge scene every time you get an excuse, the rest of us suffer.

So, when you're watching the news tonight and see footage of the riots, and you're thinking about how cool it is that you made it on TV, think again. Think about what you are doing, or what you did.

Think about the people's property you damaged, about the people who likely got injured by the riot police, and about all the rest of us who weren't involved and yet will be labeled just like you. Think about what you really want from the education that you are paying out of your rear for. Do you really want it to be worth nothing when you apply for a job, because your potential boss laughs when he sees that you graduated from UMass Amherst? Because that's where you have us heading right now.

So, the next time the Red Sox win (or any other New England team for that matter), celebrate like a normal person. Get drunk. Go outside and scream and yell. Streak across campus waving a jersey in the air for crying out loud, but don't start a riot. Because, unfortunately, there are too many stupid people on this campus who will join in.

Paige Cram is a Collegian columnist.

Abortion Pill Breakthrough

Allison Edles

When Holly Patterson, an 18-year-old woman from California, died on Sept. 17, the abortion debate was once again resurrected. Patterson had taken an abortion pill called Mifepristone and, days later, was taken to the emergency room in Pleasanton, CA where she died. The direct cause of her death was not directly linked to the abortion pill, as an autopsy had not yet been performed on the girl.

However, the debate has once again risen, especially with the recent advancements in the Senate of the first federal law that would restrict a woman's right to abortion being unanimously passed on to the House of Representatives.

With all the benefits of the medical abortion, modern-day medicine has done its job in facilitating and improving a procedure that, before, has scared many young girls and has resulted in infants being thrown in dumpsters because of embarrassment or shame to the mothers.

The use of Mifepristone brings up many new ethical questions and has had anti-abortion lobbyists jumping all over doctors and clinics to ban the Food and Drug Administration FDA-approved drug. While the right to have an abortion is each woman's entitlement, the right (and expectation) to safely improve and expand the way through which the abortion, as well as any medical procedure done, is the entitlement of modern-day medicine.

Currently, there are three main safe ways in which to have a surgical abortion: manual vacuum aspiration, dilation and suction curettage, and dilation and evacuation. All three procedures last about 10 to 20 minutes and are fairly involved. The procedure involves the cleansing of the vagina with an antiseptic, a local (and sometimes general) anesthetic, a dilator or medication to open the cervix, and a pump to flush out the uterus.

This is a much-abbreviated run-through of the procedure. Each of the three types of surgeries varies in method and time. On top of the medical aspect, the process may be extremely traumatic and emotional for the woman undergoing it. Oftentimes, there is an issue of comfort for the woman with the staff of the facility where it is being performed. If the woman is a teenager, she may be subjected to certain types of harassment from patients and/or employees that may further upset and aggravate an already tender situation.

Recently, medical abortion has been added to the list of safe ways to abort a pregnancy. This process first involves a dose of either Mifepristone by tablet, which blocks progesterone (without progesterone, the lining of the uterus breaks down thus terminating the pregnancy and causing vaginal bleeding), or an injection of Methotrexate, which stops pregnancy in the uterus and fallopian tube. Then, the patient is required to take another medication (in tablet form) called Misoprostol, which causes the uterus to contract and empty with vaginal bleeding. The third and final step in the process is a clinical follow up with the clinician or doctor that performed the procedure to make sure that the abortion was complete.

Unlike surgical abortion, much of the medical abortion process can take place in the privacy of the woman's home, as opposed to a hospital or clinic. Also, the process feels more "natural", according to some women, like a miscarriage, and usually doesn't involve any sort of surgical procedure or anesthesia.

But, one of the most important factors to many women is that they have a better sense of control, unlike with surgical abortion where the control (and consequently, trust) must lie in the doctor or clinician. With all the benefits of the medical abortion, modern-day medicine has done its job in facilitating and improving a procedure that, before, has scared many young girls and has resulted in infants being thrown in dumpsters because of embarrassment or shame to the mothers.

The expected controversy that has resulted from Patterson's death raises many ethical questions about the new drug. Primarily, the concerns are centered on the life of the mother and if there will be any side effects that may be damaging and/or traumatic. Of course, with any medical drug and/or procedure, there will always be side effects. And, unfortunately, which ones and the intensity to which they'll be apparent are not always anticipated by medical practitioners.

Mifepristone was approved by the FDA three years prior to this incident and is 92 percent to 97 percent effective. Surgical abortion, while nearly 100 percent effective, has the same side effects and possibilities as a medical abortion may have.

Modern-day medicine has come very far and has made it so the process of terminating an unwanted pregnancy can now be done with more dignity and control than in the past, which gives the patient an overwhelmingly easing feeling and lessens the anxiety and apprehension they may have.

Throughout history, medicine and science have improved countless illnesses and medical procedures. And, as we further advance into the future, the only way to go is up. While Patterson's death is tragic and might have had something to do with the medicine prescribed to her for her abortion, there is no reason to attack medical science, especially when thinking about the millions of individuals worldwide that have been helped through their procedures and guidance throughout the years.

Information for this article was obtained from www.plannedparenthood.org.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

'Short Circuits'

Mark Ostroff

Going into the 2000 race, it was well known that George Bush had many winning advantages over Al Gore — a brother governing a pivotal state, judges seated by his father, and a "purge" of 91,000 black Democrat votes, to name a few. Even then, however, the American majority opinion still settled to the left. But after the 2000-election debacle, the system that popularly made Bush lose is now under the knife by America's only court-appointed president.

Election Day: 2004 looms in the not-too-distant future and Americans, once again, will go without closure on which candidate they actually voted for. Only this time, electoral chaos goes high-tech.

Electronic voting has been an initiative of the Bush Administration since day one. With the 2002 passing of the sweetly named "Help America Vote Act" (HAVA), electronic voting will sweep across the nation by the 2004 elections.

Ideally, with this new system, voters will now be able to use an "ATM-like" machine to cast their vote for the next president. The machine will automatically tally votes and the election will be determined in no time at all.

So, what's the catch?

Has America now stepped into the electronic age of Stalinizing an election where archaic methods like hanging chads and racial profiling are no longer needed.

The catch is that because private companies have been contracted to manufacture these machines, the voter tally is technically in their hands as well.

In an even more pessimistic light, scientists from some of the top schools in the country already see this system as a complete joke. One Stanford computer science professor even described the e-voting system as "an unlocked bank vault," and "a disaster waiting to happen."

While some have already begun dismissing this as common technophobia, others have written it off as another anti-Bush initiative from the liberals. But the story behind these machines and their manufacturers are a cause for concern for those who take American democracy seriously. (Sadly, statistics show that's only 58 percent of you.)

Three companies have a stake in the building of these machines —Diebold, Election Systems and Software (ES&S), and Sequoia — and all of them are in bed with the current administration.

The CEO of Diebold, Wally O'Dell, is one of Bush's top fund-raisers. Diebold's so-called "competitor," ES&S employs Todd Urosevich as VP. Urosevich owes his career to an investor named Howard Ahmanson, who staked his fortune for Todd and his brother Bob in the vote-tally business.

Ahmanson currently holds vast shares in ES&S and is a prominent Christian Reconstructionist — a movement that openly supports a totalitarian theocracy of American society. (I recommend reading "The Handmaid's Tale" for reference.)

The third company, Sequoia, had already been involved in a corruption scandal involving bribed officials in the state of Louisiana via Mob front-companies. Enough said.

The machines have already been put to the test in a handful of states for the 2002 elections and, needless to say, the results were "right" on target.

In Snyder, Texas, Republicans won the 2002 election in a landslide, according to the tally of voting machines there. Later, it was found that a chip in the main computer had been defective and after being replaced, showed that Democrats had won by wide margins. A hand recount also verified this.

In Florida, "misaligned" touchscreens on these machines had led to people voting for Jeb Bush, while intending to vote Democrat. The problem of misaligned screens has now been confirmed in 18 other machines in Dallas.

One Florida Democrat had challenged the machines' tallies by taking the case to court in order to examine the machines. The judge knocked the suit down by claiming that the hardware and software of voting machines were "trade secrets" of the company. So, there is no real way of telling how these machines work, if they are working at all.

The machines also leave no paper trail, and the provisions of the HAVA say that the only legitimate recount will be a single paper record of the machine's tallied votes. Makes perfect sense.

Another anomaly was the amount of lobbying that the HAVA got by the military industrial complex. What stakes did Lockheed-Martin have in lobbying for this poor excuse of a bill — a bill that offers no protection to Americans from historically fraudulent, religiously zealous, politically biased companies and interest groups?

Has America now stepped into the electronic age of Stalinizing an election where archaic methods like hanging chads and racial profiling are no longer needed? Perhaps Bush has improved something after all.

Information for this column was used from The Moscow Times, Chris Floyd's "Global Eye," Dr. Douglas Jones of U of Iowa, and Thom Hartmann.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com
413-545-3699
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2003

Hip-hop heads come together at 'The X'

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Correspondent

The Malcolm X Center is most commonly known as a spatially challenged venue where parties are held by organizations for students of color. However, on Thursday the building commonly referred to as "The X" was the scene of a very different event.

"Can't Nobody Tell Me Nuttin'," the title of a round table discussion centered on the subject of hip-hop and it's affects on our community, was sponsored by the Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP). With about 40 students in attendance, the two-hour event dug deeply into the topic at hand, examining the high and lows of one of the most influential forms of music alive today.

Through the discussion of hip-hop, students touched upon many different issues in society ranging from social to economical to political. From the start, the question posed was: "What is hip-hop and what does it mean to you?" Participants were eager to explore the topic with meticulousness and intensity. Attendants shared their experiences, thoughts and opinions. They explored how the music has affected their lives as occupants of this culture.

The seemingly dominant issue of the night was the commercialization of hip-hop: the genre's transition into mainstream and the influence that the switch has had on its listeners, as well as musicians. Participants discussed how outsiders capitalizing on the commercial success of the music are endangering the art form by using it as a marketing tool.

"Hip-hop is being used as a form of control," said one participant. "It's up to us to monitor that control and make sure it's not being abused."

Also discussed was the responsibility of hip-hop to the community and audiences to which it appeals.

"Hip-hop artists are reckless," said one student. "They don't realize the power and influence that they have over young children, and that can be deadly." Like many other points made throughout the discussion, participants were in agreement on the danger and power that come with hip-hop success.

Discussion facilitator Ferris Claire said about the event, "I'm very pleased with the turn out. It was good to see so many students come to support such an event, and it was also good to see students of many different cultural backgrounds joined by such an Issue."

She also added, "The conversation really carried itself. People were really interested in this issue so it kept the discussion moving."

The discussion will air tonight at 8.p.m on UVC-TV on the Mission 101 program.

Gallery Walk

Strolling through [illegible], seeing the best art in to[illegible]

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

Walking down S. Pleasant Street last Thursday on a cool, crisp October evening, there was an upbeat energy circulating through the sidewalks. People were gathered on the street of Amherst for the three-hour pilgrimage through six local art galleries.

This being my first time on the Gallery Walk, I arrived with blind expectations, unaware of the colossal potential that Amherst obtains within such a small radius. To my surprise, not only was I surrounded by friendly company, charming establishments and an eclectic abundance of art, I also found the quality of work that was featured was most impressionable. I have seen art in museums and galleries all over the world, and I have to admit that, after attending the Gallery Walk once in Amherst, I left more than satisfied, and with a new activity to mark on my calendar for the first Thursday of every month.

The R. Michelson Gallery was my first destination, and the one that held the collection that impacted me the most. Artist Richard Baldwin shared with me a generous discourse about the inspiration behind his paintings titled "Short Poems."

The show was dominated solely with his landscape and abstract objects in strange circumstances presented by oil on canvas paintings. The detailed technique of Baldwin's landscapes was epitomized in his miniature painting titled "Easy Chair," which easily could have been mistaken for a photograph. His unique poetry pieces, like "The Proposition," simply illustrated a fish and an old-fashioned washing machine floating in a blue sky with clouds. The obscurity of this representation was merely to associate how these too dissimilar objects can be associated through their common use of water.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Helena Dooley's "Duckie Paintings" at Gallery A^3 is one of the highlights of October's Gallery Walk.

"These are little haiku constructed paintings, I completed them by juxtaposing two images that were unrelated to try and make the viewer think about there association," Baldwin said.

Located in the Amherst Cinema, Gallery A^3 is one of the smaller homes of aspiring contemporary art. Helena Dooley, Tom Morton, and Guru Karam Singh Khalsa attracted a large crowd with their individual approach to a united theme of the winged creatures of nature. Along with Dooley's canvas "Duckie Paintings" were her "Rules for Smooth Relationships," which presented a mock list of seven crossed out rules. Khalsa's acrylic on canvas wall paintings showed winged figures, perhaps angels in different positions on a night sky. The contrast between Dooley's light airy pastel use of color and Khalsa's white figures on black background balanced each other's nicely. Tom Morton intrigued all viewers with his unique three-dimensional floor piece titled "Loon stack." His wall piece titled "Birthday," a favorite among viewers, used materials including edible birthday cake decorations and candles to paint the look of a melted cake.

Just a walk across the street and I found myself at the Burnett Gallery inside the Jones Library. Marlene Rye and Chet Cramer coated the walls with two distinct forms of artistic expression as Sarah McKee strummed the Celtic harp, filling the room with a relaxing ambiance.

"I like stuff that looks good," states Chet Cramer, an UMass alumni whose show titled "Pictures," included graphite on paper sketches, and large canvas paintings from 1981 to present.

His subject matter that was most interesting was of the local scenery of Amherst and its neighboring towns. Cramer's realist style was represented in all his work and included such titles as "Amherst Chinese" and "Belchertown Road@55MPH." "Intimate Immensities," by Rye included small oil on rice paper and wood abstract landscape paintings.

"These are not of specific places; they are invented through a combination of locations, and paintings in my memory. As I work on the painting the painting tells me what to do," Rye said.

All of her work had a consistent theme of an anonymous location in the wilderness that allows the viewer to recognize an image of a field but keep them mystified through the use of abstract brushwork.

The only photography gallery among those participating in the walk was Alfredo's Art Gallery. The opening for Peter van Bolhuis will not be until Thursday, Oct. 9, although his photography is now on display. His show titled "Grace to Water" includes aerial photographs of the Netherlands. Scenery including rivers, soccer fields, and farms are just a few subjects Boluis captures from above. The geometry, patterns, and color of the nature create an amazing form of art known as landscape architecture.

The Fiber Art Center was unknown to me before

Continued on page 5

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

This month, winged creatures is the theme of paintings at Gallery A^3, located right next to Amherst Cinema.

Denzel's new movie simply timeless

Carl Frankin creates intricate plot-twisting crime mystery

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

Determining the quality of a suspense/thriller is as easy as counting the number of times the audience holds it's breath. Those who attended the premiere of "Out of Time" on Friday were surely somewhat deprived of oxygen by the time the lights came up and it was time to file out of the theater. If audience nail-biting is a measure of greatness, this crime thriller is a definite success.

According to the production notes released by MGM studios, first time screenwriter Dave Collard found inspiration for "Out of Time" in the mystery thrillers he enjoyed as a kid.

"Those were the movies I grew up really liking," he says, "Those twists, trying to figure it out and put together the puzzle... I just loved it."

In the world of creative writing, simple real world observation can lead to a great film. Before he wrote a word, Collard only knew that he wanted to write about a good guy who does the wrong thing for the right reasons.

"My intent was to get the audience to like the character, then sort of throw him in a blender for the second half of the movie, hit 'blend,' and watch him try to stay away from the blades," he said. "I was going for a movie where the viewers lean forward in their seat, where they are really interested in what's going to happen because they really feel for the guy."

Producer Neal Moritz was very impressed with the screenplay.

"It made for exciting entertainment from beginning to end," Moritz said.

"Audiences love to root for a hero, and it's even more electrifying when you have no idea how they can possibly get themselves out of the trouble they're in," he said. "That's the case with Matt in "Out of Time" — you're right there with him, taking the journey, and you can't wait to see where it ends up. It's a very suspenseful, thrilling story, and it's very well told."

'Out of Time'
Directed by Carl Franklin
Starring Denzel Washington, Eva Mendes, Dean Cain
MGM Studios
Rated PG-13
114 mins.
Grade A-

This film tells the story of Matthias Lee Whitlock, played by Denzel Washington. Whitlock is chief of police in a small Florida town, Banyan Key. As the film starts, he is going through a divorce with his wife, Alex, played by Eva Mendes. Alex has recently been promoted to the rank of homicide detective and constant runins with each other at the police station make for severe workplace tension. Things heat up when Anne Marie Harrison (Sanaa Lathan) and abusive husband, ex-NFL star Chris Harrison (Dean Cain) are killed in what appears to be a double homicide.

Whitlock has been having an affair with Anne and although he had nothing to do with the murders, all the evidence points to him. The plot thickens and unfolds as Whitlock is forced to intercept evidence (always one step ahead of his own detective wife) that could very well mark the end of his career, and life, as he knows it.

Washington says about his character, "He's a big fish in a little pond. He's the chief of police in a four-cop town, and he's pretty content. He thinks he has everything right where he is. He thinks he can do no wrong — and pays the price."

He adds, "For me in terms of my character, the picture is really about temptation, and what can happen when you give in to it. It's about sticking your hand in the cookie jar and it turns out to be full of fire. When you go out there and do something you know you shouldn't be doing, there are consequences. Though he's trying to help someone, trying to do good, Matt makes a couple of very bad mistakes."

The biggest challenge director Carl Franklin faced was creating a character that was undeniably a sympathetic hero.

"If the viewers don't buy what Matt is doing every step of the way in this movie," Franklin said. "They end up sitting there, saying, 'Why did he do that?' Fortunately, because it's Denzel and because he's so good, they believe him every step of the way."

In order to follow suit and create a similarly believable character for her role as Detective Alex Whitlock, Mendes had to do her share of homework. "I did my research. I hung out with policemen and policewomen for a few days. My preconception of a female cop was that they were kind of severe, but I was wrong. They were very feminine."

From the beginning, Cain had a kind of personal investment in his character.

"Chris is a retired football star who did great in college, then went to the NFL," he said. "It's a world I know personally. It's a very glamorous business and you really get the spotlight on you: you're a rock star when you're on top. But it's a very short-lived, finite career, and that's what's happened with Chris. He's not The Guy anymore: he's not the golden boy. I saw a lot of people crash and burn in the NFL. That's where Chris is in the film. He's dealing with a lot of anger."

To many it will seem that the very location of the movie becomes a characterization of the plot within which the suspense resides.

Shooting the entirety of "Out of Time" during June and July in Florida added an essential element of believability. Increasing the sensuality of the sex scenes and the sweat and anxiety of the suspense, this film wouldn't have worked as well if it were shot anywhere else.

Lathan agrees, "I certainly didn't have to act like it was hot. It was hotter than anyplace I've ever been. But that added a whole other element. It definitely added to my performance. The heat just makes you want to scream."

Cain adds, "To be in that environment really

Continued on page 5

COURTESY MGM

Denzel Washington, left, and John Billingsly cruise the streets in the new movie "Out of Time."

COURTESY MGM

Sanaa Lathan stars as Ann Merai Harrison in "Out of Time."

O.A.R. finds mainstream home

By Diana Mogilevsky
Collegian Correspondent

After releasing four independent albums, O.A.R. (Of a Revolution) has finally given into the machine. They have signed on with Lava Records, the same distributing label that signed Kid Rock and Uncle Cracker, to release their latest album, "In Between Now and Then."

But don't let the uninformed be too hasty with that awful word good bands hate to hear: sellout. The band hesitated for a good while, intending to remain independent, until they crossed paths with Lava president Jason Flom. His genuine intentions of keeping the music true to its intended form finally won them over.

O.A.R.
'In Between Now and Then'
Lava/Everfine

The Ohio-originated band – founded by Marc Roberge (vocals and guitar) and Chris Culos (drums) – started out like many jam bands: popular with the college crowd. They played at parties and shows as often as possible and, upon graduation in 2001, set out on tour. Their unique sound integrates folk and reggae with a roots-rock jam quality that truly sets them apart from the rest.

After several albums with Everfine Records their aim was clear: O.A.R. intended to stay true to their music. They have already acquired a mass of fans while making and distributing independent albums that seem to have the type of universal appeal millions could enjoy. They aren't trying to get a hit and grab a spot on the charts, and they certainly aren't looking to integrate themselves with the dull-eyed corporate monster otherwise known as MTV. They simply want to make themselves available to those who appreciate their sound.

Musically, "In Between Now and Then" is sated with fluid instrumentals. Lively acoustics, saxophone, piano, Hammond, Wurlitzer, tambourine, bongos, maracas, and oboe combine with clear heartfelt vocals for a spirited and vivacious sound reminiscent of The Police. Each song has a bright-rock sound, with soothing jazzy breaks and smooth progressions.

There is an ongoing lyrical theme of time lost and salvaged, opportunities grasped and stolen, wonder and confusion, and messages imbued with effervescence toward life. The songs are personal and honest; they don't hide behind an attempt at crowd-pleasing poetics but rather matter-of-fact experience and situations.

For example the song "Anyway" starts out with, "Never say that nothing ever came from a mouse, anyway. Might crawl into your house, take that cat away. Don't let the world tell your mouth that it must say. Nothing ever came from a mouse, anyway."

The song "Coalminer" tells a story about a restless dad wandering away. "Daddy was a guitar player. He'd play that joint all night. Out back in the shack the six-string was his demon. Maybe one day I could run away, join my dad in a band one day."

Each song seems to form a question and gratuitously accepts the fact that some have no answers, but leaves the listener dangling with hope of discovery.

The mood of the album is hopeful, satisfied, and calm while remaining upbeat and playful. All 15 tracks are representative of the at-ease disposition the whole album puts forth. None of the songs are forced. "In Between Now and Then" has no filler. Staying fairly low-key with their first major label release, O.A.R. has managed to keep it real.

They will be co-headlining with The Roots and Virginia Coalition at Boston College on Nov. 12. They will also be performing at the Palladium in Worcester on Nov. 24 as part of an album tour.

COURTEST CHAPMAN BAEHLER/LAVA EVERFINE

Of A Revelution released a DVD with their new record, "In Between Now and Then."

Amherst Gallery Walk displays the finest artwork in the Five College area

Continued from page 4

Thursdays Gallery Walk, and I am now aware of an exciting place that includes a retail store, gallery, and lecture room in one building. Greeting visitors with tea as the evening began to turn chilly, the Fiber Art Center was the warmest atmosphere of all the galleries. The exhibit "Felt so Good" included wall and three-dimensional felt made pieces by artists from all over the world. The material used was made from raw sheep wool, and was totally handcrafted by the artists themselves.

Canadian artist Joanne Circle said, "The felt making process is a metaphor for life."

On display is everything from wool flowers, wall carpets, to bowls. Heather Belcher from London, England stole the show with her wall piece titled "Unfolding" which was a white and black coat that "symbolized formality and conformity within western dress code." The community of wool enthusiasts together has put on a show of intricate designs and themes leaving viewers amazed by the craft and talent of such individuals.

The three-hour tour through the intimate art world of S. Pleasant Street is a perfect social event to enjoy alone or with company. Wine, juice, and a light assortment of delicious provisions are available at every stop to keep up a walker's endurance. The exhibitions will run throughout the month for the enjoyment of those that missed the Gallery Walk and wish to view them at their own pace. New Gallery Walks occur the first Thursday of every month.

Thumbs up for 'Time'

Continued from page 4

helps you as an actor. Sticky, hot, sweaty — it's a different feeling and helps everything feel different. Your clothes hang a bit differently. Your hair feels different. Everything just feels different. Florida is sexy — it's a perfect setting for this film."

"I LOVE the heat," Miami-born, Los Angeles-raised Mendes said.

"The heat adds to the sexiness. After a couple of weeks here I just wanted to take my clothes off. You want to be as bare as you can be, and there is something really freeing about that. That's what you want as an actor. The climate affects your attitude, your behavior. It's great," she said.

With a convincing cast of character, a indispensable locale and an indestructible "who dunnit"-type plot, what will prevent this film from becoming the next best crime thriller since Polanski's "Chinatown?" Despite the fact that the particular events resulting from the crime are narratively secure, the development of motivation between characters is at times problematic.

Before Chris could know that Matt is sleeping with his wife there is serious animosity between them. How do these two know each other so well? Granted the town is small and Matt is well aware that Chris is abusive. So, perhaps this forced assumption is forgivable.

Less forgivable is the undeveloped relationship between Matt and his ex-wife-to-be, Alex. This damaged relationship is central to the beginning and resolution of the plot. Leaving the reason for the characters' intended divorce entirely unresolved and virtually not discussed banishes vital information into the unreachable realm of character backstory.

Overall, "Out of Time" is worth seeing for those who love the mystery, thriller and/or crime genre. It is a good lesson for aspiring screenwriters in learning how to make an unbelievable premise believable. It also incorporates a 'holes' free surprise ending — a rare find now-a-days, where unmotivated surprise endings are tacked onto every movie on the market.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

MAYO CLINIC
SUMMER III
FOR JUNIOR NURSING STUDENTS

We invite you to explore the Summer III Student Nursing Experience with Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota. This program is for junior year students of a four-year baccalaureate nursing program. Summer III begins in early June and lasts for 10 weeks. Summer III is a paid, supervised nursing program exposing the student to a broad range of direct and indirect patient care settings on inpatient and surgical units.

Mayo Nursing was awarded the Magnet Hospital Recognition Status for Excellence in Nursing Service by the American Nurses Credentialing Center.

For more information about the Summer III program, please visit our website or contact:

Mayo Clinic
Human Resources, OE-4
200 1st Street SW
Rochester, MN 55905
ph 800-562-7984 e-mail summer3@mayo.edu

Application Deadline: January 15, 2004

www.mayoclinic.org/summer3-rst

FREE FOOD

Call us crazy, but we're giving away FREE FOOD from

LA CUCINA DI PINOCCHIO
AND
THE LOOSE GOOSE CAFE

Get something HOT delivered today!
Visit www.campusfood.com for details

campusfood.com®
HURRY! Ends October 19th!

Pats pull out 'dream' win

Continued from page 8

the middle for the winning TD, capping a day in which he gained 73 yards on seven carries.

Cloud, who grew up in Rhode Island and played at Boston College, signed with New England from Kansas City in the offseason despite facing a suspension after testing positive for an illegal supplement.

As it turned out, his TD wasn't quite the clincher.

The Titans were driving on the next series, but Law jumped in front of Calicu and raced down the sideline untouched. Law was playing with a sprained ankle on a defense that has been without as many as nine starters this season.

McNair was trying to take advantage of the three-time Pro Bowl cornerback, by far the best member of New England's secondary.

"I thought I could get it in there with the bad leg he had," said McNair, who was 23-of-45 for 391 yards and ran for two scores. "I don't guess right all the time. He broke on it, did a good job and that was the ball game."

Not quite. Gary Anderson's 41-yard field goal with 36 seconds left cut it to eight points and Christian Fauria had to recover an onside kick to ensure the win.

New England (3-2), which had been averaging less than 100 yards rushing a game, ended up with 161 on the ground, 80 on 16 carries from Antowain Smith. With Kevin Faulk out with a leg injury, Cloud was the only option when Smith was shaken up in the third quarter.

On his first carry, the Patriots were called for illegal procedure. On the next play, Cloud burst for 17 yards. He stayed in for the remainder of the game because he played so well.

"I thought after that first one I might be done for the day," said Cloud, who backed up Priest Holmes in Kansas City. "But I felt good and I felt things would come."

"When you allow your opponent to rush for 160-170 yards and you tackle as poorly as we did and you were ineffective in your kickoff coverage, it makes it tough to win," Titans coach Jeff Fisher said.

Minutemen grind out victory

Continued from page 8

McCormick and Sam Lussier by three yards.

Peebler was also involved in the eventual game-winning score, a 22-yard strike from Krohn with 8:50 remaining, capping off a 10-play, 80-yard drive that took 3:21 and put the Minutemen up 37-22.

Baylark scored his third touchdown of the day with 5:35 to go, giving the Maroon and White a convincing 44-22 lead. Amherst native James Ihedigbo came up with an interception with 1:28 remaining, stifling a fierce UNH charge and solidifying the Minutemen's third straight win.

The victory also puts Umass in the upper echelon of the A-10 with a 3-0 conference record. Only two other teams — Delaware and Villanova, each at 3-0 — have yet to be beaten by a conference opponent.

Baylark and Peebler were also recognized by the A-10 for their work on Saturday, with Peebler awarded co-Offensive Player of the Week honors along with William & Mary quarterback Lang Campbell, and Baylark earning his second straight Rookie of the Week award, splitting the honors with Maine signal caller Ron Whitcomb.

For his efforts, Peebler earned the Bill Knight Award, which is given annually to the Most Valuable Player of the game between UMass and UNH. Still his coach wasn't ready to shower him with compliments after a number of gaffes, including a crucial fumble with 3:46 left in the third quarter that the Wildcats scooped up.

"Peebler jumps offsides twice, drops a touchdown pass, fumbles the ball down there, and he's the best player of the game? I don't know," UMass coach Mark Whipple said. Peebler seems to be an embodiment of how this team plays, according to the coach.

"We're probably a lot like Jason Peebler or Jeff Krohn or Anton McKenzie or Jeremy Cain; at times we play very well, but as I said to coach [Mike] Hodges towards the end of the game, I yelled to him, 'let's finish the game.'"

With a little over two minutes left, the Wildcats did manage to mount an offensive, adding a two-point conversion when quarterback Mike Granieri found David Bailey all by his lonesome in the back of the end zone, and grabbing an onside kick that wasn't covered up by the Massachusetts hands team.

Baylark scored the final touchdown for the Minutemen, after pounding his way up the middle twice for little to no gain. On the third try from short yardage, though, he found an opening and busted through, giving him a career high in touchdowns, and his third straight 100-plus yard rushing performance.

UMass-Lowell transfer, Rich Demers, was the unsung hero of the game for the Minutemen, catching four passes for 34 yards and a TD, and rushing nine times for 55 yards. His best play of the day came with 9:50 remaining in the fourth quarter. Demers took off on a long rumble down to the New Hampshire 23, setting up the winning touchdown pass from Krohn to Peebler.

Peebler is no fill-in for UMass

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

A year ago at this time, the Massachusetts football team was coming off a victory over Richmond that marked the beginning of a turnaround that would see the team climb to the top of the Atlantic 10 standings.

A large factor in their success was the emergence of eventual A-10 Rookie of the Year R.J. Cobbs, who had played his way into the starting lineup and went on to gain 1,067 yards, after UMass began the season with a converted receiver named Jason Peebler as its tailback.

A year later, it's Cobbs that is unable to play after being suspended for the season following academic difficulty. And Peebler, the receiver turned tailback whose job he had taken, has found his way off the sideline and onto the field in his original position.

So following his second consecutive 100-yard receiving performance — a game in which he also hauled in the longest touchdown pass in Massachusetts history — Jason Peebler has solidified himself as the top threat at a position that was supposed to belong to Cobbs. He has found retribution of sorts for the player whose success originally cost him a job; retribution coach Mark Whipple will certainly take.

"[Peebler] has developed well as a receiver." Whipple said. "He's worked well with [quarterback] Jeff [Krohn], and has made plays for us."

"He can still get better, but we're happy with the progress he's made at the position up to this point."

Following the graduation of one of the best receivers in school history, Adrian Zullo, the wide receiver position was one of concern for the UMass coaching staff. However, Whipple's off-season decision to move the talented Cobbs to wideout eased worries about one of the few weak spots on a team loaded with veteran experience.

At the time, Peebler was just a small piece of a puzzle that also included returning senior Jimmie Howard as well as sophomore Greg Scott. He had caught 17 balls for 231 yards and a touchdown in a 2001 freshman season that saw him earn five starts, and contributed eight catches for 185 yards and three scores in limited action as a wide receiver late in 2002.

"It's tough to switch positions, let alone twice." Whipple said. "But we knew we could count on Pebbler to contribute to our offense this year because he's a good football player, and a smart football player."

But after developing a rapport with Krohn in a pair of strong preseason scrimmages, the 6-foot-1, 202-pound Peebler hit his stride at the right time. With Cobbs on the sideline serving the first game of his suspension, Peebler caught six passes for 85 yards in a romp over Central Connecticut.

Then, in a play that will go down in the annals of Massachusetts' football, he caught a 65-yard touchdown pass from Krohn on the third play of the game, to give the Maroon and White a 7-0 lead over national power Kansas State.

Now, after making eight catches for 116 yards and a touchdown against James Madison, and adding five more for 177 yards against New Hampshire, that included the record setting 83-yard TD reception, Peebler has become the number one receiver for a team that wasn't sure if it had a position for him.

He has given the Maroon and White a reliable option through the air that takes pressure off a depleted backfield, and has worked to alleviate the ills caused by Cobbs' absence, both on offense and on special teams.

So one year after Whipple, Krohn and the Minutemen put their trust in a relatively untested freshman to carry a large chunk of the offensive load, they have found their go-to guy in a player that just last year they chose not to go to at all, in hopes that the results will be the same.

Struggle to score continues

Continued from page 8

ing to score in the second period.

"I thought the second half we really did a good job, we managed the defensive situations better than in the first half," Massachusetts coach Patty Shea said.

UMass goalie Christine Tocco earned three saves in the loss, all in the second period. Opposing goalie Betsy Wagner registered seven saves, successfully preventing any UMass goals in her second shutout of the season.

The first two goals were both off penalty corners, shot to the left of Tocco. Guglieri stopped the ball at the top of the circle both times, feeding it first to Joanne Lombard and then Michelle Sola.

The final goal was scored with just over two minutes left in the first period. Guglieri chased a stray pass from a teammate all the way down the field, and a foot race ensued. When Tocco went for the loose ball, Guglieri finally caught up and took control of it, managing to knock the ball into the cage.

"It was a miscue defensively, where we picked each other off and the ball squirted in. We both dove for the loose ball, but she got to it first and managed to score. It was just simple lack of attention and skills," Shea said. "It really was our skills in critical areas that let us down."

The Minutewomen played a stronger offensive game than they have been managing in the past, combining for nine shots – the same number that Syracuse accumulated during the game. Robin Dziedzic attempted three shots, a UMass record for the season. Additionally, Massachusetts outnumbered Syracuse in penalty corners, 10-8.

Despite the improvements in their offensive play, the Maroon and White were still unable to complete their drives. Although the Minutewomen were able to penetrate the Syracuse defense, they simply could not put together a successful attack on Wagner's cage.

"We have to just realize where we are on the field, when we can attack, when we have a line to goal, and just finish the attacking concept of it."

Up-and-down affair

Continued from page 8

ond goal, which came three minutes later from Oral Bullen. Ptah Myers passed the ball through the box, and Bullen tapped it just inside the right post.

There was an array of fouls from George Washington over the course of the game that threatened to make things ugly. Koch was ready for the aggression, but wasn't pleased with some of the non-calls from the referee.

"You hope the referee can keep it under control and I think there were tough calls and he missed them on both sides... I thought he did OK," Koch said.

The Maroon and White finished out the game with a final goal from Myers on a penalty kick. Myers was playing the ball in the box when a Colonial defender knocked him down, setting up the senior's fifth goal of the season.

The win extended their winning streak to six games, tying the fourth longest in school history.

Richmond came to UMass on Sunday, and played the Minutemen in a very evenly matched game. The Spiders, who were picked to finish first in the A-10 preseason poll, brought a very defensive team to Rudd Field and left with unfinished business.

The key player for the Maroon and White was Burns, who started in place of Billman. Burns officially had six saves in the game, but appeared to be involved a lot more.

"He played very well, he saved the game for us. He made some good saves when we made some mistakes in the back. We are very, very pleased with him," Koch said.

The Minutemen came out flat in the first half, allowing the Spiders to control the momentum of the game.

Richmond had two huge scoring chances within two minutes of each other. With 22:38 remaining Richmond had an open shot on goal that was met by the outstretched hands of Barnes. On their next possession, the Spiders received a direct free kick that was also sent away by the UMass keeper.

Sox are still alive

Continued from page 8

this year," Oakland second baseman Mark Ellis said. "We're trying to make some new history and win that Game 5."

Scott Williamson pitched two perfect innings for the win, getting Erubiel Durazo to pop up to third base for the final out. For the third time in as many games at Fenway — the wild-card clincher, then Games 3 and 4 of the division series — the Red Sox poured out of the dugout to celebrate.

"This is the happiest I've ever been for a five-hour flight," Boston first baseman Kevin Millar said. "Usually at this time of year I'm barbecuing in the backyard with my boys and watching the playoffs. Now, they're watching me."

Barry Zito will be pitching on three days' rest as the A's face the possibility of first-round elimination for the fourth consecutive season.

"I think we have the better team," said A's starter Tim Hudson, who left after just one inning because of a strained muscle in his side. "We have the best left-hander in the league going tomorrow."

But Boston has perhaps the best right-hander.

"It's all right," Hudson said, "I'll take Barry Zito over Pedro Martinez any day."

Boston was equally confident.

"We feel like we have the driver's seat because we have Pedro going tomorrow," said Red Sox outfielder Johnny Damon, who homered and threw out a runner at third. "We know Pedro's going to be on."

Boston is hoping for a repeat of 1999, when it rallied from a 2-0 deficit to beat Cleveland in the first round. Martinez also pitched Game 5 that year on full rest, coming out of the bullpen to throw six hitless innings.

"We've got the best pitcher in the planet going," said Boston starter John Burkett, who allowed four runs and nine hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Two years ago, Oakland took a 2-0 lead over the New York Yankees before losing three in a row. If the A's blow it this year, there will be plenty of blame to go around.

The A's got disappointing performances from two of their best pitchers. Hudson, working on three days' rest, was cruising before he felt a twinge in his side at the end of the first.

And Foulke, who led the AL with 43 saves during the regular season, took the loss after allowing two runs on three hits in the eighth.

In Game 3, Oakland made a record-tying four errors and had two players thrown out at the plate before pinch-hitter Trot Nixon homered in the 11th inning to keep Boston alive. About 13 1/2 hours later, the A's returned to Fenway Park and hurt themselves again on the bases.

"Without the gifts from us, we'd be celebrating," Hudson said. "We're still confident that we can win."

Residence Hall Students

UMass Residential Telecom now has

LOWER INTERNATIONAL RATES

when you use your room telephone!

Rates are per minute (as of 10/03/03)

China	.55	Japan	.15
France	.17	Taiwan	.22
India	.55	U.K.	.10

For LOWER RATES in other countries, check out our Web site (http://telecom.oit.umass.edu/students), and click on Rates.

AT&T ACUS One Rate Plan® users have been automatically switched to the new, lower rates! Plus, your monthly fee has been waived! Please call Residential Telecom at 545-2103 with any questions.

Just use your PSC code!

(For questions about your PSC code, please call 545-2103)

PLUS, DOMESTIC LONG DISTANCE IS JUST

7.9 cents per minute, 24/7

Anytime, anywhere, in the United States when you use your room telephone!

No Monthly Fees

No Connection Fees

No Roaming Fees

No Sign Ups

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742

NOW FEATURING SUN SPHERE OVERBED TANNING

• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great

1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday

Conveniently Located

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4

Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Lavender Paraffin hand dip for $6!)

Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!

MUSIC • SOFTWARE MEDIA PLAY MOVIES • BOOKS

STUDENT TUESDAYS

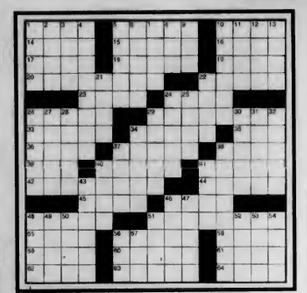
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY

OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY

CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS



1 SOH
5 Grain holders
10 Hints
14 Ms. Hill
15 Hill
16 Dug in "Garfield"
17 Vinegary
18 Bowling venue
19 Dean's harness
20 Tropical vine
21 Ms. Gabor's ohore
22 "That was close!"
24 "This must weigh ..."
26 Forbidden
29 Bright flower
30 Gin joint
34 Portobello mushroom
35 Sedan or convertible
38 Necklace part
39 Ms. Fawcett's sister on TV
40 Actress Capshaw
41 Dr. ___ hippie
42 Jennifer of gentle-ness
46 Doughnut quantity
47 Ms. Lupino
48 Counselor
49 Time periods
50 Raucous laughs
52 Ringlet
54 Chancellor president
57 Supreme gills
58 Right, on a map
59 Marshy inlet
60 Diva's rendition
61 Gardner of "Ava"
62 Cold
63 Original Kyoto
64 Tassle the quarterback
65 Bold look
66 Committee
67 On the sheltered side

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN

1 Hinged fastening
2 Medicinal plant
3 Prisen
4 Spanish need
5 Use the rink
6 Bassie's brother
7 Lounge about
8 Pantaloons dry
9 Yelling (with) 10 Goddess' status
11 Freshwater fish
12 Bad food
21 Drive away
22 Food wrapping
23 Spelling
25 Squirrel's refuge
26 Shinbone
27 Doubts --
28 Use TNT
29 Cash
30 Florida town
31 Informal farewell
32 Boutique buy
34 Labyrinths
36 Grind the noggin
38 Polish sausage
40 Tap one's fingers
41 Ceremonial fire
43 Type of cracker
44 Ancient Khalsi
47 Customary
48 Flake off
49 Unusual
50 Wrynr or Capri
51 Meg of "Sleepless in Seattle"
52 -- Mountains of Russia
53 Cut into cubes
54 Benefit
55 Type of jazz
57 Cleen. website

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chili Nachos
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Cutlet
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 57
- Low: 32

TUESDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 38

WEDNESDAY
- High: 66
- Low: 43

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling

COPY EDITOR
Emilie Duggan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd/ Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't park on campus, your car will be flipped over.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Be more cautious with your emotions, things can get out of hand.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your romantic aura is shining brightly. Take a risk and pursue your crush.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Refer to the manual before trying to assemble your life.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't just throw things around, they belong in special place.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't drink from the water fountain today. The bubbler is infested.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Wrong way. Turn around and try again.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't bother trying to light the dumpster on fire, metal doesn't burn.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Striking clothing choice, you really stand out today.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't be that person. I don't like you acting like a homewrecker.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Music is quite soothing. Try some Groovy tunes to help relax you.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You are a big loser. You don't deserve anything else in your horiscope.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"You guys have an addiction problem. You should go to an addiction place."

-Arnold Schwarzenegger

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Weekends $99. Includes R/T Luxury Motor Coach from Springfield. 3 Days-2 Nights- 4 Star Hotel Downtown-Meals-Night Club passes. www.montrealexpress.net 1-781-979-9001 Special Group Rates

APARTMENT FOR RENT

6 Room-4 Bedroom apt. $1200/month plus utilities. Northampton- 584-4920

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

AUTO REPAIR

Imported cars a specialty, 20 years experience. Honest Service, straightforward answers. Mark's Sunoco, Rt116 Sunderland 665-7438 (on bus route)

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time: Responsible student to post flyers on campus. Must be dependable. Call 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. Ask for Ted.

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

EMPLOYMENT

Mad Science: Performers/Instructors P-T to conduct fun after-school programs, parties, & more. Experience managing groups of children, love of kids. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. Call Mark 413-584-7243.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons-w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus, in Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.western-massboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for quiet, non-smoking female roommate. 2 share 2 bedroom apt. in Sunderland. Rent $350.00/month + utilities. Stephanie 978-660-8579

SERVICES

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Two for One Tuesday Bring a friend get 1/2 off on the best full service Haircut in Town 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker, and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office can help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED! 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SportsMonday

Monday, October 6, 2003 — Sports@dailycollegian.com

Daily double

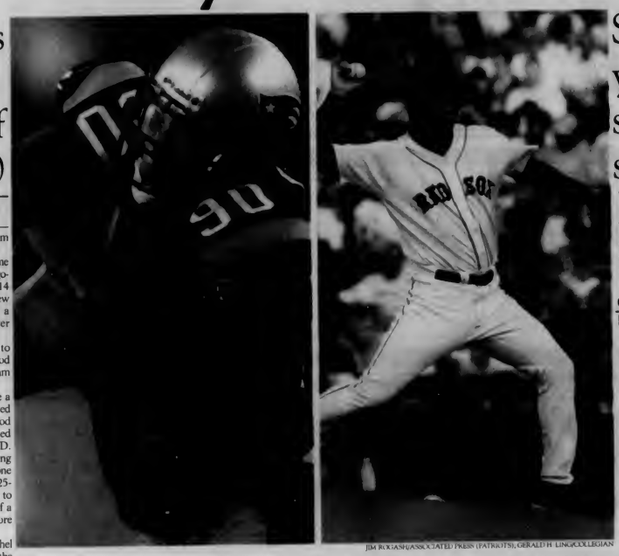
Cloud shines in debut as Pats hold off Titans 38-30

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — It was a dream come true for Mike Cloud — literally.

Cloud returned Sunday from a four-game substance abuse suspension and scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 15-yard run with 3:14 left to give the New England Patriots a 38-30 win over Tennessee.

Tennessee	30
New England	38



"As I went to bed last night, I had visions of something good happening," Cloud said. "I guess the dream was right."

The final five minutes were wild. Before a crowd cheering as much for baseball's Red Sox, Cloud put the Patriots ahead for good with his touchdown run, then Ty Law clinched it with a 65-yard interception return for a TD.

The sequence started with 4:40 remaining when Steve McNair bulled into the end zone from a yard out to give the Titans (3-2) a 25-24 lead, and threw for a 2-point conversion to rookie Tyrone Calico. It came at the end of a 17-play, 86-yard drive that consumed more than seven minutes.

But another rookie, the Patriots' Bethel Johnson, returned the kickoff 71 yards to the Tennessee 30. Three plays later, Cloud ran up

Continued on page 6

Jim Rogash/Associated Press (Patriots); Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Dan Klecko was a presence all over the Patriots' 38-30 win over the Tennessee Titans, even throwing a key block in a cameo at fullback, while Tim Wakefield's stellar 1 2/3 innings helped the Red Sox to another season-saving win over Oakland.

Sox pull off yet another stunner to stay alive

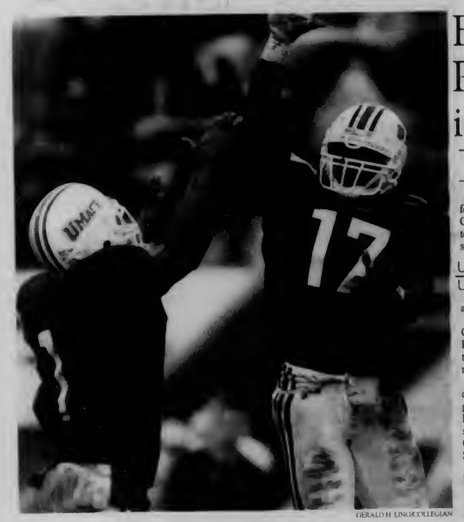
By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox were four outs from another postseason failure when David Ortiz snapped out of his slump and saved their season.

Hitless in his first 16 at-bats of the series, Ortiz lined a two-run double off Keith Foulke with two outs in the eighth inning yesterday to give Boston a thrilling 5-4 win over the Oakland Athletics.

Oakland	4
Boston	5

Manny Ramirez, who was 1-for-12 coming into the game, also broke out, getting two hits and scoring the go-ahead run as the Red Sox forced a decisive fifth game.



"I couldn't think of a better time for that to happen, because the clock was running out there," Boston manager Grady Little said. "That was a good time for them to bust loose."

Oakland has lost eight consecutive games when it was just one win from advancing in the playoffs — the longest such streak in major league history. To snap that slump, they'll have to beat Boston ace Pedro Martinez after the teams fly across the country for Monday's Game 5.

"This is this year. We're worried about

Continued on page 6

UMass claws UNH

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

James Ihedigbo (No. 17) and Steve Costello come together in defense against the New Hampshire Wildcats Saturday. Ihedigbo's late interception sealed the UMass victory.

Baylark and Peebler lead in 44-30 win

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

A month ago, just before the Massachusetts football team was to open its season against Central Connecticut State, the one clear thing about the team was that it's most explosive weapon was it's sophomore standout, R.J. Cobbs, the man who would line up at tailback and wide receiver this season, and in a perfect world, would set records at both positions.

UNH	30
UMass	44

One month later, the Minutemen are without Cobbs, and his dependable classmate, tailback Raumny Rosario. But it seems to be no matter, thanks to the work of Jason Peebler and refreshing newcomer Steve Baylark.

Peebler caught five passes for 177 yards — a career high — and two touchdowns, and Baylark gained 125 yards on 26 touches with three TDs to lead the Minutemen (4-1-0, 3-0 Atlantic 10) to a sloppy 44-30 victory over New Hampshire (2-4-0, 0-3 A-10) in front of 7,085 at McGuirk Alumni Stadium Saturday.

Peebler also etched his name in the record books, catching the longest pass in the history of UMass football — an 82-yard touchdown bomb from quarterback Jeff Krohn that cut an early UNH lead to 14-10. The play outgained a 43-year old record connection between quarterback John

Continued on page 6

Roller coaster pair at Rudd

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team entered its Atlantic 10 season last weekend and left with mixed emotions.

Riding the momentum of a five-game winning streak, the Maroon and White (7-2-1, 1-0-1 A-10) came home to Rudd Field to face-off against conference foes George Washington and Richmond.

Geo. Wash.	0
UMass	3
Richmond	0
UMass	0

The Minutemen dropped the Colonials 3-0 on Friday, but couldn't muster the same offensive performance against the Spiders (3-4-3, 0-0-2 A-10), settling for a scoreless draw.

George Washington (2-7-0, 0-1-0 A-10) brought an extremely aggressive team to Amherst on Friday, playing the Maroon and White evenly in the first half. UMass coach Sam Koch attributed their intensity to the beginning of their A-10 season.

"It's a conference game and the intensity is a little bit higher and the value on each game is higher, these games determine whether you go to the tournament or not," said Koch.

The Minutemen suffered a couple of key injuries in the first half, briefly losing forward Oral Bullen with a rolled ankle, and freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman soon after.

Billman was unable to return to the game after jumping for a ball and getting his foot stuck in the net. He appeared to twist his ankle and was replaced by senior Colin Burns.

Burns held the Colonials scoreless and made several key saves on defensive miscues to keep the lead intact.

"He played very well, that was a big game for us and a very big game for him. It was a big confidence builder, which he needed, and I'm very happy for him," Koch said of the senior.

The Maroon and White needed 65 minutes to get on the board, when freshman Richard Higa scored his first career goal off a Can Colwell throw-in. Higa has been getting more touches recently and Koch thinks he can only get better.

"He's getting better and better each week. He still has to keep the ball on the ground more, he still has to work the outside more, but he's doing it better and I expect him to improve each week," Koch said.

The Minutemen didn't need much more time to net their sec-

Continued on page 6

Foulke's troubles deter A's

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Keith Foulke couldn't close the game, and the Oakland Athletics still can't close a playoff series.

Now they're going home to try to break a streak of eight losses in games that could have clinched a spot in the next round.

The A's blew their latest chance Sunday when Foulke, the AL's best closer this season, allowed a two-run double to a slumping David Ortiz in the eighth inning that gave the Boston Red Sox a 5-4 victory and forced a decisive fifth game Monday in Oakland.

"He's not a robot," Athletics reliever Steve Sparks said. "He's been as good as the major leagues have had this year, him and Eric Gagne. I hope he'll get another chance in that situation tomorrow and he'll come out on top."

It's a distinct possibility, with 2002 Cy Young Award winner Barry Zito pitching for Oakland. He was brilliant for seven innings of Oakland's 5-1 win in Game 2, but he's going on three days' rest. He also must face AL ERA leader Pedro Martinez, who will have four days of rest.

Foulke led the AL with 43 saves and blew just five opportunities. He also had a 9-1 record and a 2.08 ERA. And he was outstanding in the first two games of the series in Oakland, where the Athletics have the AL's best home record.

But he struggled Sunday after replacing Ricardo Rincon to start the eighth with the Athletics ahead 4-3.

"We got right where we wanted to go today to get to the closer," Oakland manager Ken Macha said. "The save was in the eighth inning because you have the top of the order coming up."

Foulke got the first batter, Johnny Damon, to ground out to shortstop Miguel Tejada. Then Nomar Garciaparra, who hit .170 in September but was 5-for-15 in the series going into the eighth, doubled off the left-field wall.

"I left the cutter over the plate and he hit it off that thing in left," a somber Foulke said.

Manny Ramirez, 2-for-15 to that point in the series, ripped a single to left fielder Jose Guillen that was hit too hard for Garciaparra to advance past third.

"We wanted to make sure we pitched carefully to Manny," Foulke said. "I left the cutter too much over the plate and he hooked it."

Scoring woes continue in N.Y.

By Paula Aden
Collegian Correspondent

With a 3-0 loss to Syracuse University this Friday, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team has been shut out three games in a row.

The Orangewomen's victory breaks them from a three game losing streak, and stretches the Minutewomen's losing streak to seven games, dropping their record to 2-9.

Syracuse forward Ann-Marie Guglieri contributed to all three of her team's goals, with assists on the first two and scoring the final goal unassisted.

UMass	0
Syracuse	3

The Orangewomen (4-6) scored all three goals in the first half of play, and the Minutewomen kept Syracuse scoreless in the second half. This was an improvement on the previous two games, where UMass was unable to stop its opponents from continu-

Continued on page 6

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Jaime Bawden and the Minutewomen are on a three-game scoreless streak after Friday's loss.

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, October 7, 2003 — New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 — Volume CXIV Issue 25

Massive riot erupts in Southwest

Students react to outcome of Game 5 of AL division series

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

A student prepares to leap over a bonfire fueled by tree branches, articles of clothing, toilet paper and other debris.

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

For the second time this week, riots erupted in the Southwest Residential Area following the Boston Red Sox's triumph over the Oakland Athletics in last night's game.

Students raced to gather in front of the Berkshire Dining Hall from all directions of the Southwest Residential Area, chanting, "Riot, riot!" and "Yankees suck!"

Students surrounded the stairs located between John Quincy Adams and John Adams towers pointing fingers in the air, hugging, yelling on cell phones and waving video cameras through the air.

At approximately 11:30 p.m., one of the first fireworks went off, followed by a cloud of smoke. Fireworks then began to go off simultaneously throughout the quad.

When the crowd first began to gather, a beer can was thrown and it struck a police officer. Police were inside Washington Tower, allegedly filming the activities.

As students began to crowd around Berkshire, a police officer positioned outside of the D.C. was struck by a beer can. He later moved inside the dining hall.

There were two small fires: one between two pyramids, and another on top of one of the pyramids in front of J.Q.A. There, a student's sweater was set ablaze. A piece of debris was thrown into the air but was extinguished when it hit the ground. Students began pushing each other around the fires. A tree almost caught the flames as students began tearing down limbs and lighting them on fire.

A large explosion occurred in front of the Berkshire Dining Hall. Students who thought it was teargas began yelling, "Tear gas!" The crowd subsequently shifted away from the building.

At least five students climbed on top of the Dining Hall, one waving a Pedro jersey. Students began crowd surfing; one female was reported to be on top of a male's shoulders exposing her chest.

At approximately 12:15 a.m., one of the students on the roof of the D.C. knelt down and then hung from the ledge, as another took a running start before he leapt off the building and jumped into the crowd. It was reported that he was carried to an area behind Washington Tower, possibly with a broken leg. He was set down on the ground as police officers tended to him, and he was shortly taken away by EMTs. Students then began shouting, "D.C. jumper, D.C. jumper!"

"He was running off [the D.C.], and he fell like standing up; he fell right on his legs, like standing straight up. It looked bad, and then he just collapsed, and everyone started pushing toward the front D.C. to see what was going on," said Sean Roush, a freshman. "People picked him up and they started carrying him out toward these guys [the police]. Then the cops came right here [to the back entrance of Washington Tower]."

At approximately 12:20 a.m. students began yelling, "The cops are coming!" and a large number of students dispersed.

"Someone said the cops were coming this way. People started stampeding," said Krystal Najim, a junior. "Some kid fell off the steps; people just ran over him."

Students then began running toward Cance Hall, after another firecracker exploded outside of J.Q.A.

Police had the area between Washington Tower and Cance Hall blocked off.

By 1 a.m., in excess of 200 people remained in the area, as approximately 30 police officers in riot gear slowly began walking toward the crowd through the Southwest Horseshoe.

A fight broke out, but it was quickly dispersed by the oncoming police. Beer bottles dropped from windows in J.Q.A. As the police pushed toward Coolidge Hall, students gradually left the scene.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Students face off with mounted police in front of John Quincy Adams Tower last night.

Faculty Senate discusses student language requirements

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

A motion by the Academic Matters Council at the Faculty Senate's Thursday meeting to revise the foreign language requirements of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics sparked a discussion concerning the variance of language requirements for majors within the Colleges of Arts and Sciences.

By approving the revisal of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics' language requirement, the Academic Matters Council and Faculty Senate created a third division of requirements within the united Colleges of Arts and Sciences.

The Colleges of Arts and Sciences include departments within Humanities and Fine Arts, Social and Behavioral Sciences, and Natural Sciences and Mathematics. Before the proposal, Humanities and Fine Arts students and those in Natural Sciences and Mathematics majors had to fulfill identical sets of language requirements. Students within the Social and Behavioral Sciences departments (who entered the university after 1999, when the college changed their requirements) could have the choice of fulfilling the language requirement in the same way that Humanities and Fine Arts and Natural Sciences and Mathematics do, or by fulfilling a set of Global Education requirements.

Students within the College of Humanities and Fine Arts with a double major are required to fulfill these requirements, regardless of whether it is their primary or secondary major. (Students within the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences may fulfill language requirements in either their primary or secondary major as long as it complies with the Global Education requirement.)

The revised foreign language requirements for the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics allow for more flexibility on the departments' part to help students satisfy the language requirements. However, some members of the Faculty Senate showed concern that the differences in language requirements for the Colleges of Arts and Sciences were becoming too confusing and varied.

Professor Eric Einhorn of the political science department, which falls into the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, was one of those concerned by the lack of coordination between the three colleges.

Einhorn also expressed dissatisfaction with the administration concerning language/global education requirements.

"What is regrettable is the lack of leadership by the administration in rethinking language/global education requirements," said Einhorn. "Professor Marta Calas, from the School of Management, was in the Senate and she said that many business students need foreign and global cultural education, but her colleagues are reluctant to touch the issue."

Einhorn, as well as other members of the Faculty Senate also mentioned the lack of resources available to teach languages, especially since the Foreign Language Resource Center was permanently closed due to budget cuts in 2002.

"Finally, as always, at UMass it's a matter of resources: the language departments have shrunken in size and can barely cope with current enrollments," said Einhorn. "They could not handle wider language requirements — this was behind the CNSM change."

Members of the Faculty Senate asked that the issue of language requirement coordination between colleges be discussed at the Rules Committee's meeting. Senate Secretary Professor Ernest May said he would bring up the issue.

Upon discussion of the language requirements issue at the Rules Committee's meeting Friday morning, May reported that it was decided the matter be referred to the Undergraduate Education Council for further study.

May believes that the issue of language/global education requirements is a complex one and "that it will take some time for the council to formulate a recommendation." May also said that students who wish to voice their opinions should direct their comments to Professor Richard Rogers, Chair of the Undergraduate Education Council.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Richard Bogartz, professor of psychology speaks at the Faculty Senate meeting Thursday night.

Traprock Peace Center to host Scott Ritter tonight

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Tonight, the Traprock Peace Center in Deerfield will host its 24th anniversary celebration, presenting a number of speakers including former United Nations weapons inspector in Iraq and U.S. Marine Intelligence Officer, Scott Ritter.

The celebration, which will take place at the Frontier Regional School auditorium, at 113 North Main St., will begin at 7 p.m. with introductory remarks on the theme of disarmament by Randy Kehler, the Traprock Center's first director, and Juanita Nelson, co-founder of Peacemakers, the Pioneer Valley Community Land Trust, the Greenfield Farmers Market and Pioneer Valley War Tax Resistors.

The Traprock Peace Center, established in 1979, provides peace education programs regionally and nationally and engages in national educational campaigns. This past year the center has collaborated with colleagues organizing educational forums on alternatives to war. The forums have been held across the country, in major cities including Baltimore and Boston.

In a recent press release, Sunny Miller, Traprock's executive director, said, "We are gathering brilliant people to share this evening. It's not surprising that a former U.S. Marine, an organic farmer and a nuclear freeze organizer find common ground in their desire to prevent wars of aggression."

Ritter will discuss his analysis of the process of disarmament as a painstaking, but effective and workable alternative to the chaos and tragedy of protracted war. "The foundation of what I'll be talking about will be on my new book, on how the Bush administration is weak, on how it mislead us," he said.

Ritter served for eight years as an intelligence officer in the Marine Corps, and served as an arms control inspector in the former Soviet Union and on General Norman Schwarzkopf's staff during the Gulf War before his appointment as a weapons inspector for the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM).

Ritter published his experiences in Iraq in 1999 in his book, "ENDGAME: Solving the Iraq Problem — Once and For All." He also recently completed a documentary film, "In Shifting Sands: The Truth About UNSCOM and the Disarming of Iraq," which covers the ramifications of the failure of the U.S. policy of economic sanctions-based containment of Iraq.

"[The lecture] is about what the ramifications are going to be for the war on terror and what it means for democracy when the president can lie to us," said Ritter. "It's not a minor issue, it's a major issue. It defines who we are as a people, depending on how we deal with it."

Editorial/Opinion — Page 4
A piece of advice — Riding doesn't earn respect

Arts & Living — Page 5
A must see — Murder's new movie not to be a hit

Sports — Page 8
Sox Triumph — Boston edges Oakland in Game 5

Comics/Classifieds — Page 7

ADVERTISEMENT

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
AMHERST

319 Whitmore Administration Building
181 Presidents Drive
Amherst, MA 01003-9313

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life

October 6, 2003

Dear UMass Amherst Student Body,

Since my arrival in June, I have been warmly welcomed by the students of this campus, and have had many opportunities to witness exemplary conduct and accomplishment. I have witnessed hundreds of students performing community service. I have joined students as we cheer on our own athletes, and applaud our student performances. I have seen thousands of students involved in strenuous academic disciplines and research. Every day, I am privileged to meet students who, through their day to day activities and endeavors, make the University of Massachusetts Amherst great.

Saturday night, October 4th, I also witnessed the worst possible type of behavior as thousands of students from the Southwest area of campus engaged in a riot, creating an environment of violence and destruction that endangered other members of the campus community and destroyed property.

I am writing to all students to stress in the strongest possible terms that this behavior will not be tolerated: there is zero tolerance. Any student who engages in this unlawful behavior will be arrested and charged under Massachusetts General Law, and will be held accountable under the Code of Student Conduct and subject to severe discipline up to and including expulsion from the University. These consequences will be enforced in a manner previously unprecedented on this campus.

Students who might consider engaging in this destructive behavior should also consider the ramifications of permanent University dismissal, including requirements for repayment of financial aid, and jeopardizing future educational and employment opportunities.

I write this letter knowing that the vast majority of UMass Amherst students do not participate in, nor approve of, this type of destructive behavior. With this knowledge, I ask all of you who care about this campus to take an active role in ending these disgraceful events. It is this type of inexcusable behavior, whether in a campus residential cluster, on Hobart Lane, or any other location, that degrades the reputation of this campus, and therefore, by direct extension, compromises the value of your University degree. Each of you must hold your student colleagues responsible and accountable for any behavior which undermines your academic and personal accomplishments.

In considering this most recent destruction in Southwest, I specifically ask that students take personal responsibility for their campus and work with me to identify those students and visitors involved with the violence and destruction. As of this writing, we have three arrests resulting from the incident. Using images from surveillance cameras we will continue the process of issuing warrants.

Similar to the accountability each student has for their residence hall room, those students who participated in the October 4th riot, and any students who participate in any future destructive behavior, can be held financially accountable for the cost of the damage from October 4th, which exceeds many, many thousands of dollars. Our General Counsel reserves the right to file law suits against students who participated in the riot for the costs of damage, including any collateral costs such as extra police and medical responses.

As I work with Chancellor Lombardi and my fellow Vice Chancellors to move this campus from strength to strength, I am adamant that this type of behavior not be tolerated. I ask all of you to take responsibility for your campus and work with me to bring prestige and honor to your educational experience at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life

police log

Vehicles vandalized

Car windows smashed in Lot 33

compiled by Tom Coyle

TUESDAY, SEPT. 30

12:09 a.m. An officer reported a Saturn with the rear window broken and the stereo missing in Lot 32 on Massachusetts Ave.

9:54 a.m. An officer reported that someone tore up a two-foot square piece of sod from the softball complex and another from the football field.

9:58 a.m. One person was transported from Prince Hall to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

11:27 a.m. A party reported the attempted theft of a wallet from Brett Hall.

1:01 p.m. Officers received a report of a subject smashing parking meters in Lot 31. The offender will pay restitution to Parking Services.

4:27 p.m. A caller reported that his chair was stolen. The responding officer reported that the chair was returned.

7:39 p.m. A party reported that someone had smashed his passenger's side window, stole his stereo, T.V. system and middle console from Lot 33 on University Drive.

9:48 p.m. A party reported an odor of marijuana in John Adams Tower. The responding officer reported that no odor was detected.

11:05 p.m. A party reported an odor of marijuana in Kennedy Tower. The responding officer reported that no odor was detected and the residents were spoken to about the noise.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 1

12:13 a.m. An officer reported a car with its driver's window smashed in Lot 22 on University Drive. The officer stated that it appeared someone had tried to remove the stereo. The officer and cadets checked car-to-car and the victim was given transportation to Washington Tower.

1:24 a.m. A cadet reported suspicious movement inside a vehicle in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive. The responding officer reported that the subject checked OK.

7:36 a.m. An elevator door was reported kicked off its tracks in Kennedy Tower causing $500 worth of damage.

11:45 a.m. A party in James Hall reported receiving several phone calls of a sexual nature from a male. She was not sure whether the calls came from on or off campus. A report was taken.

1:22 a.m. A caller reported what appeared to be a gun lying underneath a large tree near the mobile trailer on Eastman Lane. The responding officer reported that it was either a BB gun or an air-gun. The officer secured the weapon and brought it into the station.

1:44 p.m. A caller reported her stereo stolen from her car in Lot 44 near Sylvan.

4:35 p.m. A report of a vehicle broken into in Lot 13 on Olympia Drive was received. The stereo, CDs and other car parts were stolen and damaged.

4:53 p.m. A party reported a minor motor vehicle accident at the Robsham Visitors Center, and requested an officer to mediate the problem. Insurance information was exchanged.

5:45 p.m. A party observed a college-aged male exiting the side door of Hampshire Dining Commons carrying a full box of ice cream bars. Officers were unable to locate the subject. An investigation is pending.

8:05 p.m. Campus Center Security requested assistance with an unruly subject in the Student Union. Christopher Quinn, 45, of 109 Washington St., Keene, N.H., was arrested on a warrant.

10:22 p.m. An officer responded to an odor of marijuana in Coolidge Hall.

11:44 p.m. An officer responded to two reports of an odor of marijuana in Gorman Hall.

11:46 p.m. A fire alarm activation in John Adams Hall was reported. Environmental Health and Safety reported that the alarm was due to burnt popcorn.

11:56 p.m. A party reported that someone had cut off her vehicle antenna on Thatcher Way. The party reported that her antenna was worth $30. A report was taken.

THURSDAY, OCT. 2

1:39 a.m. An intoxicated person from Johnson Hall was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

2:51 a.m. An officer reported a crowd gathering in the Southwest Mall. Three calls were received regarding a subject throwing lit objects at Washington Tower. The officer reported that several groups had been dispersed.

10:12 a.m. A party called to request an officer to trespass a few "homeless" people who had been hanging around for the past few weeks and eating at the hotel's continental breakfast buffet. The party stated that the people were not eating right now but had been seen with coffee earlier. The officer spoke to the subjects in the lobby of the hotel and advised them to move on.

3:03 p.m. A resident reported an odor of marijuana coming from outside a room in Washington Tower. The responding officer reported that he was unable to detect an odor in the hallway outside the room.

5 p.m. An officer responded to a report that a member of the custodial staff and a student were involved in a verbal argument including racial slurs, concerning a traffic dispute in Knowles Engineering Building. An officer spoke with the parties and determined that no threats of violence occurred.

5:10 p.m. A party reported receiving several phone calls from an unknown person and stated that the subject knew her roommate's name. The officer provided the parties with his call number and advised the parties to have their phone number changed through the telecommunications office.

7:20 p.m. A caller from Brown Hall reported that their cell phone was either lost or stolen approximately two weeks ago from a lounge in Washington Tower.

7:35 p.m. Amherst police department requested assistance serving a summons in Crampton Hall.

9:50 p.m. An officer requested assistance with a group coming to a vehicle with empty duffle bags to unload alcohol. Kristen Stenstrom, 18, of 32 Buchanan Rd., Boston, Mass., and Anne Roddy, 18, of 47 Strafford St., Boston, Mass., were arrested for being minors in possession of alcohol.

FRIDAY, OCT. 3

12:02 a.m. A party reported an odor of marijuana coming from a room in McNamara Hall. The responding officer reported that the odor was detected in the lounge area and the resident assistant was advised.

1:20 a.m. A noise complaint was reported in the Orchard Hill Bowl. An officer stated that a group of subjects playing wiffle ball were advised to keep the noise down.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-2500 •
• Fax 413-545-3099 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Fousekis
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pikl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Partington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Farrow Schluter
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappa
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Legatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsey Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE PACKWOOD ON THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Residence Hall Students

UMass Residential Telecom now has LOWER
INTERNATIONAL RATES
when you use your room telephone!

Rates are per minute (as of 10/03/03)

China	.55	Japan	.15
France	.17	Taiwan	.22
India	.55	U.K.	.10

For LOWER RATES in other countries, check out our Web site (http://telecom.oit.umass.edu/students), and click on Rates.

AT&T ACUS One Rate Plan® users have been automatically moved to the new, lower rates! Plus, your monthly fee has been waived! Please call Residential Telecom at 545-2103 with any questions.

Just use your PSC code!
(For questions about your PSC code, please call 545-2103)

PLUS, DOMESTIC LONG DISTANCE IS JUST
7.9 cents per minute, 24/7
Anytime, anywhere, in the United States
when you use your room telephone!

No Monthly Fees
No Connection Fees
No Roaming Fees
No Sign Ups

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New $20 bill will offset counterfeit criminals

This week, our government is taking a major stride ahead of counterfeit criminals. At the same time, our classic greenback is receiving a major facelift. The new $20 bill will be released today. The new design has a color scheme unlike any other bill in United States currency. The new bill features shades of peach, yellow and blue.

Authorities hope that the new look will deter counterfeiters, who have become increasingly crafty at forging bills. This is partially due to the advancement of printers and computer technology. While it may currently be easier than ever to replicate a $20 bill, the new color scheme should make this job much more difficult.

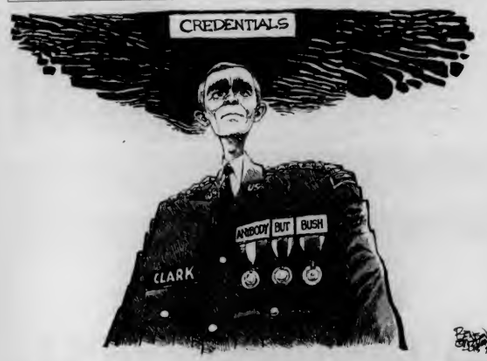
The worst cases of deceptive counterfeit bills have been mostly from foreign groups from Colombia, harboring expensive and highly advanced technology. The $20 bill is most commonly forged because it is highly functional as a payment method, and is more valuable than copying $1 bills.

Other changes include the loss of Andrew Jackson's frame, as well as a new watermark and new security thread. These adjustments will cost 7.5 cents for manufacturing each bill, which is almost 20 percent more than the older version.

One problem that is feared relating to the bill's release is public confusion. This bill will be the third version that has been released since the 1990s. In the past, problems arose when new bills were rejected by ATMs, cashiers and vending machines. Worst of all, the older bills were refused by businesses outside the U.S., making international exchanges a nightmare.

A lump sum of $30 million has been invested in an advertising campaign to familiarize the public and foreign markets with the new and improved $20 bill. This is especially important due to the new color codes, as U.S. money has been strictly black and green for years.

Collectors beware: the old $20 bills are not worth saving. The actual value of the bill will probably never go up. Millions and millions of the old twenties have been made over the last decade, and they will not be wiped from the face of the earth anytime soon, as they are still perfectly legal tenders. Even $1,000 bills that have been saved from the Great Depression are currently worth only $1,050. Remember, the government doesn't want us to save money; it wants us to spend it.



However, the new bills will certainly take you by surprise, and they may cause you to glance more carefully into your wallet. With $130 million worth of counterfeit American cash floating around the world, it's easy to be fooled. There are several key signs to look for if you think that your money may not be legal.

The portrait should appear lifelike and should stand out from the background; it should not be dull. The serial numbers should be clear and evenly spaced. Sometimes, the touch of the bill is enough to give away the texture of the regular printing paper that counterfeits use, versus the linen-cotton mix used for real bills. True currency has flecks of red and blue fibers within the paper.

If you suspect a bill is counterfeit, make sure to compare it to a proven legal tender just to be sure. Write your initials in the border of the bill, place it in an envelope and contact the U.S. Secret Service field office, the number for which can be found in any telephone directory.

Information from www.secretservice.gov and www.usatoday.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Federal law is no obstacle for the Bush administration

Russ Juskalian

Every person, from CIA Director George Tenet, to each citizen of this country should be enraged. The leak of classified information — chiefly the name of a CIA officer — is illegal for good reason.

When Robert Novak relegated to the public in his nationally syndicated column the name of Nonofficial Cover Agent Valerie Plame, he not only endangered her life, he endangered the lives of countless innocent people, and potentially jeopardized decades of secret intelligence.

Plame, as a nonofficial cover, was not acting as an agent under the guise of being some other United States government employee. Instead, Plame's cover was that of a private energy expert.

"This is real James Bond stuff," said Kenneth M. Pollack, a former agency officer. "You're going overseas posing as a businessman, and if the other government finds out about you, they're probably going to shoot you. The United States has basically no way to protect you."

If a NOC agent is identified, not only is her life put at risk, but any innocent person with whom she interacted regarding her operation will also be targeted as a possible spy or collaborator. These people, maybe having no knowledge of Plame's position, would probably be tortured or murdered along with Plame — if she were caught.

Beyond this, a NOC agent is one of the hardest agents to place amongst enemy locations and positions. It can take years for an agent destined for NOC-work to prove her loyalty and legitimacy to foreign nations or organizations. The implications of a NOC agent's cover being blown is far reaching: any information gathered by her can be assumed to no longer hold relevance, since the groups she was investigating have become aware that she was not who she appeared to be.

Novak, however, isn't the source of this problem — though ethics should have overwhelmed his desire to declare an agent's name. The legal offenders are the "two senior administration officials," who Novak attributes as the source of his information regarding Plame.

Under United States Code, Title 50, Chapter 15, Section 421, designed specifically for the "protection of certain national security information," anyone "having or having had authorized access to classified information that identifies a covert agent" who shares this information with someone without said authorization, is committing a crime punishable by up to 10 years in prison, in addition to a fine.

When Robert Novak relegated ... the name of Nonofficial Cover Agent Valerie Plame, he not only endangered her life, he endangered the lives of countless innocent people, and potentially jeopardized decades of secret intelligence.

The fact that anyone would endanger the lives of so many people and risk such important intelligence is stunning. That two senior administration officials — as in the Bush administration — could commit such a crime is even worse. However, if what the democrats say is true, that the name was disclosed in order to punish Joseph C. Wilson IV (Plame's husband) for his criticism of the Bush administration's use of false evidence to justify war, someone must be held responsible and given the maximum possible sentence.

George W. Bush should have made a statement immediately following the release of the Novak article condemning the treachery of those senior officials who produced Plame's name, but he didn't. He didn't take any action, and wouldn't have, until a few people in the media called attention to the now infamous Novak column. Bush's statement should have taken the form of a national, ad hoc speech, broadcast by network television — similar to those he gives when it is time to declare war, or ask for more military funding.

The gravity of this issue is outrageous — the two senior officials were Bush's senior officials.

Now it has been left up to the CIA to demand a Department of Justice Inquiry. As Paul Krugman pointed out in The New York Times on Oct. 3, the Bush administration is relying on "the right-wing media slime machine, which tries to assassinate the character of anyone who opposes the right's goals."

Krugman noted that before the release of Plame's identity, her husband, Wilson, was touted by Bush himself as a "truly inspiring diplomat." And now, post-agent-betrayal, the "slime machine" has already made references to Wilson as an "opponent of the U.S. war on terror."

What is going on? Why won't the president take the action expected of the leader of the most powerful country in the world? If his officials made the gravest of mistakes, then it is his responsibility to be the first person to identify them and make apologies to every citizen of this country on behalf of those treacherous men.

Bush's handling of this situation is the final straw. We need a new administration in 2004.

Russ Juskalian is a Collegian columnist.

Downward spiral of UMass fans

Dan Lamothe

It's old hat, guys.

University of Massachusetts students have rioted on occasion for years, but there's always been some seemingly large stirring force driving the mayhem. Be it wrong or right, there's always been some dramatic event to point to as a hypothetical cause for UMass riots, whether it was a Red Sox loss in the 1986 World Series, a New England Patriots win in the 2002 Super Bowl, a blackout in April of 2001, or the horrible clash of student and police egos that was Hobart Hoedown 2003.

No longer.

Saturday night's riot was a riot of a different animal. Sure, all of the usual elements — alcohol, adrenaline, violence and destruction of property — were there. But Saturay's riot signifies a continued change in the mentality of many UMass students. It's sad to say, but rioting has become more hip each time one of these episodes plays out, and it's a matter of time before something drastic enough happens to make the national news.

On Wednesday night, the Red Sox opened their series with the Athletics. The game, a nailbiter that will no doubt end up on a classic sports network sometime soon, was completely frustrating to watch as a Sox fan. Poor decision making, poor baserunning and poor pitching all contributed in the end to a loss, and that in itself was enough to drive a Sox fan crazy.

So did fans reflect on the loss and move on? Sadly, not even then — at 3 a.m. on a school night after only one loss in a series of games to be played. Dozens of people gathered outside the towers in Southwest, with gremlin kids throwing lit objects at Washington Tower.

"We know there are a lot of fans who want the chance to celebrate," UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald said on Thursday. "We want to give them that chance while not having them damage any property or harm anyone."

But at this point, could that be asking too much? The mentality for many students has evolved to the point where they're looking for an excuse to light things on fire. After Game 1, a few dozen kids did it. Game 2 brought no destructive behavior with it at UMass, perhaps in part because it was a daytime game with fewer drunks around. Game 3 led to two cars being flipped. Where does this end?

Maybe it's because I'm a senior and have one foot out the door already, but I do not understand the sense of entitlement that many students seem to have developed. At some point, the right to celebrate and party recklessly at UMass developed into the right to maim and destroy.

That Is troubling at the very least. The overwhelming popularity of riots has led to a sense of one-upmanship, and that's dangerous. First it was setting couches on fire. Then it was using fireworks. Then, last year at Hobart, it became setting trees on fire and burning down a bus stop in Puffton Village. Now it's flipping cars over. Does anyone else see a vicious trend?

Both UMPD and the Amherst Police Department have taken strong criticism in the past for their handling of riotous conditions. Riot gear leads to more riots, the school of thinking that criticizes the police goes.

But if you were faced with dispersing the crowd Saturday night, what would you have done? Going back at the very least to 2001, any type of police presence has been met with flying rocks, bricks and bottles. Is that fair? The owners of the flipped cars most assuredly don't think so, and I'd be willing to bet the student who lost his front teeth Saturday night doesn't either. About the only positive for one of the car owners is that he reportedly got out there after his car was flipped swinging a baseball bat.

According to the Hampshire Gazette, all 56 UMPD police officers were on duty last night to respond to the threat of another riot, including Chief Barbara O'Connor, who has been on leave for weeks. She came back this weekend to deal with the violence. And that's as fine of an example as any as to what riots cost UMass students in the long run.

From the tens of thousands of dollars in damage to dining halls in Southwest to the massive overtime costs for UMass police anticipating a repeat performance Sunday and last night, the money to pay for problems will eventually come from funds that could have been applied to something more positive and useful for students.

As students, we're losing our respect, our funding and our freedom to participate in future celebrations because of complete stupidity right now.

Is that really the best way to gather for our nation's pastime?

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

Antigun coalition = stupidity

Zach Oelschlegel

Again, the dream of a utopian society takes away all of our common sense.

Just last Wednesday, one of my fellow columnists wrote an article about why we need to make handguns illegal, citing a tragic death in Maryland in which a 4-year-old shot his sister. While I feel for the people involved and I agree with my colleague that this would never have happened had there not been a gun in the house, the whole idea of making guns illegal is completely and utterly stupid.

I really have to laugh at the people who scream about Ashcroft being the anti-Christ, because typically, these are the same people touting the "stop gun violence" policy.

Let's just think about this for one second. On the one hand, these people are crying that John Ashcroft is trying to turn America into Stalinist Russia. Every right we have will go straight out the door; everything we should take for granted as free American citizens will be compromised in this appalling Patriot Act.

Later in the day, these same people are answering phones for the Coalition to Stop Gun Violence. Apparently, the Second Amendment doesn't count as one of our so-called "inalienable rights," and ironically enough, John Ashcroft actually supports our right to bear arms, arguably the most important right we as Americans were ever given.

In truth, the Second Amendment was never really about forming our own militia in case Britain decided to invade us again. It wasn't designed to give us a gun so we could go out and knock off a few rabbits for supper, or give us a means to protect us from criminals. The true reason the Second Amendment was given to us was to protect us from our own government.

However obvious it sounds, if we did not have guns, we would not have had any chance to win the Revolutionary War. Likewise, when the Bill of Rights was made, Americans were given the right to own a gun so they could protect themselves from their own government, in the case that government became oppressive like Britain's was before our independence.

Someone once said, "When guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns." We outlawed murder and stealing a long time ago, and I don't see that working out too well.

The framers made every effort to spell out the freedoms of Americans, and gave American citizens every law and right to stop the government from infringing upon them, which is stated in our Bill of Rights.

Now, many people foolishly want the government to violate our rights by taking away the Second Amendment. We are already adequately protected, they say, by our well-trained police force and standing army. Nevermind that banning guns would make criminals the only citizens with guns; nevermind that banning guns makes every other right we have completely hazy; nevermind that it's statistically proven that crime rates are lower in states with minimal gun control legislation as opposed to states with high gun control laws.

The idea of taking these guns away is idealistic, but nowhere near realistic. Someone once said, "When guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns." We outlawed murder and stealing a long time ago, and I don't see that working out too well. As if banning guns would be any different? Shouldn't we try to have the people handling the guns be at least law-abiding? We already cower in fear over the potential of being burglarized, mugged or killed, so why take away our last line of defense?

It isn't feasible. Remember prohibition? Going out and banning something that's been legal for years will not work because of the backlash society would put against the police and the government. Can you imagine the cops taking your crazy, southern, redneck uncle Jeremiah into the police station for having a gun in his house?

What we really need to be thinking about, however, is the law itself. The Second Amendment specifically states that "the rights of the people to hold and bear arms shall not be infringed." Infringing these rights opens the door to Ashcroft or any other politician who wants to steal our freedom. It would make the entire Constitution ambiguous if we were to violate a right that is clearly in our Constitution to never be violated, and it opens the door to rewriting our entire law.

There is a reason as to why our forefathers gave us these undeniable rights; they didn't write these laws in so they could be denied once again by an oppressive government. Banning guns is a nice idea, but what it really comes down to is that it is just plain stupid.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor are currently open. Anyone interested in applying should contact Erika Lovley or Paige Cram...

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A masterpiece in any language

'Lost in Translation' proves to be Bill Murray's best work

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Her acting in "The Godfather, Part 3" may have earned her nearly universal critical boos, but Sofia Coppola showed real promise as a behind the scenes talent with 1999's poetically beautiful suburban tragedy, "The Virgin Suicides." That film showed the raw talent of a filmmaker with a singular dreamy voice, and with the thoughtful romantic comedy, "Lost in Translation," Coppola — the daughter of famed filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola and the wife of Spike Jonze — makes the leap into the wind, crafting a film as delicately perfect and astounding as the best her father and husband have ever created.

'Lost in Translation'
Directed by Sofia Coppola
Starring Bill Murray, Scarlett Johanssen
Focus Features
Rated R
105 mins.
Grade A

Yes, "Lost in Translation" is a romantic comedy. But this isn't a romance predicated on the matching of organs nor is it predicated on the gimmicks of farce. This is a romantic comedy made with a subtle, low-key elegance, in which the romance is almost subliminal and the comedy comes on the human level.

Bill Murray — a comic genius who has long gone underappreciated as a dramatic actor — delivers the performance of his career as Bob Harris, an American film star slumming in Japan by filming a series of whiskey ads for a cool $2 million. Bob is a man in deep pain, though he hardly shows it through his calm, charismatic exterior. He has been married for 25 years, but there is little that is precious about the marriage other than his kids. He is a successful actor, making mountains of cash, yet he seems embarrassed by the sell-out factor of his Japanese commercial excursions. His face is a road map of regret and resignation, but Bob is a man who has long ago come to accept his regret and resignation.

COURTESY FOCUS FEATURES

Scarlett Johanssen plays Charlotte in "Lost in Translation."

A permanent jet lag has left Bob tired and disoriented, wandering the halls of his hotel with little direction or purpose. Often, he finds himself sitting alone at the hotel bar, sipping whiskey, at a loss as an American stranded in this polite, but alien world of high-tech achievements and colorful entertainment.

An oasis for Bob comes in the form of Charlotte (Scarlett Johanssen), the young wife of a hipster photographer (Giovanni Ribisi) off on assignment in Tokyo. Charlotte is just as dislocated and lost as Bob, unable to sleep and seeking refuge in a self-help tape, titled "A Soul's Search." Charlotte is beginning to realize that she married the wrong man, a sycophantic ladder-climber who says that he loves his wife but is often more content to be off schmoozing a potential celebrity client.

Charlotte and Bob are lost souls drifting rudderless through life, and the sense of misplacement as they stay in Japan only accentuates it. They meet in the hotel bar and gradually, almost casually, their encounter forms into a friendship and then a romance. They both sense a kindred soul in the other, and they form a bond out of their mutual alienation.

Coppola avoids the usual heavy-handed clichés of romantic movies; her love story is one based on intimacy rather than sex or contrivance. Bob and Charlotte connect on a purely emotional level, their romance blossoming through conversations that enrich each other on a deeper personal level.

Coppola prolongs any sense of physical gratification; after all, Bob and Charlotte may be falling in love, but they both are married and do not want to risk giving into base animal attraction. The look on their faces when Bob warbles Roxy Music's "More Than This" during a karaoke session sums up the complexity and longing of the relationship.

Coppola has written and directed "Lost in Translation" with a muted vibrancy, a kind of big-hearted spiritedness that also never overwhelms Coppola's wistful humanity. Her cast aids her immensely. Murray is given the role of his career, toning down his patented lovable insincerity to find a man with genuine soulfulness hiding behind his sardonic humor. Murray is an actor smart enough to know when to reign in his usual tics; even in scenes that are seemingly tailored to the comedian's gifts, Murray never falls back on mannerisms that would break Coppola's quiet spell. Anyone who doubted Murray's ability to be a romantic lead should be blown away by his performance here, which is every inch deserving of the Oscar.

> "Coppola has written and directed 'Lost in Translation' with a muted vibrancy, a kind of big-hearted spiritedness that also never overwhelms Coppola's wistful humanity."

Johannsen superbly captures the loneliness and uncertainty of a young woman unsure of her place in life, and there is able support from Ribisi and Anna Faris, who conveys the monumental self-absorption of a Hollywood starlet in a few deft brushstrokes.

Coppola employs her husband's usual cinematographer, Lance Acord, with lovely results; his caressing camera is almost a love letter to the exotic allure of Tokyo. Sound designer Richard Beggs picks up bits of background noise — the clinking of pachinko parlors and the dulcet tones of a lounge singer — and with them, he is able to give the movie an acute sense of place and time. This is a Japan that finds comfort in imitating America, but is too exotic to fully grasp American culture.

Even, with the moments of sadness that pop up throughout "Lost in Translation," there is never any moment when the movie grows depressing. This is a comedy, first and foremost, but this a comedy in which the laughs derive from human instinct and impulse, not from preconceived notions of cinematic humor.

"Lost In Translation" is at once heartfelt, touching, sweet, sad and very, very funny, and is loaded with little lines of dialogue and little scenes that could be forever burned into moviemaking memory. (In the best scene, a line of dialogue between Bob and Charlotte is left just out of reach, a lovely personal touch on Coppola's part.)

As the movie winds down to the fuzz-rock sounds of the Jesus and Mary Chain, the audience will realize that they have been transported into a masterpiece, and one of the best movies seen all year.

"Lost in Translation" takes place in one of the busiest cities in the world, Tokyo, Japan.

Does position really matter during sex?

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) branch at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity
Julia Kristan

Q. Are there any sex positions that will minimize my chances of becoming pregnant?

A. Probably not. If you take a look out there into the wide world of sexual education there are various answers to this question. If you look into information concerning contraception, the answers are decidedly no. However, if you look into information regarding conception, the answers lean more toward a maybe. This would lead one to believe that positioning might actually have a small effect on contraception.

When reading information on becoming pregnant, there are tips all over the place on which positions are the ones to get you a baby the fastest. The missionary position (man on top, both partners facing each other) is recommended because it puts the head of the penis close to the cervix. Gravity is also theoretically helping you at this point. Rumor has it that if the woman stays lying in bed for about a half an hour, the chance of sperm flowing to the cervix and connecting with an egg will increase since less of the sperm slides out of the vaginal canal.

It is also believed by many that the "doggy-style" position, where the male enters from the rear, increases conception likeliness. In this position, the penis is again close to the opening of the cervix and the vagina is sloped downward, allowing sperm to travel quickly through the cervix.

A factor that also plays into conception is orgasm. This is quite obvious for males, and it's also true with females. When a woman orgasms, the cervix contracts and the mouth of the cervix dips down into the vagina to suck in sperm. How about that for Mother Nature? Although this does not happen in every orgasm for every woman, it has been scientifically documented as such in many cases.

While doing it "doggy-style" or in the missionary position might slightly increase your odds if you're trying to get pregnant, sex while sitting or standing are not recommended in the "fast-road-to-pregnancy" quest. Now many of you are probably getting excited, thinking that this is the magical contraception tip that sex education classes didn't tell you. As much as I'd love to be the bearer of that news, it's not the case.

Positioning has at most a small impact on conception if you are trying to conceive. If you are trying not to conceive, do not rely on positioning. You can get pregnant in any position you can dream up. You can even get pregnant sans vaginal penetration, via a "splash conception" where sperm ends up on the outside of the vagina and makes its way up to the egg.

So if you dream of being a parent in the near future, you might want to try either of the aforementioned positions on a regular basis. For the rest of us, treat contraception with the care it deserves and put in the effort it needs. Use reliable methods always and back up your birth control when needed.

Q. Can I get HIV through oral sex?

A. Yes you can. When fellatio is performed on a man, the HIV strain is in the ejaculate fluids. When cunnilingus is performed on a woman, her vaginal secretions also may contain the virus. There have been no documented cases of AIDS transmission solely through cunnilingus, so the risk is low. If a woman is menstruating, the risk goes up as the virus is found in the menstrual blood.

Use dental dams and condoms when performing oral sex for proper STD prevention. Test yourself and have your partner be tested before engaging in any sexual behavior with them. Always communicate your sexual histories, and be aware that not everyone in the world will be as honest as you'd like them to be. Educate and protect yourself because you've only got one body. Treat it with respect and the utmost of care and you will be rewarded tenfold in the long run.

Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@hotmail.com. Confidentiality is always respected.

Mission of Burma rock in reunion

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

"This is a very special night," said bass player Clint Conley halfway through Mission of Burma's set Friday night. For the first time in 20 years, the legendary band took the stage at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

Several generations of punks, mods, musicians, music critics and hangers-on packed the upstairs ballroom of the club, bringing two decades of anticipation to a fever pitch in the final minutes leading up to the band's performance. For all the harsh demands and unreal expectations of their fans, the members of Burma were their own worst critics on this night.

"Don't make excuses, motherer ... come on," snarled drummer Pete Prescott during onstage technical problems for Roger Miller's labyrinthine guitar setup. The band had no need to apologize for anything. Mission of Burma turned in one of the best performances of the year in the Pioneer Valley, blasting though old favorites and previewing an entire album's worth of new material.

Before Mission of Burma even set foot on stage, Fenway Recordings labelmate Read Yellow delivered a milestone performance of their own. Playing one of their first shows since receiving the English music press corps seal of approval, the UMass-based quartet showed the rest of the Pioneer Valley what it has been missing for the past three years.

Mission of Burma
Pearl Street
Northampton
Oct. 3

After a fashionably late start around 9 p.m., Read Yellow demanded the audience's attention by screaming through seven songs without a pause. The set cemented Read Yellow's well-deserved hype as the best rock group to come out of Western Massachusetts since the Pixies. The soulful, mod garage stomp of "Fashion Fatale" gave way to a swirling build-up of "My Bloody Valentine"-style noise.

Singer Evan Kenney and lead guitar Jesse Vuona displayed manic fervor, diving across the stage and attacking their instruments. When the band locked into the pounding tension release mechanics of "Static," the stunned crowd knew they were witnessing something special.

"We have a couple of world premieres tonight," said Conley, in what qualifies as one of the biggest understatements of recent memory, Burma came to the stage with very little fanfare and played seven new songs, after guitar player Roger Miller confirmed that the band was about to begin work on a new album. Playing with the enthusiasm, energy and the presence of a band that never stopped playing together, Burma proved to be just as vital as ever, with a stage banner reading "No New McCarthy" and Miller taking shots at George W. Bush.

All four members (including tape loop and sound engineer Martin Swope, working behind the scenes) played in lockstep on new songs like "Nicotine Bomb." With the promise of a new recording, Mission of Burma have finally embraced their heritage as one of the most important American rock bands of the past quarter century.

New material aside, Mission of Burma thrilled the crowd with old standards from their "Signals, Calls and Marches" and "Vs." records. The punk rock classicism of "This is Not a Photograph" and the claustrophobic speed of "Academy Fight Song" drove the audience into a near-frenzy. They worked through all the highlights of their catalog over the course of two hours, playing two encores.

After several false starts, Burma raged through "That's When I Reach for my Revolver," with Conley joking, "Here's a new song, give us a break," as the crowd erupted.

During an eardrum shattering, 10-minute rendition of "All World Cowboy Romance," the show ended and the crowd still refused to leave.

After 20 years away from the game, Mission of Burma played almost every song they had ever produced, about a dozen new songs and still left the crowd begging for more. Hopefully, it won't have to wait another 20 years.

Mission of Burma played its first show in 20 years at Pearl Street Friday.

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

TuesdayOctober7

MUSIC

The University Jazz Ensemble and the Chapel Jazz Ensemble perform tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5 for students and senior citizens, $10 for the general public.

Faculty performers Avanti Wind Quintet perform "Pieces of Eight: Octets for Winds and Strings" tonight in Bezanson Recital Hall. Performing selections from Mozart and Mendelssohn, the quintet goes on stage at 8 p.m., with doors opening at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $3 for students, $10 for the general public.

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop in Northampton hosts Washington Post journalist David Von Drehle who will discuss his book, "Triangle: The Fire that Changed America." His research is on the Triangle Dry Cleaning disaster. The reading takes place at 7 p.m. and is free of charge.

weekly pinup

Charlotte's web

Pop punk band Good Charlotte plays the Mullins Center. With the success of their most recent release, "The Young and the Hopeless," the members of this band have built a huge following. Supporting acts Mest and Something Corporate join Good Charlotte. Tickets are $26 and the show starts at 7:30 p.m.

WednesdayOctober8

MUSIC

Music and dance professor Adam Kolker performs "Monk Alone," a solo interpretation of compositions by jazz great Thelonius Monk. The performance is today at 12:30 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall and is free and open to the public.

ThursdayOctober9

BOOKS

Poet, novelist, editor and activist Daniela Gioseffa appears tonight at The Odyssey Bookshop in Northampton. She will discuss the new edition of "Women on War: An International Anthology of Women's Writings from Antiquity to Present." The reading starts at 7 p.m.

PERFORMING ARTS

Classic musical "The Music Man" comes to the Fine Arts Center for one night only. Featuring well-known songs such as "'Til There Was You," "Seventy-six Trombones" and "Gary, Indiana," the production is choreographed by five-time Tony winner Susan Stroman. The performance will be in the Concert Hall tonight at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 for students.

LECTURES

Tracy Kidder, Pulitzer Prize winning author, speaks today about his new book "Mountains Beyond Mountains." Hailed by the New York Times as "inspiring, disturbing, daring and completely absorbing," Kidder's latest book tells the story of Dr. Farmer, a physician who travels from Harvard to Haiti. The lecture is at 4:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. It is free and open to all.

FridayOctober10

ART

"Landscape Links: A Look at the Etchings of Frank A. Waugh" opens today at the Central Gallery on Infirmary Way. An opening reception will be held today at 5 p.m. The exhibit will be up until Nov. 9. Gallery hours are 3-6 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and 2-5 p.m. on Saturdays.

SaturdayOctober11

ART

Today marks the start of the Paradise City Arts Festival in Northampton. Known as New England's most acclaimed visual arts event, the Paradise City Arts Festival also offers music, food and a silent auction among other things. The festival takes place rain or shine at the 3-County fairgrounds on Route 9. Today's events start at 10 a.m. and go until 6 p.m., but the festival runs until Monday. The price of admission is $6 for students and $9 for adults. For more information go to www.paradisecityarts.com.

SundayOctober12

MUSIC

Northampton's own Stephen Kellogg returns home to play the stage of the Iron Horse Music Hall. After a string of dates opening for Matt Nathanson last spring, Kellogg will be headlining this show. Opening will be up-and-coming singer/songwriter Ari Hest. The show starts at 7 p.m. and tickets are $12.50 in advance, $15 at the door.

Ramirez, Lowe come up big as Sox advance

Continued from page 8

The A's countered with pinch-hitter Terrence Long, who was just 2-for-7 in the series. Long took an inside fastball for another called third strike — and the Boston bench and bullpen emptied onto the field in celebration.

"This team has been remarkable all year in our ability to never quit, never give in," Boston's Jason Varitek said.

The game that began as a tense duel between former Cy Young Award winners Martinez and Barry Zito took a different tone in the final innings after a scary injury to Damon, Boston's leadoff hitter and center fielder.

Damon left the field in an ambulance following a frightening head-to-head collision with second baseman Damian Jackson. Both players were converging on Ismaine Dye's fly ball in the seventh.

Jackson shook it off, but Damon was knocked unconscious with a concussion. The game was delayed 10 minutes until Damon, awake and alert, raised his hand to loud cheers from the Coliseum crowd as he was loaded into the ambulance on a stretcher. He was taken to a hospital for evaluation.

Boston had taken a 4-1 lead on Ramirez's homer — punctuated by a showboating walk to first base.

Oakland battled back with runs on Miguel Tejada's double in the sixth and pinch-hitter Billy McMillon's RBI single in the eighth, which chased Martinez.

But Boston's relief crew, which blew Game 1 of the series and numerous leads during the regular season, bailed out Martinez with three straight outs in the eighth after the ace allowed two hits and a run.

It was all just a prelude to Lowe's season-saving work in the ninth.

"I knew we were going to make it because I have confidence in my teammates," Ramirez said.

The Red Sox will face the Yankees in the playoffs for just the second time, following a 4-1 loss in the 1999 AL championship series. New York won 10 of 19 games against Boston during the regular season, but the Red Sox frequently teed off on Yankees pitchers.

The A's won the first two games of a series dominated by tight games and emotional finishes, but Boston rallied for two dramatic victories at Fenway Park last weekend.

Boston became the fourth team to rally from a 0-2 deficit in a division series since the round was added to postseason play in 1995. The Red Sox also did it in 1999 against Cleveland.

Martinez, pitching on full rest, fell behind early but stayed strong in his duel with Zito, who was pitching on three days' rest for the first time in his career.

It was the first time in postseason history that two Cy Young Award winners faced each other in a decisive Game 5 or Game 7, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

Zito took a one-run lead into the sixth after Guillen's RBI double in the fourth.

But Varitek led off the sixth with his second homer of the postseason. After Damon walked and Todd Walker was hit by a pitch with one out, Ramirez pounded a homer into left field.

Boston's imposing cleanup hitter had just three singles in 18 at-bats before the homer. Ramirez made the most of his first postseason homer since 1998, standing at the plate to admire his blast before walking slowly up the baseline while pointing at his celebrating dugout.

"I was looking in, and he gave me the pitch, and I went deep," said Ramirez, who struck out in his other three at-bats.

A crowd of 49,397 was well aware of the historic implications of the decisive game. On the facing of the Coliseum's upper deck, a fan posted a large green sign simply reading "1918," next to it was a picture of Babe Ruth.

But the A's got almost no contributions from Miguel Tejada and Eric Chavez. Oakland's top two run-producers during the regular season combined to go 3-for-45 in the series, and both made outs with a runner on base in the eighth.

In the first 3-1/2 innings, both starters were nearly flawless. Both allowed one hit apiece, with Zito retiring Boston's first nine batters.

Notes: Ted Lilly, Oakland's Game 3 starter, threw two hitless innings in relief of Zito. ... Boston DH David Ortiz went 1-for-4, finishing the series 2-for-21. ... Several hundred Red Sox fans gathered behind the Boston dugout 90 minutes before the game, cheering and clapping while their team warmed up. A few players rewarded the fans by throwing candy, wristbands and other treats into the stands.

Unfriendly road for UMass

Continued from page 8

before finding sophomore forward Adair Blyler. Blyler jumped into the air and sent a 15-foot header rocketing past keeper Megan Cox, notching her fifth goal this season.

The lead only lasted for 12 minutes before junior forward Meghan Ogilvie scored a header of her own off a beautiful free kick from 2002 All-Conference selection Edda Gardarsdottier.

"Luttati and Bellini were awesome," Rudy said. "They outplayed everyone, especially Bellini in her match-up with Gardarsdottier. [Bellini] outjumped her, outskilled her, outran her and outbattled her. She was just amazing."

Both goalies turned in respectable performances. Nigh came up with 10 saves against Richmond and 17 for the weekend. Her counterpart, Cox, came up with a game-saving stop against Fairweather in a one-on-one situation in the first overtime and finished with three saves.

Thrashers' Snyder dies following car accident; Heatley indicted

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA — All-Star Dany Heatley was charged yesterday with vehicular homicide after the death of Atlanta Thrashers teammate Dan Snyder, who was fatally injured when Heatley's sports car ran off a road.

A spokesman for the district attorney's office, Erik Friedly, said the charge was based on a preliminary finding that Heatley was driving recklessly. It carries a prison sentence of three to 15 years.

Snyder died at a hospital Sunday night, six days after sustaining severe brain injuries in the wreck. He was 25.

Heatley had already been charged with serious injury by vehicle, but that charge was dropped after the vehicular homicide count was filed. He also still faces four misdemeanor counts, each of which are punishable by up to a year in prison. He is free on $50,000 bond.

Police said Heatley was driving his Ferrari at about 80 mph on a narrow two-lane road Sept. 29 when he lost control, spun off the road and smashed into a brick and wrought iron fence.

Snyder, who was a passenger in the car, underwent surgery for a skull fracture but remained in a coma until his death.

"We are deeply saddened by the tragic loss of Dan Snyder," the Thrashers said in a statement. "Dan was a teammate and friend to all of us. We feel a tremendous amount of pain as an organization and extend deepest sympathies to his family."

The case has yet to be presented to a grand jury, which would decide on the formal charges. Friedly said. Prosecutors are waiting for more evidence before taking their case to the grand jury.

Police were also awaiting test results to determine if Heatley was drinking on the night of the wreck. There is "no conclusive indication" that Heatley was drinking, Friedly said.

Heatley and Snyder had been at an event for season-ticket holders at Philips Arena shortly before the crash.

Snyder, a center who had 10 goals and four assists in 36 games for Atlanta last season, had surgery on his ankle in September before the start of training camp. He was expected to start the season on the injured list.

Snyder signed with the Thrashers as a free agent in 1999 after playing four seasons of junior hockey for Owen Sound in the Ontario Hockey League.

"The news of his passing fills all of us with an overwhelming sense of sorrow," NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said.

Los Angeles Kings forward Sean Avery played three years with Snyder in Owen Sound.

"He was such a strong guy, such a fighter," Avery said. "I figured he would battle though this like he did everything else. I never, ever thought this would happen."

Snyder spent most of his first three professional seasons in the minor leagues, helping Orlando win the International Hockey League title in 2000-01 and playing on the Chicago Wolves' American Hockey League championship team in 2001-02. He also played 35 games for Chicago last season, getting 11 goals and 12 assists.

Heatley, the 22-year-old gap-toothed leader of the team, also was injured in the crash.

He underwent surgery Saturday for a broken jaw and an MRI found two torn ligaments in his right knee. He will undergo knee surgery in about a week, certainly threatening any return to the ice this season.

Last season, he scored a team-record 41 goals and was MVP of the All-Star game.

'The Lion King' roars back into living rooms with DVD debut

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The king of cartoon cats is about to reclaim his throne.

"The Lion King" debuts today on DVD with hullabaloo more befitting a new movie than a 9-year-old flick. Walt Disney Pictures lavished painstaking care on the DVD, loading it with hours of extra material for children and parents alike.

Over the weekend, Disney staged a DVD premiere party at Hollywood's lush El Capitan theater, shutting down Hollywood Boulevard during a celebration that included African musicians and dancers, a live lion cub, and Elton John performing songs from the film.

The "Bambi-meets-Hamlet" tale spins the story of Simba, a lion cub orphaned by the murder of his monarch father, who's slain by Simba's evil uncle. Tricked into believing he's responsible for his father's death, Simba flees into exile, returning years later to battle his uncle for his rightful crown.

At $328.5 million, "The Lion King" had been the top-grossing animated film ever until this year's biggest blockbuster, Disney-Pixar's "Finding Nemo." Factoring in today's higher admission prices, "Lion King" sold more tickets than "Finding Nemo."

"One of the reasons it was so popular is it's about our relationships with our dad. You've got a character raised in great privilege, then he loses his dad, and he's tossed out in the world trying to make his way home," said producer Don Hahn, whose other Disney credits include "Beauty and the Beast" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." "We all can relate to the father-and-son themes."

Gordon Ho, senior vice president of marketing for Disney home video, said "The Lion King" is the most-requested Disney movie.

Two years in the making, "The Lion King" DVD precedes the home-video release of "Finding Nemo" by a month, with Disney's "Pirates of the Caribbean: The Curse of the Black Pearl" — the year's second biggest hit — coming in December. Those three titles are expected to propel Disney home video to its best fourth-quarter sales ever.

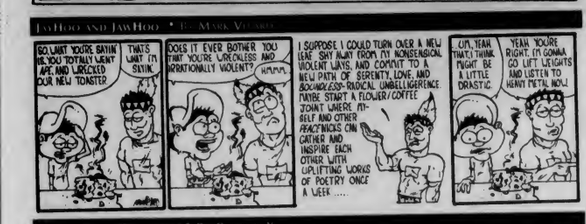
A new version of the film with an extra song played in large-format IMAX theaters this year. This extended version also is debuting Tuesday on VHS, the first time since the mid-1990s that the film has been available on videotape.

In the DVD era, Disney is continuing its practice of releasing animated classics for a limited time before locking them back in the vault for roughly seven years until the next video reissue.

The two-disc DVD set includes the original theatrical release of "The Lion King" plus the extended version, which adds the tune "Morning Report," borrowed from the stage adaptation of the film.

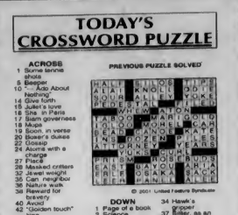
The huge range of DVD extras feature background on three deleted sequences; commentary by Hahn and directors Roger Allers and Rob Minkoff; loads of set-top games; and music videos by composer John performing his Academy Award-winning "Can You Feel the Love Tonight" plus Hilary Duff and other Disney Channel stars on "Circle of Life."

"There's really something for everybody," said Andy Siditsky, Disney senior vice president of DVD production. "Just like in our theme parks, we try to have an experience for the whole family."

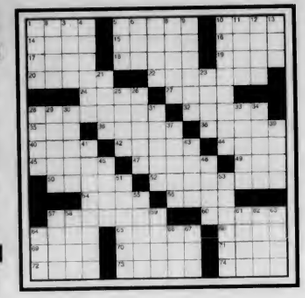


Telemarketing with a twist!
Positions in Amherst
Telefundraising
Weekend Hours!!
Raise awareness and funds for:
The Environment
Gay Rights
Political Organizations
Animal Welfare
We offer:
$10-15/hour average, flexible schedules and benefits.
For consideration, please call Joyce at: 413-549-2061; fax: 413-549-2680; or e-mail: JSweeney@sharegroup.com
EOE
SHARE
THE BUSINESS OF SOCIAL CHANGE

STUDENT TRAVEL
quik BREAK
check out these airfares!
one stop, no hassles
We hook you up with:
· discount student and youth airfare
· budget hotels and hostels
· rail and bus passes
· international student ID cards (ISIC)
· travel insurance
· travel gear and more!
London.....$310
Paris.....$371
Rio de Janeiro.....$643
Los Angeles.....$262
Las Vegas.....$262
· Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
2 nights + transfers + activities
New Orleans.....$110
Las Vegas.....$113
San Francisco.....$131
Vancouver.....$141
Miami.....$160
New York.....$192
(airfare not included)
44 Main St.
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE.



Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.BostonBartender.com



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 61
- Low: 39

WEDNESDAY
- High: 68
- Low: 45

THURSDAY
- High: 70
- Low: 43

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Simmons
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas Markantonatos/ Dave Pessah

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- BBQ Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Boston Scrod
- Native American Stew (vegan)

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
People are usually clueless, help to clue them in.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't be afraid to discuss it. You might learn something.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Hum the Star Wars Theme to yourself; it'll make you feel like a hero.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't make out on a couch in the Campus Center. No one wants to see it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Be careful not to wrap the phone cord around your desk.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Young people are capable of amazing things, but most are just destructive.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Why do you care what someone else is wearing? Worry about yourself.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You need to date people that live closer to you. Is it really worth the walk?

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When those items you ordered online are delivered, make sure they fit.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't worry about your shoelaces, they always end up untied anyway.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Take a break from working to get your thoughts together.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You need space right now, tell your significant other that.

Quote for the Day

"Cowboy up!"

-Kevin Millar, Red Sox first baseman

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

6 Room- 4 Bedroom apartment $1200/ month plus utilities. Northampton 584-4920

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

CHILDCARE

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. Old triplets 1 to 3 days a week. In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jaguly.com or 413-253-0051

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus. in Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmass-boxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings Bar Mitzvahs Commercial 508-221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Klme 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

On to the ALCS

Ramirez's homer wins Game 5 in Oakland

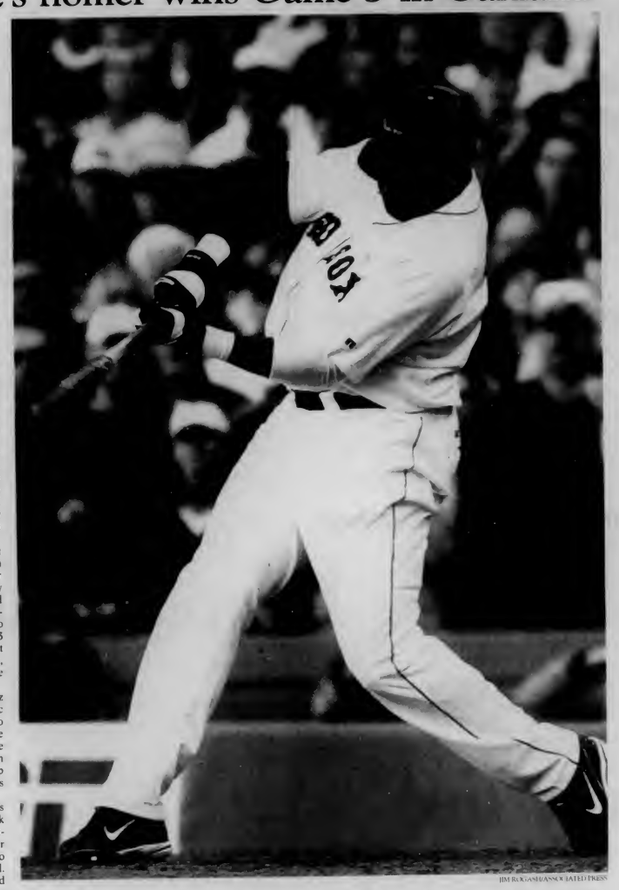
By GREG BEACHAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Pedro Martinez, Johnny Damon, Manny Ramirez and even that maligned Boston bullpen — they all were tougher than any curse.

Martinez pitched seven gritty innings, and Ramirez broke his slump with a decisive three-run homer as the Boston Red Sox completed a three-game playoff comeback, beating the Oakland Athletics 4-3 last night in Game 5 of their AL division series.

Boston	4
Oakland	3

Boston got its fourth playoff series victory since its last World Series title in 1918, while Oakland's frustration continued. The A's have lost nine straight games in which they could have clinched postseason advancement, extending a major league record.



Boston meets the Yankees, its traditional rival, in the AL championship series starting Wednesday night in New York. The Red Sox had to withstand a rally attempt in the ninth to get there.

Reliever Scott Williamson, making his fifth straight appearance for Boston, led off the inning by walking Scott Hatteberg and Jose Guillen. Red Sox manager Grady Little went to Derek Lowe, the Game 3 starter and Game 1 loser out of the bullpen. This time, Boston's No. 2 starter came through.

After Ramon Hernandez bunted pinch-runner Eric Byrnes and Guillen into scoring position, Lowe threw a called third strike past pinch-hitter Adam Melhuse — the A's backup catcher who had three hits in Game 4 Sunday.

Moments later, Chris Singleton topped a weak grounder down the first-base line — but Kevin Millar didn't charge it in time to prevent it from going foul. Lowe then walked Singleton, loading the bases.

Continued on page 6

JIM ROGASH/ASSOCIATED PRESS

David Ortiz's eighth inning double in Game 4, shown here, propeled the Red Sox to last night's stunning clincher. Although Ortiz went 1-for-4 in last night's game, Boston won 4-3 to advance to the American League Championship Series.

Unsung heroes provided spark

One has lived and died as a member of the heavily maligned Boston bullpen since an Opening Day collapse doomed its concept of closer by committee. The other has overcome serious family problems and a horrific pitching slump to regain his stellar in time to save the Red Sox from reverting back to it yet again.

Red Sox fans, behold your American League Division Series MVPs. They are Michael August Timlin and Scott Ryan Williamson, and without them, the Fenway Nine would be packing up for another long, bitter winter.

Touchin' 'em all

Mike Marzelli

In a series where, until their final at-bat in Game 4, run producers Manny Ramirez and David Ortiz were hitless with runners in scoring position, effectively leaving a small village on base, there was no room for error from the inconsistent Boston bullpen.

In Game 1, after Todd Walker had given the Sox the lead with a clutch two-run homer off of A's left-handed reliever Ricardo Rincon, and Pedro Martinez escaped from the seventh inning unscathed after watching his pitch count rise to upwards of 130, it was with Timlin that Grady Little laid his trust as the first man out of his embattled 'pen.

In a scenario similar to that which saw the veteran reliever serve up a game-tying solo homerun to Jim Thome in a game which Martinez had battled through seven similar innings to hold a one run lead earlier this season in Philadelphia, Timlin breezed through a one-two-three eighth, striking out two.

That, of course, set up then-closer Byun-Hyung Kim to send Red Sox Nation into cardiac arrest, before giving way to Alan Embree to finish what the Finger Flippin' Kim began. (In case you missed it, Kim responded to raucous boos upon his introduction before Game 3 at Fenway by giving The Faithful the finger. I chose to think he was emulating the response he received from Little when inquiring as to whether he was still the team's closer.)

So with the game tied heading into extras, and the Red Sox unable to mount any sort of offensive against Rolaids Relief Man of the Year Keith Foulke, it was Williamson who was called upon.

With Sox fans' confidence in him still wavering, the former All-Star closer worked around a walk to retire Oakland with the help of two strikeouts. This forced Foulke out of the game, and if it wasn't for a game saving snag by Gold Glover Eric Chavez at third, Ramon Hernandez's bunt may not have ever come to fruition.

In Game 2, the powerful Sox lineup was shut down by reigning Cy Young Award winner Barry Zito and his magnificent curveball, but again it was Williamson who was able to throw his second consecutive scoreless inning in as many nights.

Game 3 saw dominating performances on both sides of the starting dockets, as the Athletics' Ted Lilly and Derek Lowe of the Red Sox took turns shutting down the opposing lineup.

However after the A's tied the score in the sixth on the now-infamous obstruction play, it was the chiseled veteran hurler who gave the fans at The Fens a chance to cheer the relief corps that had let them down time and time again.

Timlin put together arguably one of the most important individual performances of this roller-coaster Red Sox season, stifling the Oakland lineup with three perfect innings of relief in which he struck out three and completely overpowered the A's hitters.

And it was Williamson who picked up right where the 38-year-old veteran of back-to-back World Series titles left off. Armed with a blazing fastball and a devastating slider reminiscent of his glory days with the Reds, he mowed down the three hitters he faced, inducing two to strike out, and was the winning pitcher when Trot Nixon sent a game-winning, two-run homer into the centerfield bleachers late Saturday night.

So after John Burkett pitched his heart out in Game 4, keeping the Red Sox in the game with the help of an impromptu relief appearance from Tim Wakefield, there was no doubt who the go-to-guys were in the Boston bullpen. And with Little surely looking to stay away from a reliever who had hurled three innings just the night before, there was no question who The Man was, as No. 48 trotted in from the right field 'pen.

With Kim on the bench with what was called shoulder stiffness and is more accurately termed ineffectiveness, Williamson again set Oakland down in order in the eighth. Then, after David Ortiz regained his MVP form in the bottom of the inning, igniting an improbable Boston comeback for the ages, Little stuck with his rejuvenated flame thrower. He was in line to get the win in Game 4 after pitching in every game of the series. But Scott Williamson remained in the dugout and returned to the Fenway mound.

He was the closer, and following a pair of strikeouts and a weak popup that ensured a return flight from Logan to Oakland for Game 5, he will remain the closer.

Punchless and altogether ineffective at the plate, the powerful Boston Red Sox had clawed their way back into the series, yet not on the strength of their record-setting lineup, but with heroic performances from what was said to be the team's most glaring weakness.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian @yahoo.com.

Road woes for Minutewomen

GERALDINE LINCK/COLLEGIAN

Junior Carly Turman managed one shot against the George Washington Colonials, but the Minutewomen's losing streak continued.

Spiders, GW tee off on UM

By TODD FOSTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a promising 2-0-1 start, the Massachusetts women's soccer team has run into a swarm of problems. When one problem is solved and dealt with, another issue has a tendency to come out of nowhere.

Richmond	2
UMass	1
GW	1
UMass	0

Following an injury plague, seven upperclassmen were suspended for violating a team rule. The suspension carries through two games: Saturday's 1-0 loss at George Washington and a game scheduled for this weekend.

UMass coach Jim Rudy would not comment on the reason for the suspension or the specific players involved. With nothing seeming to go right, Rudy still remained optimistic.

"The suspension could be a blessing in disguise," Rudy said. "The players on suspension were providing some of the best spirit from the bench I have ever seen. They were really cheering on the younger players and providing a big boost. Not to mention, it's hard transition going from starter to the bench. I just hope this was a stepping stone."

The Minutewomen (2-6-1, 1-2 Atlantic 10) had a new look with key starters out against the Colonials last Friday. The eleven starters played all 90 minutes, and only two of them, junior Lindsey Fairweather and senior netminder Kelly Nigh, were upperclassmen. The young UMass squad could not find a way to get by GW, dropping the 1-0 decision in Washington, D.C.

Led by Lindsey Fairweather's five-shot effort, the Maroon and White outshot their opponent, 18-15, for the second consecutive game and with nothing finding the back of net. However, GW held a 7-0 corner kick advantage.

Fatigued after battling for 90 minutes the day before, Rudy allowed certain players to return to the lineup against A-10 power Richmond.

"We allowed suspended players to come back, since the other 11 players should not be playing back-to-back games," Rudy said. "Though, the suspension will continue this weekend."

Senior veterans Erin Lilly, Maggie LaBrode, Carly Turman, Ryan Meisel and Michelle Luttati returned to the lineup last Saturday, and were able to help take the Spiders into a double overtime battle. Richmond freshman forward Brooke Binswanger was hero, putting away a clean-up goal to take the thrilling 2-1 win.

"We played very tactfully by taking out their midfield game," Rudy said. "We were super fit, skilled and played well. They also own the best non-conference schedule in the A-10 and we weren't even given a chance, but still battled. We gave them all they could handle."

UMass opened the scoring column in the 29th minute with Luttati showing off some world-class skill. Luttati swiped the ball from a Spider forward and flew upfield. As a defender approached, Luttati faked out the defender and continued her way up field

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 26

GERALDINE LINCK/COLLEGIAN

Police make their presence known at a celebration following Boston's victory in the ALDS on Monday night.

UMPD: Handling of Red Sox celebration a success

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald said yesterday he considers successful the handling of Monday night's gathering in Southwest following the Boston Red Sox' win in the American League Division Series.

"I am satisfied in that there was a de-escalation in the use of aggression towards each other and destruction of property," Archbald said.

UMPD estimated 2,000 students congregated outside the Southwest towers near Berkshire Dining Commons, a number even larger than during a riot Saturday night following a Red Sox win in Game 3 of the Division Series.

Despite several fires set by students, numerous discharges of fireworks, and the large number of people present, Archbald said Monday night's gathering was not a riot.

"A riot to me is violent," Archbald said. "What I saw last night was a celebration. We recognize that fires are a violation of student conduct, and we're trying to identify the students responsible."

All 55 UMPD officers on staff were on duty Monday night, with some in riot gear. Archbald said the department also had access to several resources from state police, including K-9 officers, but that their use was not necessary.

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, said Monday night was generally a peaceful celebration, but there is still behavior by some students that needs to be addressed.

"The setting of fire in the University Quad is a violation of student conduct," he said. "As we identify those students who set the fires and who broke the branches off the trees to set the fires, we will hold them accountable by the code of student conduct."

Anyone who police can tie to discharging fireworks will be held accountable as well, Gargano said.

According to UMass spokesperson Barbara Pitoniak, a man who climbed Berkshire Dining Commons during Monday night's disturbance was identified as Daniel Dickson, a Springfield Technical Community College student from East Longmeadow, Mass. Pitoniak said previous reports made by the Associated Press stating Dickson broke bones in the fall were incorrect. Archbald and Pitoniak both said Dickson was treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital early Tuesday morning.

UMass Police also announced yesterday they have arrested four students in connection with Saturday night's riot. The arrests are the result of a police review of videotape of the disturbance, information provided to the police by students, and the assistance of the Amherst police, according to Archbald.

Three people were arrested Monday afternoon. Alexander R. Hamilton, 18, of West Newbury, Mass., was charged with malicious destruction of property valued at more than $250, two counts of disorderly conduct, disturbing the peace, and two counts of rioting and destroying a building.

Derek Kuyendall, 20, of Ayer, Mass., was charged with two counts of disorderly conduct, two counts of disturbing the peace, five counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, and five counts of assault with a dangerous weapon. Michael Heilner, 18, of Littleton, Mass., was charged with disorderly conduct, disturbing the peace, four counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, and four counts of assault with a dangerous weapon.

The fourth arrest was made yesterday morning. Police arrested and charged David B. Brown of Dunstable, Mass., with disorderly conduct, disturbing the peace, and defacing property.

Gargano could not comment on what the status of the four arrested students would be until he saw a list of the charges they face, but when informed by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian that a few of the students face assault and battery charges, he said, "That will be dealt with swiftly."

Archbald said there will be an increased police presence in Southwest again Wednesday night when the Red Sox play the New York Yankees, but that there is no way the entire UMPD force can be on duty for every game.

"It will be a measured response," he said. "We can't afford to have every officer here every game. Historically speaking, we've only had problems with crowds in Southwest when the Red Sox have been in a position to clinch a series."

He acknowledged that Saturday night did not follow that trend.

"We're doing what we think is appropriate to insure that the celebrations are allowed, but that it doesn't cross the line into violent behavior," Archbald said.

UMPD is also still looking for more information to identify students responsible for destructive behavior in Saturday night's riot. He asked anyone with information to contact UMass police at (413)-545-2121 or (413)-545-TIPS.

Gargano sees preventing riots as a student concern.

"Students need to hold each other accountable," he said. "They need to take personal responsibilities. If they exert enough peer pressure on their fellow classmates, we will start to change the attitudes on campus."

Women's rights scholar speaks

By JENNIFER MARCOULLIER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Local voices in international communities need to be heard in the debate on reproductive rights," said visiting scholar Susanne Zwingel at a lecture Tuesday night at Smith College.

Zwingel suggested local, national and international conversations are needed in order to implement global reproductive health norms in a way that enhances human beings. She said reproductive health norms have three factors: information on reproductive health – including risks such as HIV-AIDS, information on and the availability of a variety of family planning methods and information on and the availability of health care services related to pregnancy and childbirth.

"It's also time to hear the voices of men, who have to take reproductive responsibility seriously," Zwingel said.

Zwingel compared national responses in Chile and Peru to the reproductive rights debate. Chile, she said, has been eager to respond to international human rights conventions, where reproductive health is a major topic, but at the same time, family planning goes against parts of traditional Chilean society. As a result, abortion is illegal in Chile, yet, every fourth pregnancy ends in abortion, she said.

Zwingel said wealthy women still have access to adequate care while poor women are obtaining illegal abortions in "bad conditions."

Peru had a state-sponsored program of population control in the '90s, Zwingel said, that "had sterilization quotas among the poorest populations." The approach, she said, was to fight poverty by sterilizing poor women. So-called "sterilization fairs" were held in poor neighborhoods where health workers would receive a reward for each person they persuaded to be sterilized.

"But not enough information was given on what sterilization meant," Zwingel said.

Zwingel emphasized that the self-determination of women and men has to come first in family planning.

The Sierra Club and the Smith Project on Women and Social Change sponsored the lecture, which was attended by about 25 people and sparked debate in the audience about the balance between individual freedoms and environmental sustainability.

Anita King, chairperson of the Massachusetts Chapter Sierra Club Population Program, said that environmental groups do emphasize population stabilization and slowing population growth but are opposed to population "control" programs.

"The Sierra Club is seeking to influence people by making them aware of population growth," King said. "More people means more devastation to resources. These are the kinds of things we're concerned about."

Junior Meghan Fahey said, "What I found most interesting was the point that we need to respect the woman's individual reactions and desires. What we're talking about is women."

Arla Berman, a junior at Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter High School in Hadley, liked the fact that Zwingel brought up men in her discussion.

"A lot of what [Zwingel] said I've heard before but ... people always forget men and that men are part of this problem too," Berman said.

"Now more women are able to delay their first child until their own personal capacity is maximized in terms of education, career, etc.," said a Smith student who asked to be identified as Mary Jayne. "That plays out to smaller families that are better educated and better cared for. That alone will probably go a long way to solving a lot of environmental and political issues."

Zwingel is a political scientist from Bochum, Germany and is currently a visiting scholar at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center at Mount Holyoke College. Her research interests are international relations, international law and human rights from a gendered perspective, comparative gender policy and gender relations in war and peace.

The lecture was part of the Sierra Club's "34 Million Friends" campaign that is trying to raise $34 million from 34 million people for the U.N. Population Fund.

Palestinian Cabinet sworn in

By MOHAMMED DARAGHMEH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) – The new Palestinian Cabinet ran into its first hitch Tuesday while being sworn in, when the man slated to oversee security refused to take the oath in what officials called a turf struggle with Yasser Arafat.

The outcome of the dispute over control of security forces is critical to the future of the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan, which calls for Palestinian statehood by 2005 while demanding that the Palestinians dismantle violent groups. The road map was accepted in principle by both sides, but has been mired in disputes over how to carry it out.

Reflecting increasing tension, the Israeli military announced late yesterday it was extending the closure of the West Bank and Gaza, banning Palestinians from Israel, and cordoning off Palestinian towns. The closure was imposed before the Jewish New Year two weeks ago. Normally such closures are lifted after Jewish holidays.

The military said the closure is among measures to keep Palestinian attackers out of the country. Security was intensified after a weekend suicide bombing in the Israeli city of Haifa in which 19 people were killed. Also, Israeli military sources said orders for mobilizing reserve soldiers are being drawn up because of an increase of terror threats.

Arafat appointed Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia and the other Cabinet members by decree Sunday, circumventing the legislature in an apparent bid to block Israeli action against the Palestinian leader in response to a deadly suicide bombing.

Qureia has been mired in political wrangling over Cabinet posts. The United States wants Israel to give Qureia a chance to end three years of violence, as he promises to try to do, and Israel's threatened expulsion of Arafat would leave him with little choice but to step aside.

Israel and the United States have made clear Qureia will be judged on his success in ending terror attacks. But Nasser Yousef, the man who as interior minister-designate was to have overseen the effort, refused to take the oath, though he was present at Arafat's offices Yesterday.

Arafat and Yousef have clashed in recent weeks over who would run the disparate Palestinian security forces. Palestinian officials have said Arafat continues to insist on overall control, but Yousef would not comment Tuesday.

Israel says that unless the Palestinians disarm and dismantle the militant groups – as required by the road map – it will not carry out its obligations, such as freezing Jewish settlement building.

Israel and the United States blame Arafat for the Palestinian refusal to carry out a crackdown, and they want authority over Palestinian security wrested away from him. They also accuse Arafat of encouraging attacks and sometimes supplying militants with funds. Palestinians deny the charges.

Qureia has called for ending the "chaos of weapons" in the Palestinian areas, but in an Associated Press interview Monday, he rejected the idea of a forcible crackdown. "We will not confront, we will not go for a civil war," he said. "It's not in the interest of our people, and it's not in the interest of the peace process."

Still, he said he wanted to end the violence and was prepared "to sit with them (the Israelis) to discuss reaching a comprehensive cease-fire."

In Beirut, the militant Hamas and Islamic Jihad groups, responsible for most of the 103 suicide bombings against Israelis in the past three years, rejected Qureia's government in a joint statement as a "strange and surprising move" aimed against them.

Arafat declared a state of emergency and appointed Qureia's Cabinet by decree Sunday, a day after an Islamic Jihad suicide bomber blew herself up in a restaurant in the Israeli port city of Haifa, killing 19 people, including several children.

CIA leak to be determined

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
FILL THE BILL
WHERE YOU SHOULD BE ON THURSDAY
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
DOLLED UP
BOSTON BAND MAKING IT BIG SPORTS
PAGE 12
FANTASTIC FISH
MARLINS TAKE 1-0 NLCS LEAD
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush questioned on Tuesday whether investigators would be able to determine who leaked the identity of an undercover CIA officer but said his staff was cooperating. "I want to know the truth," he said.

Bush's chief of staff, Andrew Card, urged some 2,000 White House employees to turn over any relevant documents by Tuesday night. White House lawyers will screen the materials and decide which ones to send to the Justice Department as part of a criminal inquiry into the leak. Bush spokesman Scott McClellan said.

McClellan said it could take as long as two weeks to check those submissions for relevance.

The spokesman would not rule out the possibility that the White House would invoke executive privilege to shield sensitive documents from the Justice Department's inquiry. He said it was premature to talk about such a step.

Bush renewed his pledge to cooperate with the investigation to "come to the bottom of this."

But he said success was not guaranteed, and he turned reporters' questions back on them at the end of a Cabinet meeting.

Associated Press

DAVID DEGNAN/COLLEGIAN

Sing it

Patrick MacAloon of the Patrick MacAloon Band performs at the Bluewall on Friday night as part of a tour to promote his debut CD, 'Angels and ferris wheels.'

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Associate Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Graphics Linda Wallak
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as a weekly and became a daily known as the Weekly Collegian in 1908 and the Weekly Collegian in 1976. Published continuously since January 1904. For advertising rates and information, call business offices at 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian COMMUNITY BULLETIN

Compiled by Sarah-Meghan Walsh

WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 8

Betty Shamieh will discuss her recent play, "Chocolate in Heat: Growing up in Arab America," on the University of Massachusetts-Amherst campus in room 104 of Thompson Hall at 3:30 p.m. The play will be performed on Oct. 9 at UMass in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Mount Holyoke College's public sculpture series will host Karl Jenson for its first lecture, beginning with the opening reception at 7 p.m. in Abbey Chapel. Jenson is a New York architect, and sculptor of PULPIT (2002). The 25-foot-high celebratory sculpture was installed in Abbey Chapel on Oct. 3. The event is coordinated by the Art Department and the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.

At 7 p.m. in Stirn Auditorium, the Spanish Department of Amherst College, along with the bookstore Food for Thought, will sponsor a "Poetry Tribute to Commemorate Pablo Neruda" in honor of the 30th anniversary of Pablo Neruda's death and his 100th birthday. Students can Contact Ilan Stavans at istavans@amherst.edu if they are interested in sharing their favorite Pablo Neruda poem in Spanish, English or any other language.

From 3:30-5:30 p.m., Lynn Margulis and Dorion Sagan will give a lecture entitled, "Gaia and the Evolution of Machines," concerning contemporary evolutionary theory and the possibility of a "post human" future, at East Lecture Hall of the Franklin Patterson building at Hampshire College. The Culture, Brain, Development Program and the Humanities Program at Hampshire College will host the event.

THURSDAY OCTOBER 9

Theresa Ramsby, classics major at UMass, will give a lecture entitled, "Visualizing the 'Other' Woman: Barbarian Queens in Augustan Art and Poetry" at 4:30 p.m. in the Dewey Common Room of Smith College.

Amherst College's Physics Department will sponsor a lecture titled: "Quantum Communication and the Meaning of Entropy," by Professor William Wootters. The lecture starts at 4:45 p.m. in Merrill 3 at Amherst College. Cookies and tea will be served beforehand at 4:15 p.m.

At 7 p.m., Teach for America will be having an information and recruitment session in the Dewey Common Room at Smith College.

People Opposing War, the Student Coalition for Action and Asian Interpretive Realities will sponsor a lecture, titled: "A Conversation with Elizabeth Wilson '72, Petroleum Geologist, on Iraq and Oil: What Does the Future Hold?" This is the first of a series of events discussing the U.S. military occupation of Iraq. The lecture will begin 7:30 p.m. in Skinner 212 at Mount Holyoke College and will be followed by a roundtable discussion.

FRIDAY OCTOBER 10

At 8 p.m., the Sunny Murray duo featuring Sabir Mateen will perform in Bezanson Recital Hall as part of UMass' Fine Art Center Solos & Duets Series. Tickets are $5 for students, $10 general, and are available through the FAC Box Office at 545-2511.

At 8 p.m., Betty Shamieh's "Chocolate in Heat: Growing up Arab in America" will be performed at UMass's Bowker Auditorium.

At 6 p.m., Hillel House will host Erev Sukkot services in the Sukkah. Following the services at 7:15 p.m., a meal will be served downstairs in the Hillel House. The meal is free to all UMass students.

Festivities for Sukkot will be held from Oct. 10-Oct. 12 at the Chabad House at 30 North Hadley Road, Amherst. Day and evening services will be conducted in the Sukkah. Free home-cooked meals are also available at the Sukkah. No reservation is necessary. For information or directions, call 559-4803.

Michael Marcotrigiano, the director of Smith's Botanical Garden, will give a free lecture titled: "Shaping Plants that Shape the Landscape" at 7:30 p.m. in Smith College's Lyman plant house.

Good Charlotte will perform in concert with Something Corporate and the Living Dead at the Mullins Center at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $26 and the doors open at 6:30 p.m. For more information call: 5-3001.

SATURDAY OCTOBER 11

At 10 a.m., Hillel House is hosting Sukkot services in the Sukkah. The event is free for all UMass students, $7 for others. Lunch will be served after services to those who have signed up. For more information call 549-1710.

TUESDAY OCTOBER 14

A group exhibit titled "Computer Arts, Photography and Graphic Design" will host its opening reception in the UMass Student Union Gallery. The exhibit runs Oct. 13-17 from 10 a.m.-5p.m.- through Thursday and 10 a.m.-3p.m. on Friday.

China launches first astronaut

BEIJING (AP) — China will launch its first human being into space on Oct. 15 in a 90-minute flight that will orbit the Earth once, a major Chinese Web site reported, quoting a top government rocketry official.

It implied that the flight, the Shenzhou 5, would carry only one human being.

The comments by Xie Guangxuan, director of the government's China Rocket Design Department, were reported by the Web site Sina.com. China's largest.

"China's space technology has been created by China itself. We started later than Russia and the United States. It's amazing how fast we've been able to do this."

— Associated Press

Cingular's on your campus, so stop by the Cingular booth!
Demo new phones and other cool products from Cingular.

Come take a pic!
Color screen
Camera phone.
Sony Ericsson
Listen to the newest ringtones.
Easy text messaging, MP3 player and a phone.
NOKIA
Connecting People
Play the coolest games.
Color screen with lots of features.
NOKIA
Connecting People

Too cool for school.
Spin the Cingular Prize Wheel for a chance to win Cingular phones, tickets to the hottest concerts and movies, and other exciting prizes.
LIBRARY LAWN, SEPTEMBER 22, 2003, 10 AM - 3 PM
Cingular has the phone to fit your needs. Visit www.cingular.com/shoutout to check out all our cool phones and features.
Certain phones may not be available in all areas. Visit your closest retailer or www.cingular.com to see what is available in your area. Some features are network dependent and are not available in all areas or on all phones. Optional wireless internet service required to download games. Football game availability planned for September 2003. Sony is the trademark or registered trademark of Sony Corporation. Ericsson is the trademark or registered trademark of Telefonaktiebolaget LM Ericsson. The Sony Ericsson logo is the trademark or registered trademark of Sony Ericsson Mobile Communications AB. Nokia, Connecting People, and the 3300 and 3560 phones are trademarks or registered trademarks of Nokia Corporation and/or its affiliates. © 2003 Cingular Wireless LLC.
cingular fits you best™

Schwarzenegger wins recall election

By Erica Werner
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Californians banished Gov. Gray Davis just 11 months into his second term and elected action hero Arnold Schwarzenegger to replace him Tuesday — a Hollywood ending to one of the most extraordinary political melodramas in the nation's history.

Voters traded a career Democratic politician who became one of the state's most despised chief executives for a moderate Republican megastar who had never before run for office. Davis became the first California governor pried from office and only the second nationwide to be recalled.

Early tallies showed the recall favored by 1,019,874 voters, or 57.5 percent, and opposed by 755,375, or 42.6 percent.

Other early returns had Schwarzenegger ahead with 862,217 votes; Democratic Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante with 482,576; Republican state Sen. Tom McClintock with 200,970; and Green Party candidate Peter Camejo with 25,916.

Schwarzenegger prevailed despite a flurry of negative publicity in the campaign's final days, surviving allegations that he had groped women and accusations that as a young man he expressed admiration for Adolf Hitler.

The 56-year-old Austrian immigrant — husband of television journalist Maria Shriver — finds himself in charge of the nation's most populated state with an economy surpassed only by those of several countries.

Schwarzenegger promised to return the shine to a Golden State beset by massive budget problems and riven by deep political divisions.

Voters faced two questions — whether to recall Davis, and who among the other candidates should replace him if he was removed. They chose to get rid of the incumbent and put Schwarzenegger in his place.

About seven in 10 voters interviewed in exit polls said they had made up their minds how they would vote on the recall question more than a month before the election.

Long lines were reported at polling places through the day. By late afternoon, Terri Carbaugh, a spokeswoman for the Secretary of State, said a turnout of 60 percent appeared likely, higher than the 50.7 percent who voted in last November's gubernatorial election. It would be the highest percentage to vote in a gubernatorial election since 1982.

Re-elected last year with less than 50 percent of the vote, Davis fell victim to a groundswell of discontent in a state that has struggled with its perilous financial condition.

As colorless as his name, Davis was also known as a canny politician with sharp elbows. Once chief of staff to Gov. Jerry Brown, he rose through the political ranks as a state assemblyman, controller and lieutenant governor, before becoming governor in 1999.

By contrast, Schwarzenegger's political inexperience seemed a virtue to many voters.

The actor's improbable rise to political power played out before a rapt international audience. He announced his candidacy in August on "The Tonight Show With Jay Leno" after aides said it was certain he wouldn't run.

Other major candidates seeking to replace Davis were the Democratic lieutenant governor, Cruz Bustamante, conservative Republican state Sen. Tom McClintock and Green Party candidate Peter Camejo.

The campaign included a parade of bit players among the 135 candidates, including Hustler publisher Larry Flynt, former child actor Gary Coleman, a publicity-hungry porn actress who wanted to tax breast implants and an artist who dressed in all blue and described his candidacy as the ultimate piece of performance art.

The cast of characters and outsized ballot gave the campaign a carnival-like atmosphere and provided late-night comics with a stream of material.

But to many Californians, it was serious business.

Robert Galbraith/Associated Press

California gubernatorial candidate Arnold Schwarzenegger watches as his wife Maria Shriver signs the voter's register at a polling place in the Pacific Palisades neighborhood of Los Angeles yesterday.

Metco Inc. appeals for restoration

By Bipasha Ray
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP)– Officials of a voluntary school busing program for inner-city children, which has been in the spotlight since a radio talk show joke compared its students to an escaped zoo gorilla, appealed for a restoration of state funding on Tuesday.

Metco Inc. officials said the on-air comments of WEEI-AM show hosts John Dennis and Gerry Callahan proves that a climate of "bigotry" and lack of sensitivity toward minorities still exists.

The same climate is the reason why funding for Metco students is inequitable with other public school students, Metco executive director Jean McGuire said, asking the state to fully fund the Metco grant next year and unfreeze its transportation budget.

Metco is a state-run, voluntary program that allows inner-city children to attend schools in nearby suburbs.

"A climate of bigotry should not prevent the equitable education funding for 3,200 Boston school children," McGuire said at a news conference Tuesday.

She said the state reimbursed suburban school districts $2,592 per Metco student this year, less than half the minimum $7,332 required for every other Massachusetts public school student.

This year, the state granted Metco $13.6 million, 10 percent less than last year, Metco spokeswoman Catherine Tang said.

A spokeswoman for education committee co-chair Sen. Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, said that budget cuts were across the board, and Metco's cuts did not have racial reasons.

The budget cuts were due to "the deficit, a lack of resources and the unwillingness of the electorate to support any revenues," said Sylvia Smith, Antonioni's chief of staff.

"The notion of racial implications in any of the decisions is not part of reality," Smith said.

The controversy began after an on-air exchange between Dennis and Callahan on Sept. 29, a day after the gorilla, Little Joe, escaped from Boston's Franklin Park Zoo and injured two girls.

After Callahan observed the gorilla was captured near a bus stop, Dennis said, "Yeah, yeah. He was a Metco gorilla."

"Heading out to Lexington," Callahan added.

"Yeah, exactly," Dennis replied.

McGuire said the comments only exposed an intolerant and insensitive atmosphere prevalent in talk radio.

"Old beliefs die hard," McGuire said. "What you say is often what you think."

She said Metco students were hurt by the comments and many had been taunted at their suburban schools.

WEEI officials have apologized and on Monday suspended Dennis and Callahan for two weeks. Metco continued talks with WEEI officials Tuesday and said they talked about changing "the climate of talk radio" and ensuring similar gaffes never happen again. McGuire said. WEEI vice president and general manager Tom Baker did not immediately return a telephone message after Tuesday's meeting.

On our team, your brightest ideas get noticed.

Here, it's merit we turn to. We're not interested in how old you are or where you're from. If your idea is good, it's good. That's why we'll put you alongside teammates with the experience and knowledge to spot it. It's your time to shine.

ey.com/us/careers
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dean phenomenon sweeps many college campuses

College students are taking an interest in politics like never before. Polls show that the percentage of young citizens who intend to participate in the 2004 election has almost doubled from that of 2000. What's the reason for this sudden increase? Well, there's a simple two-word explanation for it: Howard Dean.

The former governor of Vermont and Democratic presidential hopeful has caused quite a stir among the usually politically apathetic youth of today's world. There are many websites and groups popping up all over the country that have been organized by 18-25 year olds in support of Dean. On college campuses nationwide, students proudly display buttons and pass out flyers with pro-Dean slogans.

This kind of political activism hasn't taken place since the anti-Vietnam War movement in the '60s and '70s. Many of our parents' generation avidly supported and diligently worked for the campaigns of Gene McCarthy and George McGovern. While they knocked on doors and passed out handouts, modern day students are hitting the Internet with equal vigor, which may be part of the reason why Dean is so popular among the youth of America.

He has managed to capitalize on the fact that today's youth is much more Internet savvy than any other age group by spreading his message online, and it has worked extremely well so far.

Other things that students have found attractive about Dean are his anti-oil war stance and his liberal views on things such as same sex marriage. These opinions are highly appealing to the liberal wing of the Democratic Party that mainly consists of young college students.

Because of this increasing interest in politics, clubs such as the UMass Democrats Club are trying to make it easier for students to vote. They have set up tables in the Campus Center concourse recruiting young Democrats to register, and eventually, vote for Dean. And UMass students are not alone. This sort of thing is taking place everywhere.

The Dean campus craze has been spreading like wildfire, and with the approaching primaries, it is only expected to become a blazing conflagration.

But even if you do not agree with Dean's views and policies, at least one good thing is still coming out of his campaign. He has invigorated the political fervor of America's young adults, and hopefully it will inspire others and increase voter turnout.

It's about time that college students took a stand and actually acted on their desire for change, instead of sitting passively by. So, come the primaries, follow your inspired classmates to the polls. Vote for Dean, for Bush, for Sharpton even, but get out and vote.

Information from www.cnn.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Letter from the editors

Dear readers,

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian continually strives to provide its readers with the most important thing it has to give: truthful and original accounts of our world at large. An error has occurred in recent weeks to compromise that goal.

It has been brought to The Collegian's attention that the story entitled "'Titanic, the Musical' stays afloat at the Foothill Theatre," a review covering the theatrical production now running in Worcester, Mass., written by a Collegian staff member and published in The Collegian's print and online versions on Sept. 30 is questionable in originality.

On Sept. 23, the Worcester Telegram & Gazette published its own review of the same show, written by one of its staff. Many of the details included in the Telegram and Gazette's story were displayed in The Collegian's. The resemblance among paragraph and sentence structure in both stories is uncanny.

By all accounts, it appears as though this review marks a case of plagiarism.

The author of The Collegian story remains firm that this was not intentional plagiarism. He admits to reading the Telegram and Gazette's story, which was included in the show's press packet, and, in hindsight, to allowing himself to be influenced by the piece much more than he realized at the time. The Collegian views this as a poor judgment error — one that has resulted in pulling The Collegian's review from the Web and suspending the author from all newsroom duties.

We have examined the author's past Collegian stories, of which there are over 90, and are satisfied that the case of the "Titanic" review was a singular occurrence. As such, we stand firm with the author that this case was not done with the mal intent of plagiarism.

Intentions aside though, the result still remains inexcusable for any publication and regrettable for The Collegian. We believe that the story's online deletion and the author's suspension will illustrate this point and prompt all Collegian writers and editors to understand the seriousness of capitalizing on other's work. The Collegian is committed to doing its best to uphold its social duty in offering accurate and original stories.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Eastwood
Editor in Chief

Dan Lamothe
Managing Editor

Glen Straub
Arts & Living Editor

Everybody, pack the Mullins

Yousef Munayyer

I felt it as soon as I pulled into the Mullins Center parking lot: the chilly air, the anticipation, yup, the stage was being set. Walking into the practice rink you just knew. The stands were packed, there was barely room to stand. Fire codes were most likely violated. But everyone there knew they were going to be part of something special.

This was just the exhibition game. Our starting players weren't even in uniform so they would be sure to be healthy for the opener. Yet even though this game wasn't going to matter to the standings it sure mattered to the hundreds of students who showed up. Why? Because all of them have been waiting since last season like me for the puck to drop at the "M" once again.

So here is the million-dollar question, where are you going to be tomorrow night? if your thinking like I'm thinking, you will be down at the Mullins Center helping pack that building for what is anticipated to be the biggest crowd in the building's history. This is a chance to be part of something special. I'm not just talking about tomorrow night's season opener against UConn, but the entire season. From the moment that puck drops tomorrow night till the buzzer sounds in the last game of the season, there is no excuse not to be supporting the most exciting team on campus.

OK, I know not everyone thinks this team is that exciting but have you been down to a game? This is pure, intense, in your face Hockey East action. It's the most competitive level of hockey you're going to see, short of the Olympics and the NHL playoffs. These guys are hungry, and they give 110 percent every game. During winter break when I'm home, I catch a few professional hockey games, and I usually try to get a seat downstairs. But it's just not the same. Hockey at the Mullins Center is powerful, and everyone should be a part of it.

Don't believe fans make a difference? Then you obviously didn't go to last year's game against Boston University. The comeback win against the competitive regional and Hockey East rival was supported by one of the biggest crowds in UMass history, and when the overtime goal was scored, that building erupted with roars and screams that had been waiting to be let loose for years.

The Mass Attack is a force to be reckoned with in Hockey East. They sure proved that last season, defeating national powerhouse Maine and then taking Hockey East champion UNH to the final three minutes.

Now I know basketball is fun, and football gets a lot of fans too. But there is no thrill like being at a hockey game when UMass nets a goal, and the fans erupt into the traditional chants, pointing at and taunting the opposition's goalie and letting them know they are in our house.

I'm sure there are readers out there who are thinking, "what can beat a basketball game?" And yeah, basketball is a fun sport to watch; the action is going back and forth. But how many times do you see bone-crushing hits in basketball? Hockey is the pinnacle of athletic competition, and if you don't believe me, ask an opposing player who just got slammed against the boards what he thinks. That is, if you're not too busy taunting him through the plexi-glass like I would be.

I don't mean to be picking on basketball, but your "NA NA NA NA, HEY HEY HEY, GOOD BYE" cheer doesn't have anything on the chants that get going when an opposing team's player gets sent to the penalty box. Besides, we get a few of those a game, as long as the refs are fair. And if they're not, you better believe we let them know it. I'm sure some refs have left the M and cried all the way home.

Oh and how could I forget? There is something else particularly unique to the hockey games here at UMass. Nowhere else can you see Mr. Slice. If you have never heard of Mr. Slice, you should simply be ashamed of yourself. Mr. Slice is the Domino's sponsored mascot that frequently sends t-shirts sailing into the crowd along with the Minuteman, and they occasionally brawl as well. If you're lucky, you may win a chance to shoot some pucks past Mr. Slice on the ice during the second intermission.

Tomorrow night I'm looking forward to seeing you all down there. You can find me in the student section, screaming at the top of my lungs. But be ready, because it's going to be an awesome ride. Our team is a year older than last, with more experience, and the majority of its players returning. It looks to be a very promising season. And when there is a chant going on, you better join in. Don't be looking around thinking, "wow look at all these geeks." Sorry pal, but you're going to be the odd one out there. This is our house, our team, and we need to help them make it our season.

Starting tomorrow night, be there to show your school spirit. Don't do it for me, do it for the team. And if you don't do it for the team, do it for Mr. Slice, I'm sure he wants to see a packed house too.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

A nation on speed

S.J Port

We are a nation on speed, a generation on speed. We do more in less time than ever before, and the major restrictions on this productivity are the very limitations that make us human: the need for sleep, rest, rejuvenation, and nourishment. But what happens to human limits when chemical stimulants play such a major role in our society's work?

In an article which first appeared in URB Magazine in October 1995, Todd C. Roberts wrote, "Our generation could be considered the sleepless generation. An age of society's children weaned on the ideals of high-speed communication and accelerated culture has prided itself in mastering many of the facets of human existence — doing more, sleeping less. The machines of this age have in a way enabled us to create a 24-hour lifestyle ...However the limitations of the human existence, like sleep, may still provide the stumbling block for infinite realization. That is, without chemical aid."

Roberts goes on to discuss the use of amphetamines to overcome the constraints our humanity inflicts upon and keeps up with our hectic pace of lives. The issue is one of great relevance for students. There are not enough hours in the day to do everything expected of us, or take advantage of all the opportunities presented to us. Amphetamines, for many, become the answer. Get a hold of an amphetamine, and you don't need to sleep as much, you eat less, or perhaps you can focus for longer periods.

You can buy them anywhere, from your dorm druggist or the kid next door. Everyone seems to be on them come finals week. They make your heart race and your pulse jump; they give you false energy and hype you up. However, they remain highly addictive narcotics that can easily burn you out.

Ritalin, Adderall and Dexedrine are amphetamines; Speed, Meth or Crystal are methamphetamines. A methamphetamine is the derivative of amphetamine, a central nervous system stimulant that may be injected, snorted or ingested orally. They are powerful drugs, with serious side effects, and everyone seems to have them — including me.

"Amphetamines are potent psychomotor stimulants. Their use causes a release of the excitatory neurotransmitters dopamine and noradrenaline from the brain. They induce exhilarating feelings of power, strength, energy, self-assertion, focus and enhanced motivation," states the Web site www.amphetamines.com. The euphoria doesn't last: Amphetamine depletes the neuronal stores of dopamine in the mesolimbic pleasure centers of the brain.

Short and long term health effects of amphetamines, according to the FDA, include stroke, cardiac arrhythmia, stomach cramps, shaking, anxiety, insomnia, paranoia, hallucinations and structural changes to the brain. Additionally, methamphetamine-related deaths and hospital admissions are on the rise. They are narcotics. They are not to be played with.

The recent resurgence of amphetamine prescriptions is due to the increased awareness and skyrocketing number of Attention Deficit Disorder diagnosis. The production of Ritalin in the United States from 1990 to 1998 increased 700 percent. People with ADD have been shown in clinical trials to have a different chemical response to amphetamines than the rest of the population. Researchers have found a significant positive selection for the genetic variation associated with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder and novelty-seeking behavior in the human genome. Their findings strengthen the correlation between genetic variations and ADHD.

However, there is little known about the long-term effects of amphetamine therapy for ADHD. And while studies agree that amphetamines taken in the right low dosage do improve behavioral issues in people with ADHD, there is no evidence that the use of these drugs improves academic learning. Amphetamines are not an issue of speed for those with ADHD, they are an issue of controlling a chemical behavioral issue that inhibits our ability to do our work at all, regardless of the amount of time we have to do it in. They do not help you learn, work faster, or succeed.

Amphetamines provide a sense of heightened control of psycho schematic reflexes for many, especially for those with ADHD. However, many others who play with amphetamines behave like I do without my amphetamines. They are hyper, buzzed and develop twitches; they feel stimulated whereas I feel calmed and in control.

As productivity has increased, so has the amount expected of us. We take Adderall because we believe we must perform at a level above our human capability. Aldous Huxley wrote of a society geared toward maximum efficiency in his novel "Brave New World," but one must ask, "why kill yourself to get it all done?" This is not why people are prescribed amphetamines. Prescribed amphetamines control behavior that impinges upon ones ability to work.

They give you false energy and hype you up. However, they remain highly addictive narcotics that can easily burn you out.

Amphetamines should not be used to overcome what we, as humans, cannot. Amphetamines provide a false answer to the issue of efficiency for a sleep-deprived generation set on high speed toward a stressful existence. ("Faster, faster, until the thrill of speed overcomes the fear of death." — Hunter S. Thompson.) It is a life choice: A long slow burn or a bright, fast blaze.

Information used in this article was taken from "Proceedings of the National Academy of Science" Jan. 8 issue, www.amphetamines.com, and Educational Psychology by Anita Woolfolk, 9th Edition.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

Public president wanted

Thomas Naughton

I didn't want to attend the University of Massachusetts when I graduated high school in 2001. I suffered from Massachusettsian Syndrome, or in scientific terms Yuppius Snottius Vulgaris. Students from Massachusetts are socialized to believe that upon graduation, they must matriculate to a private institution in the following fall or face ridicule from their graduating counterparts. Basically, in Massachusetts, private universities and colleges are equivalent to the Reebok Pump craze of the late '80s or the Starter jacket insurgence of the early '90s. I'm exaggerating, of course, but the fact remains that students in Massachusetts look down on higher public education.

I cried all the way up to orientation, angry that I was thrust into the cold world of the mainstream student. I was under the same impression as many people in this state – that UMass is a haven of idiots and mediocrity. (Don't mistake me, we have our share of idiots, but our school is far from mediocre.)

Then, I reached Amherst center in my car and fell in love (as much as I fought it) with the artsy fartsy town. When I reached UMass – the piebald concrete jungle where no buildings match – I knew immediately that this was the place for me. Doesn't that picture just give you a cavity? It gives me one too, so let's get down to business.

Since Mitt Romney made it his personal crusade to oust Billy Bulger, we're now president-less. No offense to Interim President What's-His-Name, but if we learned anything from Interim Chancellor Marcellette Marcy Williams, "interim" is just a fancy word for "chair-warmer."

I want to apologize to the Board of Trustees for not being available at 3 p.m. to attend their meeting concerning who the next president of UMass should be. My advice for future meetings is this, schedule them at 7 p.m. the dining commons close and most of us who drink know that it's trashy to start that early. We'll be all cars. Because I was unable to attend that meeting that was so conveniently scheduled, I would like to drop my two pennies on the campus concerning who the next Mr. or Ms. President should be.

Massachusetts as a Commonwealth needs to realize that we are the life-blood of the community. Mitt Romney is sending us a message with budget cuts: Don't start your business here, don't start your family here, get your degree and get out of Dodge. Where does that leave Massachusetts? In the same financial crisis it has been in for the last decade or two.

How are we to be appropriately advocated for if our advocate has no idea what kinds of struggles we endure?

What does the University of Massachusetts need? We need a president who understands what it is like to attend a public university. I believe the next president should be from a public university system. How are we to be appropriately advocated for if our advocate has no idea what kinds of struggles we endure? The students at UMass are fighters: We fight to get into classes; we fight to stay in our majors; we fight to have enough money to pay for school; we fight to graduate on time; and we fight to keep our heads above water in the 25,000-plus ocean of students. Mitt Romney doesn't understand that kind of dynamic. He understands money and that he wants certain people to have more than others.

Our president should be able to effectively advocate and secure more funding for our University. Even with budget cuts, we still made the U.S. News & World Report Top 50 State Institutions. We need to hit the ground running with someone who understands who we are, and what we need.

Why did I tell the above story about coming to UMass? Because all it took was a look at the town, a look at the campus, for me to know there was a life here. It seems in Massachusetts that anything west of Worcester is unimportant, and that sentiment needs to be phased out as aggressively as Billy Bulger was. I'd like to see our president be so present in the state legislation that those politicians need to invest in Fast Lane toll passes because hey, they visit that much.

Randal Stokes, professor of Sociology at UMass said it best, "Private rationality causes public irrationality." To have a president of a public university system be from a private institution makes no sense. We need a voice that will represent us as we are: A venerable institution of higher learning filled with students who fight for their education and aim to win.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for asst. Ed/Op editor are now open. Anyone interested in applying should contact Erika Lovley or Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A film that explores the dark side of development

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The first thing you notice about "Thirteen" is the way it looks. It's shot, by Elliot Davis, with a grainy, restless, hand-held urgency that plunges you, at every moment, into the startling heart of the scene. The camera rattles forward, into tattoo parlors and broken homes, never settling for a second, and it captures the twitchy soul of its heroine.

'Thirteen'
Directed by Catherine Hardwicke
Starring Evan Rachel Wood, Holly Hunter
Fox Searchlight
Rated R
95 mins
Grade A-

The second thing you notice is the performance of Evan Rachel Wood. She's a young actress in the blonde cutie-pie mode of Kirsten Dunst and Reese Witherspoon, but she acts with a fearless, raging inner fire that is hardly seen in the placid starlet demeanor of her cohorts. It's there in her eyes; in the way that Wood registers repulsion and ecstasy, panic and desire in one single glance. As Tracy, a sweet-heart of a 7th grader whose life falls apart as she descends into the swamp of sex and drugs, Wood captures the fragility of a girl who is watching her innocence drain away, and is too afraid – and too enamored – to do anything about it.

Catherine Hardwicke's "Thirteen" is a devastating, if somewhat lurid, youth-gone-wild melodrama. It's a portrait of a young girl who slides slowly – inexorably – down the rabbit hole of self-destruction, and it has a harrowing, brutal impact. There's a whiff of exploitation about "Thirteen," but there's no denying the fact that Hardwicke has captured the treacherous emotional potholes of puberty in all their dangerous, foreign allure.

At first Tracy is a good-girl in robin's egg blue socks, chatting with her studious friends and smiling with the sweetly dreamy grin of an angel. Then she spies Evie Zamora (Nikki Reed, who co-wrote the screenplay, based partially on her own life, with Hardwicke at age 13) a sultry popular girl in a lace-up halter-top and S&M studded bracelets. Tracy is hit by the pangs of adolescence – the jealousy and, even more, the need to be one with the crowd – and she's drawn into Evie's orbit. Tracy steals a wallet to fit in, and from there on in, she and Evie are the best of friends, going on shoplifting sprees, dressing like junior prostitutes, smoking pot and getting down with the boys.

"Thirteen" is a horror movie in which the monster is the all-consuming pubescent urge to fit in. Tracy starts out as a baby-faced good girl, and turns, with stunning speed, into a howling, demonic windstorm of unchecked youthful rebellion. As Tracy delves deeper into Evie's wanton abyss, she casts off her nice-girl image, and with it, any vestige of humanity. She flaunts a newfound casual cruelty, tossing off withering putdowns with a cunning, defiant glee. She reserves her most bilious venom for her mother's live-in, recovering-addict boyfriend (Jeremy Sisto) and for her hippie hairdresser mother (Holly Hunter), a woman who has, to this point, acted more as a cool older sister than mother. Hunter, with her wide, lost eyes, perfectly embodies the panicked soul of a woman who can do nothing, but watch as her child gives in to the wicked forces of temptation.

Hardwicke at times lays the darkness on too thickly, but "Thirteen" has an undeniable raw power. There's some rich commentary here about the corruptibility of innocence by the forces of consumerism, the way that societal ideals about image and belonging prey on the insecurities of confused youth. Hardwicke repeatedly swings her camera back to the image of a bus stop poster for perfume, a symbolic totem of the consumerist culture's vulture-like preying on the young.

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

D.W. Moffett and Evan Rachel Wood try to hold it together.

Reed, in her acting debut, amazes as the Lady MacBeth-like Evie, a young woman who has the charisma to pull others into her hell, but also shows the vulnerability of a broken girl who may have once been as sweet and unguarded as Tracy.

But "Thirteen" is ultimately owned by Wood's courageous portrayal of Tracy. Watch the scene where she hungrily tries to seduce, with Evie, a twentysomething stud or the scene in which she uses scissors to pierce her forearm in an effort to release her torment. Wood conveys the nervous, ambivalent stir of emotions that shape her downfall – the anger, the frustration, the fear, the joy and the desire to erase any form of her old self from existence. "Thirteen" is a frighteningly dark and painful portrayal of rebellion at its most hellish and destructive, but it has an aura of startling power.

All dolled up and ready to go

DRESDEN DOLLS GIVE IT THEIR ALL

By David Fonseca
Collegian Staff

This past summer while at a rent-a-car station in nearby Hadley a friend and I came across a rather curious site. Sitting upon a table in this unpretentious shop was an issue of The Improper Bostonian with the visages of Boston's hottest act the Dresden Dolls, on the cover. It was not the sight of the band in and of itself on the cover that surprised, rather the mileage that this little magazine had covered. I shouldn't have been surprised; combining inspired lyrics, dynamic instrumentation, and catchy hooks the Dolls will no doubt be going places far beyond this rent-a-car in Hadley. Composed of Amanda Palmer on piano and vocals and Brian Viglione banging the skins, the dynamic duo of Boston's own, the Dresden Dolls, are no stranger to the limelight.

Winner of Noise! Magazine's Best Band in Boston reader pole, a first-place finish in the recent WBCN rock n' roll rumble resulting in a spot in the River Rave and a performance in the Boston Music Awards; accolades are also nothing new for the Dolls. And now with a self-titled, full-length debut album ready to be unleashed upon the world and a short midwest tour, the Dresden Dolls are about to show the world just how far they will go.

On the album, the Dolls offer a selection of tracks that cover almost every inch of the musical landscape. The pulse-pounding "Girl Anachronism" races ahead a mile a minute with Palmer's clever lyrics and machine gun piano rifling accompanied by Viglione's fierce drumming. The frenetic pace of "Girl Anachronism" is offset by slower, moodier tracks like the reflective and extremely personal "Perfect Fit," in which Palmer beautifully sings about her insecurities. "I used to be the bright one/sharp as a tack/funny that how skipping years ahead/has held me back".

The Dolls also offer up some tracks that lean more towards '50s pop, like the hand clapping "The Jeep Song" while others like "Missed Me" and "Coin Operated Boy" are products of the theatrical punk-cabaret sound that only the Dresden Dolls can produce. The latter, a song about being fixated on an artificial lover, presents some of the more ingenious word play on the album. "Coin-Operated Boy/he may not be real experienced with girls/but I know he feels like a boy should feel/isn't that the point?"

"I'm influenced by the music I love no matter how subtle the influence is," Palmer said of the origins of the Dresden Dolls' sound. "I grew up listening to such a huge array of music that it's hard to pin it down, and it's probably also why the songwriting is so diverse. I just sort of write what comes into my head which is just an amalgam of everything."

Viglione, a huge fan of Nirvana and Hardcore Punk acts like Minor Threat, brings a whole other dimension to the table. According to Palmer there was an instant chemistry when to two first played together. "It didn't develop over time. It was like lightning struck, we knew right away." This chemistry is clear and results in a sound that will surely please lovers of all styles of music.

A giant of the Boston live scene, the Dolls are known for their animated live show. Fans will be delighted to hear that none of this trademark energy has been lost in translation from stage to studio. Palmer described The Dolls' attempt to maintain the live atmosphere while also adding new elements to each song. "it was an interesting task. On some of the songs we tried to keep it really raw and live, on other songs we decided to have more fun using the advantages that a studio gives you."

Indeed, fans will also be pleased with the adjustments that the Dolls made, whether it's the string arrangement on the album's final track "Truce" or Palmer's revision of some of her lyrics. "The songs are always changing, they just constantly evolve, and I think they were at a good point in their evolution when we put them down on the album," Palmer said. The Dolls weren't alone in the process of trying to capture the energy of their live show in the studio, assisting them was venerable producer Martin Bisi (The Swans, Sonic Youth).

"He's an incredible producer," Palmer said. "He really got the hand and understood what we were trying to capture."

The Dresden Dolls are clearly one of the most unique and multi-talented groups to emerge in a long time. Unfortunately, considering the current state of popular music, this can sometimes be a bad thing. In an industry that is so used to marketing old trends as new, see the "The" band fiasco of last fall or the current "screamo" phase some of us seem to be going through recently, many radio stations may not know what to do with a band of the Dresden Dolls' integrity. However, judging from the ferocity of their current fans and the new recruits that are constantly being acquired due to the band's relentless touring schedule, something tells me that the Dolls aren't about to change for anyone. Don't be fooled by the "the" in front of their name. The Dolls are no fad. They are the real deal.

Ginsberg photos on display in Allentown

By Jennifer Kay
Associated Press

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) – Smoking on a fire escape, a railroad brakeman's rule-book stuck in his jacket pocket; Jack Kerouac looks as though he just stepped from the pages of "On the Road." The image is seen in a 1953 photograph taken by fellow Beat writer Allen Ginsberg.

COURTESY DAVID SIESTA/FAMILY COLLECTION

Jack Kerouac poses in "Railroad Brakeman's Rule-book in Pocket."

Ginsberg photographed the best minds of the Beat Generation in between bursts of creativity. An exhibit of 34 black-and-white photographs taken by Ginsberg and annotated with the poet's handwritten captions is on view at the Allentown Art Museum.

Kerouac is caught mid-conversation while walking down a New York street. He makes what Ginsberg called a "Dostoyevsky mad face," mugging for the camera. Neal Cassady, Kerouac's model for Dean Moriarty in "On the Road," is seen on a bus trip; William Burroughs squints in the sun; Lawrence Ferlinghetti is photographed outside his City Lights bookstore in San Francisco, shortly before publishing Ginsberg's graphic poem, "Howl."

The word "beat" came from the streets of Times Square and jazz musicians of the 1940s and was embraced by Ginsberg, the Massachusetts-born Kerouac, Burroughs and their friends. It came to symbolize an alternative community, a rejection of rigid literary conventions and the repressive social mores and politics of the 1950s.

Poet Anne Waldman, who co-founded with Ginsberg the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics at Naropa University in Boulder, Colo., said the photographs embody his ethic of "snapshot poetics," capturing the details of a single moment.

The first half of the exhibit shows the young Beats moving among New York, San Francisco, India and Morocco from 1953-1964.

The photographs, most enlarged to 16 inches by 20 inches, are candid but Ginsberg focused on his subjects' faces staring back at him. The intimate images look as though they were snapped after Ginsberg said, "Hey, look at me for a second."

A photograph from 1984 shows Waldman and Burroughs squeezed into the corner of a booth in a Mexican restaurant behind a table full of bottles and empty glasses. As they turn toward the camera, Burroughs' metallic tie glints in the light.

Curator Jacqueline van Rhyn compared Ginsberg's photographs to portraits by Richard Avedon. "The prints are high quality, but what contributes to their popularity is the personalities they capture," she said.

Allen Ginsberg
Allentown Art Museum
Allentown, Pa
ends Nov. 2

Penne Baker captured on film, apparently lost in thought, and unaware of the camera.

A 1956 photograph of Ginsberg retyping "Howl" on a portable typewriter in friend Peter Orlovsky's apartment opens the exhibit. Ginsberg is the subject of several photographs. In run-on sentences he scrawled beneath each image in the 1980s, he notes whose hands held his camera.

The handwritten captions set Ginsberg apart from other documentary photographers, said David Sestak, a collector whose family owns the Ginsberg photographs on display.

"I thought it was very unique in that there are very few fine art photographers who express themselves with the visual combined with the word," he said. Ginsberg records not only people's names, but also their drug use and published writings.

The later photographs from 1984-1991 are more self-conscious, as the Beats grow into their roles as cultural icons. By this time, Ginsberg had invested in a medium-format camera, resulting in crisper images.

Two photographs taken through the kitchen window of Ginsberg's apartment on New York's Lower East Side close the show, offering a last view of the world as the poet saw it. Ginsberg died in his apartment in 1997 at age 70.

"Allen Ginsberg: Beat Generation Photographer" runs through Nov. 2 and will not travel.

Birth control for men in the works

Male contraceptive trial results in no pregnancies

By Jamie Tarabay
Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) – A practical male contraceptive could be a step closer after researchers said Tuesday that trials prevented pregnancies among 55 couples using it for 12 months.

The treatment stops sperm production by using implants of the male hormone testosterone under the skin and injections of the female hormone, progestin.

Experts said the results were a significant step forward that builds on many years of related research.

Previous studies have shown that a combination of testosterone and progestin can switch off sperm production in men. The latest study is the first to measure the effect on preventing pregnancy.

The U.S. government-funded trial, sponsored by Virginia-based family planning organization CONRAD, successfully and reversibly turned off sperm production in the men who took part, said Rob McLachlan, director of clinical research at Prince Henry's Institute of Medical Research in Sydney, Australia.

CONRAD often funds medical studies outside the United States and works closely with the World Health Organization, which is interested in finding new contraceptive methods for the developing world.

"This is the first time the combination of long-acting testosterone and a progestin have been used in an effective-ness study," McLachlan said in a telephone interview.

The idea of using hormone treatment to turn off sperm production has been tested for about 30 years, but much of the earlier work focused on using testosterone alone.

About a decade ago, two World Health Organization studies demonstrated that sperm counts could be reversibly suppressed and pregnancies avoided using testosterone injections.

The idea is similar to that of the female contraceptive pill, which tricks the body into thinking it is pregnant. The testosterone injections trick men's bodies into thinking their testes have produced enough testosterone already, so the body switches off testosterone and sperm production in the testes.

Injections of too much testosterone can create problems, however, so much of the latest research has used a combination of testosterone and progestin to lessen the amount of testosterone needed, said Dr. Richard Anderson, a clinical scientist at the Human Reproduction Unit at Edinburgh University in Scotland who conducts similar research.

Progestin, which is found in men's bodies but only in very small amounts, does most of the sperm suppression; used alone, it would be equivalent to chemical castration, Anderson said.

"You have to add back a normal amount of testosterone to make the guys feel OK," said Anderson, who was not connected with the Australian study.

Tony Morrow, an endocrinologist at Sydney's Mona Vale hospital who also was not linked to the research, said that if the treatment ever becomes available, it might not be popular with some men "because it involves injections and testosterone implants."

The 55 couples in the Australian study made an 18-month commitment, McLachlan said.

In the study's first phase, men took testosterone and progestin for up to six months until their sperm count reached zero. Then the men had testosterone implants placed under their skin in minor surgeries and received progestin injections for the next 12 months, to keep their sperm suppressed.

The trial was unusual because it tested real-life birth control effectiveness, McLachlan said. "Once the sperm was suppressed, the couples used this as their (contraceptive) method. Other studies only monitor how far the sperm count falls."

All the male participants' sperm counts returned to their pretrial levels in six to 12 months after the trial, McLachlan said.

He said the contraceptive's cancer risk for men would likely be similar to that of women using traditional methods, such as the pill or contraceptive implants.

"There's no evidence for this problem at this point of time. Cardiovascular and prostate health are long-term safety issues that we'll need to keep a close eye on, but so far so good," he said.

Morrow said more research with larger groups was necessary to evaluate other possible side effects, such as sleep disorders and breathing difficulties.

McLachlan said it could take "several years" of more and longer tests before the contraceptive would be available.

The study will be published in the October edition of Journal of Clinical Endocrinology and Metabolism.

Sabotage puts a halt on killer show

By Vickie Chachere
Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) – An Internet broadcast of a concert that was to feature a suicide of a terminally ill person did not happen Saturday because the Web site was attacked. The band's leader said the concert still went on, but he didn't know whether the suicide did.

Billy Tourtelot, the bandleader of Hell on Earth, said Saturday night that his group performed at an undisclosed St. Petersburg location as scheduled and that he was unaware of the Internet problems until after the show.

Tourtelot said the suicide was scheduled to take place at a separate location, which he also refused to reveal. It was not shown on the band's Web site as planned, but that did not necessarily mean it didn't happen, Tourtelot said.

"I don't know if that was done tonight," Tourtelot told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Hell on Earth's Web site was attacked Saturday evening by a flood of data from computers somewhere in Hong Kong, said Jason Trindade, the operator of a San Diego-based technology company that hosts the site.

"There's been a huge amount of traffic which causes the server to lock up," Trindade said.

Trindade said Tourtelot told him the performance would be postponed, possibly until next weekend. But Tourtelot said the show, at least the musical portion, went on as scheduled and that no other performances were planned.

City and state officials had warned they would pursue criminal charges if the band went through with the suicide plan, and a judge had issued an order banning the event.

Tourtelot had said Saturday morning the concert and suicide would take place that night in two separate, undisclosed locations in St. Petersburg. He wouldn't give any more details on the venues.

Tourtelot's announcement last month that he would host the suicide of a terminally ill fan led the city to ban the event with an ordinance and prompted the court injunction.

The band asked fans to visit its Web page for the performance, but no video was shown. Instead, a link to another site appeared, as did the following message: "Next week the show will go on."

Trindade said the site was victimized by a denial-of-service attack, which is designed to hamper or shut down a computer system by flooding it with huge amounts of data. He did not immediately know how the site would address the problem.

Emergency dispatchers in St. Petersburg and Pinellas County reported they had no calls reporting a suicide nearly four hours after the event was to have taken place. In St. Petersburg, officials were on alert for calls of a suicide or suspicious death.

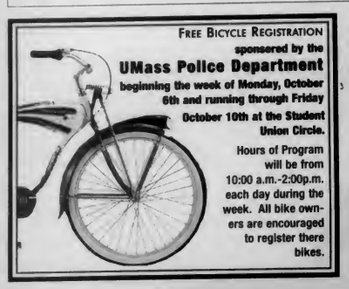
Florida Attorney General Charlie Crist has said that anyone who assists in a suicide could be charged with a felony and face up to 15 years in prison.

The person threatening suicide has said he is dying and wants to promote his right-to-die views. Tourtelot, 33, said he was standing up for what he believed in to grant his friend his dying wish.

"There's nothing bad about that. It's giving the right to die with human dignity and compassion for those that we love," he said.

Kevin Hayslett, an attorney for Tourtelot, said the bandleader wanted to go ahead with the show despite the lawyer's advice that he not do so. Hayslett said he did not know the concert's location.

Tourtelot said opposition from St. Petersburg city officials helped the band promote the concert.



"I think they wasted a lot of people's tax dollars," he said.

City officials did not return phone messages Saturday.

The other members of the band have not been heard from throughout the controversy, which has earned the group worldwide publicity.

Trindade said he would continue serving the site and carry the concert until he receives complaints from law enforcement officials to shut it down, although he said he found the band's plans to be "pretty twisted."

"They haven't broken any law and I can't just turn them off," he said.

Free Bicycle Registration
sponsored by the
UMass Police Department
beginning the week of Monday, October 6th and running through Friday October 10th at the Student Union Circle.
Hours of Program will be from 10:00 a.m.-2:00p.m. each day during the week. All bike owners are encouraged to register there bikes.

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Fin Texas Blues Chicken Fingers Mozzarella Sticks 50 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

Residence Hall Students
UMass Residential Telecom now has
LOWER INTERNATIONAL RATES
when you use your room telephone!
Rates are per minute (as of 10/03/03)

China	.55	Japan	.15
France	.17	Taiwan	.22
India	.55	U.K.	.10

For LOWER RATES in other countries, check out our Web site (http://telecom.oit.umass.edu/students), and click on Rates.
AT&T ACUS One Rate Plan® users have been automatically switched to the new, lower rates! Plus, your monthly fee has been waived! Please call Residential Telecom at 545-2103 with any questions.
Just use your PSC code!
(For questions about your PSC code, please call 545-2103)
PLUS, DOMESTIC LONG DISTANCE IS JUST
7.9 cents per minute, 24/7
Anytime, anywhere, in the United States when you use your room telephone!
No Monthly Fees
No Connection Fees
No Roaming Fees
No Sign Ups

Nugent enters reality TV

By Mike Householder
Associated Press

DETROIT (AP) – They were shot with paintballs, slept in a barn, constructed their own outhouse and skinned a Russian boar.

Is all of this worth $25,000 and a truck?

Evidently so for the seven people who signed up for "Surviving Nugent," a two-hour reality program that airs Sunday night on VH1.

Ted Nugent, the outspoken rocker and outdoors enthusiast, challenges the contestants to live off the land in his rural compound near Jackson, about 70 miles west of Detroit.

The old-school rocker is tuned up for his new television show.

COURTESY WWW.ROLLINGSTONE.COM

The contestants are eliminated one by one as the Motor City Madman sees fit. The last one standing wins the loot and the vehicle.

Along for the ride, are Nugent's wife, Shemane, son, Rocco, and his "blood brother," Big Jim, who drives the eliminated contestants down a dirt road in a pickup truck.

"We're showing off our self-sufficient, Neanderthal lifestyle," Nugent, 54, told The Associated Press. "If you can't derive some entertainment from that, you're weird."

"Surviving Nugent" is scheduled for one airing, but VH1 might make it an ongoing series, said Rob Weiss, head of East Coast programming and development for the channel.

Nugent's no stranger to television, he has appeared on "Miami Vice" and "That 70's Show."

Dopamine: may cause temporary boredom

By Ben Nuckols
Associated Press

"Dopamine," a humorless, insufferable computer-geek romance, takes its name from the chemical that floods the brain during moments of pleasure. It's the most inappropriately titled movie since "Deep Impact." Insular, self-important and patently ridiculous, this digital video feature is a pleasure vacuum.

"Dopamine"
Directed by Mark Decena
Starring John Livingston Sabrina Lloyd
Sundance Institute
Rated R
75 mins.
Grade D

A product of the Sundance Institute, which helps budding filmmakers hone their cinematic musings into features, "Dopamine" bears all the hallmarks of a movie that's been developed to death. With the institute's proud guidance, director Mark Decena and his co-writer, Timothy Breitbach, have taken a teensy-weensy idea and padded it with more filler than a $3 crab cake. Their years of writing, work shopping and rewriting have produced a wan, 84-minute feature that feels twice as long.

The premise: Can love really exist at a time when science can explain the way hormones, pheromones and brain chemistry interact to produce everything from sexual attraction to the nesting instinct and the seven-year itch?

Well, sure it can, because most people don't pay attention to that stuff. But Decena and Breitbach have created a hero who's obsessed with it: Rand (John Livingston), a Bay Area programmer who creates an artificially intelligent cartoon bird that's geared to respond to human emotion like a pet.

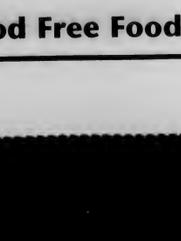
Of course there's a lame back story that explains Rand's obsession with the science of emotion: His mother is stricken with Alzheimer's disease, and she no longer recognizes her son or her husband of 30-plus years. In his bitterness, Rand's father has become convinced that the love he shared with his wife was merely chemical, and he's drilled that mentality into his son.

And of course Rand's mindset will be tested by a woman, Sarah (Sabrina Lloyd), whom we first see painting, signifying what a perfect love interest she is. She tries to flirt with Rand at a bar, but Rand clams up and she goes off with his sexually aggressive partner, Winston (Bruno Campos), for an unsatisfying one-night stand.

But never fear. Sarah teaches at the kindergarten where Rand, Winston and their third partner Johnson (Rueben Grundy) have been ordered to product-test their digital pet, giving Rand plenty more chances to woo her with his morouseness. While Lloyd has some winning moments as Sarah, Livingston (the brother of the far more talented Ron Livingston) ties himself into knots trying to look tormented.

Although nothing signifies it as a period piece, "Dopamine" clearly takes place when the dot-com bubble was still inflating: People get paid to mess around on their computers all day, and nobody seems to worry about money or even whether their product ever makes it to market. They live in a self-contained world untouched by war, terrorism or economic uncertainty, making them seem all the more smug and inconsequential.

COURTESY JEFF VESPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS



Bruno Compos plays Winston, an aggressive oddball, in this film about computer obsession.

New book surfaces to touch all Mister Rogers' fans

Work incorporates speeches, songs, and writings made by Rogers

By Judy Lin
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) – Mister Rogers may have left a void in millions of lives when he died but Mrs. Rogers hopes a new collection of his plainspoken wisdom will provide comfort to them as it did for her.

Mister Rogers' legacy has moved from the screen to the page.

COURTESY WWW.SOUTHCOAST.COM

Joanne Rogers says "The World According to Mister Rogers: Important Things to Remember," from Hyperion Books, was published for people who grew up watching Fred Rogers' public television show. It serves as testament to his timeless message of love, friendship and respect.

"Most of the people who read this book will feel as if they're having a visit with him. I do, and I think that's why I cherish it so," Rogers said.

Culled from years of commencement speeches, songs, writings and interviews, the new book contains words of courage and inspiration, simple statements that made Mister Rogers a household name. At least one passage was pulled from a public service announcement, which aired after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

One sentence reads: "I'm convinced that when we help our children find healthy ways of dealing with their feelings, ways that don't hurt them or anyone else, we're helping to make our world a safer, better place."

For more than three decades, the public television show "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" taught millions of young viewers about love and to feel more secure about the world. Decked in his zip-up cardigan and sneakers, he became a friend to children and a mentor to parents.

Unlike his previous songbooks for children and parenting guides, the new book has a broader appeal.

"It's not a book for children, but a book for people who had watched the show over the years, grown-up children who were familiar with his program and who knew him," Joanne Rogers said.

Proceeds from the book sale will go to The Fred Rogers Fund, which promotes children's development.

The very private Rogers wrote the forward for her late husband's book, recounting how they met at Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., where the two played piano. She continued to play professionally as he focused on his television show, which began airing at Pittsburgh public television station WQED in 1966 and went national two years later.

The two, who were married for more than 50 years, loved to laugh. Even before he died Feb. 27 after a bout with stomach cancer at his Pittsburgh home, Joanne Rogers, 75, said he told jokes and watched Monty Python with their grandchildren.

When he came home from the hospital after having surgery in January, he walked straight to his piano to play because he had missed it so much, she said.

"Our friendship was extremely important to our relationship and I miss that," Rogers said, "but on the other hand, he's everywhere."

Rogers uses three words to describe her husband – courage, love and discipline – which inspired editors to bundle his work into those three themes. The book's messages keep her company. She even uses paper clips to mark her favorite quotes in her copy of the final proof.

COWBOY UP!
at the hatch
FREE!!!!
Wings, Hot Dogs, Soda, & Chips
wednesday and thursday doors open @ 7:45
Sponsered by Auxilary Services, Student Affairs, and Campus Life.
Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food
GO SOX!
Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food
Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food Free Food

Your pills are where????

Try the Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera* is 99.7% effective.

Not only is it 99.7% effective, but you need just 1 shot every 11 to 13 weeks to protect you from pregnancy. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera is not your every day birth control.

Depo-Provera does not protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant or if you have had any unexplained periods. You should not use it if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a loss of some of the bone mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. Some women using Depo-Provera have side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months. You may gain weight when using Depo-Provera. About two thirds of the women in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 lb during the first year of use.

Talk to your health care provider to see if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

Birth control you think about just 4 times a year.

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on the adjacent page.

DE148562B © 2003 Pfizer Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA/September 2003 10% TOTAL RECOVERED FIBER Pfizer

GERALD H. LINK/COLLEGIAN

An unidentified man hangs from the roof of Berkshire Dinning Commons during a raucous celebration in UMass' Southwest residential area early yesterday morning. Red Sox celebrations were reported throughout New England.

Fans over the edge

By Helena Payne
Associated Press

BOSTON – Jubilant Red Sox fans poured into the streets and hundreds converged on Fenway Park, celebrating Boston's 4-3 victory over the A's in Oakland to advance to the American League Championship Series against the hated New York Yankees.

"It's crazy. It's awesome," said Sean Cunningham, 27, of the city's Jamaica Plain section. "It's going to be a great series, Red Sox against Yankees, it doesn't get any better than that."

At least one car near the ballpark Monday night was flipped over onto its top, some fans jumped onto the roof of a parked ambulance, others rocked moving taxis back and forth and witnesses said beer bottles were thrown from rooftops of nearby buildings. Chants of "Go Sox" filled the air.

Boston police reported three arrests – including two women for allegedly exposing themselves – but no injuries in the crowd. They were expected to be arraigned Tuesday at Roxbury District Court.

Several thousand students poured out of dormitories at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst following the Red Sox' victory, said Patrick Callahan, a university spokesman. He described the gathering as "celebratory" and said no arrests were made.

However, one person, described by Callahan as a student at Springfield Technical Community College, suffered broken bones after jumping off the roof of the Berkshire Dining Commons.

Shortly before Monday night's game three students were arrested in connection with damage following Saturday night's game when 500 to 1,000 students and other people gathered outside the Southwest Dormitory complex, Callahan said. Two non-students were arrested earlier with police estimating broken windows and other damage at $20,000.

In New Hampshire, hundreds of revelers celebrated downtown near the University of New Hampshire in Durham. Observers said there were about 2,000 people downtown; police estimated between 500 and 600. In Plymouth, scores of police assisted from surrounding towns to control the crowd that gathered at the bonfire near the Plymouth State University campus. In Manchester after the game, police were called to assist campus guards at Southern New Hampshire University for reports of a disturbance, including at least one outdoor fire.

At the Cask 'N Flagon across the street from Fenway Park, bar patrons let out a collective roar when Derek Lowe pitched his way out of the ninth-inning jam.

"It's amazing. I'm so excited," said Liz Wessen, 26, of Boston, a Red Sox fan since childhood.

"They have a team this year that can go all the way."

But Estee Chaikin, 23, of Boston, who watched the game at Jillian's, a downtown bar, said people were praying and holding hands until the end of the game.

With the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth and a one-run lead, Lowe struck out pinch-hitter Terrence Long to end the decisive fifth game of the AL Division Series.

Boston recovered from a two-game deficit to knock out the A's three games to two to get to the ALCS.

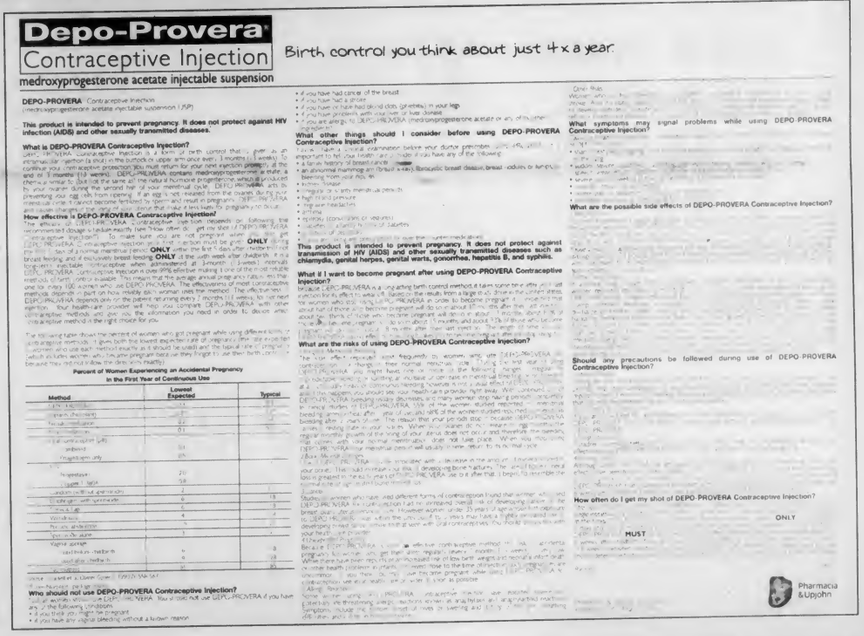
Red Sox fans had a momentary scare in the seventh inning after center fielder Johnny Damon and second baseman Damian Jackson bumped heads in the outfield while running to catch a fly ball from Oakland's Jermaine Dye.

"I think we lost a lot of the momentum," said Yao-Chung King, 19, who watched the game in a dorm at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, then left with his group to soak up the post-game excitement in the heart of Boston.

"After coming from behind 2-0, I figure we have a pretty good chance," said John Moore, 22, of Walpole, who was watching the game with friends at the Cask 'N Flagon.

Oakland entered Monday's game hoping to break a streak of eight losses in games that could have clinched a spot in the next round.

The A's made the playoffs in each of the last three years, failing each time to make it past the first round.



But Oakland has nothing on Boston when it comes to losing big games.

The Red Sox long history of near-misses is legendary – from the ball through Bill Buckner's legs in Game 6 of the 1986 World Series to Bucky Dent's improbable home run in a one-game playoff in 1978.

www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection (medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension) (IUP)

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Percent of Women Experiencing an Accidental Pregnancy In the First Year of Continuous Use

Method	Lowest Expected	Typical

Runner balances workload

Continued from page 12

hometown of Lunenburg, Mass. McCarron's sister also shares the family's passion for running, and is currently the number two runner for the Naval Academy's women's cross-country team.

Aside from leading the cross-country team on the trail, McCarron has helped guide new students for the past three semesters, by being a Resident Assistant. Despite the large time commitment, Andrew enjoys the responsibility of being an R.A. because it gives him the chance to interact with people he normally would not see.

"Being an R.A. is fun, it takes up a lot of time, but it's usually during times I'd be in my room doing homework anyway. I chose to become an R.A. because it looks good to have leadership experience on résumes, and I like the kids on my hall," McCarron said.

Despite his involvement with several extracurricular activities, McCarron refuses to believe that he's taken on too much, and jokingly suggests that all he needs is "a little sleep and a day planner."

"The only advice I could give to someone thinking about becoming a student-athlete is to put school first, because in time everyone's athletic abilities will fade, but they will always have the education," McCarron said.

McCarron isn't ready to start planning for life after college, but he's excited about graduating from UMass in 2005.

"I guess I'll look at the market when I get out. I may go to grad school, or I may go out and try to find a job," McCarron said.

One prediction McCarron will make, with two races left before the cross-country playoffs – he is confident that UMass will improve upon last year's sixth place, Atlantic 10 finish.

"We'll do way better than sixth. No one on the team may win the race, but we'll finish as a pack, and definitely improve upon last season," McCarron said.

City officials to crack down

Destructive post game celebrations create cause for concern

By Greg Sukiennik
Associated Press

BOSTON – City officials pledged to crack down on rowdiness and underage drinking Tuesday after celebrations by Red Sox fans led to property damage and seven arrests.

Fans poured onto the streets and hundreds converged on Fenway Park after Boston won in Oakland on Monday night to advance to the American League Championship Series against the New York Yankees.

At least one car near Fenway was flipped onto its top. Some fans jumped onto the roof of an ambulance and others rocked moving taxis. Witnesses said beer bottles were thrown from rooftops of nearby buildings.

The seven were charged with disorderly conduct, and three of them with trespassing. Two of the seven also were charged with indecent exposure, authorities said.

With an ALCS looming against the archrival New York Yankees, city officials took a stand Tuesday in hopes of preventing further violence.

Mayor Thomas Menino urged fans to "celebrate in a way we can all be proud of." "Celebrating at the expense of others is unacceptable and will not be tolerated," he said, adding that police will arrest anyone who threatens public safety.

Police Commissioner Paul Evans said the city will ban parking around Fenway Park between 4 p.m. and 1 a.m. on game days – home and away – during the playoffs.

Police will arrest underage drinkers and check liquor stores and pubs to make sure underage or drunken fans are not served alcohol. Police also planned to work with area colleges, several of which are within walking distance of the ballpark.

Meanwhile, the team's die-hard fans – loyal despite nearly a century of heartbreak – looked forward to the best-of-seven series against the Yankees with a mix of "this is our year" enthusiasm and "here we go again" cautious optimism.

"Every year it always seems like this is the year," said Jerry Olmeda, 30, of Revere. "You always think this year is different. So I don't know if this year is different."

"It makes me nervous," added Maureen Shepherd, 40. "Boy, they do it the hard way."

Monday's decisive game against the A's came down to the last pitch, with Derek Lowe striking out Oakland's Terrence Long with the bases loaded.

Game 3 was an extra-inning cliffhanger and Game 4 featured a dramatic Red Sox comeback in the eighth inning.

Some Boston fans were already looking past New York, toward a possible World Series matchup with the Chicago Cubs – like the Red Sox, a star-crossed team with a tragicomic history of bad luck and blunders attributed to a mythic curse.

In 1918, the last time the Red Sox won a World Series, they beat the Cubs.

"It's going to be the 'supernatural series,'" said Michael Monroe, 27, of Acton.

Shepherd, 40, a New Jersey native who became a Red Sox fan in 1986, said she's trying to persuade her mother, a Yankee fan, to see the error of her ways and root for Boston.

"I think we hate them more than they hate us," she said of Yankees fans. "But I think they're worried going into this series. I think we're going to win."

UMASS HOCKEY OPERATION 8K

SPONSORED BY: DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE / NEWS 40

WE WANT 8,000!

TO BREAK THE UMASS HOCKEY SINGLE GAME ATTENDANCE RECORD

BUY ONE GET ONE FREE TICKETS

UMASS HOCKEY vs. CONNECTICUT HUSKIES

THURSDAY • OCTOBER 9TH • 7:00 PM

WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

FREE T-SHIRTS FOR THE FIRST 2,000 FANS!

Coca-Cola · Monkey Bar Bistro 63 · The Hampshire Hospitality Group · Cobalt Club & Restaurant · Northeast dental

ONE LUCKY WINNER WILL WALK AWAY WITH A FREE SPRINGBREAK TRIP TO CANCUN

COURTESY OF FLIPNATION.COM • 1-877-4CANCUN

UMASS STUDENT TICKETS FREE!

with valid UMass Undergraduate Student ID

STUOENT TICKET PICK-UP LOCATIONS
MULLINS CENTER • CAMPUS CENTER
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS

TICKET OFFICE 545-0810

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

DIESEL FOR SUCCESSFUL LIVING

hundreds of parking spaces
1/2 mile to class
5 minutes to get there

1 unique you.

ZARA

downtown Amherst

WORKOUT ON CAMPUS!!

4 GYMS TO CHOOSE FROM FOR ONE LOW PRICE

BEST PRICES AROUND

Housing Services Residential Wellness Centers

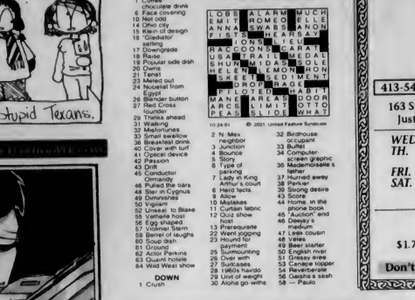
- Washington 19th floor
- JQA 19th floor (Now Expanded!!)
- Lewis basement
- Webster 1st floor
- Wall-Mounted Televisions (Coming Soon to Lewis and Webster)

AVAILABLE FOR ALL STUDENTS!!

Membership fee: $45/semester
$85/year

*Cash cannot be accepted. Pay with your UCARD or with check or money order payable to UMASS Housing

CALL 577-WELL



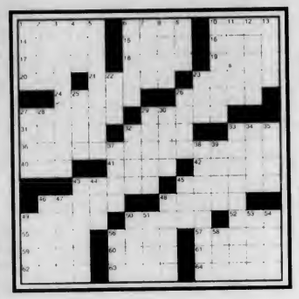
Quote for the Day

"They may take our lives, but they'll never take our freedom!"

-William Wallace, (Mel Gibson) Braveheart

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE HARP Irish Pub



413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments

WED. Reggae Night!
TH. UFB (Afropop, Reggae, Roots) No Cover
FRI. Open Irish Seisuin!
SAT. Havin' Fun Band (Rock covers, Oldies) No Cover

September Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher

Don't forget FREE Red Sox Buffet

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Fried Scallops
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 47

THURSDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 45

FRIDAY
- High: 66
- Low: 44

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Gerry Auger/ Lindsay Clark

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Wherever you go, always know where you are.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's funny that you think people care about your problems, cause they don't.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Keep hold of the higher ground. It's how you win the battles.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Take up a new hobby. Tightrope walking has always sounded interesting.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Eat more macaroni and cheese.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be quick about your task, it's inconveniencing many others.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Speak up. Don't let yourself be forgotten.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today is a good day to look deeper into things.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Try to advance in your workplace. A promotion has your name on it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Fight courageously, don't let "The Man" hold you down

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Just deal with the fact that no one likes you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Walk backwards today, you're missing things as you pass.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

6 Room-4 Bedroom apt. $1200/month plus utilities. Northampton 584-4920

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1994 Volkswagon Jetta, 160K, includes 4 snow tires, $2,000/OBO. Julie 253-4240

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

CHILDCARE

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. Old triplets 1 to 3 days a week In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR RENT

Ski House for Rent So. Londonberry, VT 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30 $1000/week katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

FOR SALE

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Offices regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

INSTRUCTION

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Lite Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

TRAVEL

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

TUTOR

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

WANTED

Castings: photogenic male/female models, hair stylists/makeup artists, artists (786)556-2405 email: colorartistry@netzero.net

Weekend Cook: To prepare meals on Sat & Sun between 10-5. Please Call 549-6202 for more information.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Marlins fire first strike

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Lowell sure wrecked this Wrigley Field party in a hurry.

With the old ballpark still shaking after Sammy Sosa's tremendous, tying homer with two outs in the ninth inning, Lowell led off the 11th with a pinch-hit home run that sent the Florida Marlins over the Chicago Cubs 9-8 Tuesday night in the NL championship series opener.

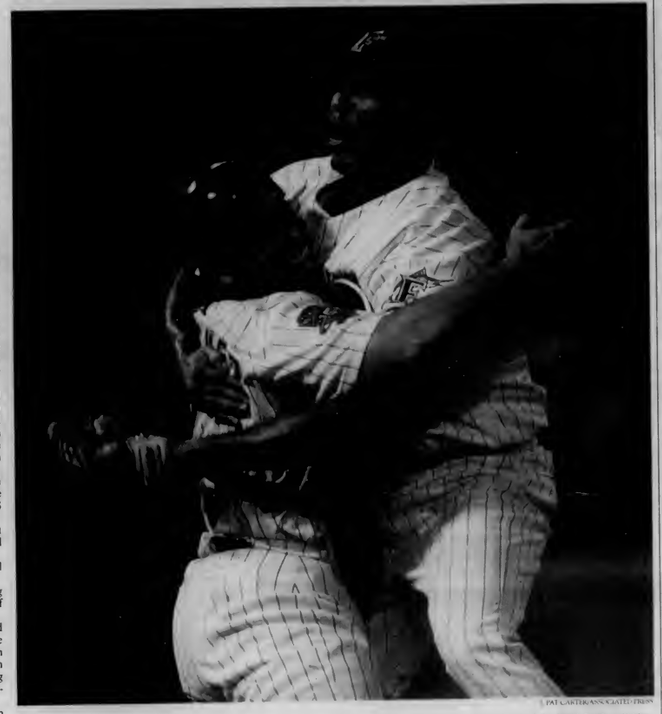
In a game featuring seven homers, four triples and six doubles, Sosa's two-run shot was clearly the most dramatic. He finally delivered a big postseason hit, and when the ball landed beyond the left-field wall, it turned Waveland Avenue into Bedlam Boulevard.

Too bad for the Cubs, Lowell's drive won it. He had help, too – playoff star Ivan Rodriguez homered and drove in five runs for Florida.

An All-Star third baseman, Lowell missed almost all of the final four weeks because of a broken left hand, and has played sparingly in the postseason. He was ready for his first pinch-hitting appearance this year, batting for winning pitcher Ugueth Urbina and launching a drive over the center-field wall off Mark Guthrie.

The sellout crowd of 39,567 started rocking early as Moises Alou homered in a four-run first. But the Marlins, who posted three comeback wins over San Francisco in the opening round, stormed back when Rodriguez, rookie Miguel Cabrera and Juan Encarnacion homered in a five-run third.

Braden Looper pitched the 11th for a save, giving the Marlins a win and a nice omen. The last 10 teams to win the NLCS opener have reached the World Series.



After avoiding Barry Bonds in the first round, Marlins manager Jack McKeon said he would pitch to Sosa in this series.

And it was a good decision – up until Slammin' Sammy took his final swing.

Sosa tied it with a no-doubt drive, taking a signature hop after he connected off Urbina.

Sosa pointed to the sky as he touched home plate, as much in joy as in relief. The slugger with 539 career homers had been only 5-for-31 with one RBI in postseason play, and his October slumps were starting to cloud his regular season accomplishments.

As Sosa trotted to right field for the top of the 10th, his fans in the right-field bleachers bowed and he doffed his cap.

PAT CARTER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Florida Marlins catcher Ivan Rodriguez (left) and pitcher Ugueth Urbina celebrate after the Marlins clinched the Wild Card on Friday, Sept. 26. Although Urbina was roughed up in last night's Game 1 of the NLCS, Rodriguez's five RBI led Florida to a 9-8 win.

Atlantic 10 to realign in 2004

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

With the addition of Towson University to its ranks beginning in 2004, the Atlantic 10 Football Conference will return to divisional play for the first time since 1998.

Notebook

The A-10, which was known as the Yankee Conference until 1997, will now be made up of 12 teams split into two six-team divisions.

Hofstra, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Northeastern and Rhode Island will compete in the North Division, while Delaware, James Madison, Richmond, Towson, Villanova and William & Mary will comprise the South.

Upon the implementation of the re-alignment in 2004, each Atlantic 10 team will play an eight-game Conference schedule, which will be comprised of five divisional games and three games versus teams from the opposite division.

Steppin' Up

Some programs rebuild, others reload. And for Massachusetts coach Mark Whipple, first-year sophomore Steve Baylark is clearly an example of the Minutemen doing the latter.

Faced with a gaping hole at the tailback position following the suspension of Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year R.J. Cobbs for the season and a week one injury to backup Raunny Rosario, Whipple placed his trust in Baylark to carry part of the offensive load for the University of Massachusetts, and the sophomore has not disappointed.

After a pair of impressive 100-yard performances in two of the Maroon and White's first three games, Whipple made the decision to give the 6-foot 230-pound back more carries, and the Apopka, Fla. native has made the most of the opportunity.

Following a workman-like 35 carry, 146-yard effort in which he scored two touchdowns to help UMass shake off James Madison 31-26 and was named A-10 Rookie of the Week, Baylark was back at it for the Minutemen against New Hampshire on Saturday.

Carrying the ball through a driving rainstorm and battling with his footing on a sloppy, wet track, Baylark carried the ball another 25 times, this time for 125 yards and three touchdowns. It was good enough not only to pace Massachusetts to its third consecutive win, but to earn Baylark A-10 Rookie of the Week honors for a second consecutive week.

"[Baylark] is a strong, physical runner at 230 pounds," Whipple said. "There's still a lot he needs to pick up to become a complete player, but he works hard and he's learning.

"I'm certainly happy with his production up to this point."

For the season, Baylark has rushed for 584 yards on 122 carries in four 100-yard performances, and is tied for the league lead with seven rushing touchdowns.

On the Rise

Following its 44-30 win over New Hampshire, Massachusetts is threatening to give the A-10 three top five teams in both the Sports Network/CSTV I-AA Top 25, as well as the ESPN/USA Today poll.

Villanova (third) and Delaware (fourth) are now also both receiving first-place votes following wins over Northeastern and William & Mary, respectively.

Northeastern (19th), is the only other A-10 school in the Top 20, although Maine falls just short at 21st.

Special Special Teams

Rhode Island placekicker/punter and all-A-10 performer Shane Laisle tied a 29-year old school record when he kicked a 50-yard field goal in the Rams 27-9 win over Brown.

Ironically enough, the record was originally set against Brown, when former Ram Wally Christensen was good from 50 yards on Sept. 28, 1974.

Laisle, who also averaged 37.3 yards per punt, and placed five of six inside the 20-yard line for the game, is now a perfect six-for-six in field goal chances this season.

Renaissance runner gets it right on and off course

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Being a college student is not easy. For many of us, it's hard enough going to classes, doing homework and finding time to sleep. But a select few University of Massachusetts students, known as student-athletes, redefine what is meant by a "heavy workload."

Acting captain of the men's cross-country team Andrew McCarron may be the poster child for student-athletes. Aside from participating in two sports [cross country and indoor track], McCarron is a chemical engineering major enrolled in Commonwealth College.

On top of it all, McCarron's been able to maintain a 3.5 cumulative GPA through his first two years at the University of Massachusetts.

"I don't really have a secret, I just try and stay on top of things. It's tough keeping on the right track with all the distractions college kids face, but I love running and enjoy engineering, so it comes natural to me," McCarron said.

UMass head coach Ken O'Brien believes McCarron is one of the most dedicated and motivated student-athletes he's seen during his 37-year tenure at UMass.

"Andy is one of those well-rounded kids. I chose him to act as captain in last week's race because of his leadership. Even though he's only a junior, he really raises the bar for himself and the guys around him. He works really hard and it pays off," O'Brien said.

In his first race acting as captain, McCarron finished first among UMass scorers, with a time of 28:40. The newly appointed captain ran his best race of the year, finishing 10th out of 57 competitors, leading the Minutemen to a second-place A-10 finish, at the Orange Classic Invitational in Syracuse, N.Y..

McCarron, who finished eighth in the 10,000-meter event at the New England Championships last year, is helping to anchor a team that lost seven graduating seniors in 2001.

With three solid races under his belt this season, McCarron will be looked upon to lead the Minutemen in Saturday's high profile New England Championships.

"The guys are going to face something new Saturday. Instead of 40 or 50 runners like they've seen so far, they will be running against 300. It's nice when you have guys like Andy who've been there before to help ease the tension," O'Brien said.

Senior teammate Matthew Thomas, who has known McCarron for two years, realizes the importance of having someone like him on the team.

"He's a hard worker, he is a leader but it's not in a loud, pushy kind of way. When he's there, you know he's going to get it done," Thomas said.

Being a D-I athlete requires intense dedication. McCarron trains year-round, running several miles at least four days a week. After a summer of pushing his body into gear for the six-mile cross-country races, McCarron has three weeks to adapt his body to running the much faster 3,000- and 5,000-meter indoor races.

"Sometimes it's tough, like when you're sick but you have to continue to push yourself anyway," McCarron said. "I won't lie, it's not always easy. I worked really hard my senior year of high school, but had to sit out the entire season because I caught mono. Luckily I'm surrounded by people like my teammates and parents who support me," McCarron said.

"We're used to running year-round, because when the cross-country season ends in mid-November we have to be ready to back off the long workouts and run indoor," Thomas added. "McCarron and I don't race the 10,000 during the indoor season, so we have to be in good enough shape to run any distance."

McCarron's father, who introduced Andrew to cross-country, continues to run competitively in five-mile road races, held in their

Continued on page 10

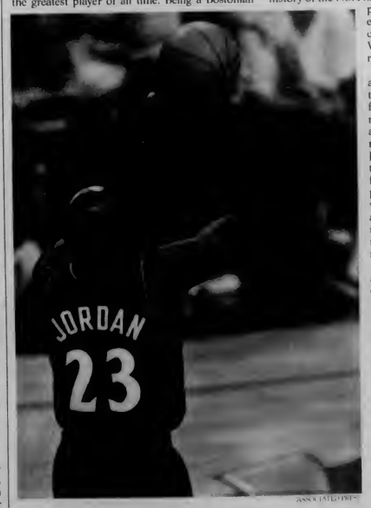
Can the Lakers lure Jordan?

Todd Foster

"And now, the captain for your Los Angles Lakers, number 23, Michael Jordan!"

Could you imagine hearing that every night from a sold out Staples Center? Phil Jackson, Lakers Coach and MJ's mentor for all six rings, hasn't ruled out the thought.

"It has crossed my mind," Jackson told the Chicago Tribune for Tuesday's editions. "But I don't think I'd ask Michael that question until it became absolutely necessary or it became a reality. It's just speculation."



If Kobe Bryant goes to jail, which he should, who better to fill the void as the centerpiece of the Triangle Offense than Jordan. The prince of flight used this offense with Scottie Pippen and whoever else to dominate the entire '90s era.

After signing two former Dream Team players, two-time M.V.P. Karl Malone and eight-time All-Defensive Team member Gary Payton, Jackson is now in search of his finest student, not to mention the greatest player of all time. Being a Bostonian and raised on Celtic Pride, I can't help to think of the similarity between the Yankees and Lakers as "Evil Empires."

An "Evil Empire" is simply a sport organization that uses past prestige to gain players through unlimited and immediate success. Who else could have gotten Malone, the greatest power forward in history, to play for one million dollars? Why else would his Airness take flight in his Air Jordans again instead of just staying grounded? It's called opportunity.

Unlike the Yankees, the Lakers are looking to dominate the entire league instead of simply taking a guy from their archrival. Kobe and Shaq are already two of the best players around, so why not load up? Enter Malone and Payton to make a Dream Team-like lineup.

Heck, let's just make the Dream Team! By inserting a 40-year-old Jordan, this still would be the greatest lineup on paper you would ever see, which is completely unfair. No other team in the history of the NBA has ever had the means of simply adding three of the greatest players of all-time for cheap prices and a ring. Luke Walton and Brian Cook wasn't enough?

ANNEX (AT) (1) PRESS

Michael Jordan takes the final shot of his NBA career last season, unless Phil Jackson has anything to say about it.

No one can name another athlete who has retired three times (Dennis Rodman is a freak, not an athlete) and return for a fourth time already with a hand full of rings. The mystic of the Jordan saga is already a little tarnished with the Wizards failure. What would he be proving? That he can win with the greatest team ever, assembled? He would just seem like a greedy sellout that needs to call it quits. But you still think about it.

One of the most intelligent and dominating players to ever touch the hardwood, Gary Payton, would only be the third or fourth option. Rookies would be forced to fight through the trash talk and mind games of the sport's greatest intimidator since Muhammad Ali. He would do everything from dropping 10 assists to the Mailman and Shaq a night to locking down every backcout with the Glove.

Jordan hasn't responded to his former coach's wishes, but the legend must be pondering the good ol' days. Stay tuned.

Todd Foster is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Hockey EAST PREVIEW

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE REVOLUTION BEGINS

UMass set for 2003-04

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

If last year was a pleasant surprise, then 2003-04 is a season of expectation, for the Massachusetts hockey team, which begins the next phase of "The New Revolution" tonight against Connecticut at the Mullins Center.

The Minutemen are coming off their best season since joining the Hockey East Conference, finishing 2002-03 with a 19-17-1 record (10-14-0 Hockey East). Highlights of last season include a 5-4 OT victory at home over Boston University in December, a solid 3-2 win at Conte Forum against the Boston College Eagles in January, and finally a landmark playoff series win in Orono, Maine.

The Maroon and White found themselves in a five-game slump during late January into early February, but soon snapped out of it, winning three out of its last four games, building up some steam as it headed into the Hockey East tournament.

The momentum would continue in the Minutemen's favor all the way to March. UMass stormed past Maine in first round action, getting the 5-3 victory in game one and sealing it with a 4-2 win in game two. It was the first time the Black Bears had ever lost a playoff series in Alfond Arena.

Next stop for UMass was the FleetCenter for a matchup against the New Hampshire Wildcats, a showdown in which the winner would advance to the Hockey East finals.

Trailing 4-2 in the third period, the Minutemen rallied behind back-to-back strikes. Stephen Werner cut the deficit down to one at the 9:40 mark and just 10 seconds later Tim Turner tied the game up in thrilling fashion. But the celebration would be tainted with 2:29 ticks left on the clock, when UNH wing Preston Callander notched the final goal, advancing the Wildcats to the Hockey East final, which they were victorious in a 1-0 thrilling overtime win over Boston College.

Despite the heart-breaking loss in the semifinals, there's little question that 2002-03 was the greatest year in the history of UMass hockey. This year, it's the charge of the Minutemen to build on that success.

Forwards

UMass is loaded with a wide array of top-notch forwards. The combination of experienced veterans and hungry newcomers could be lethal this year. Junior forward Greg Mauldin (21-20-41) leads the charge with sidekick Stephen Werner (16-22-38) to comprise one of the best one-two punches in Hockey East.

The pair did lose its line mate when sophomore Matt Anderson's shoulder injury didn't respond to surgery, causing the West Islip, N.Y. native to be red shirted for 2003-04. Mauldin was the first UMass forward to break 40 points since the 1996-97 season, finished No. 10 in the Hockey East in scoring, led all Hockey East sophomores in scoring, and was the seventh-round draft pick of the Columbus Blue Jackets in 2002. Werner led all Hockey East freshmen in scoring and made UMass history when he was drafted in the third round, 83rd overall, by the Washington Capitals in 2003. Anderson finished second to Werner in Hockey East in scoring and was a runner-up to Werner on the team in assists. Junior forward Tim Vitek (2-5-8) will start in his place.

But a top line alone does not a great team make. The Minutemen feature balanced second and third lines this season. Headlining the second line is senior center Mike Warner. The strong defensive forward will be an assistant captain for this season. Warner is joined by Chris Capraro (7-16-23) and one of the most highly-touted recruits to come to Amherst, freshman Kevin Jarman. Capraro is great with the puck and creates opportunities for his teammates. Jarman demonstrated his skill in an exhibition against St. Francis Xavier, with a rocketing one-timer that went past the bewildered goalie.

Sophomore John Toffey, junior Peter Trovato and Providence College transfer John Luszcz make up the third line. All three of the players in this line made a positive impact last Friday night against St. Francis Xavier. Luszcz is a new addition to this line, swapping spots with Jarman, who took the third slot against the X-Men.

Also getting a significant amount of playing time in the exhibition game were sophomores Peter Alden, James Solon, and Stephen Jacobs, junior Craig MacDonald, and freshmen Obi Aduba and Garrett Sumerfield. Jacobs, the former Cushing Academy Penguin, proved his toughness by unleashing some nasty hits on the Canadian visitors. MacDonald scored the Minutemen's second goal in the exhibition game, and Summerfield was credited with the assist. The other freshman forward, Aduba, showcased his considerable speed and toughness in the game. Junior forward Josh Hanson is also expected to contribute to the Maroon and White attack this season.

Defensemen

The defense features Hockey East leading scoring defensemen Thomas Pock. Pock (17-20-37) broke or tied 11 school records last season and has been elected a tri-captain this season in his senior campaign. Pock was the first ever Minuteman to be named to the postseason All-Hockey East Second Team. Along with the sharp shooting Pock is probably one of the best defensemen in the Conference, Nick Kuiper, the third and final member of the tri-captains. Kuiper was nominated for best defensemen last season. The second biggest scoring threat from the Minutemen blue line is sophomore Marvin Degon. Degon racked up a total of 16 points last season. None of these defensemen saw action in the exhibition contest against St. Francis Xavier as a precautionary measure by Cahoon.

Junior Jeff Lang (3-9-12) improved his offensive skill drastically in his sophomore season and looks to improve even more this year. Freshman Mark Matheson appears to be a solid addition to the defensive unit, after a good showing last Friday night. Junior Sean Regan, sophomores Dominic Torretti (transfer from Providence College) and Matthew Fetzer, and junior Dusty Demianiuk all bring experience to the table.

Goalies

Sophomore Gabe Winer will command the Minutemen between the pipes. Winer posted 3.11 goals against average, 87.1 save percentage, and a 17-12-1 record in 2002-03. His 17 wins ranked him fourth among all freshmen in the nation. Tim Warner will be backing up Winer in net. Warner held 4.30 goals against average, 81.3 save percentage, and a 2-2 record last season. The is a new addition to the UMass goaltending unit is freshman William Harper, who comes with a 21-2-2 season with the Connecticut Junior Wolves, where he put together 1.74 goals against average and a 94.1 save percentage.

Love was in the air in Amherst last Valentine's Day, when the Maroon and White knocked off the Huskies 8-6. Pock netted two back-to-back goals to tie and take the lead late in the third period to clinch the win. UMass would love nothing more than to repeat on last year's success.

The Huskies finished the season with an 8-23-3 (7-16-3) record last season. Graduation hit UConn hard, as it lost its two top scorers, Kurt Kamienski (30 points) and Ron D'Angelo (26 points). The biggest threat in the Huskies offensive attack is Tim Olsen. Olsen notched 23 points last season and his speed threatens even the most disciplined defensemen.

UConn features two senior goalies, Artie Imbriano (2-10-1 record, 3.96 GAA, 86.4 save percentage) and Jason Carey (6-13-2 record, 4.09 GAA, 88.4 save percentage).

The Huskies inexperience should play a factor in tonight's game. The majority of the Huskies roster is comprised of freshmen (15 freshmen).

Fill the Bill tonight

Andrew Merritt

Why should you go? Because it's your chance to see the next chapter in a program that went from oblivion to the playoffs, in one of the toughest conferences in college hockey.

Because you'll see some of the finest young talent to play any sport here in the Valley. Need proof? No less than four of the players have been drafted into the National Hockey League, one before he even set foot on a college ice surface.

How about the chance to be a part of history — namely, joining the largest crowd to ever watch a hockey game in the Mullins Center?

How about the chance to see the birth of a hockey school one that does indeed rival the places on Commonwealth Ave. and the rest of New England?

How about a free T-Shirt?

How about watching the ol' State U. take on its rival in a sport where the playing field is tilted a little more toward the Commonwealth?

Tonight, the squad that has brought great hope to an athletic department ravaged by unexpected departures (see McCaw, Ian) returns to its home ice, and it will be the first time that Jack O'Neill's signature "Here come the Minutemen," accompanied by Fight Mass will echo through the Mullins Center in almost eight months.

Only tonight will be very different than the last time the hockey team skated onto the Mullins ice. Tonight will be a treat, a reward both for the team that captured the attention of this campus last year, as well as the students, alumni and supporters who made treks to such distant outposts as Orono, Maine and Estero, Fla.

Tonight, the Minutemen come out not just as the UMass hockey team, but as heroes. While I won't give too much away about what you'll see if you show up, I can say that you'll be proud to live in the state of Massachusetts, even if it's only during the school semester.

There is, of course, a hitch — and isn't there always an obstacle for this team to overcome? The Red Sox will play the second game of the American League Championship Series against the Yankees tonight, first pitch scheduled for 8:18.

Continued on page H3

The best of the best

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It was indeed a meeting of the minds. The date was Sept. 30. The place? Boston's FleetCenter, the mecca of Beantown hockey. Hockey East's annual media day — the day for the press to meet and greet every coach at the helm of a Hockey East team. Young (Maine's Tim Whitehead) and, well, established (Boston University's Jack Parker) were there to extol the virtues of their teams, hobnob with the other coaches in a non-competitive arena, and give the hungry scribes a scrap or two after six months in hibernation.

It also represented a grouping of the finest brains in college hockey. Hockey East features some of the best programs in the nation, from Parker's perennial powerhouse to Jerry York's otherworldly Eagles, and every year at least a few of the squads make it to the NCAA tournament.

A thousand miles west of the Boston-centric cluster of Hockey East schools resides the other college hockey superpower, the Western Collegiate Hockey Association. Including top-notch squads like National Champion Minnesota, North Dakota and Colorado College to name a few, the WCHA is strong from top to bottom. The conference stretches from Columbus, Ohio all the way to Anchorage, Alaska, and the accolades cover nearly as much distance. From

Continued on page H2

LINTSAY CLARK/COLLEGIAN

Jerry York's Eagles are the odds-on favorite to take the Hockey East regular season title.

The debate rages: Which is the best conference in hockey?

Continued from page H1

Boston University coach Jack Parker and Massachusetts coach Don Cahoon meet during Hockey East Media Day at Boston's FleetCenter.

Lindsay Clark/Collegian

Minnesota's Thomas Vanek, drafted by Buffalo this year, to North Dakota phenom Zach Parise, the talent list in the league reads like an NHL all-star roster for 2007.

So, until the two leagues combine for a season-long death match, it's up to the coaches and officials to answer one intriguing question: Which conference is the best one in college hockey?

Is it Hockey East?

"In my opinion it is," says New Hampshire's Dick Umile. "And maybe that's a little biased, but if you look at the last place teams, the eight and nine in our league does in non-conference games, how well they play, they beat the top teams in our league, that's a good indication of how strong our league is top to bottom. There's no question that the bottom of our league are teams that can beat us. Any team can win on any given night in our league."

Says Maine's Whitehead, "I think it is, yeah. I really do. I've been in the league for 13 years, and I think I can say that pretty confidently. I know other leagues can argue that same thing, and that's fine, but I do believe we are. I think our record against other leagues is strong enough. Our NCAA results have been strong enough where we can definitely say we've been one of the top two conferences in the country, going strictly by results.

"As far as exposure and television impact, I think there's a lot of interest in our league which I think is a good sign too. I think we have a good product, and people enjoy coming to see our games, so that's a good sign for our league."

Indeed, Hockey East receives plenty of attention, especially the teams in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Boston University generally appears on Fox Sports New England a handful of times every season, and the Boston-based New England Sports Network just signed a deal with the conference guaranteeing that each school's fans will be able to watch their team play on one Friday night this season.

Also, the year-old College Sports Television Network will begin broadcasting a college hockey game of the week this season, and Hockey East teams are involved in seven of the first 16 dates of the season. CSTV will announce the second half of the broadcast schedule later this year.

But WCHA gets plenty of press too. Its teams will take part in seven CSTV games of the week as well, and Wisconsin enjoys a similar deal with Fox Sports as BU. The college hockey climate is also very different in the Midwest, where cold winters and quieter areas give way to a more intense puck crowd.

Also, where the largest Hockey East arena is Massachusetts' Mullins Center, with a capacity of 8,389, the buildings in the WCHA are monstrous cathedrals, topping out at Wisconsin's 15,313-seat Kohl Center. Also bulging with massive crowds are North Dakota's Ralph Egglestead Arena (capacity 11,406) and Minnesota's Mariucci Arena (10,000). While there are some smaller buildings in the WCHA, like Michigan Tech's 4,200 seat MacInnes Student Ice Arena, the barns in the league are generally the largest in college hockey.

The Hockey East brass argue that their league is superior because of its depth.

"I think like any conference, any league in any sport, if the teams that are in your lower tier are really competitive and good, that's going to make for a great conference," says UMass Lowell's Blaise MacDonald, whose squad has suffered in the bottom bracket of Hockey East the last few years.

"If you look at us last year, we played pretty well, but we struggled in the wins and losses. But we go out and beat Colorado College, and our non-conference record is outstanding, and we're an eighth-place team. I think that's what makes our league great."

The River Hawks split a two-game set with CC in October 2002. Lowell downed the Tigers 4-1 in the second game of the series, after losing the first meeting 6-4.

Minnesota coach Don Lucia, ironically enough, agrees with MacDonald's feelings, but he feels that the depth contest goes to WCHA.

"Hockey East has great teams and coaches," says Lucia. "There's no real difference at the top of our leagues, but the depth here might be better. In Hockey East, you've basically got the four teams that dominate year in and year out, but that math does not happen in our league.

"I'll be biased. There's no difference at the top, but we're very deep with seven or eight teams each year. That's what makes this conference great, that so many different teams could be at the top, it's not like one team wins year in and year out."

Jerry York, whose Chestnut Hill charges are far and away the class of Hockey East, is less than convinced about the top conference answer.

"On one of the preseason polls I read this morning, we had four teams in the top 15. It'll be interesting as the year progresses; the WCHA was ranked No. 1 with Minnesota and Michigan (Central Collegiate Hockey Association) No. 2, so clearly the western conferences are comparable to us probably. Who's going to be the best? We'll wait and see. Minnesota has had the bragging rights the last couple years, so the WCHA is waving that flag, so it's a good challenge for us."

UMass' Don Cahoon is similarly on the fence, although it's for slightly different reasons.

"I think most coaches that have been doing this for a long time would say Hockey East and the WCHA separate themselves from the other leagues top to bottom. The top programs in the CCHA measure up, but the difference is top to bottom. The ECAC's top teams periodically are as good as anybody; I think they proved that last year. They could have been in the national championship."

For Cahoon, it's also a matter of the older, more established WCHA (44 years old) and the relatively younger Hockey East, which celebrates its 20th anniversary this season.

"The WCHA has been in business a long, long time, and we're only 20 years old. The traditions run even deeper as a league, and they're in venues that are a little bit different than the Hockey East venues, because of the nature of the schools. Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, that's what they do socially there, so they all play in big houses, and the tradition is really terrific."

The leagues are also evenly matched on the pool of available local players. Hockey East is a renowned name in the Northeast, while WCHA has an unofficial feeder league in the Tier 1 United States Hockey League, which Lucia describes as being in the WCHA's "back yard." That league is rife with teams from Ohio, Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin. While Hockey East doesn't enjoy the same kind of relationship, there are plenty of junior teams in the eastern part of the country that give players to the conference. That's what HEA commissioner Joe Bertagna says provides part of the strength in the league.

"I think the simple answer, if there is one, is that each of the nine schools makes hockey on their campus a priority, because you're not going to get the players that perform and get these results on the ice, unless you've got everything around it that would attract these kids to that school," Bertagna says. "So that means the coaching staff, facilities, booster club, everything ... each of these nine schools make hockey a big deal; the kids are going to know that."

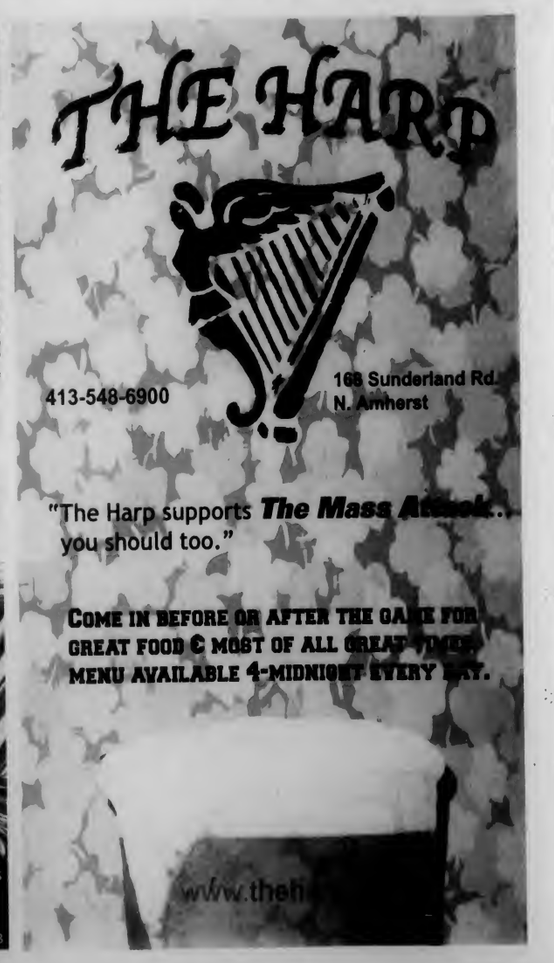
"The other thing I think is the brand name, especially for the New England kids who grew up in this area. They see the games on TV, they know they play where the Bruins play, and they know it's a big event. I think the league element also draws, but I think the real first reason is that the schools make it a priority on campus."

Though Bertagna points to Hockey East's record against WCHA and other conferences as a strength, he also recognizes the power of the hockey-mad campuses that make up the western conference.

"On head-to-head we do pretty well, on national championships, at least in recent years, they've got an edge on us. The finances of the league are probably better than anybody; they have some double-digit on-campus buildings.

"I went out to North Dakota last year, and anybody who's a fan of college hockey should go out there to see it. I think in all fairness, we've got to tip our hat to them right now, but I don't think there's anybody that would challenge them other than us for that position."

The National Championship angle is a tough one, because while Minnesota ran away with the title last year, the competitions on the national level between Hockey East and WCHA have been fierce. The leagues have alternated in the last four years with respect to which conference's team takes the trophy, with Maine and BC winning in 1999 and 2001, respectively, and North Dakota (2000) and Minnesota (2002) winning the other half. Of the last 10 championships, a Hockey East team has won four; while the WCHA has seen three teams win it all.



When it does come to comparing the leagues, though, some of the Hockey East coaches are surer of their league, and its superiority over its Western competitor, than others.

"There's certainly a lot of similarities, but ... I think our bottom teams do a better job and I think we're deeper," Umile says. The top teams in our league do well nationally into the Frozen Four as does the WCHA, but the bottom bracket of our league does better than theirs, and to me, that makes us the stronger league, but they're two very good leagues."

Unfortunately, there's no official competition for "best bottom half," so this argument remains subjective. That doesn't mean that the coaches can't be completely confident, though. Especially those who have developed a legacy during their tenure in the conference like BU's Parker.

"I think [Hockey East] has been [the best conference] for a long time, and I think it'll prove to be again this year," says the Terriers bench boss, who enters his 31st season at the helm this year. "The only league that compares to us year-in year-out, top to bottom is the WCHA. But I think we've proven for a long time that, if you look at our record against the other conferences, and our record in the national tournament. We've done pretty well."

The Daily Collegian

Thursday, October 9, 2003 New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 Volume CXIV Issue 27

Brendan O'Meara/Collegian

Hannah Fatemi addresses the SGA last night in the Cape Cod Lounge.

SGA discusses student riots and alcohol abuse prevention

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Correspondent

With the first in what will be alternating members of the Faculty Senate in attendance, the recent issues regarding student riots and misconduct were addressed at the second Student Government Association meeting of the year.

Called to order at 7:15 p.m. at the Cape Cod lounge of the Student Union, the post Red Sox victory riots were at the forefront of the issues addressed. Of concern was the potential billing of Southwest Residential Area residents for costs associated with the riots. According to some executive cabinet members, the riots, which are estimated at about a $30,000 financial loss for the University, could potentially cost residents of Southwest $6 each in the form of a supplemental bill.

"This isn't a small problem. $30,000 is significant, and it's significant for us. It's going to end up coming out of money that would have been spent on us," said President David Carr. Regarding the police presence at riots that took place on Saturday, "I'd go as far as to say they weren't quite ready."

"Looking back on it, it's a disappointment. At that point the police weren't set up in any way shape or form on Saturday like they were on Monday night," he said. "The second [riot] was a celebration. On Saturday night, it was a different story."

Carr described the student body as a giant curve. He said there is a group of students who make up the bottom of the curve, those students who become involved in the riots. He said the larger segment of the curve is made up of students who are just present at the riot and don't participate in any destructive acts. But, he said, there are a small percentage of students involved on the other side of the curve that are flipping cars and lighting fires.

"What can we do to prevent that 10 percent?" Carr asked the Senate. "I don't know how to stop it." Carr said. "And [the police] don't know how to stop it either." According to Carr, he and a Southwest Residential Area Governor will be meeting with police this morning. "It's becoming extremely difficult to defend students after what happened last Saturday night," said Brian Long, Secretary of University Policy. "These things cannot happen. They should not be happening."

One student senator added that students have a right to peaceably assemble according to the First Amendment, but they don't have a right to violently assemble. One proposition was to have more cameras installed in the Southwest Residential Area. However, according to Attorney General Mark Morrison, the cameras cost $32,000 each to install and he questioned whether it was worth the initial costs. There are currently three additional cameras installed in the Central Residential Area.

Carr addressed the issue of campus-wide programming for students, such as the Alcohol Prevention program. "We've had more alcohol incidents in the first month [of this semester] than we have had in the [entire] first semesters of the last three years," Carr said. "What can we do to provide better student quality of life?"

Long believes that the Alcohol Prevention Task Force has been led astray from its original goal. "It's my personal opinion ... that it went from preventing alcohol abuse to anti-alcohol, and that's not good. It doesn't work," he said. "The long term recommendations are great and the short term recommendations are not."

Regarding the makeup of Senate Committees, Speaker Jared Nokes said he met with 46 of 66 senators this past week to discuss committee appointments. According to him, 41 of those he met with were granted their first choices for committee placement. Thirteen senators did not respond and were randomly appointed to committees, Nokes said.

Steven P. Hoeschele, Elections Chancellor, expressed concern that only nine senators had initially been appointed to the Ways and Means Committee this year. Hoeschele preferred that the number be about 22, with no less than at least 15 on the committee. He believes that having only nine people control a budget that will affect the entire student body is not right.

Nokes anticipated that the Ways and Means Committee would end up larger in than originally designed as more Senators sought to be added.

Continued on page 3

Local restaurants help fight hunger

By Erin Whittey
Collegian Correspondent

Today 151 restaurants across Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden and Hampshire counties will donate 10 percent of their proceeds to The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts for their 15th annual "Piece of the Pie." The event is a fundraiser to help fight hunger in Western Massachusetts — simply by going out to dinner.

"Piece of the Pie" is more exciting every year, as more and more people in Western Massachusetts are given the opportunity to help out," said David Sharken, executive director of The Food Bank.

Participating restaurants in Amherst include, Bueno y Sano, Rafter's Sport's Bar and Restaurant and Pasta e Basta. A full list of participating restaurants is available at foodbankwma.org. The "Piece of the Pie 2003" logo will be displayed in participating local restaurants.

The Food Bank, which is based in Hatfield, distributes more than six million pounds of food each year through its network of 421 agencies, which include programs like soup kitchens, food pantries, homeless shelters, childcare centers and elderly programs.

This network distributes food to about 100,000 people in Western Massachusetts — many from working families that can't make ends meet. Children make up 43 percent of their recipients.

The Food Bank helps families that may not get government assistance. According to The Food Bank's Web site, the 2001 study 'Hunger in America' indicated that while 69 percent of food recipients in Western Massachusetts have annual household incomes of less than $15,000, only 10 percent are on welfare and only 37 percent receive food stamps.

According to Food Bank development assistant Jennifer Myszkowski, economic problems led many restaurants that had previously participated in "Piece of the Pie" to pass on this year's event.

"Piece of the Pie" is The Food Bank's biggest event, generally raising around $40,000. However, with fewer restaurants than usual, Myszkowski said, "We're not quite sure how well it will do this year."

Small donations contributed by eating downtown today help, as The Food Bank can distribute $9 worth of food for every dollar it raises — in part because much of its food is donated or salvaged. Salvaged food comes from damaged packages that can't be sold in supermarkets but is still edible.

The Food Bank is always looking for volunteers for every aspect of its operation.

"On an ongoing basis, we're looking for people who can help sort through food donated by stores like Big Y," said Fern Spierer, who coordinates volunteers at The Food Bank.

Spierer is also looking for groups like registered student organizations, fraternities and sororities to sponsor shifts of gift-wrapping at Thorne's Marketplace in Northampton during the holiday season.

It doesn't take much to get involved, though, Myszkowski pointed out: Going to "Piece of the Pie" is a good way to help out.

"It's an easy way to get involved — eat out," she said.

Brendan O'Meara/Collegian

Customers wait for their food at Bueno y Sano, one of many area restaurants donating 10 percent of their profits to The Food Bank to commemorate Piece of Pie Day.

House committee approves legislation for Syria sanctions

By Jesse J. Holland
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — House members yesterday imposed weapons sanctions and other penalties on Syria after fresh allegations that the country sponsors terrorists.

"The time has come to hold Syria accountable for its actions," said Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla., as the House International Relations Committee approved sanctions legislation.

The United States considers Syria a state sponsor of terrorism, and officials are concerned it may be allowing activists to cross into Iraq to take up arms against U.S. soldiers.

"It has become increasingly clear which side Syria's government has chosen in the war on terror," House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, said.

The legislation, approved 33-2, bans the export of weapons and items that can be used in weapons programs into Syria.

President Bush also would have to choose two of the following sanctions; a ban on all U.S. exports to Syria except food or medicine; a ban of all U.S. business investment in Syria; restriction of Syrian diplomats in Washington and at the United Nations in New York City to a 25-mile radius; a ban on all Syrian owned or controlled aircraft from taking off, landing or flying over the United States; reduction of diplomatic contact with Syria; or freezing Syrian assets in the United States.

Those sanctions can be waived for "national security" reasons.

Israeli warplanes on Sunday bombed a camp in Syria in retaliation for a Palestinian suicide bombing attack that killed 19 Israelis. Israel said Syria was partly responsible, since Islamic Jihad had offices in Damascus and Syria supports the group. Syria has said it had closed the offices of extremist Palestinian groups.

A naturalized U.S. citizen working as an Arabic translator at the Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, Terrorist Prison Camp has been accused of spying, with plans to transmit secrets to an unspecified enemy in his native Syria.

"Syria is among the most dangerous, destabilizing countries in the Middle East," said Rep. Eliot L. Engel, D-N.Y.

GOP Rep. Ron Paul of Texas, who voted against the bill, said the Bush administration already has enough on its plate dealing with Afghanistan, Iraq, Iran and North Korea without trying to antagonize Syria.

"I do not see how we're going to take on another nation," Paul said.

Rep. Jeff Flake, R-Ariz., the other "no" vote, said he has no love for the "thugs" in the Syrian government, "I just am loath to use unilateral economic sanctions," he said. "I want the administration to have all the flexibility they need and this cuts back on their flexibility."

Secretary of State Colin Powell made clear to Syria last May that without some significant steps against terrorist groups there probably would be congressional legislation, spokesman Richard Boucher said.

"And that's what we are seeing unfold, because Syria hasn't taken any significant action against terrorist groups," he said.

Editorial/Opinion
Page 4
No guests allowed?
Questioning UMass actions in wake of disturbances

Arts & Living
Page 6
Back to Bayside
Remembering, saved by the bell

Sports
Page 12
Red Sox win
Boston takes 1-0 Series lead

Comics/Classifieds
Page 11

Ritter speaks on disarmament

By Adam Gardner
Collegian Correspondent

Former U.N. Weapons Inspector Scott Ritter spoke to an audience of about 200 on Tuesday night at the Traprock Peace Center's 24th anniversary celebration. The event, called "Disarming Realities Lessons Learned," took place at the Frontier Regional High School in South Deerfield at 7 p.m.

Ritter offered his opinions on the Bush administration and the current condition of Iraq.

"America today is sick, it is killing the country we live in, the country we love," he said. "If we can't realize we are infected, then we cannot come up with the cure."

Ritter said that the sickness the United States is experiencing is in the form of fear and ignorance; he said that the American public allowed the Bush administration to prey on this sickness. He expressed that because of this ignorance, Bush was able to connect the threat of weapons of mass destruction to the imminent threat of terrorism without questioning.

"We invaded Iraq illegally," said Ritter. Taking the posture of a cowboy he said, "and now we must undergo frontier justice, which is some where between civilization and the wilderness."

Keeping on the theme of the West, Ritter said that Bush used the worst form of frontier justice by bush-whacking Americans. "He shot us in the back, he lied to us about weapons of mass destruction."

Ritter described a compliant national media that regurgitated Bush's words as truth. Before appearing on CNN, Ritter was drilled by the cable channel on his stance on Iraq. He said that after answering all of their questions amply and to their content, he was then accepted as an expert and could speak on television. He asked them, "Why aren't you asking your own president these same questions?"

"David Kay is not in Iraq to search for the truth," he said. "He is in there to buy the president time politically."

Ritter said Kay has claimed there are dangerous nuclear and biological weapons in ammunition supply points. Ritter asked why the supply points are still not secured if there are known dangers. He answered his own question saying there are no dangers, Kay is lying and so is Bush. He stated that disarmament worked and that there are no significant weapons left in Iraq.

"We are stuck in Iraq and there is no elegant solution for getting us unstuck," he said.

However, Ritter had a few suggestions.

"Iraq is burning and the fuel is American troops, so get the fuel out of the fire," he said.

He then said the United Nations could step into the vacuum created by the removal of U.S. troops, and that the Iraqi people should be under control of their own national security.

Ritter called upon the audience and the American people to be engaged in their government to defeat the disease of ignorance that has 70 percent of the American population believing that 9/11 is linked to Saddam Hussein.

"We are capable of doing great things," he said. "But right now bad things are being done in our name."

Ritter was preceded by two introductory speakers. Pacifist Juanita Nelson, a local organic farmer and co-founder of organizations such as the Tax Resisters Group and the Farmers Market, spoke on the subject of economic disarmament.

"Economics as it is, is quite violent," she said.

She said she imagined an economy without the need to pit one against the other. She reminded the audience of the importance of everyone's contribution and said war is a product of greed, and not realizing that we are all interdependent.

Randy Kehler spoke on the subject of social disarmament. He said that our essential problem is not in Washington but in our lack of courage. He likened greed, ignorance, and desire for endless comforts as viruses in a living body.

"Viruses are capable of spreading but so is courage," he said.

The Traprock Peace Center, established in 1979, provides peace education programs and organizes national educational campaigns. This past year, the Center has collaborated with colleagues to organize educational forums on alternatives to war.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life

319 Whitmore Administration Building
181 Presidents Drive
Amherst, MA 01003-9313

October 6, 2003

Dear UMass Amherst Student Body,

Since my arrival in June, I have been warmly welcomed by the students of this campus, and have had many opportunities to witness exemplary conduct and accomplishment. I have witnessed hundreds of students performing community service. I have joined students as we cheer on our own athletes, and applaud our student performances. I have seen thousands of students involved in strenuous academic disciplines and research. Every day, I am privileged to meet students who, through their day to day activities and endeavors, make the University of Massachusetts Amherst great.

Saturday night, October 4th, I also witnessed the worst possible type of behavior as thousands of students from the Southwest area of campus engaged in a riot, creating an environment of violence and destruction that endangered other members of the campus community and destroyed property.

I am writing to all students to stress in the strongest possible terms that this behavior will not be tolerated: there is zero tolerance. Any student who engages in this unlawful behavior will be arrested and charged under Massachusetts General Law, and will be held accountable under the Code of Student Conduct and subject to severe discipline up to and including expulsion from the University. These consequences will be enforced in a manner previously unprecedented on this campus.

Students who might consider engaging in this destructive behavior should also consider the ramifications of permanent University dismissal, including requirements for repayment of financial aid, and jeopardizing future educational and employment opportunities.

I write this letter knowing that the vast majority of UMass Amherst students do not participate in, nor approve of, this type of destructive behavior. With this knowledge, I ask all of you who care about this campus to take an active role in ending these disgraceful events. It is this type of inexcusable behavior, whether in a campus residential cluster, on Hobart Lane, or any other location, that degrades the reputation of this campus, and therefore, by direct extension, compromises the value of your University degree. Each of you must hold your student colleagues responsible and accountable for any behavior which undermines your academic and personal accomplishments.

In considering this most recent destruction in Southwest, I specifically ask that students take personal responsibility for their campus and work with me to identify those students and visitors involved with the violence and destruction. As of this writing, we have three arrests resulting from the incident. Using images from surveillance cameras we will continue the process of issuing warrants.

Similar to the accountability each student has for their residence hall room, those students who participated in the October 4th riot, and any students who participate in any future destructive behavior, can be held financially accountable for the cost of the damage from October 4th, which exceeds many, many thousands of dollars. Our General Counsel reserves the right to file law suits against students who participated in the riot for the costs of damage, including any collateral costs such as extra police and medical responses.

As I work with Chancellor Lombardi and my fellow Vice Chancellors to move this campus from strength to strength, I am adamant that this type of behavior not be tolerated. I ask all of you to take responsibility for your campus and work with me to bring prestige and honor to your educational experience at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life

Over 5,000 detainees wait behind Iraqi prison walls

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Shiite Muslims gather under a painting of imam Sheikh Mohammed al-Sudani outside Baghdad's palace to demand the release of their cleric detained by coalition forces, yesterday.

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The U.S. military is detaining more than 5,000 Iraqi men and women accused of common crimes or of being security threats— people whose legal rights are in dispute and whose living conditions are hidden from public view.

The Iraqi Lawyers League, under a new, elected leadership, is mounting a rights campaign on their behalf, and on behalf of the uncertain families they left behind.

"We're in touch with the people. They come to us," said the lawyers association vice president, Kamal Hamdoun. "We were obliged to do something. The detainees' situation doesn't meet the minimum of human rights."

For one thing, six months after the U.S. and British military ousted the Baath party government and took control of Iraq, the league has posted lists of detainees' names obtained from occupation authorities. Each morning anxious Iraqis scan the typed sheets taped to lobby walls at league headquarters.

"I've searched for him everywhere. I don't know whether the Americans took him or not," black-veiled Buthayna Ali, 42, said of her husband, who disappeared while traveling to see relatives outside Baghdad during the war last April. Not finding his name on the lists, she told a reporter stoically, "At least I want to see his body."

"Tracing is a very big problem," said Ali Ismael of the Iraqi Red Crescent Society, which works to confirm detainees' locations for families. It coordinates with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the agency designated under international law to visit wartime prisoners and inspect detention centers.

Ismael and the lawyers believe the U.S.-led coalition is holding many more than the 5,500 names on the lists given to the Lawyers League. "I think it's double this number," Hamdoun said. "We know many whose names aren't on the list."

Col. Ralph Sabatino insists 5,500 is roughly correct. "Every day I get a copy of the (detainee) list," said the U.S. Army lawyer, who handles detainee issues at the palace headquarters of the Coalition Provisional Authority, the occupation administration.

Other Army sources, however, have spoken of 10,000 "detainees and prisoners," apparently including some held by Iraqi police. The tents and cells have been filling up both with alleged resistance fighters rounded up in U.S. military sweeps, and suspects in Baghdad's months-long crime wave. In addition, Sabatino said, some 13,000 Iraqis detained by coalition forces have been released since the war.

One of the most recent to emerge is 80-year-old Abdel al-Majid al-lanabi, a high-ranking jurist under the Baathists, seized by American troops at his Baghdad home on July 30. He spent two months in the tents at the U.S. detention center at Baghdad's airport, in summer heat that soared above 120 degrees, said his lawyer. Tariq al-Beldawi, who said the ex-judge told him, "I thought I was about to die."

"They didn't allow me to see him, to be there during the interrogations," al-Beldawi complained.

Troops reach Palestinian areas

JERUSALEM (AP) — Trying to prevent another terror attack during the Jewish holidays, Israel enforced an open-ended lockdown of Palestinian towns yesterday and ordered two more battalions into the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The closure was extended as questions arose over the health of Yasser Arafat after he appeared in public looking haggard and disoriented. Advisers denied a report he has suffered a mild heart attack, saying Arafat— the leading champion of the Palestinian cause over four decades —is weak from stomach flu.

Over the weekend, the 74-year-old Arafat installed an entire Cabinet — his main objective apparently being to block Israeli action against him in reprisal for a suicide bombing by Palestinian militants. New premier Ahmed Qureia was tapped by Arafat for the job a month ago but has since struggled to form a Cabinet.

Yesterday, Qureia presided over the first meeting of his eight-member emergency Cabinet, which in principle can govern for one month. He said he would seek parliament approval Thursday for the ministers, turning them into a regular Cabinet, and that he hoped to broaden his government eventually.

(Karin Laub, Associated Press)

Ways and Means Committee appointed

Continued from page 1

According to Nokes, the Chair of the Ways and Means would also appoint an additional five non-voting members to the committee. Nokes added that senators are able to serve on more than one committee and can be approved for multiple assignments by the Senate.

A motion by Senator Daniel Pozmanter to amend the makeup of the Ways and Means Committee — some fearing that its members were tilted too far toward the conservative side of fiscal policy — was subsequently voted on and passed by the Senate. Senators originally appointed to Finance, and Senator Christopher Mira, originally set for RSO Advocacy, were voted to take seat in the Ways and Means Committee, thus increasing the number of Senators serving on the committee to 11.

All appointments to committees, including the two amended appointments of Bustamante and Mira, were voted on and passed. The Chair for each committee was then elected by its members, with Levi O'Brien elected chair of Administrative Affairs, Zsuzsa Cook to Finance, Adrienne Girard to Public Policy and Relations, Jason Bissonette to RSO Advocacy, Laura LaPlume to University Policy and Patrick Higgins to Ways and Means. Higgins will be the only Chair of a committee to be paid a salary, but according to Associate Speaker Christopher Eckel, with the position comes an intense time commitment. Eckel regards the appointing of committee chairpersons to be one of the most important votes a Senator will make all year.

Secretary of Diversity Issues Russell Plato also expressed concern over lack of parliamentary procedure and the "demonizing" of individuals at previous Senate gatherings. Nokes said meeting on proper parliamentary procedure would be held next week.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Ferron Saltzker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ranner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cruz
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGowan

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian publishes Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life and The College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction:

Due to a production error, two events in yesterday's Community Bulletin were reported under incorrect dates. The Sunny Murray duo will perform in the Bezanson Recital Hall at the University of Massachusetts at 8 p.m. tonight, Betty Shamieh's play "Choclate in Heat: growing up in Arab America" will be performed at the UMass Bowker Auditorium, also at 8 p.m. tonight.

News Meetings are every Monday at 6 p.m.

Residence Hall Students

UMass Residential Telecom now has

LOWER INTERNATIONAL RATES

when you use your room telephone!

Rates are per minute (as of 10/03/03)

China	.55	Japan	.15
France	.17	Taiwan	.22
India	.55	U.K.	.10

For LOWER RATES in other countries, check out our Web site (http://telecom.oit.umass.edu/students), and click on Rates.

AT&T ACUS One Rate Plan® users have been automatically switched to the new, lower rates! Plus, your monthly fee has been waived! Please call Residential Telecom at 545-2103 with any questions.

Just use your PSC code!

(For questions about your PSC code, please call 545-2103)

PLUS, DOMESTIC LONG DISTANCE IS JUST

7.9 cents per minute, 24/7

Anytime, anywhere, in the United States when you use your room telephone!

No Monthly Fees
No Connection Fees
No Roaming Fees
No Sign Ups

The BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Nancy Cole Karaoke 7-11 Monday Night Football

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 7-11

WEDNESDAY — Bill Arnold DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — Sony Music Night -AJ Lucky Caderra

FRIDAY — Richard Mwandemand DJ-Aquarius 9-1

SATURDAY — Live Music 9-1

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.

OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!

ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Schwarzenegger's task is no small order

Voters have elected to turn over a new leaf in electing Arnold Schwarzenegger as governor of California, naming a relative political newcomer after choosing to recall Gov. Gray Davis from the office.

Unfortunately, that in itself will not fix the many problems the state faces. Its economy is one of the top 10 in the world and faces a deficit of between $6 and $10 million. The chaos the state has been through over the past year and still faces played a strong role in Davis' recall and the strong turnout in Tuesday's election.

"People were angry at the governor," Art Torres, chairman of the state's Democratic Party, told CNN.

While Davis may be gone, Schwarzenegger is also faced with healing the wounds that have come both from Davis' tenuous term and from a heated political race. Democratic Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante, for one, will still work with Schwarzenegger as Lieutenant Governor after finishing as runner-up in the recall election.

Schwarzenegger's first job now becomes — even before working on the economy — outreach. The early signs are that he recognizes at least that much.

"Shall we rebuild our state together? Or shall we fight amongst ourselves, to create an even deeper division and fail the people of California?" Schwarzenegger said on the Jay Leno show Tuesday night. "Well, let me tell you something, the answer is clear. For the people to win, politics, as usual, must lose."

That point could not be truer, but it remains to be seen how Schwarzenegger will carry it out. The one-time movie star has promised to be a people's governor, with doors open to members of the public and the legislature alike.

That's a start. The future of California, however, will rely not on Schwarzenegger's rhetoric, but on how well he and the "transition team," he and his staff, recognizes, addresses and follows through on the needs of California and its people. The team, led by U.S. Rep. David Dreier, will be announced completely today.

Schwarzenegger said yesterday that the team will start by going line by line through the state's budget looking for waste, but that's only going to be a start in getting through the state's budget woes. For one, if a lawsuit regarding a bonding issue goes through, California's deficit could jump from the $6 to $10 million range to as high as $20 million. Digging out of a hole that large is a lot to ask of any politician, let alone one with so little experience.

California residents and all Americans can only hope that Schwarzenegger's outward confidence and forwardness in addressing issues during his political campaign will translate well now that he holds office. The economy of California and the welfare of its citizens are not only important to residents in the state, but America at large. The impact of California continuing to suffer will do nothing but hinder the American economy in the end.

We, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, wish Schwarzenegger luck, and hope his holding office can have a positive effect on the state and the country. It is now time for him to earn and maintain the trust he said voters showed in him by electing him. Only sound financial judgment can make that a reality.

Information for this editorial was taken from CNN.com.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Australian media very opinionated

World Perspectives

Katy Noone

As a journalism major with an interest in current events, I try as often as possible to watch the news and read the day's headlines to update myself on what is going on in the world. At home, ABC's Peter Jennings is my choice of anchor, as his calm collectiveness somehow makes the news seem more digestible.

Through my study of media and journalism, I have become a keen observer of the methods employed by the media and am aware of various types of media, including the traditional printed word, the voices of radio and the faces of evening newscasts.

One of the major topics I have examined, mostly through my media criticism course last semester, is media bias. Bernard Goldberg's text, "Bias" claims that the mainstream media in the United States is unacceptably liberal and that conservatives do not have enough of a voice. For those on the left, Eric Alterman wrote "What Liberal Media?" poking fun at arguments such as Goldberg's and claiming that right-wing agendas influence the information Americans hear and read.

Since temporarily relocating to Australia three months ago, I have noticed several key moments where the Australian media behaves very differently from the media in the U.S. Even though I definitely should read the national newspaper "The Australian" more often, the few moments when I have been inclined to soak up the message of the Australian media have been extremely valuable to my understanding of what makes quality journalism.

Before I get into specific examples, it is imperative to note how focused and knowledgeable Australians are of the issues and history of the United States. Whereas, students in the U.S. usually study their own history and some European accounts, ordinary citizens here have extensive knowledge of the workings of the U.S. I haven't met one Australian who doesn't know our president's name, yet how many of you know of Australian Prime Minister John Howard? I certainly didn't, until I arrived here and began to notice the subtle nature of the Australian media, as opposed to the overwhelming presence of the American news profession.

During a nightly news broadcast, the male news anchor was updating viewers on the current situation in Iraq. There was a great deal of quality information given to allow viewers to assess the situation on their own terms, but the anchor was also able to exert his own tone into the piece. He said that although American soldiers do not openly criticize President Bush, in private they have expressed discontent with Bush and Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld's plans for Iraq. Not only did the reporter expose the inner thoughts of American soldiers in the Middle East, but also gave the battalion number of the concerned soldiers.a

When the program returned to the news anchor, she said, 'That's disgusting,' before moving on to the next piece.

Needless to say, the candidness of the segment was in stark contrast to what would be heard on a nightly news edition of CBS, NBC or ABC. The pinpointing of specific battalions would never be given (as a safety precaution, but perhaps more as a means to keep the news at a safe distance from viewers) and the reporter would not editorialize by saying that troops had spoken to him in private, confiding their deepest concerns about the rebuilding of Iraq and the wisdom of U.S. leadership.

A second instance where a news anchor exercised her right as an individual and journalist to have a strong opinion on an issue was on a feature-style nightly news program. I was lounging on South Molle Island in the Whitsunday Islands, taking a break from sunbathing, swimming and soaking in the Jacuzzi. It was one of the final days of my lecture recess week — the Australian equivalent to our spring break (it's a hard life studying abroad!). The main segment highlighted a retirement community owner accused of purposefully deceiving and ripping off residents. One elderly man said he and his wife were unable to do much except buy food, as their savings were dried up.

When the program returned to the news anchor, she said, "That's disgusting" before moving onto the next piece. Her blatant editorializing and emotional response to the story was so drastically different from the comfortable distance most American journalists are required to keep from their work. It was refreshing to hear what a trained media professional thought of an issue. Her empathy and concern for the elderly individuals discussed in the piece made me feel like it was okay that I was feeling disturbed by the segment as well.

It is difficult to contrast American and Australian journalism in ethical media standards. Sometimes I crave a straightforward synopsis of daily events, while at times I want a journalist to show his or her emotional side. Regardless of whether the anchor says "good night for now" or "good day, mates," I am convinced that examining the mass media of other cultures sheds light on media debates that can only be truly understood in a global context.

Katy Noone is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Australia.

Getting political inertia started

Rachel Smith

Isaac Newton figured out that once an object is in motion, it will keep moving until something stops it. Unfortunately, once an object is inert, it will sit there, motionless, until something or someone gives it a little push. I've noticed the same principles apply to students at the University of Massachusetts. Inertia not only feeds upon itself; it's contagious. My question to the student body is, how big of a push do students need to register to vote?

Students are notoriously the least participatory demographic in domestic politics. Consequently, politicians don't listen to young people. Just as Newton predicted, students' sense of powerlessness maintains political inertia amongst young people, while many politicians are simply too self-interested to set student activism in motion. It seems that we, as students, are going to have to cheat the laws of nature and give ourselves a much-needed push.

If you think your vote doesn't count, you might be correct. One vote probably won't get a national politician elected, and won't inspire a great deal of alarm in the hearts of the opposition. But remember, giving up isn't going to affect national politics either. Voter participation has been declining for 40 years; less than half of all registered voters took part in the 2000 presidential election. If students exercised their right to vote, they could easily make a huge impact on national politics.

According to the U.S. Census in 2000, just under 30 million Americans are between the ages of 18 and 24; around 20 million more are between 25 and 29 years old. According the Federal Election Commission, 105,586,274 people voted in the last presidential election, whereas only around 4 million young people aged 18-24 participated. College-age Americans made up about 5 percent of the total electorate. The most participatory demographic is the 65 and older group. In other words, your grandparents are changing the face of politics while you stand by and watch.

Politicians, much like all professionals, are concerned with job security; elected officials want to be reelected and adopting policies that are popular among a demographic that doesn't vote isn't a good way to remain in office. If students want Washington to care about public higher education, the environment and other issues popular among young people, they must break free of inertia and vote.

College-age Americans made up about 5 percent of the total electorate. The most participatory demographic is the 65 and older group. In other words, your grandparents are changing politics while you stand by and watch.

A solitary vote might not make a difference, but momentum is as difficult to contain as inertia. Once students are set in motion in the political universe, we will be unstoppable. One way to get momentum going is to get involved and take as many people as possible with you. It seems that many students are willing to demonstrate their views through walkouts and protests, but demographically speaking, those same students aren't willing to back up their convictions at the voting booths. Protests are a democratic way to communicate interests, but they don't mean anything in Washington, Boston, or anywhere when the people holding up signs aren't grabbing their pens and registering to vote.

Another way that students can garner political attention is through campaign contributions. Elected officials usually depend upon private donations to run a viable campaign. Believe it or not, contributions under $50 make a big difference, especially in local elections. If students combined their influence at the poll booths with the power of campaign finance, I guarantee you the University would be funded properly. The Boston State House won't heed a group of kids with signs, but it will listen to their checkbooks.

The University Democrats are sponsoring a voter registration drive this week all over campus. The slogan is "Get On Board" and UDem's will be signing people up on ironing boards instead of tables. I can't imagine an easier way to get registered than to have people bring the forms to you, on campus, while they help you sign up. Incidentally, voter registration forms are far less complicated than the admissions application to UMass, so if you got into school you can register to vote with no problem.

If you miss the "Get On Board" crew on campus, don't fret. The Smith Democrats are sponsoring a voter registration drive Thursday, Oct. 23 and voter registration information is always available at the University Democrats' office in room 306 at the Student Union. Anybody can log on to The Democratic National Committee website to fill out registration forms online at www.democrats.org.

The past three years have been tough for the country and the university. UMass students have suffered through budget cuts that threaten the very academic core of our institution and the time has come for elected officials to take notice. Let's make this election year an historic revolution in American politics; let's make the students' votes count.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Ending the United Nations

Gilad Skolnik

There are 193 countries in the United Nations, and of that over 100 of those countries are not democracies. When the United Nations makes a decision, it's not the people of the world making a decision, but most likely the decision of a hundred or so cruel tyrannical men — often with much blood on their hands. Frequently these dictatorships form voting blocks that all agree to vote the same way.

At least the United Nations has Sudan on its human rights board. The United States was recently voted off the board, while Sudan, a country where slavery is still rampant, was voted in. In Sudan, Muslim groups raid villages in the predominately Christian south and kidnap the inhabitants, who are later sold as slaves in the north while the government turns a blind eye. I can't think of a better country to make decisions on human rights for the rest of the world than Sudan.

I know many of who were relieved when such a trustworthy country like Syria was elected to be on the Security Council. The brutal dictatorship of Syria really knows a lot about security. In fact, back in 1982 Syria had a little problem with their internal security. In the town of Hama, the citizens started rioting against the regime, and Syria simply responded by sending in the army to flatten much of the city. In the process, they killed well over 20,000 people (according to the British Broadcasting Corporation). Nothing can make me feel safer than knowing that a country makes the U.S. list of terrorist-sponsoring nations and can quickly quell riots is on the U.N. Security Council.

To make things even fairer, Israel is not allowed to get a seat in any of the major U.N. bodies. In August 2001, the United Nations had a world conference against racism in Durban, South Africa. This conference soon became a forum of anti-Semitism. Hate literature was distributed during the conference including caricatures of Jews with hooked noses, Palestinian blood on their hands, surrounded by money, and Israelis wearing Nazi emblems. Outside the conference thousands of South African Muslim demonstrators marched bearing banners proclaiming, "Hitler should have finished the job." At least the conference stayed on the subject of racism.

Meanwhile, countries such as China and France can veto any U.N. Security Council resolution, while India has no seat on the permanent Security Council. China is an oppressive dictatorship, which has more prisoners executed annually than any other country. France is just a random European country, yet India, with a sixth of the world's population, is denied such a seat.

Even worse, Taiwan is kept from holding any seat anywhere in the United Nations and is not even allowed to observe General Assembly sessions as a nonvoting observer. Taiwan is a free democracy with a thriving economy and over 20 million people living in it, yet it is denied its right to be represented. The United Nations will never be legitimate until it fulfills its promise in its charter which states that: "Membership in the United Nations is open to all peace-loving states which accept the obligations of the Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are willing and able to carry out these obligations."

Taiwan is undisputedly peace loving and has repeatedly accepted the obligations of its charter, yet for one simple reason, it was denied: The regime in China wants to have Taiwan become part of it, just like Tibet is under its occupation now.

One hundred and ninety three countries, most of which are dictatorships, are expected to pass resolutions regarding anything imaginable. It's completely illogical that a nation such as Andorra, with about 20,000 people receives one vote, and a nation with a billion people like India receives one vote as well. I have absolutely nothing against Andorra whatsoever. They're good, hard-working people, but it seems a little unfair to me that a country that small has the same say as a nation made up of over one billion people.

Although the United Nations might have many great charitable causes and achievements when it comes to removing mines and feeding the hungry, in terms of military, it's completely useless. It should have its militaristic elements dismantled immediately. Not since the Korean War has the United Nations made a good military decision. Since then, it has done nothing but waste money.

Not since the Korean war has the United Nations made a good military decision. Since then, it has done nothing but waste money.

Regardless of whether the war in Iraq was just, Saddam completely ignored years of the United Nation's plea for weapons inspections, and Bush ignored the U.N. decision regarding Iraq. The United Nations has become completely irrelevant in terms of peacekeeping and is about as useful as the ill-fated League of Nations. The point of the United Nations upon establishment was to seek world peace, and It has failed to prevent the countless instances of fighting that have occurred since its creation.

The United Nations was hijacked long ago by dictatorships that used it as a tool to bully other nations. How can a U.N decision be given any respect? As U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Jean Kirkpatrick stated, the United Nations "is nothing other than the executive committee of the Third World dictatorships." When people use a decision or resolution made by the United Nations to justify their argument or case, it just shows their ignorance. The U.N. view on things should be given just as much respect as that of Andorra. No offense intended, Andorra.

Gilad Skolnik is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for asst. Ed/Op editor are now open.
Contact Erika or Paige.
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seeing the big picture

Fall is once again upon us here at the University of Massachu-setts. The air is crisp. The morning's chilly, and bulky sweaters have found their way out of our closets. These are some of the telltale signs that the carefree spirit of summer is gone. The replacement marks a serious tone of autumn and the inevitable realization that we are faced with responsibilities that so easily escaped during the warm summer days.

Emily O'Brien

Beginning at the tall end of the summer, the semester seems to start off quite smoothly. Classes appear to be rather easy, and the workload is fairly light. Yet, by the time the fall climate is upon us, the progressive difficulty of classes picks up at a substantial speed. It's right around the beginning of October where the first arsenal of quizzes, tests and papers occur — all in the same week, of course. This is the time that the reality of the overwhelming responsibilities that college entails is quite clear.

Inevitably, we find ourselves forced into the same routine of semesters past — attending classes, running errands, doing homework, eating, sleeping and going out on the weekends. The monotony of college life can at times be stifling in comparison to the spontaneous atmosphere that home can offer. Granted, I acknowledge there are a variety of spontaneous things happening at UMass, which can be evidenced by the various riots of the past week, but I'm talking about a typical day-to-day routine.

Stepping back, I can personally attest that for the past few weeks, I've been trapped in a whirlwind of working on papers and studying for tests. By overwhelming myself so incredibly with all the work I have to accomplish, I haven't yet been able to appreciate that I'm back at a place where I am able to live away from the rule of parents with some of my best friends, surrounded by about 20,000 people all relatively my own age. It is these years of our lives in which we are given the opportunity at college to live in such a unique atmosphere. To take this incredible experience for granted while we have the chance to enjoy It is a shame. Quite often people don't appreciate college until they graduate and have to face the real world, where It is difficult to capture the carefree attitude they had during their years as an undergrad.

Instead of just allowing yourself to fall into a monotonous routine, spice it up by doing something a little bit different.

In order to truly appreciate the wide variety of things that attending UMass has to offer, you have to step outside of the box and explore the community. Instead of just allowing yourself to fall into a monotonous routine, spice it up by doing something a little bit different. As we all know, variety is the spice of life. Head Into Amherst Center one day with your friends. You can peruse various shops or beeline to Bueno y Sano like my friends and I do. Go and experience the colorfulness of Northampton, which never fails to be interesting. Attend campus activities, such as sporting events and school-sponsored concerts. Participate in activities that will give you the chance to see new things and meet other people. It is only in this way you will be able to look back on your years spent in college and know that you took it for all that it was worth. You are paying to come here, and with prices rising, you need to take advantage of all this university has to offer.

Although autumn can In fact be viewed as a season that forces us all to take life more seriously, that does not mean that the excitement of summer has to be forgotten. Instead look at fall as a fresh start, and the beginning of a new experience. Take advantage of the clean slate you have to work with, both academically and socially, and most of all, have fun. Party with your friends; do things you'd never thought you'd do. Soon enough, we won't have the chance to, so don't let these opportunities slip by.

Emily O'Brien is a Collegian columnist.

No more guests allowed?

As I walked Into my dorm with my friend the other night to watch the end of the Red Sox game against the Oakland A's, I was informed that guests were not allowed on this night.

Mario Pietromonaco

Why would guests not be allowed to enter a dorm that they do not live In? The riots? But they are outside. Can't be that. Then I thought maybe it was because nobody in the dorm paid their bill, so the dorm rooms aren't actually ours. Because if students are paying thousands of dollars for a room, there is no way UMass or my (can't get a real job) assistant resident director would have the audacity to prevent me from having a guest.

Then I realized UMass is on a power trip. We now have a good football team, and we charge more money for a school that offers less, but is "on the right track." UMass Is so reputable now that it isn't ZooMass anymore, and there seems to be the attitude that, "We are going to run a tighter ship, and this campus is not going to allow such crazy activities to go on within their dorms — no letting students from other parts of campus watch a baseball game with their friends."

So here is my outlook on UMass. It is a corporate stickler. It is run by business men that couldn't get a real job and decided to "stick" It to all of us students. First, you get an ARD that was picked on in high school and college to run the dorm. This person enjoys nothing more than writing some kid up who actually Is having a good time in college. Next, we hire a bunch of rent-a-cops (parking services) and have riot-trained police that are just trying to scam everyone on campus for $25-$50 constantly. Then, you have the tow truck companies who are somehow always available on the minute when it comes to towing someone, but when we call them through AAA for help, it takes 45 minutes to an hour for them to arrive.

This next week when the Yankees play against the Red Sox, are we going to be allowed to have visitors? Because we all know there will be riots every night there is a game. We also know that if a game goes into extra innings, the sacred quiet hour rules might be broken.

Here is my next idea. You don't want a riot, so you send out a stupid threat on a piece of paper that is actually too rough for toilet paper, so It gets thrown in the trash. Maybe if you placed some cops in front of JQA where the riot takes place, It will not be able to start. Therefore, you won't have to break It up or waste your time sending out empty threats.

Because if students are paying thousands of dollars for a room, there is no way UMass or my ... assistant resident director would have the audacity to prevent me from having a guest.

I also commend any student who disregards the no-guest rule by simply telling the security guard (5' 2" girl that weighs a hundred pounds in weight) to leave you alone or call the cops because you "Ain't even worried about it." When the ARD threatens you with the cops, you tell him, "Get a real job." UMass has a new logo, but the same old ego. Students deserve respect too, and to the big shots of UMass: Be careful. The students are what make you, and we can ruin you.

Mario Pietromonaco is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

Four things you can't say at UMass

Want to hear four things you can't say on the UMass Campus? Number one; "blacks are more racist than whites." Number two; "the media bias: It's real, it's widespread, it's destructive." Number three; "America's greatest problem: Illegitimacy." And number four; "the welfare state: helping us to death."

Jim Nee

It's a fact: black people are more racist than whites. If you call a person white, rather than Irish, English, or whatever nationality they are, it's acceptable. But dare call an African American black, and you could start an uproar.

That aside, lets talk about what people actually say. I have to hear whitey, cracker, honky, or mc at least five times a day, whether it is directed at me or not. But heaven forbid if an Irish American (white guy for all you politically incorrect) should say the "N" word. The fact is, the lack of respect for fellow members of humanity is rampant in today's society. African-Americans should really work on their level of respect before they go around accusing European Americans (white guys) of being racist.

If illegitimacy is this nations number one problem, then welfare is right behind it at number two.

Next, it couldn't be any truer that the media is bias. In a recent poll of three out of four of the major news corporations, nearly 85 percent of the employees were Democrats. What more needs to be said, except that Fox News is the only semi-conservative network that we can rely on to help us see the entire story, instead of the one sided story that we have been fed for the past 30 years.

Forget the war in Iraq and how much you all hate President Bush. How about some of your fathers go out there and take responsibility for the lives you have brought into this world. The number of unwed and single mothers in this country over the past two decades is shameful. Granted, not all couples are meant to stay together, and mistakes are made, but that still does not account for all of the women out there today that have to try and raise a family on their own. Be accountable for your actions. Get married for crying out loud, or at the very least, support the mother of your child.

If Illegitimacy is this nation's number one problem, then welfare is right behind it at number two. Let me see if this is clear to all of you: welfare is meant to be a short term, temporary helping hand to those in our nation who are in desperate need. It is not meant to be a way of life. It is not meant to be the source of income when a person or family is going through troubling times. The number of capable, skilled people who are on welfare in this country is a shock and a shame to such a system.

Oh yeah, on a side note, these four things that you can't say on the UMass campuses are taken from a larger list in a book called, "The Ten Things You Can't Say in America," by Larry Elder. And I'm not sure if I mentioned this, but he's black!

Jim Nee is a UMass student.

The taxing truth

Lurking behind the recent string of federal tax cuts are the blueprints for a conservative revolution. In a June 2003 column in the Washington Post, Grover Norquist, President of Americans for Tax Reform and the radical right's anti-tax ringleader, laid out a program to transform our current tax system into a single flat tax on wages. Unlike Steve Forbes and others who have tried to radically alter the tax code in a single swoop, the contemporary conservative movement favors a more gradual assault.

Dave Bisson

"The new republican policy is an annual tax cut," proclaimed Norquist, "each of the Bush tax cuts, past and proposed, moves us toward fundamental tax reform."

When they say "fundamental tax reform," right-wingers are talking about dismantling the progressive tax system that has facilitated social progress in the U.S. for the past 70 years. They are trying to smother the widely held belief that people should be taxed at different rates based on their ability to pay and they are proposing a change In the tax system that would hurt most Americans by shifting the tax burden off capital and investments and onto the wages of low and middle income taxpayers. To market what should be a wildly unpopular agenda, the conservative movement has devised an arsenal of disinformation.

For three years in a row, President Bush has exploited workers' insecurities in a stagnating economy to pass major tax breaks for his wealthy campaign donors under the guise of economic stimulus. The recent 2003 tax cut provides a potent example: although it was sold as a "jobs and growth" package, the bill is a targeted giveaway to high-income earners and investors who are likely to save their windfalls. Working taxpayers, in contrast, would spend tax cuts now in ways that would stimulate job creation and economic growth. The only thing Bush's tax cut will certainly stimulate is growth in economic inequality.

An honest look at the numbers reveals the tax cut's staggering inequities. Over the next 10 years, the bill will deliver the same amount, $90 billion, in total tax cuts to the top one-tenth of one percent of all U.S households — the tiny number with yearly incomes over $1 million as it will to the bottom 88 percent.

Recently, the radical-right tax crowd has enjoyed the help of an unlikely accomplice: the U.S. Treasury. Most independent economists agree that ever since Bush's inauguration, Treasury analyses have been politicized to support the president's tax-cutting agenda. Traditionally, the Treasury produced reports showing the percentage increase or decrease in total federal taxes paid by various households under new tax laws, but the Bush-era Treasury publishes percentage changes only in federal income tax paid. The difference is significant because low and middle income households pay more in regressive payroll taxes than they do in income taxes, while the taxes paid by high income households come primarily from the income tax.

Therefore, analyses that isolate the income tax make it look like low and middle income level earners have received larger percentage cuts in their taxes from the Bush tax cuts than high income earners — exactly the opposite of reality.

To market what should be a wildly unpopular agenda, the conservative movement has devised an arsenal of disinformation.

Martin Sullivan, an economic correspondent for the respected journal, "Tax Notes" has said that the Treasury's failure to acknowledge the difference between total taxes and income taxes "can only be characterized as an egregious use of misinformation." The good news is that honest tax analyses are published by several nonpartisan research groups, including the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities (www.cbpp.org), Citizens for Tax Justice (www.ctj.org), and OMB Watch (www.ombwatch.org).

Already, the Republicans' annual tax cut strategy has had dire consequences for America's fiscal health. In July, the Bush Administration announced an estimated $455 billion federal budget deficit for fiscal year 2003. A long-term analysis by the Center for Budget Priorities (CBPP) concluded, "under realistic projections, budget deficits will remain at or above $325 billion for each of the next ten years and total $4.1 trillion over that period." While the Bush administration and its supporters have been quick to blame the deficits on unanticipated spending demands, the CBPP report demonstrates that federal tax breaks enacted since 2001 will, over 2003 and 2004, cost nearly three times the combined costs of combat and occupation in Iraq and Afghanistan, reconstruction and relief after the 9/11 attacks, increased expenditures on homeland security, and the cost of fighting terrorism worldwide.

America is at a crossroads of tax and budget policy. The choices made by citizens and legislators in the near future will lead the nation down one of two diverging paths. Politicians and pundits on the right have offered assurances that the deficits are "manageable" while advocating even more tax cuts aimed at the wealthy. Accepting this conservative revolution will lead to an enormous fiscal shortfall that the right will use to justify elimination or privatization of social programs that most Americans want and need, namely Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid. If the right succeeds in shifting responsibility for funding social programs to state and local governments whose tax systems disproportionately burden people with lower incomes, most people would pay more taxes for fewer services.

Or we can choose the other path: honoring our commitments to aging generations while investing in a future of shared opportunity and prosperity.

Dave Bisson is a UMass student.

Letter to the Editor: Only UMass can end riots

To the Editor:

As an alumnus, I feel it worth noting that riots on the scale of last weekend's insurrection occur on a regular basis at or near the University of Messachusetts, Amherst. There is, after all, a reason my eima meter is known as "ZooMess," somawhat proudly, I might add.

However, I am not writting to wax poetic ilnes about my beloved school's terrible appetite for wanton destruction. Rather, I write to eddress what I believe to be the source of these periodic outbursts of not unrighteous fury: Whitmore.

I place the blame for the escalating destructiveness of campus riots squarely on the shoulders of the University administration. It is they, and their puppet masters in Boston, who are primerily responsible for the broken glass, splintered bones and shattered peece of the campus community. While raucous celebrations, excessive inebriation and crazed merrymaking are nothing new, the violent clashes with campus and town police that have characterized the last decede were wholly unknown. Even when protesters seized control of key buildings, embarrassing campus leeders and prompting international news coverage, the administration end students were ebia to settle their differences peacefully. Criminal prosecutions, when they did occur, were usually limited to petty crimes like "Disturbing the Peace."

Today, the campus itself has changed. In fact, it's totally different. Students have less power then they did when I attended UMass, and we had less power then the students before us. On-campus services are being alliminated, and there's literally nothing to do on e Friday night that's worth doing. Chief emong the missing venues are the several bars and nightclubs that used to grace our campus. Today, students are lucky to find one that keeps reasonable hours. Even thet one is off-limits to the mejority of the student body, thanks to misguided politicians. If students have less access to alcohol today, why is it that deaths due to binge drinking were almost unknown on college campuses until the late '90s?

Our politicel leeders and campus administration continue to treet college students like pre-pubescent children, rather then the young adults they ara. Not only do they refuse to eliow most students to drink, but they eternately baby and bully students into submission. in the last five years, the UMass administration hes turned the "Residence Assistents" into student informents, as well es edding surveiilence cameres, and electronic door locks despite the objections of the student body.

By defying the student body, and treating these adults, these voting citizens, like children, the edministration is only adding to the stress students feel. If left to their own devices, most people are capable of safely relieving their own stress. Unfortunately, today's college students ere unendingly hounded by outside stressors, and then threatened with errest and expulsion if they try to do what their bodies are telling them to do. I think most psychologists would tell you this is a recipe for mentel illness, violence and substance abuse. As e special needs taacher, avery day I deal with young people whosa parents ebusad alcohol or drugs, and in many cases, their own children, who are now my students.

While my advice might fly in the face of popular reasoning, the path to wisdom is often littered with pein. Our campus, our communities and our children have endured quite enough already, thanks to the twin follies of prohibition and disempowerment. We can continue to do more of the same and continue to suffer the same consequences, or we can learn from our mistakes and move forward.

Isn't it time we showad our maturity and wisdom by treating college students like adults? Aftar all, how can we expect them to make responsible choices if we won't even allow them tha opportunity to maka choices? We must put the power to run UMass back in the hands of the UMass community. It's the only way to and the riots.

Keith C. McCormic,
UMass Alumus
Class of 2000

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 20

TS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SAVED BY THE BELL

The Bayside legacy

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

It's a Saturday morning in 1991, and it's your first day-off of elementary school in a whole week. The stress of crunching your mind over multiplication tables and long division exercises during the school days is really starting to get to you. All you want to do is wake-up, eat a bowl of captain crunch, veg-out on your couch and watch how much cooler life is going to be when you get to high school.

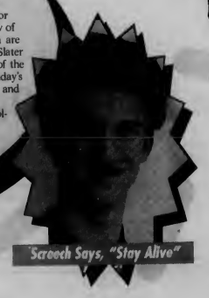
You want to know about the crazy teachers, the school spirit, the cool guys and beautiful girls and of course the drama.

Your source for that much-needed info could be found on your local National Broadcasting Company station, and it came in the form of arguably the

Continued on page 8

Where are they now?

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff



After graduating from the "Saved By The Bell" series, the Bayside High gang took many different paths — some more successful than others.

Mark-Paul Gosselaar (Zack Morris)

Upon graduating from Bayside, Zack Morris was headed for Yale, but somehow found himself back in California for the short-lived series "Saved By The Bell: The College Years." After the failure of "The College Years," Mark-Paul Gosselaar spent about four years focusing on film roles — mostly for television movies. Gosselaar had some big screen success staring alongside Tom Everrett Scott in the MTV-produced flick "Dead Man on Campus." The com-

Continued on page 8

PHOTOS COURTESY NBC

DVD Released

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Like any teen sensation, "Saved By the Bell" was a marketing jackpot for its creators. Anything from dolls, to posters, to T-Shirts to even Zack Berry flavored bath packs could be find in stores while the show was on the air.

But time has gone on and "Saved By the Bell" gear is hard to find. However, starting last month, DVD lovers can now purchase the complete first and second seasons of the Saturday morning sitcom, "Saved By the Bell."

The five-disc set features every episode in the first two seasons, which does not include any material from "Good Morning, Ms. Bliss." The viewer can access scenes at any time and even choose to watch it with Spanish subtitles. The set is being sold for a pricey $49.99. The makers, Lion's Gate Entertainment, must have figured that the people who watched the show back then, now have full-time jobs and can afford the set. If you purchase it through NBC.com though, you will be given a free beefcake Zack and Slater old-school plastic lunchbox.

If you are completely nutty over "Saved By the Bell" merchandise, ebay.com is your home for those hard-to-find novelties of the best teen show of all time. Currently items being sold by auction are playing cards, the board game, Kelly, Jesse and Slater dolls and for $34 you can buy the soundtrack of the show, which includes the theme song, Hot Sunday's "Go for it!" plus Zack Attack's "Friends Forever" and "Did We Ever Have a Chance?"

Ebay nerds and "SBTB" dorks looking for collectable items, 'put your mind to it, go for it, get down and break a sweat rock and roll,' because after you purchase these items, then you can tell your friends, "You have seen nothing yet itll you see my cool new Slater doll."

COURTESY NBC.COM

If you buy the new "Saved By the Bell: The Complete First Two Seasons" DVD through NBC.com, you receive a free lunchbox.

Doughty by himself in NoHo

By David Pesah
Collegian Staff

Mike Doughty is about to bring his self proclaimed "small rock" to Northampton on Saturday at 8 p.m., and Pearl Street is about to experience the stage presence of a touring veteran.

Doughty has been performing for over a decade — both by himself and with a band. You may not recognize the name Mike Doughty, but if you were a fan of the early '90s rock scene, scan your memory for the name Soul Coughing. That was his band. Well, he was at least the front man to that band, which combined rock, hip-hop and jazz, and has been solo since 1998. As of late, he's been rocking crowds with mainly just his acoustic guitar and poetically twisted lyrics.

Mike Doughty
Sat. Oct. 11
Pearl Street
$12.50 advance
$15 door

Doughty, a New York native, began playing guitar at age 15. He brought his love for music to New School University in New York City and began performing in venues around the city and meeting other musicians. Soul Coughing, his first major label band, released their first album "Ruby Vroom" in 1994, emerging as a lighter, slightly eccentric answer to the grunge rock of the times. The band released two more albums, "Irresistible Bliss" in 1996, and "El Oso" in 1998 before parting ways.

"Skittish," Doughty's first solo album was released in 2000. Recorded in 1996 while he was still with the band, it was, and still is, only available through his self-maintained Web site superspecialquestions.com and at shows. This was followed by the live recording "Smofe'+ Smag: Live in Minneapolis" in 2002, which was only available for a brief time online. Last month, Doughty released the "Rockity Roll EP," a six-song collection of acoustic tunes he has been playing during his tours, available online only as well.

Throughout the discs, the lyrics take on more of a poetically nonsensical tone. The words are rarely straightforward — with lines like, "Your back curves like a creeping vine with the answers in the fluid in the stem of the spine."

But amazingly, you get the gist of what Doughty is trying to portray through his lyrics, you're just not sure how you came to the realization. Music critics have tended to label his style of guitar "folky," but Doughty says he prefers to call it "small rock."

During his live shows, fans can expect lots of funny commentary. During songs, he tends to comment and improvise. If they are lucky, onlookers may get to hear Doughty's rock freestyle, where he makes up words on the spot that somehow sound like they are English and fit within the context of the song. You really have to hear it to understand.

Saturday night will bring this music veteran to a venue near us, so everyone who is interested in funny, witty, acoustic rock should check this out. Supposedly, it's just Doughty on stage alone with a guitar. Tickets are cheap ($12.50 in advance at For the Record in Amherst or $15.00 at the door), and it will definitely be worth the money.

Not your daddy's old blues

The Black Keys play Iron Horse

By Evan Goldfried
Collegian Correspondent

After the show on Monday, my friend and I sat with The Black Keys in the basement of the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. With bloodshot eyes, shaggy haircuts and stylish clothes, the band presented a look of fashionable indifference. However, it was well past midnight, and lead singer/guitarist Dan Auerbach quietly slumped in his chair while drummer Patrick Carney fidgeted with a pack of Camel Lights. They still had to load equipment into their van before driving to Boston that same night.

The Black Keys
Iron Horse Music Hall
Northampton
Oct. 6

"What do blues men eat for breakfast after a night like this?" I asked.

"Coffee and cigarettes," Carney said with a slight chuckle.

Only a few hours before, The Black Keys, the band Rolling Stone Magazine called "a killer, bluesy Midwest two-piece," shredded apart the Iron Horse with a diesel, revved-up sound that's loud, dirty and out of control. A small crowd of nearly 100 watched, as Auerbach sweat, swayed and howled his way through the blues while Carney attacked his drum set so violently you couldn't help but wonder how the cymbals could still be standing.

It's easy to imagine them holed up in a basement, listening to old Son House and Junior Kimbrough records, playing on half broken equipment until the early morning. However, the two said their music was primarily influenced by the classic rock and rap they listened to together in Akron, Ohio — where the two grew up only a few houses apart. Most notably, they mentioned the Wu-Tang Clan, the super-rap group from Staten Island, N.Y. of the '90s as one of their favorites.

During the show Monday night, The Black Keys played 14 songs from both their critically acclaimed debut, "The Big Come Up," as well as their latest, "Thickfreakness."

The two best songs were "Busted" and "Thickfreakness," which showed off Auerbach's impressive riffs and Carney's manic drumming. Also, their live cover of the Beatles' "She Said, She Said," was a soulful tribute to the Lennon classic.

The two felt at home with the small crowd in the Iron Horse, an intimate venue where the stage is only feet away from the crowd.

"We liked being on tour with Beck, but we like smaller venues too," he said.

Carney added, "We don't like playing sports arenas or non-festival areas; a thousand is a good crowd, but you lose something beyond that."

With a large grin on his face, Auerbach thanked everyone multiple times between songs, and seemed to genuinely enjoy the night. When the show was over, the two paced through the exiting crowd, shaking the occasional hand and packing up their gear. I would have asked more questions, but they were exhausted and begged for a short interview.

A few minutes later, my friend and I waved goodbye and watched The Black Keys pull across Main Street in a cherry red van, heading two hours down the road to the next gig.

Solo & Duos series continues

The Fine Arts Center welcomes The Sunny Murray Duo featuring Sabir Mateen to Bezanson Recital Hall tonight at 8 p.m. The performance will mark the second installment in this season's "Solo And Duos Series," concluding on Nov. 20 with a duet performance by Sonny Fortune and Rashied Ali.

The Sunny Murray Duo
Thurs. Oct. 9
Bezanson Recital Hall
$10 general audience
$5 students

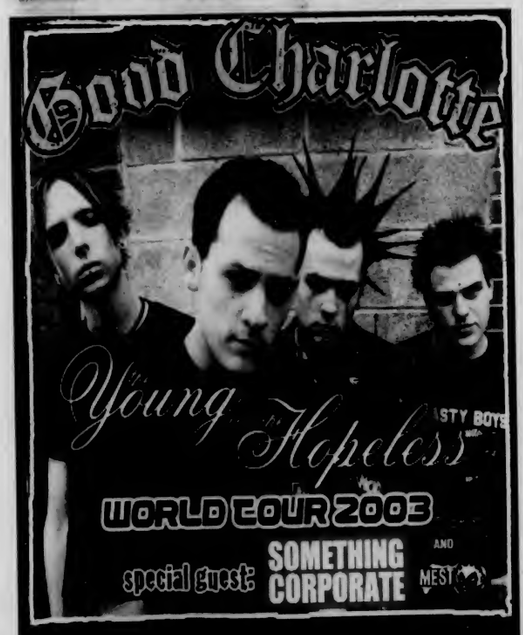
Revered percussionist and current Paris resident, 67-year old Murray has played with jazz legends — the likes of Cecil Taylor, Archie Shepp, Ornette Coleman and Don Cherry. Alongside fellow luminaries of the drum kit Milford Graves (a tremendous musical presence who performed last month on the Series' opening night) and Rashied Ali, Murray helped to redefine the role of the drums in the jazz avant garde.

"I consider what I play to be the traditional avant garde, the roots," Murray told Paristransatlantic.com in a Nov. 2000 interview.

Mateen, his partner for the night, is a masterful reeds man who regularly performs on the alto and tenor saxophones, clarinet, bass clarinet and flute. His work with Horace Tapscott, Raphe Malik, Alan Silva, Butch Morris and B!l Dixon, among others, has taken him all over the United States and around the world.

The duos only record together, a 1998 live date documenting a performance here in Amherst, was issued on Eremite Records in 1999. "We Are Not At The Opera" received rave reviews from publications including Wire, Jazztimes and Jazziz.

"Murray still loves the idea of keeping a pulse you can time eggs by," wrote Richard Cook in Jazziz. "He is as strong and gracious as Art Blakey, and listening to him affords a lot of the same satisfaction as hearing Bu."



Tickets to tonight's performance are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office or at 1-800-999-UMAS. Prices are $10, and $5 for students.

- Bradley Farberman

Singer/guitarist Dan Auerbach wails out bluesy rifts during one of The Black Keys' shows.

www.dailycollegian.com

Hey Seniors!
Need help with your job search?

Come to one of our Job Search Workshops!

Today! Thursday, Oct. 9
1:30pm

Tuesday, Oct. 14
3pm

Wednesday, Oct. 15
12pm

All Job Searches made easy
Workshops take place in 104 Career Services Bldg. (across from Newman center)

For more Information about our workshops, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

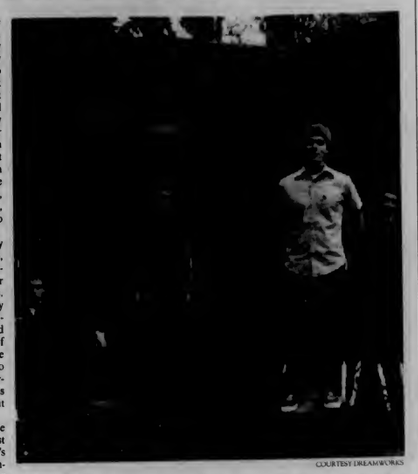
CareerServices



Saves the Day releases new sound on LP

'In Reveries' lacks same fire power of past records from this punk band

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The word precious can be defined as affectedly dainty or over- refined, which is as apt a description as any to express the values and limitations of "In Reverie" the fourth release from emo-rock wunderkinds Saves The Day.

With "In Reverie," Saves The Day veer a hard right away from their original poppy-punky sound into the world of mannered indie pop, and it's enough to induce whiplash. Comparing the new album to their previous, 2001's "Stay What You Are" — which spawned the hit "At Your Funeral" — it's abundantly clear how much of their old sound that Saves The Day cast off, and how quickly they did it. I'm all for bands changing up their sound, and who into new places they have never been before, but not if it comes at the expense of the band's own identity.

Yes, it's good, in theory, for a band to push its limits. No, a band should not regurgitate the same old sound on record after record — after all, it's a sign that the musicians in question lack the confidence or skill to move beyond a template. But the path of drastic change is wrought with its own treacheries; it can lead to wretched excess, failed experiments and fan abdication.

And the fans may not respond so kindly to Saves the Day's newest incarnation. An album exactly like "Stay What You Are" would have been a betrayal of trust, but "In Reverie" is, in it's way, just as much as betrayal, a discarding of loyalty without the developmental processes that would allow the change to come naturally.

All that said though, the album isn't horrible if you take it for what is: a slice of jangly, melodic rainbow-pop that wafts in with a gentle wind. It's good. If this were Saves The Day's first album, I would maybe have recommended it. "In Reverie" is a very pretty album; it never pushes too hard and never asks too much of the listener. It's the definition of lovely.

Except that this isn't Saves The Day's first album, it's the fourth, which circles me back to my main problem with "In Reverie": it seems like an entire new identity was tailored and the old one cast off. It's impossible to recommend to those who are already fans, though newbies may very well enjoy it.

On "In Reverie" nasal-voiced front man Chris Conley shows off a new admiration for the falsetto, as he lets himself drift into the upper range of his vocal pattern. He also has a fascination with abstract lyricism that at times comes off as a bit arch and pretentious; a more perfect example couldn't be found than "The monkey will bite/ better eat your poultry, too" off the supposed anti-conformity tract "Monkey." The rampant morbidity that haunted "Stay What You Are" is no longer here, which is a debit. The dark lyrics that permeated that previous effort gave the songs an emotional heft, a solid center from which Conley and company could spin off of. Songs like "At Your Funeral," which depicted the death of a close friend, and "Cars & Calories" about confronting body image issues, had a clearer and more wrenching impact. The lyrics on "In Reverie," on the other hand, lack that same focus and wallop. True, they are at times clever, but they are also insubstantial.

What helps is the music itself. Conley and his bandmates — Eben D'Amico, David Soloway and spanking new drummer Pete Parada still have a knack for crafting sparkling, piquant melodies. The songs, even at their most lyrically suspect — often come together beautifully, especially on the title track and "Morning In the Moonlight." The art of modulation is in evidence here, as the members of Save the Day know how to surge forward without being overwhelmingly aggressive just as much as they know when to pull back without growing overly fragile.

It's in all fairness to wish Saves The Day the best of luck with their newest incarnation — it shows promise, but let's just start hoping they may stick to a comfortable place for a while rather than going for musical cosmetic surgery every few years.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS

Saves the Day constructs an indie rock sound on "In Reveries" rather than keeping to its usual pop-punk persona.

'Saved by the Bell' has and will continue to have a place in the hearts of our generation best teen show of all time. "Saved By the Bell."

Continued from page 6

The instant that loud bell rang at 10 a.m., followed by the singing of "When I wake up in the morning/ And the clock lets out a warning I don't think I'll ever make it on time/ By the time I got my books I give myself a look/ I'm at the corner just in time to see the bus fly by," nothing else in the world mattered except for the lives of Zack Morris, A.C. Slater, Samuel "Screech" Powers, Lisa Turtle, Kelly Kapowski and Jesse Spano.

"Saved by the Bell" is — as much a television sitcom can be — the cornerstone and phenomenon of our generation. It is hard to find a person between the ages of 17-24 who is not a fan of the show, which originally ran between 1989 and 1994 on NBC and can be seen in syndication to this day on the TBS Superstation and local stations across the country.

It would be an overstatement to say it defined what being a teenager was all about in the early '90s, but it definitely made an exaggerated picture of what is so great and what is so miserable about the days of high school everyone has endured.

If you were the jock type, you wanted to be Slater. If you were trying to be the coolest guy in school, you wanted to be Zack. If you were made fun of and was incredibly awkward, you found salvation in Screech. If you wanted to protest and save the world, you wanted to be Jesse. If you loved to gossip, you wanted to be Lisa. If you wanted to be the hottest cheerleading captain ever, Kelly was your idol. And if for some reason you dreamt of being a school priciPAL — not principle — Mr. Belding — not Balding — was your source of inspiration.

Of course, if you weren't satisfied with the main characters, biker girls who only go to school for a couple of episodes could admire Tori.

The series, which began as a pilot for NBC called "Good Morning, Ms. Bliss" in 1987, was originally designed to take place in Kennedy Junior High School in Indianapolis, Ind. However, focusing on the teacher, Ms. Carrie Bliss, played by popular 1980's actress Hayley Mills, was not the key to reaching the suburban youth of America.

So after appearing for 13 episodes on The Disney Channel, "Good Morning, Ms. Bliss," was cancelled and the producers, Peter Engel and William F. Phillips, went back to the drawing board. The end result was a masterpiece of puberty-driven entertainment.

"Saved By the Bell" was the new name of the show and rather than setting it in dreary Indiana, the school, now called Bayside High, was in sunny Pacific Palisades, Calif. during one of the freshest times for the west-coast lifestyle, the late '80s into the early '90s.

From there, the focus was put on the characters played by Mark-Paul Gosselaar (Zack), Mario Lopez (Slater), Tiffani Amber-Theissen (Kelly), Elizabeth Berkeley (Jesse), Dustin Diamond (Screech) and Lark Voorhies (Lisa).

The gang was the quintessential group of white-collar friends — three guys and three girls all with raging hormones, crushes and egos. The group, led by "preppy" Zack who had the ability to "timeout" any situation that seemed sketchy (don't we all wish we had that power) and carried around an obnoxious, oversized cell phone, dominated the halls of Bayside and their usual burger hangout, "The Max."

The audience of "Saved by the Bell" came to love and learn from the cast as each episode had some reason for its existence: to teach a lesson. If it either was Lisa spending too much money on her parents credit card, Jesse getting addicted to caffeine pills, Slater and Zack fighting over the new hotty on the first day of junior year, Kelly cheating on Zack or the crew finding out that their favorite celebrity Johnny Dakota liked to smoke the ganja, everybody could walk away from watching the show with a heartfelt lesson learned — "there's no hope in dope."

If it wasn't the lessons that affected the viewers, it was the relationships on, and according to "E! True Hollywood Story," off the show as well.

Zack and Kelly was a match up of the most popular kids in school. It seemed so perfect until that unfortunate night, with Jesse and Albert Clifford singing "How am I supposed to live with you?" by Michael Bolton in the gymnasium, Kelly told Zack that she had found someone else. Or the give-and-take sexual tension filled relationship between "mama" Jesse and "pig" Slater. And of course every guy who has had their own version of a lifelong crush can relate to the struggles Screech faced chasing after Lisa for five years.

Between relationships, lessons learned, amazing original songs such as "Friends Forever" and "Cool School" plus the overall cheezeball comedy that persisted throughout the show, somehow "Saved By the Bell" became a legendary cult classic.

So much so that primetime TV movies were created separate from the Saturday morning show. "Saved By the Bell: Hawaiian Style" and in an effort to put a conclusion to the often criticized "Saved By the Bell: The College Years" and where Zack and Kelly get married in Las Vegas in "Saved By the Bell: The Wedding" all aired at 8 p.m. during the week.

The show, which lasted 100 episodes, was such a success that it spun off "Saved By the Bell: The New Class" for four seasons. However, those casts lacked the same fire and camaraderie as the original team of coeds.

Other Saturday morning TNBC shows, such as "California Dreams," "Hang Time" and "City Guys" attempted to repeat the success of "SBTB," but there will never be another gang like one at Bayside.

So today when you are sitting in class reading this article and reminiscing on all those "Saved By the Bell" memories and all of sudden "the teacher pops a test ... and you know you're in a mess ... and your dog ate all your homework last night. Riding low in your chair, she won't know that your there. If you can hand it in tomorrow it'll be all right..."

It's all right, 'cause you will be saved by the bell.

Where is the Bayside gang hanging now?

Continued from page 6

edy made minor waves and acquired a cult following after its release in 1998. Two additional series, "Hyperion Bay" and "DC," both on the WB, followed in 1999 and 2000 respectively, but neither made it into a second season. In 2001, Gosselaar landed the role of Detective John Clark on the police drama "NYPD Blue," where he can still be seen today.

Tiffani-Amber Thiessen (Kelly Kapowski)

After playing girl-next-door type Kelly Kapowski, Tiffani-Amber Thiessen tried her hand at the world of film. She appeared in many projects, mostly television movies doomed to be replayed on Lifetime for all of eternity. In 1994, Thiessen got a big break playing manipulative Valarie Malone on Aaron Spelling's drama "Beverly Hills, 90210." She remained on the series for four years, until it went off the air in 1998. Following her success on "90210," Thiessen had small roles on quite a few sitcoms, including NBC's "Just Shoot Me." She can currently been seen living life in the "Fastlane" on Fox and is also making appearances on NBC's "Good Morning Miami."

Mario Lopez (A.C. Slater)

Following the demise of "Saved By The Bell: The College Years," Mario Lopez didn't work much. He returned to the small screen to play Officer Bobby Cruz on "Pacific Blue," where he enjoyed some success. Along with appearances in a string of independent films, Lopez appeared on the game show "The Weakest Link" in 2001. Although his character, A.C. Slater was often accused of being 'a male macho, chauvinist pig' Mario Lopez is anything but on his newest project, "The Other Half," the male counterpart to talk show "The View."

Lark Voorhies (Lisa Turtle)

Not much is known about where Lark Voorhies went after class was dismissed at Bayside High. She has only recently made a return to the business, starring in the mini-series "Windows" and the 2002 flick "Civil Brand." Possibly the most impressive of her post-"SBTB" credits though was her appearance in the 2001 movie "How High."

Dustin Diamond (Samuel "Screech" Powers)

Though most people who are dorkā in high school never look back after graduating, Screech couldn't get enough. Dustin Diamond appeared on every inception of "SBTB," including "Saved By The Bell: The New Class,' which was finally put out of it's misery in 2000. Diamond now has a band, Salty the Pocketknife and performs stand-up comedy routines around the country. Film credits for Diamond include "Made" and "Big Fat Liar," as well as an instructional video on how to play chess.

Elizabeth Berkeley (Jesse Spano)

Probably the most notable Bayside grad as soon as the show ended was Elizabeth Berkeley. She went from burning bras to taking them off, as she starred in the arguably the worst movie of all time, 1995's "Showgirls." Since the film that documented the life of a stripper, Berkeley has appeared in a combination of 20 independent and major movies, including 1996's "The First Wives Club."

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21 & over renters
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Lavender Paraffin hand dip for $6!)
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!

Seven's
Rt. 116 | Sunderland, MA
(413) 665 - 8788
Next to Cliffside Apartments
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE CONTEST EVERY SUNDAY
261
Air Hockey Table
Open Mic Night
Every Thursday
WEEKLY PITCHER SPECIALS

PLAY QB1
Game Room - Delicious Home - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
FRIDAYS
FREE PIZZA
3-5PM
Coors LIGHT
Pitcher Special
$6.50
All Month
NFL SUNDAY TICKET
Saturday Nights
KARAOKE
10-1am No Cover

Cross country to compete in NE's

Meet will be second to last of the season for men, women

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

The men's and women's cross country teams return to action this weekend at the New England Championship.

Believe it or not, after three races the University of Massachusetts cross country team has reached the pinnacle of its season. Barring a trip to the postseason, the Minutemen will have one meet after Saturday's New England Championship, to improve upon last years, sixth place A-10 finish.

This year's New England Championship will be held at Boston's historical Franklin Park, where 315 runners from all 47 New England schools, will compete in the 5,000-meter event.

"Obviously, this is the largest race of the year in terms of numbers, but it is also the biggest in terms of the level of excitement," head coach Ken O'Brien said. "Up till now our meets have been 40-50 runners, this will be six times larger, with a huge crowd, and high stakes."

In a five-week season, a second, third and fourth place finish in the first three races, may not be enough to propel the Maroon and White into the NCAA tournament.

"Our production will determine a lot in terms of where we are in the broad spectrum of New England teams, as well as how we match up in the A-10," O'Brien said.

Ten schools racing on Saturday are nationally ranked in the top 20, in their respective Division one, two, or three categories.

Providence is the D-1 favorite, ranked anywhere from 7-10 in the country, depending on the poll. Other teams of concern to UMass are Brown, Dartmouth and BU, all ranked in the top 20.

"The quality of competition should make for an interesting race, not only are there fast runners, the course its self will make for a fast race. The course is very flat, and if there's nice weather, guys will be making very good time," O'Brien said.

The course at Franklin Park is flat except for one hill, so competitors feel as though they are running on a track rather than a typical cross-country trail. At the starting point there is enough space for the 300 runners to spread out, but at the 2,000-meter mark the course gets narrow, creating a potential bottleneck.

"It's almost like the course favors 800 meter runners. When the guys run, you see then sprinting to the 2,000-meter mark, and the guys who get there first are the ones who don't get bogged down," woman's head coach Julia LaFreniere said.

Seniors Dave Hantman and Matthew Thomas, and junior Andrew McCarron, will be looked upon to lead the Minutemen at Franklin Park, because they have experience running mid-distance during the indoor season.

"It should be fun, Keen St. is another team that people look past because they're D-2. In a race like this you don't know how things are going to turn out, the best thing we can do is make sure we run together," O'Brien said.

Out of the 47 schools, UMass' placement among the 19 Division 1 schools will be the largest factor in determining a possible bid into the NCAA Tournament.—

The woman will race on Friday in the New England Championships, but against a comparatively higher level of competition than the men. Providence College, ranked No. 5 in the country and No. 23 Boston College are pre-meet favorites.

"The Northeast is a powerhouse for long-distance. Some of the best schools in the country will be at Saturday's meet, including Williams and Middlebury, who are ranked first and second in the country for D-3," La Freniere said.

Most of the Ivy League will be represented at the Championships, including Brown, Dartmouth, and Yale. "The Ivy's are always strong, and some of the D-2 schools like No. 13 Amherst College and No. 18 Wesleyan and should be in the hunt," La Freniere said.

Senior leader Alexis Anzelone, who finished first among UMass scorers in all three races, will be looked upon to lead an inexperienced team in the highest profile meet of the regular season.

The team will look for an impressive showing from its top five runners, to help put an unranked squad into the NCAA tournament picture.

"Lexi will probably lead the team, so the key will be the other four in my Fab Five, that is, Tricia Silva, Kate Markopoulos, Cuisle Kiernas, and Amanda Dahlberg," La Freniere said. "If Anzelone can get out in front, and the other four run like they did this week in practice, we should be fine."

The top five runners for the Minutewoman have finished with a 48, 120, and 50-second differential between them and their teammates.

"I think the team is ready to break out with a good race, Anzelone is clearly the frontrunner, but if the other four girls can stay as close to her as they can, the team will bring in a good score," La Freniere said.

Parcells a mastermind

Bob McGovern

Well it looks like the Tuna is going fishing again.

After nearly three years away from coaching, Bill Parcells is taking another struggling, storied team, back to the Promised Land.

Ok, now let's slow down a bit.

The Cowboys, led by an array of inexperienced youth will not win the Super Bowl in January. However, Parcells has taken a team that was on its way out and pushed it right back in the mix.

As the NFL season trudges along its initial weeks, the Cowboys are one of the hottest teams in football. They have grasped an unlikely seat at the top of the always-competitive NFC East, and have proved their legitimacy to the league.

During this span, Parcells has revisited his previous employers in the Meadowlands and took two games against the Giants and the Jets. These wins were two personal victories for a coach that led both teams out of the doldrums of mediocrity.

Granted four games doesn't represent an entire season, but America's team has found something that has been missing the past three years —cohesion.

This is what Parcells brings to any team he coaches, an efficiency that filters down to his players. His leadership has taken the Giants and Patriots to the Super Bowl and changed the Jets from a laughing stock to a veritable contender.

It's not quite time to break out the champagne in Dallas, as the Cowboys have played one of the weakest schedules in the NFL. Their most impressive win was a 35-32 Monday night victory over the Giants (2-2). The other two came off of perennial cellar dwellers Cardinals and Jets.

The difference is the look of America's team, as they are beginning to rely on what few strengths they have.

One major change in the Cowboy's game play has been their offense. The Cowboys have averaged 382.8 yards per game while their opponents have only mustered 265.8.

Leading to the sudden influx in offensive production has been the intelligent play of quarterback Quincy Carter.

Carter, who has been anything but consistent over his career has an 80.5 quarterback rating, the highest of his career. He has thrown for 1,031 yards, third in the NFC, and has finally stopped throwing the ball to the opposition.

Parcells, who doesn't deal well with an inconsistency, has given Carter the green light to remain the Cowboy's field general.

He has him more settled down than in the past and is using his arm and speed sparingly.

The Cowboys are coming off of three straight 10-loss seasons under previous coach Dave Campo. If there is one coach that can turn a team around it's Parcells, who had one of the biggest turnaround seasons in NFL history with the Jets.

Parcells took a Jet team that in its two previous years went 3-13 and 1-15 and finished 9-7. The following year they went 12-4 and advanced all the way to the AFC Championship game, before losing to the eventual champion, the Denver Broncos.

Parcells has hall of fame numbers for a coach, with a record of 149-106-1 and playoff appearances with three different teams. He has been in three Super Bowls, winning Super Bowls XXI and XXV with the Giants and dropping XXXI as the Patriots head coach.

As week six approaches, Parcells and his Cowboys meet their toughest opponent of the season in the Philadelphia Eagles. If the Cowboys pull off their fourth victory of the year and their second in conference play you better believe the NFC will be watching.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

Pennant fever on Capitol Hill as congressmen make wagers

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — With little else on deck this week, partisan wrangling on Capitol Hill was overshadowed by the rabid Red Sox-Yankees rivalry, as lawmakers wagered wine, clam chowder and song.

For the loyal but weak of heart, the bets were based on food — New England Clam chowder for New York subs, with a little local beer or wine thrown in for good measure.

But the stouthearted put their egos on the line, as the best-of-seven American League Championship Series between the perennial enemies began.

Wearing his Red Sox jersey and cap, Rep. Marty Meehan, D-Mass., stood on the steps of the Capitol Wednesday and put up Boston-made Samuel Adams beer and pizza and calzones from Sal's Pizza in Lowell, against New York Republican Rep. Vito Fossella's subs from Luigino's Restaurant on Staten Island and Gino's Restaurant in Brooklyn.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., stepped it up a bit. He wagered lobster and clam chowder from Legal Seafoods in a bet with Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., who will pony up a case of New York wine if the Red Sox beat his Yankees.

But over on the Senate side, food wasn't enough to risk with the haunting "Curse of the Bambino" hanging in the balance.

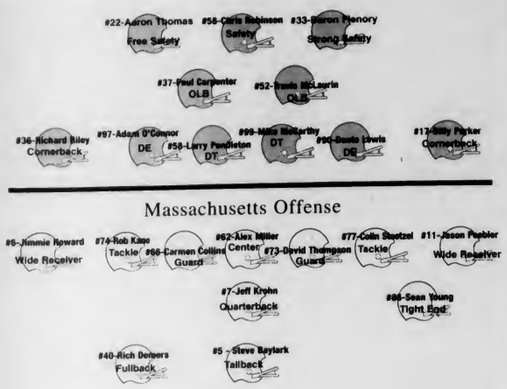
Depending on the eventual victor, either Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., or Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., will have to go to the Capitol steps and belt out "Take Me Out to the Ballgame." The winner celebrates, the loser sings.

In a similar wager in 1999, Kennedy had to go to the steps and recite "Casey at the Bat." This time, he said, it will be different.

"Enough's enough. Even the Bambino is smiling down on Boston this year," Kennedy said.

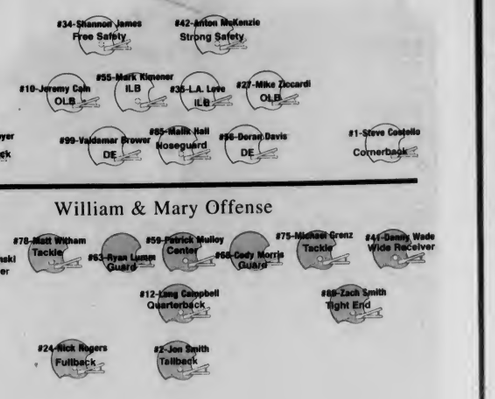
Any students interested in interning with New England PGA please contact Eric Soderstrom at (774) 239-2690

E-mail questions or comments to Sports@dailycollegian.com



GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

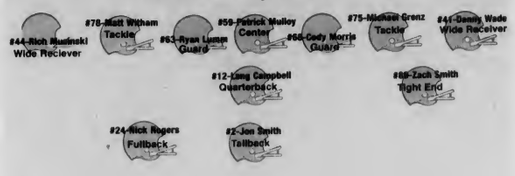
The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.



U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Massachusetts
@
William & Mary
Saturday 1 p.m.
Zable Stadium (13,279)

William & Mary Defense



Massachusetts Defense

Massachusetts Offense

William & Mary Offense

UMass to face William & Mary

Minutemen look to remain perfect in A-10

Continued from page 12

challenge certainly for us defensively."

"I think they'll come out and do what they've always done and have a good mix and a balance. They'll try to isolate Macinski, and they have three good running backs behind an offensive line that's finally found some continuity now that they're all healthy."

On the defensive side of the ball, W&M is led by linebacker Travis McLaurin, who leads the team in tackles (46), as well as solo tackles (28). However, Whipple feels that the secondary, which consistently features three safeties in senior Marques Bobo, junior Craig Patterson and sophomore Jonathan Shaw, is the strength of the unit.

"Their secondary is strong," he said. "They've been playing well as a group, and have really improved in what I've seen.

"They're playing much better as a team as well. We saw them play a lot better in their last game than they did the one before, so the week off really helped them."

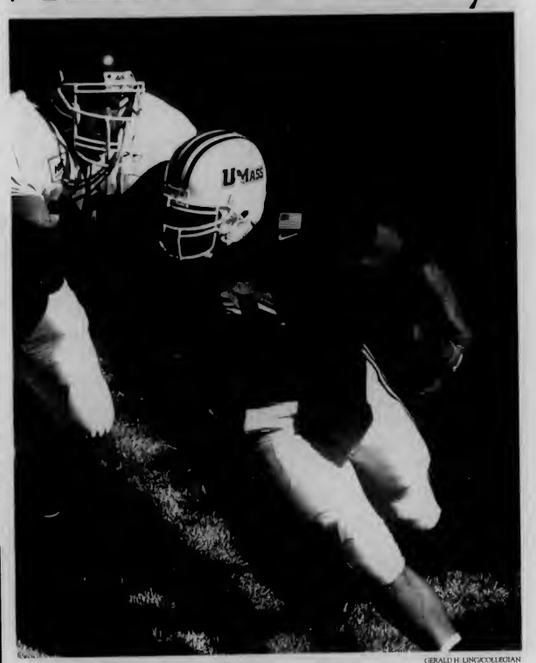
UMass will likely look to continue to run the football on offense as it has all season long, and will benefit from the improvement of fullback-tailback Rich Demers. The UMass-Lowell transfer caught four passes for 34 yards and a score, and rushed for a season-high 55 yards on nine carries against UNH, and Whipple likes what he sees from the junior.

"He's getting better every week, he's felt more comfortable and he's made big plays," he said. "We're going to look to get him the ball more and more as he gets more used to the offense, but I'm really happy with how he's progressed."

Demers' play has allowed Whipple to take some of the onus off of two-time reigning A-10 Offensive Player of the Week Steve Baylark.

The sophomore, who is in his first year with the Minutemen, carried the ball 25 times last week as opposed to 35 in the previous week, and may see his workload cut down even further after a high ankle sprain that kept him out of at least one practice this week.

"[Baylark] will start, but he didn't practice [Tuesday]," Whipple said. "I think everybody could see the difference in Baylark in the fourth quarter against New Hampshire. He was better than he was in the fourth quarter against James Madison because we were able to give Demers the ball and not rely on his as much."



When the Minutemen look to throw, it will more often than not be in the direction of A-10 Offensive Player of the Week Jason Peebler, who has posted two consecutive 100-yard receiving games, including five catches for 177 yards and two touchdowns, one covering a school-record 82 yards.

"Peebler has been good for us, and he's made plays," Whipple said. "There's still things he needs to pick up, but he's stepped it up."

Defensively, UMass may be without starting cornerback Bobby Boyer again, and his replacement, Amherst Regional product James Ihedigbo, will play with a cast over a dislocated finger.

Whipple also knows that after seeing 15 flags fly against his squad two weeks ago, and eight last week, his team cannot continue to shoot itself in the foot with penalties.

"I wasn't happy with [the penalties] last week, and its mostly defensive penalties," he said. "We just need to come out, play smart, keep our heads in the game and play like we're capable of playing."

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

UMass-Lowell transfer Rich Demers carried the ball nine times for 55 yards against UNH.

WINTER INTERSESSION ABROAD 2004

Experience International Cultures and Earn Academic Credits

Cuba
Nepal
Thailand
Martinique
French 161

All Students Welcome

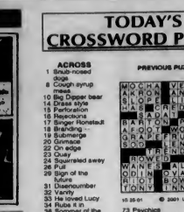
For more information:
continuingstudies.uconn.edu
(select International Studies)
Email: patricia.harkins@uconn.edu
Phone: 860-488-5885

University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
Transforming Lives Through Education

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:
Sam Adams 2/12 pk btl ..$19.99*
Bud & Bud Light 30 pk cans..$18.99*
Killian's Irish Red 2/12 pk btl..$17.99*
Schaefer 30 pk cans..10.99*
Shipyard 12 pk btl..$9.99*
Heineken 12 pk btl..$9.99*

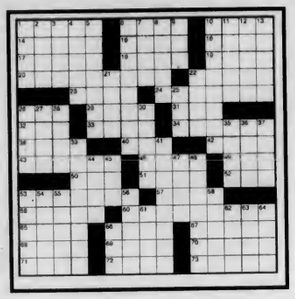
Liquor:
Glenlivet 750 ml...$27.99
Jameson 1 liter...$22.99
Martell V.S. 750 ml...$21.99
Captain Morgan 1 liter..$15.99
Seagram's Gin All Flavors 750 ml...$8.99
Rubinoff Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99



Wine:
Sterling Vinyards
Chardonnay 750 ml $12.99
Merlot 750 ml $16.99
Carbernet Sauvignon 750 ml $17.99
Jacobs Creek Reserve Chard., Cab., Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml...$6.99
Vendange Chard., Cab., Merlot, P. Grigio 1.5 lt...$6.99
Arbor mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99
Barton & Guestier Chard., Cab., merlot 750 ml...$4.99
Marcus James Chard., Cab., Merlot, White Zin 750 ml...$2.99

*all beer prices plus deposit

SALE 10/09 THROUGH 10/15
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Snub-nosed dogs
8 Cough syrup measure
10 Big Dipper bear
14 Draw style
15 Perforation
16 Reactions
17 Singer Horsfall
18 Branding
19 Scrimmage
20 Gumbo
22 On edge
23 Quay
24 Squirrelled away
26 Pull
29 Sign of the futures
31 Disenumber
32 Vanity
35 He loved Lucy
36 Ms. Lupino
38 Schmear of the screen
40 Afternoon social
42 Pesky bug
43 Made a home
46 Stuff
49 Type of wine
50 Garden tool
51 To be, to Jacques
52 Lacy instrument
53 Lack
57 Passion
59 Rains hard
60 Grove protector
65 Stand up
66 Citation abbr
67 Wear away
68 Job-safety gp.
69 Spoiled over
70 Peace
71 Singer Diamond
72 Low card

Down
1 Glove part
2 Kazan of filmdom
3 Flaw
4 Over
5 Lobster or salmon
6 Most crowded
7 Drill
8 Walk through a puddle
9 Kind of pal
10 Surprise winner
11 Burst of applause
12 Lab
13 Quarried
21 Pinnacle
22 Piano part
25 Aaron
26 Mail frequenter
27 Stare rudely at
28 Stir-fry pans
30 Brother's child
35 Plus words
36 Scarlett's mates
37 Lincoln's river
39 Heavenly
41 Cunningly
44 Biblical of years
45 Holiday mix
47 Like the Gobi
48 Business deals
53 Cook's smock
54 Idaho capital
55 Play fan's den
56 Fight end
58 Pry (into)
61 Slag-party attendee
62 Fly a gondola
63 German river
64 Handy heroine
66 Salesperson

Amherst Brewing Company
Silver Medal Winner at Great American Beer Festival
BURGERS • WINGS • BEER
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL' MIDNIGHT
PING PONG
DARTS
POOL
LIVE MUSIC
NO COVER CHARGE
EVERYTHING UNDER ONE ROOF
OLDE
JAZZ • BLUES • FUNK • KARAOKE
413-549-1900
24 North Pleasant Street • www.amherstbrewing.com • a Amherst Center
October 9th
Karaoke
w/Cloud Nine Productions
October 11th
Love Bomb
70's dance Music

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)

DINNER
- Flank Steak
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 47

FRIDAY
- High: 70
- Low: 42

SATURDAY
- High: 67
- Low: 47

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Oliver Chong

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You have no chance at getting a date tonight, or any other night.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
People in Zen Mode freak me out. You agree?

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
For the most part, people are just no good, including you.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go running. Hopefully you'll trip and fall off the dining commons.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Wear something with the Ninja Turtles. They have turtle power.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It's horrible having the to get out of that situation, but it'll work.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Put your headphones on and don't talk. They aren't worth your time.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't read over my shoulder. I don't like it.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Pick on people more. They need to toughen up.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You're a lifesaver. You take care of everyone's problems.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't forget your clothes. No one wants to see you naked.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Seduce Derek Lowe. You'll like it and so will he.

Quote for the Day

"Like handshakes, house pets, or raw carrots, many things are preferable when not slippery."

--Lemony Snicket, author of "The Slippery Slope: A Series of Unfortunate Events," book 10.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

One bedroom, near UMass Amherst Center Bus. 2 Large Rooms, low heat cost, $575 per month. 586-0746

Auto for Sale

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1998 Volvo V70 AWD Wagon Turbo Auto 130,000 Miles Loaded $10,000/OBO 253-0733

Auto for Sale

1994 Volkswagon Jetta, 160K, includes 4 snow tires, $2,000/ OBO. Julie 253-4240

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Childcare

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. Old triplets 1 to 3 days a week. In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1888-820-0167 ext U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/ day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Employment

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.imagen11.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Travel

A SPRING BREAK ER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

Wanted

Weekend Cook: To prepare meals on Sat & Sun between 10-5. Please Call 549-6202 for more information.

Collegian Marketplace wants your classified ad! Come to the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sox draw first blood

Ortiz, Walker and Ramirez homer as Boston wins Game 1

BY RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — The Boston Red Sox won their first skirmish with the Evil Empire, putting aside curses and fatigue to burst ahead in the AL championship series.

David Ortiz, Todd Walker and Manny Ramirez homered off a shaky Mike Mussina, and the Red Sox beat the New York Yankees 5-2 Wednesday night.

All the chants and signs reminding Boston of its 85-year title drought only seemed to spur on the Red Sox against their old rivals, who have dominated their Northeast neighbors for decades.

Red Sox	5
Yankees	2

Tim Wakefield befuddled New York with his knuckleball, taking a 5-0 lead into the seventh before he got wild. Three relievers from Boston's beleaguered bullpen completed the three-hitter.

After traveling from Boston to Oakland on Sunday night, then winning Game 5 on Monday night and flying back across the country, the Red Sox seemed bleary eyed when they arrived at Yankee Stadium on Tuesday. But when it came time to play, they had the energy and emotion, not New York, which had been off since winning its first-round series at Minnesota.

Ever since December, when Boston president Larry Lucchino called the Yankees the "Evil Empire," the Red Sox have played off imagery from "Star Wars," painting themselves as white knights trying to knock off the 26-time World Series champions.

Following their stunning comeback from a 2-0 deficit against the Athletics, Lucchino even predicted Tuesday that the Red Sox, who haven't won the Series since trading Babe Ruth to the Yankees in 1920 — supposedly bringing on The Curse — would have The Force on their side.

Yankees fans kept reminding the Red Sox of their title drought, screaming "1918," but the reminder just seemed to fuel the Red Sox, who flashed their power and rapped out 13 hits, including four by Ramirez.

Game 2 of the best-of-seven series is Thursday night with Derek Lowe of Boston facing New York's Andy Pettitte.

Boston, which finished second to New York in the AL East for the sixth straight season, had dropped 12 of its previous 13 games in the ALCS since its last World Series appearance in 1986, including a 4-1 loss to the Yankees in the 1999 LCS.

But the Red Sox struck back on the 47th anniversary of one of the most famous games in baseball and Yankee Stadium history — Don Larsen's perfect game against Brooklyn in Game 5 of the 1956 World Series.

Mussina, pitching on seven days' rest since losing the first-round opener against Minnesota, wasn't sharp at all, allowing three homers in a game for only the second time this year — and for the first time in 13 postseason starts. He dropped to 4-4 in postseason play.

While Mussina didn't allow any runs in the second inning, he labored; going to 2-0 counts on four batters, including 3-0 on three.

Boston finally broke through in the fourth. Ramirez reached on a one-hopper to right side that Mussina just managed to deflect — similar to the Cristian Guzman infield hit that led to Minnesota's key rally in his previous start.

Ortiz, who had been 0-for-20 against Mussina, fell behind 0-2, worked the count full and then homered into the front of the right-field upper deck.

Walker made it 3-0 when he led off the fifth with a drive high off the foul pole in right field. While right-field umpire Angel Hernandez signaled it was foul, he was immediately overruled by plate umpire Tim McClelland — also behind the plate 20 years ago when he took a home run away from George Brett, a call later reversed by AL president Lee MacPhail.

Two batters later, Ramirez hit homered on a drive that just cleared the right-field wall and a leaping Juan Rivera. Kevin Millar added an RBI single off reliever Jeff Nelson in the seventh for a 5-0 lead. Wakefield, who improved to 3-0 in LCS play, took a two-hit shutout into the seventh but walked his first two batters and was replaced by Alan Embree. Jorge Posada hit an RBI double and Hideki Matsui followed with a sacrifice fly, but Aaron Boone and Nick Johnson flied out.

Mike Timlin pitched the eighth, and Scott Williamson closed out the ninth for the save.

COURTESY BOSTON GLOBE STAFF PHOTO/JIM DAVIS

Manny Ramirez (center), Todd Walker (left) and David Ortiz (not pictured) accounted for all five Boston runs as the Red Sox took a 1-0 series lead over the rival Yankees in the ALCS.

Minutemen seek fourth straight win

UMass to head south to face William & Mary

GERALD H. LINGUA/COLLEGIAN

Cornerback Steve Costello and his team-high three interceptions will lead UMass into Williamsburg, Va. to face the Tribe.

BY MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After consecutive home victories over Atlantic 10 foes James Madison and New Hampshire that helped it climb into a three-way tie atop the A-10 standings, the No. 7 Massachusetts football team will return the road this weekend as they continue their conference slate in Williamsburg, Va. against William & Mary (1-3 0-2 A-10).

The Tribe, who are hosting their first game in 2003 after forfeiting their scheduled home opener with Maine following Hurricane Isabel, pose an interesting threat to the Minutemen (4-1 3-0 A-10), as the two league rivals did not meet last year, and have not met in a game that counted towards their respective conference records since 2000.

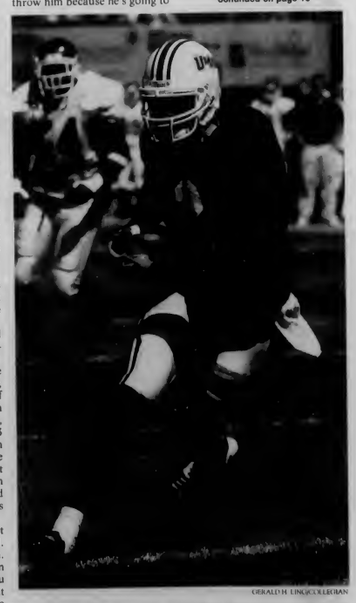
"It's just different," Coach Mark Whipple said. "It's like playing Kansas State or North Carolina State, where we just don't know them that well. It's not like New Hampshire or Maine where we've been playing them every year. We don't know the names of the players or anything like that so it's definitely different.

"Logistically, this trip isn't as long as Kansas State ... so you just need to have a 'circle the wagons'-type attitude.

"We have 56 guys and they're going to be all business."

What is no secret to the Maroon and White, however, are the impressive exploits of highly touted All-American wide receiver Rich Musinski, who has 23 catches for 313 yards and four touchdowns on the season, three of which game in a 41-27 loss to Delaware last week. His 28 career touchdown passes are a school record, and are good for 10th on the A-10's all-time list.

"Musinski is really a great player," Whipple said. "Nobody's really stopped him. If you try to put pressure on their quarterback, he has you one-on-one, and he's beat everybody in our league. It's a real dilemma, and he's a great, great player."



Overall for the game, the Walter Payton Award candidate caught nine balls for 109 yards against the Blue Hens. It was the second time this season he has topped the 100-yard plateau, and the 18th time in his career. He currently sits fourth in A-10 history with 3,593 receiving yards.

"He's just very talented and very smart on the football field," Whipple added. "You just hope he doesn't get anything over the top, or they overthrow him because he's going to be open."

The Tribe is also receiving strong play from quarterback Lang Campbell. The reigning A-10 Offensive Player of the Week set career highs in completions (27), attempts (37) and yards (278) while tying his personal best with three touchdown passes against Delaware.

"Their quarterback is really playing well for them," Whipple said. "He's making the plays and they're going to pose a

Continued on page 10

GERALD H. LINGUA/COLLEGIAN

Tight end Sean Young has caught five passes for 33 yards on the season.

Why you should fill the Bill tonight

Continued from page H1

There's no reason to think that the first time the Yankees-Red Sox rivalry has really mattered in four years should take a backseat to the first hockey game of the season, against a subordinate opponent. But there is a solution.

The puck drops at 7 p.m. For 1 1/4 hours, the only thing you'll miss is the National Anthem (there will be one at the hockey game too), and the Fox announcers finding new ways to squeeze one more Bucky Dent and/or Bill Buckner reference into the pre-game show.

When the baseball game does start, you certainly wouldn't be the only Sox (or Yankee) fan inside the Mullins Center. There will be members of Red Sox Nation stationed everywhere from the press box to the popcorn stand, and even down at ice level. UMass coach Don Cahoon has stated a number of times since Boston advanced to the ALCS that he'd like to see the Sox win, and you'd better believe he'll be listening when the scores boom over the PA.

Not sure you'll get a score update? Consider that on Sept. 27, during Band Day, the loudest ovation that the crowd at the football game between UMass and James Madison gave wasn't for a great gridiron play, or even for the field-filling halftime show. No, it was in response to a losing Yankees score announced by O'Neill. You can bet your tuition that if anything important happens during the baseball game, the Mullins crowd will know about it shortly thereafter.

Of course, there's also a bribe involved. The first 2,000 people to jam their way into "The Bill" will get a brand spankin' new UMass hockey T-Shirt. And any college student who's realized it's laundry day late on a Sunday afternoon can appreciate the value of a free T-Shirt. One lucky puck head will also win a trip to Cancun for Spring Break.

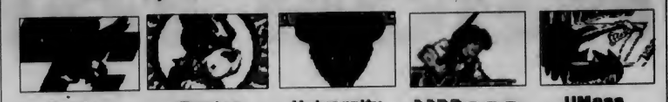
Even if "Operation 8k" isn't a technical success, a crowd of 6,000 would still be a sight to see, especially when UMass scores.

Yes, that score you saw less than a week ago was monstrous. Yes, 7-2 is never pretty. But that game, against St. Francis Xavier from Antigonish, Nova Scotia, came on no more than three days of official practice.

That loss also came against a team of tough, gritty and experienced Canadian players, the likes of which could probably crack any roster in D-I.

Not a hockey fan? Well here's a great chance to find out what you're missing — namely, the fastest sport on the planet that doesn't involve engines (discounting the Zamboni). You'll also find out what hockey is like at the college level. The raucous, passionate crowd is enough to get even the most dyed-in-the-wool Canadiphobe interested in the goings on.

Tonight represents the culmination of a long summer, and it's the first chance the Minutemen will have had in over six months to play a game that actually matters, to show off all of the things they learned in last year's Cinderella season.



The attendance record for a hockey game is 7,089. That record turns eight years old this season. Being No. 7,090, well, that's a UMass memory that ranks above any riot or party.

Need a reason to walk, drive, scoot, Segway, crawl, bike or stumble down to Mullins tonight? How about 8,000? They'll be there, primed and ready for the next step. And so should you.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Merritt_Collegian @yahoo.com

Special thanks to Katie Dwan, whose graphics work made this preview possible.

HockeyEastPlayerValueRankings

Boston College | Boston University | University of Maine | UMass | UMass Lowell forwards forwards forwards forwards forwards forwards

1- B. Eaves	5- F. Skladany	8- C. Shields	3- G. Mauldin	20- A. Martin
2- T. Voce	14- B.McConnell	21- T. Jackson	7- S. Werner	32- B. Walter
6- P. Eaves	18- M. Mullen	31- G. Moore	22- C. Capraro	37- E. Godoy
10- D. Spina	25- K. Magowan	R- L. Aguino	26- T. Vitek	40- D. O'Brien
11- R. Shannon	29- D. Vander-Gulik	39- D. Damon	33- M. Warner	45- B. Robins
26- C. Collins	40- D. Klema	R- J. Soares	43- P. Trovato	R- J. Tejchma defense defense defense defense defense defense

3- J.D. Forrest	4- B. Miller	14T- T. Barnes	1- T. Pock	7- J. Domish
6- A. Alberts	8- R. Whitney	25- J. Mushaluk	10- N. Kulper	22- P. Tormey
19- P. Harrold	9- J. Redlihs	27- P. Ryan	14T- M. Degon	R- C. Kinley
20- J. Adams	21- D. Spang	R- M. Lundin	18- J. Lang	29- M. Collar

goalies goalies goalies goalies goalies goalies

5- M. Kaltiainen	2- S. Fields	3- F. Doyle	7- G. Winer	11- C. Davidson
R- J. Pearce	R- J. Curry	6- J. Howard	R- W. Harper	13- P. Mammola

Merrimack College | University of New Hampshire | Northeastern University | Providence College forwards forwards forwards forwards forwards

17- M. Rosa	4- S. Saviano	12- M. Morris	13- P. Zingoni
20- B. Gough	9- S. Collins	16- J. Guerriero	30- C. Chaput
24- M. Johnson	15- P. Callander	36- E. Ortlip	R- C. McDonald
35- S. Crusco	23- N. Martz	R- R. Ortiz	34- J. Goodwin
R- M. Byrnes	27- J. Aikins	41- J. Santilli	38- T. Galda
R- J. Black	R- B. Hemingway	44- T. Reschny	R- B. McCreary

defense defense defense defense defense

13- B. Schmidt	5- M. Lubesnick	11- T. Judy		2- S. Wood
16- D. Johnson	6- T. Horst	26- D. Grover		17- J. Pemberton
20- E. Pedersen	12- T. Teplitsky	R- S. Birnstill		23- E. Lundberg
R- D. Sullivan	15- M. Mounsey	30- C. Tomes		28- J. Platt

goalies goalies goalies goalies goalies

9- C. Guenther	1- M. Ayers	8- K. Gibson		4- B. Goepfert
R- J. Healey	10- J. Pietrasiak	12- T. Heneroty		14- D. Cacciola

UMASS HOCKEY OPERATION 8K
DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE Sponsored by The Gazette and News 40 Zo

WE WANT 8,000!
TO BREAK THE UMASS HOCKEY SINGLE GAME ATTENDANCE RECORD

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE TICKETS
UMASS HOCKEY vs. CONNECTICUT HUSKIES
THURSDAY • OCTOBER 9TH • 7:00 PM
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

The Hospitality Group | Coca-Cola | Northeast dental | COBALT Club & restaurant
FREE T-SHIRTS FOR THE FIRST 2,000 FANS!

ONE LUCKY WINNER WILL WALK AWAY WITH A FREE SPRINGBREAK TRIP TO CANCUN
COURTESY OF FLIPNATION.COM • 1-877-4CANCUN

UMASS STUDENT TICKETS FREE!
with valid UMass Undergraduate Student ID
STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP LOCATIONS
MULLINS CENTER • CAMPUS CENTER
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS
TICKET OFFICE
545-0810

Belgian Waffles with Strawberries & Whipped Cream * Nova Scotia Lox * Vegan Omelettes * Chili Rellenos * Multigrain Pancakes *Build-Your-Own Omelettes * Soy Sausage *Vegan Pancakes * Potato Latkes * Homefries *

NICK'S
For the morning after...
Open for Breakfast
63 MAIN STREET
AMHERST
Mon-Fri 6:30-2
Sat & Sun 7-2
OCMP accepted
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT FOR THE FALL SEMESTER

*Homemade Cheese Blintzes * Homemade Maple Pork Sausage * Huevos Rancheros * Vegan French Toast * Tofu Veggie Scrambles *

Race for the FleetCenter

COURTESY HOCKEY EAST

Who will win it all?

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

"Every year we say the same thing. Our season begins and ends at the FleetCenter." — Hockey East Commissioner Joe Bertagna.

Train tracks run beneath the ice. Orange construction signs litter the surrounding block. And these days, pedestrians could trip over the FleetCenter if they're not careful. The Fleet is known by most as the home of Boston's two professional winter franchises, a place where some of the biggest musical acts perform and even as a place to host exhibitions from circuses to ice shows.

But it is also the center of the Hockey East world.

Sure, it only hosts three postseason games and the Beanpot tournament, but it's more than just a building. To Hockey East teams, the FleetCenter is a symbol of excellence, a symbol of being a national power, a symbol of being among the best teams in college hockey.

For most Hockey East coaches, however, that is far from enough.

"I think given the fact that we had never been [to the FleetCenter] before and that we had won a couple of great games to get there last year certainly gave us a feeling of satisfaction," Massachusetts coach Don Cahoon said. "But it was empty in the end. We didn't get to play for anything. We wanted to play in a championship game, wanted to be in the national tournament.

"At the end of the year, the teams in our league are measuring it that way. It's nice to have a good team and be in the mix, but you need to walk away with something saying you're a little bit better than the rest. That's what the ambition is here."

In order to get to the Hockey East tournament, teams not only need to survive the rigors of a 24-game conference schedule against some of the best teams in college hockey, but also to get through a best-of-three series against hungry teams with nothing to lose. No first-round series is safe, as evidenced by UMass' two-game sweep at Maine last year and the 1998 playoffs, which saw No. 8 Merrimack, No. 6 Maine and No. 5 UMass Lowell all move on.

As to who will be on top when the dust settles at the Fleet in March...

"That could be anybody," Boston University coach Jack Parker said. "I could tell you in all probability the team that will be on top for the regular season is Boston College. They've been picked to do that, and I think that's a good pick because they've got so much offensive talent, something a lot of schools don't have. But then when you get into single elimination in the playoffs that could be anyone who's hot at the end of the year."

The coaches unanimously voted for BC to take the regular season title this year, but the playoffs are a completely different story, and with a conference as tough as Hockey East, it's hard to see who you might see in the championship game.

"Right now, (laughs) I guess Boston College," Maine coach Tim Whitehead said. "I voted for them to be ranked number one, because I respect what they have coming back. Obviously that was a tough choice, because I could have picked a variety of teams there. So, perhaps I would say Boston College, but if you ask me in two weeks, I'll have a different answer. I've been in this too long to know people's predictions are going to change each month you ask them."

In this week's sports luncheon at UMass, Cahoon cited U.S. College Hockey Online columnist Dave Hendrickson's article quoting several coaches on who they see as the top team in Hockey East at this point.

"[Boston College] is clearly the team to beat in our league." — New Hampshire coach Dick Umile.

"BC, on paper, is far and above everyone else in the league." — Boston University coach Jack Parker

"BC is BC. They have everything coming back." — Merrimack coach Chris Serino

"Boston College is clearly the favorite." — Providence coach Paul Pooley

"BC is returning 97.4 percent of its offense. I like them." — UMass-Lowell coach Blaise MacDonald.

But that doesn't make BC a shoo-in.

"Any time you're in the top bracket in Hockey East, and I think we've learned that in the last couple of years, being picked first doesn't mean you're going to finish first," said Umile, whose New Hampshire squad won the postseason tournament for the second straight year.

Cahoon was on the same page with the rest of the league's bench bosses, but sees the FleetCenter as a wide-open affair.

"BC is the most skilled team, far and above in terms of what their experience is and what they're bringing back from a very successful juggernaut a year ago," Cahoon said. "BU's team defensively is very, very solid. The question that people are posing is where they are going to get their scoring from. I think they've got some pretty good players and they're going to pound people, play such tight defense, and they've got Fields so they'll be in the mix. New Hampshire has a lot of holes to fill but they've got a lot of quality recruits that they've brought in over the last couple years.

"I think the rest of us, including Maine are a little more suspect than that and it's going to be a matter of which team functions the best, which team plays within itself, which team finds its way in terms of the way they need to play in order to be able to win a lot of games and get themselves to the FleetCenter."

Coach after coach sees things the same way. Any team in Hockey East, including those that fell to the bottom last year, could be on top when the smoke clears in just over five months. And finally, Dick Umile successfully sums up everything that the coaches before him were trying to say.

"I don't know that there's one particular team. Any time that you get to the FleetCenter you better be scared when you get there because to get to the FleetCenter is very difficult, so anybody that gets there is a very good team. Getting to the FleetCenter is as hard as it is qualifying for the NCAA Tournament. It's a major task getting there. Sometimes I think we should have this big cup for getting there because it's so difficult."

ALL COACH PICTURES LINDSAY CLARK COLLEGIAN

Clockwise from left: Blaize MacDonald, Dick Umile, and Jack Parker will fight for the Hockey East crown this year.

Hockey East Coaches	Massachusetts Daily Collegian
1) Boston College (8)	1) Boston College
2) New Hampshire (1)	2) Boston University
3) Boston University	3) New Hampshire
4) Maine	4) Massachusetts
5) Massachusetts	5) Maine
6) Providence	6) Providence
7) UMass-Lowell	7) Northeastern
8) Northeastern	8) UMass Lowell
9) Merrimack	9) Merrimack

PHOTOS.

The Daily Collegian

Friday, October 10, 2003 New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 Volume CXIV Issue 28

Celebration became violent, police say

Third disturbance this week

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Residential Area of the University of Massachusetts saw another celebration by students following the Red Sox victory over the New York Yankees on Wednesday night. The UMass Police Department made three arrests during the disturbance.

UMass Police Department is stopping short of calling the gathering a riot although force was used to disperse the crowd.

All three of the arrested were UMass students. Alpar Solyom, 19, was charged with inciting a riot, failure to disperse in the riot, persons under 21 in possession of alcohol and disorderly conduct. Thomas J. White, 18, was charged with trespassing on state property, failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct. Thomas W. Folz-Donahue, 18, was charged with failure to disperse in a riot, disorderly conduct, and mistreatment or interference with a police dog or horse.

According to many students this celebration is the tamest of the three that have occurred in the residential area since Saturday. There was only one small fight near the Southwest Pyramids, the UMPD reported, but said it was quickly broken up. Various female students exposed their chests to the crowd.

Only one bonfire was set, no one repeated the stunt of the "DC Jumper" and no cars were overturned. The size of the crowd was down from the number of students at Monday's rally, which was estimated by UMPD at 2,200. Originally, the UMPD estimated 400 to 500 students showed up for the celebration. However, a fire alarm in John Quincy Adams Hall was pulled, which resulted in the crowd growing to nearly 1,000 people.

At 12:24 a.m., between 15 and 20 police in riot gear dispersed the crowd with smoke, horse-mounted police and Oleoresin Capsicum guns. The OC gun shoots paintballs filled with a pepper spray-like substance.

UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick T. Archbald said he determined that the celebration had evolved into a disturbance after students began pushing and shoving one another. It was shortly after police asked the crowd to leave that force was used, Archbald said.

"There was an order to disperse over the PA, but I don't think the crowd heard," Archbald said.

When many in the crowd did not obey the request, police used gas canisters in order to drive people back.

After the first use of smoke, mounted officers rode through the Pyramids and the crowd ran away. At that point, UMPD fired OC into the crowd.

Around 12:50 a.m., in the area between J.Q.A. Hall and MacKimmie Hall, several hundred students stood in a cloud of smoke, while police fired rounds of their OC guns.

Meanwhile, the action in front of Washington and Cance Halls had become subdued. However, police returning to the area found a crowd of about 40 people that had formed, taunting police.

A few students began yelling expletives at the returning cops. Others protested that the gathering was a "peaceful celebration."

"Being part of a peaceful, celebratory assembly where I pay to live, and to have the [police] shoot me for that, is wrong," said Duncan Schilcher, a junior. "To be told to leave a public quad with a gun in my face is really wrong."

The group of students, apparently responding to police movement, ran back and forth from Cance Hall's front door to the top of the entrance ramp. Most of the group finally ran inside the building after a mounted officer chased the crowd toward the front of the building at around 1 a.m.

About five minutes later, an unidentified student threw an explosive device out of a fourth floor bathroom of the dorm and into the courtyard. Some Residential Assistants standing in the building's lobby expressed shock at the explosion.

The R.A.s also said they were frustrated with the amount of overtime they have had to work because of this week's celebrations.

"We're not getting paid overtime for this," said Carrie Sallgren, an R.A. of Cance.

"I need a note [to give to my professor], because I haven't had time to study for my exam," said Johari Allen-Davis, also an R.A.

The building staff also expressed resentment toward students for the continual celebrations.

"I'm a student too," said Residential Director Erica Piedade. "I'm mad about the amount of money we're all gonna have to pay for this."

Crowd activity at Southwest was diminished by around 1:15a.m. There were still reports, however, of a small group of students congregating at the Pyramids, attempting to light paper on fire.

Ikaika Arnado contributed to this report.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Table Manners

Carol McGuiggan, right, was the instructor at an etiquette dinner last night at the Campus Center Hotel. Over 100 people signed up for the dinner that was sponsored by the Alumni Association, Ernst & Young and University Catering.

UMass receives large grant

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

While the state legislature continues to cut the University of Massachusetts budget by $150 million in the last two years, the University will receive a boost in the form of the largest research grant it has ever been awarded.

Aided by a promise from Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney for $5 million of the state's $1.3 billion budget, the National Science Foundation chose UMass as the headquarters and recipient of a $17 million grant for a new engineering research center.

The $40 million research center, called the Center for Collaborative Adaptive Sensing of the Atmosphere, or CASA, is one of four centers created as a result of a competition between 120 teams vying for the NSF grant.

"We won the most prestigious grant that there is for engineering research in the nation," said David McLaughlin, director of CASA and professor of Engineering at UMass. "That broadcasts to the world that UMass is performing at first rank."

Funding will also be provided in part by nearly $6 million from corporations and in-kind donations as well as by $12 million in support from contributions coming from other academic partners.

CASA researchers will focus on prediction, detection and understanding of severe storms and other atmospheric and airborne hazards. The center is expected to increase the warning time for tornados, flash floods and other weather related disturbances, while also providing more timely and accurate forecasts. According to McLaughlin, weather presently impacts 25 percent of gross national product and has massive impact on the economy every year.

"The problem is today we lose several hundred people per year to tornados, flash floods and hurricanes ... and the financial consequence of these events totals $15 billion each year in the U.S. That's the big societal problem that we're tackling," McLaughlin said. "What's needed is better tracking, better predictions and better warnings against these hazards."

UMass, already the third-ranked research institution [when its five campuses are combined] in a state that features celebrated names such as Harvard and MIT, will be the leader of a team that includes Colorado State University, the University of Oklahoma and the University of Puerto Rico at Mayaguez. "We had top draw expertise in computer science and the engineering disciplines," McLaughlin said. "We assembled a nationwide team that had all the expertise needed to tackle the problem."

According to McLaughlin, the project will include specialized research labs at all of the other academic partner campuses. The CASA research center at UMass will encompass approximately 7,000 square feet within the University's engineering complex.

CASA can overcome the blind spots created by Earth's curvature and other obstructions such as mountains and buildings by arranging dense networks of radars that operate at short range. The radars will communicate with one another and adjust their sensing strategies in response to evolving weather. New meteorological software will power this radar data to organizations that need weather data for decision making such as government, emergency managers, and private industry.

McLaughlin said the inspiration for CASA came after a congressional hearing following a killer tornado outbreak in May 1999, and members of the UMass engineering department were asked how their work with tornado chasing could improve the nations ability to detect and predict against them.

"We had to create a new academic discipline that marries computer science, radar, civil engineering, meteorology, and sociology." McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin said he and others members of the University took a creative leap and figured that they should be able to engineer networks of radars installed on cell towers across the country: this could dramatically improve how we are able to detect and respond to tornados and other weather hazards. Today's forecasting and warning systems use data from long-range radars that have limited ability to observe the lower part of the atmosphere and cannot detect the full vertical rotation of most tornados.

According to McLaughlin, tornado warnings are false alarms 80 percent of the time. "We think we can cut that down to 20 [percent]," McLaughlin said.

He added that the airline industry loses between $1 to 2 billion per year in weather related delays and cancellations.

"This system could save hundreds of millions of dollars per year by improved thunderstorm forecasting," he said.

The radars being developed by CASA are about three-feet around and will cost anywhere from $50,000 to $75,000 each to build. McLaughlin said. According to him, CASA plans to build several dozen of these radars throughout the five-year duration of the initial grant with money pooled

Continued on page 2

Pilgrims to parade for peace

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The first annual "Children of the Sun Pilgrimage to One People One Earth" will be begin on Sunday Oct. 12, and will last through Columbus Day weekend. The event will begin as a parade at 10:30 a.m. on the Hagis Mall and will march into Amherst Common, culminating into a festival.

The parade will include people from various groups that promote environmentally friendly causes, as well as political, cultural, spiritual and educational groups. These groups range from holistic health practitioners and organic farmers to animal rights groups.

One People One Earth, the group organizing the event, is looking to recruit hundreds of children for the parade. The group also wants puppets, banners, flags, music artists, speakers, solar energy cars and other eco-friendly vehicles to mark the parade.

The event after the parade, which will take place on Amherst Common, will include speakers, multi-cultural performances, solar energy exhibits, an animal show, a hemp and earth-friendly fashion show, musicians, spoken word and artists. The group also said that any organization or business that promotes the festival's "all life is sacred" theme is welcome to set up a table at the event.

Robin MacRostie, a parade organizer said that One People One Earth is continuing to look for more parade participants. "We're still looking for drummers or people who can play instruments, as well as people who would like to hold flags and banners. People who would like to come and wear their national dress are also welcome," MacRostie said.

One People One Earth is hoping that among their other causes, their promotion to conserve energy, will last through the weekend for "Unplug America — Give Earth a Rest Day" on Monday, Oct. 13. This day was started in 1992 by the indigenous peoples as a way to promote the "changing unhealthy patterns of consumption and the continued production of poisons that destroy our environment," according to the group's Web site.

Some members of One People One Earth are walking the Mohawk Trail in Charlemont in recognition of this day. The reason the participants are choosing to walk this particular trail is because this is the place where various peacemakers came and planted trees called "Pines of Peace." This part of land is of particular interest of the local Cherokee tribe, who would like the state park around the "Peace Trees" to be renamed from the

Continued on page 2

Pulitzer Prize-winning author speaks on travels and writing at Memorial Hall

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Correspondent

Pulitzer Prize-winning author Tracy Kidder spoke to an audience of about 50 in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon about his latest book, "Mountains Beyond Mountains."

"Mountains," which tells the story of Dr. Paul Farmer, a major force in revolutionizing international health, "is just a wild story ... a great love story," Kidder said.

As a young man, Farmer had moved to Haiti to be a medical anthropologist, but when he saw the massive suffering there, "He knew anthropology wouldn't be adequate," Kidder said.

Farmer and Boston businessman Tom White then co-founded Partners in Health, a nonprofit organization, and started building health care facilities in Haiti. At the same time, Farmer earned his medical degree at Harvard, as well as a Ph.D. in Anthropology.

Kidder and Farmer initially met in 1994, while Kidder was in Haiti reporting on U.S. troops. They kept in touch through occasional notes and e-mails, and in 2000, Farmer invited Kidder to Haiti to visit him.

"I just knew I should follow this up," Kidder said. "It's a little ironic for me," he said on going to great lengths to research this book, because he had previously done mostly local writing and had not planned on starting to travel later in his career.

Haiti was not the only place that Kidder journeyed. He also followed Farmer to Cuba, Russia, Peru and Mexico. During this time, Kidder filled 75 notebooks with research, transformed his notes into a 2,000-page draft, and eventually streamlined the stories into a 300-page book.

"I'm glad I did it," he said. "It was exhilarating."

Kidder said that Partners in Health battled the World Health Organization to implement plans for fighting AIDS and tuberculosis in Haiti because the WHO said it wasn't considered "cost-effective" to do so. In actuality, it had never been attempted before, and Farmer and his fellow health advocates managed to drive prices for the drugs down by 95 percent.

All the care is free for patients. Although they are required to pay 80 cents per doctor's visit, Farmer has worked around that policy, requiring instead that everyone "except for women and children, the destitute, and the seriously ill" pay the fee.

Kidder said he has previously been asked if he is trying to raise money for Partners in Health.

"I said reflexively, 'I don't think it's my place to do that.'"

Kidder then said he wrote an "honest" book, and he hopes that maybe it can help the situation in Haiti.

"Haiti is a catastrophe," he said. "It has the fingerprints of France and the U.S. all over it."

Kidder is also the author of several nonfiction books set in the Pioneer Valley, including "House," which chronicles the building of a home in Amherst; and "Old Friends," which tells the story of residents in a Northampton nursing home. He won a Pulitzer Prize in 1981 for his "Soul of a New Machine," a book about computer building.

The University of Massachusetts Journalism Department sponsored Kidder's talk.

Editorial/Opinion
Page 3
Inappropriate? New Board Game Stirs Controversy
Arts & Living
Page 4
It's All Good Good Charlotte storms UMass
Sports
Page 8
Kick Start UMass hockey team returns victorious
Comics/Classifieds
Page 7

COURTESY AMELIA P. LINCOLN

Author Tracy Kidder speaks about his work following Dr. Paul Farmer, an advocate for international health reform.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Founder
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Fergus Sabiiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Logatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Fighting consumption

Continued from page 1

Mohawk State Park to "The Peace Park."

The parade and festival mark the beginning of a larger peace walk by Brother North Star, one of the pilgrims of the group. North Star has gone on Peace Walks through 19 different countries, and is launching the "Children of the Sun Pilgrimage to One People One Earth" from the Pioneer Valley.

The Children of the Sun Pilgrimage has a mission to "roll back the carpet of consumption" and emphasize that this movement begins within each individual person's awareness of his or her own consumption of consumer goods, fossil fuels and other items.

The other goal of the group is to follow the path of Sister Clare Carter of Nipponsan Myohojl Buddhist Order, a group that meets at the Peace Pagoda temple in Leverett. One People One Earth follows her legacy by giving speeches and holding festivals about reversing the effects of slavery and racism.

On the Net: www.onepeo-pleoneearth.org, and click on the link, "Children of the Sun."

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"How do you feel about the recent gatherings in Southwest in response to the Red Sox?"

"I think that the riots are good, because they create a dialogue about what authority means ... and what an insurrectionary moment is."
Alex Hirsch
senior
STPEC

"It reveals the ugly nature of competitive sports and beer combined. It's a masculinity parade."
Audrey Fisher
senior
Wildlife conservation

"I think it's childish."
Bleay Abebe
senior
Mechanical Engineering

"I think that they're working off of tradition; it's expected of them so they are following suit."
Dan Feeney
senior
Anthropology major

"I think that they're disgraceful. The school's reputation is sliding as is and people doing this makes it worse."
Kat McLaughlin
grad student
Public Health

"I think people are trying to live up to a reputation."
Nicole Rand
sophomore
Elementary Education

Rally will honor tolerance

This Saturday, a number of organizations including the Stonewall Center and Tapestry Health, a non-profit organization providing health services to communities in Western Massachusetts, will mark the 15th anniversary of National Coming Out Day.

The Pride Alliance will host a rally on the Student Union steps from noon to 1 p.m. to allow student speakers to share stories of their challenges in becoming openly gay. Michael McKinstry, a member of the steering committee for the Pride Alliance said the purpose of the rally is to allow students who are already "out" to talk to people and encourage others to not be ashamed of their homosexuality.

"The point of the day is to break down the silence and to stress that there should not be a stigma about coming out," said McKintsry.

The Stonewall center will also encourage students who support the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) community to wear white shirts and blue jeans.

In honor of the day, Tapestry Health will have a table on the sidewalk near BankNorth on Main Street in downtown Northampton. The table will provide material about services geared toward the GLBT community and information about Tapestry's general health care services. In addition, the center will give out condoms, balloons and cookies.

Tapestry Health staff members will also be wearing purple ribbons to commemorate National Coming Out Day.

"This is our third or fourth year doing this," said Lucy Hartry of Tapestry Health. "We gave everyone a ribbon to wear tomorrow so we would have the opportunity to explain to people why we are wearing them."

- Ferron Sabriker

Democratic rivals aim their fire at newcomer Clark in debate

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

PHOENIX (AP) — Democratic presidential hopefuls focused fire on Wesley Clark in campaign debate Thursday night, deriding the retired general as a belated convert to their party — and indecisive to boot.

"I did not vote for George Bush. I voted for Al Gore," Clark retorted in the most contentious of four debates to date in the battle for the Democratic nomination.

Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean and Sens. John Kerry, Joe Lieberman and John Edwards took turns criticizing Clark, saying he was speaking warmly of Bush as recently as 2001, and more recently switched positions to oppose the war with Iraq.

Clark struck an above-the-fray pose at one point, insisting, "I'm not going to attack a fellow Democrat."

But even that drew a sharp response from his rivals, primed to attack the retired Army general who jumped to a lead in some national polls within days of his entry into the race in September.

"I want to say ... welcome to the Democratic presidential campaign," Lieberman said. "Look, none of us are above questioning."

After the debate, Clark said the criticism came as no surprise.

"When you're the front-runner, you have to expect that," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. Although he leads in national surveys, he trails his rivals in state polls, including a recent New Hampshire survey. With the pace of the campaign quickening, the Democrats traded jabs over economic policy as well.

Gephardt told a questioner in the debate audience he favors repealing Bush's tax cuts in their entirety, and insisted that would not result in an increase in her taxes.

But Kerry, who favors retaining Bush's tax cuts only for middle-income individuals, said, "You're going to pay more tax" if all cuts are repealed.

The field of Democratic contenders — shrunken by one with Florida Sen. Bob Graham's withdrawal from the race — met onstage at the Orpheum Theater in Phoenix, capital of a state that holds an early primary on Feb. 3. For the first half of the debate, the candidates sat on tall chairs in front of identical lecterns, each one bearing a CNN logo. The cable network sponsored the debate, and Judy Woodruff, a network anchor, served as moderator.

The format switched halfway through. The lecterns disappeared, the men shed their suit jackets and fielded questions from the audience — the first time in any of the debates that the candidates have responded to questions from men and women whose votes will prove decisive in the early primary states.

When they weren't sparring with one another, Democrats took time to heap fresh criticism on Bush's postwar policy in Iraq, faulting him for failing to win significant help from other countries.

"You remember on your report card you had your English grade, your history grade and then it said, plays well together? He flunked that part," jabbed Gephardt of Missouri.

Former Sen. Carol Moseley Braun of Illinois made a similar point, saying, "I think we have to work well with others and begin to bring our troops home with honor."

Clark — who voted for Republicans Richard Nixon, Ronald Reagan and George H. Bush for the White House — labored to fend off the criticism from the early moments of the debate. "I would never have voted for war. The war was an unnecessary war and it's been a huge strategic mistake for the country," he said.

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS Auto & Truck Rentals
Oops!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

New research center will warn of weather disasters

Continued from page 1

from the entire enterprise including all of its partners.

McLaughlin added that today's big high-power weather radars, many of which have 30-foot antennas and can reach three stories in height, cost about $5 million to build.

He estimated that it is going to take CASA one year to develop the first radar prototype and then another six months to get it installed and tested. The first field test of CASA will be in mid-2005 in Oklahoma's "Tornado Alley," and will cover about 20 percent of the state.

The improved ability to observe the lower atmosphere also has benefits when it comes to the predicting of chemical and biological and other pollutants transported through low-level winds by weapons of mass destruction. According to McLaughlin, this is a topic of current concern, for there is no current technology on the planet that is capable of mapping these winds that could transport such agents.

"The CASA system would do that," he said.

CASA will also operate in partnership with companies including Raytheon, IBM Corp. and The Weather Channel, among others, who will help with money, equipment and expertise. According to McLaughlin, all patents and intellectual properties are going to be shared with all of the partners.

"By having them embedded with us it helps to optimize the educational experience," McLaughlin said. "We learn from them and they learn from us."

The National Severe Storms Laboratory, the National Weather Service, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and the Massachusetts Department of Education will also be additional government partners. McLaughlin said it gives the partners access to students, creating a situation to potentially hire them as company employees.

The NSF, an independent federal agency that supports fundamental research and education across all fields of science and engineering, will provide roughly $17 million to each of the four new centers, over the next five years. The estimated initial investment for NSF will total $68 million. The other new center headquarters are located at Colorado State University in Fort Collins, the University of Kansas in Lawrence and the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, each focusing on a specific area of research.

The NSF currently funds 24 engineering research centers nationwide. McLaughlin said there will be critical reviews of CASA by NSF reviewers in three years and again in six years, where progress will be observed regarding their investment.

"There is every expectation that it will be renewed," McLaughlin said.

The centers are expected to become independent after the maximum 10-year duration of NSF support comes to an end.

Silver-Medal winner at the Great American Beer Festival for ABC's Heather Ale, made with Highlands Purple Flower!
BURGERS • WINGS • BEER
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL' MIDNIGHT
PING PONG
DARTS
POOL
LIVE MUSIC
NO COVER CHARGE
EVERYTHING UNDER ONE ROOF
JAZZ • BLUES • FUNK • KARAOKE
OCMP
253-4400
24 North Pleasant Street • www.amherstbrewing.com • Amherst Center

Life is Calling. How far will you go?
General Information Meeting
Wednesday, October 15 3:00 - 5:00 p.m.
Campus Center, Room 905-09
www.peacecorps.gov * 800.424.8580

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
Friday, October 10, 2003
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Urban Outfitters: Board game crosses a fine line

Urban Outfitters, a popular clothing store for young adults, now has a new accessory to pair with your purchase, besides belts and earrings. Ghettopoly is the board game with such a high demand that it has been selling out in Urban Outfitters around the nation.

The game is a knock-off Monopoly, but has been designed with a catchpenny appeal. Ghettopoly is being marketed toward a young crowd, who are an excellent reflection of the game's maturity level. The mascot for Ghettopoly is a gun welding, marijuana smoking, 40 oz, guzzling black man, donning a large gold chain and a headband. Rather than the traditional Park Place and B + O Railroad, landmarks include Harlem, the Bronx, a gun shop, Westside Llquors and Smitty's XXX.

Card instructions include phrases like "You got da whole neighborhood addicted to crack, collect $50." Players compete to build Projects, rob banks and receive warnings to "pay up," or they might find themselves in the emergency room.

While the creator of the game, David Chang, claims the game was created for entertainment value only, black rights activists say the game sends a racist message.

Undoubtedly, Ghettopoly is crude, racist and offensive. It advertises a message about a lifestyle highly popularized in our culture — and an inaccurate message wallowing in the stereotypical depths of ignorance. Sadly, Ghettopoly may simply be a bi-product of a cultural phenomenon — the likeness of an image marketed by the hip-hop industry — as evidenced by the details of the game mirroring the subject matter of many MTV hip-hop and rap music videos.

The behaviors and stereotypes associated with Ghettopoly are not exclusive to the black community. Nor is life in the projects, drug trafficking or poverty. These are problems and issues common to all races and all creeds of human beings. However, the game submits its content as nothing more than comedy.

Urban Outfitters is not the appropriate place to market a game that could leave such a lasting impression on a highly impressionable group of minds; it should be pulled from the shelves.

Young Americans are already out of touch with the reality, thanks to teen magazines, a plethora of pop star advertising campaigns and reality TV. Urban Outfitters, which begins its pant sizing with a 24" waist, is clearly tailored for customers who barely brush on the doors of adulthood. Let's not fuel ignorance.

The game preaches degrading comedy and allows for no disclaimer that its cultural message speaks of the same old stereotypical comedy steeped in a history trailing back to black ministerial shows of the 1800s. It packages the same stereotypes in a playful board game and proclaims to create a "new" fad. This is a problem ... and not simply an African American's one. It should unsettle anyone unnerved by bigotry who looks beyond the colorful packaging.

While Ghettopoly may be more of a gag gift than a game — a piece that will be purchased, played once and thrown in the back of the closet with Dream Phone — its cultural messages still remain as ever pungent. We at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian will not presume to be so naive as to say that young adults won't find these same, or even more powerful, cultural messages anywhere else in their lives. Indeed, they are bombarded at every turn. And pulling this game from the shelves won't change the world's bigotry.

But it can be a start.

Information for this editorial was obtained from ghettopoly.com and usatoday.com.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Making a judgement call

Emilie Duggan

In a perfect world, newspapers don't have to worry about whether the content in their pages is original; stories get written on time, and there is no pressure for writers to produce consistently stellar work on a daily basis.

This, however, is not even a remotely perfect world.

Members of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian have taken on the task of producing a quality newspaper five days a week. Our goal is for this paper to accurately reflect our community and our world. We have deadlines, space constraints and budget concerns. And we have schoolwork. On top of everything we do here, we are all students, too.

Some of us have heavier course loads than others, and it is a constant battle as to whether our schoolwork or our news work will come first. There are nights the paper doesn't get put to bed until the wee hours of the morning, but we're still in here early the next day. We pop in-between classes to make sure everything is on track for the next edition. We are wired on coffee and hopped up on pixie sticks — whatever it takes to have the energy to make it through another night so the campus will have a newspaper in the morning.

We sacrifice sleep and health so the paper will get produced. We skip class to write an emergency article or column. We are the dedicated, the die-hards. The ones who are here every night, whether we have an article due or not. We put more pressure on ourselves than anyone else ever could. All of this to put out a newspaper we can be proud of — that you can be proud of.

We lose our minds doing this sometimes. Our pets get neglected, plants die and roommates forget what we look like. Our parents know that if they can't reach us where we live, they can call the newsroom and find us here. We are notorious for our seeming lack of dedication to our classes, yet we somehow manage to get every assignment completed. We don't eat regularly; we don't sleep nearly as much as we should. Everything takes a backseat to anything that might have something to do with the paper.

We are so caught up in putting out a quality product that we forget we are only human. We run ourselves ragged and only when it's too late do we realize something has to give. Sometimes, it is the ability to use our inherent sense of good judgement. And, it is when our judgment is failing that the chance is high that we will be unduly influenced in ways we never would be under less taxing situations.

We are so caught up in putting out a quality product that we forget we are only human. We run ourselves ragged and only when it's too late do we realize that something has to give. Sometimes, its the ability to use our inherent sense of good judgement.

If it's so stressful, then why don't we do something else? We complain and bemoan our situations. But, when it comes down to it, we love every minute of it. We live journalism like an athlete lives his sport, a musician lives his music, or a junkie lives his drug. We need what we do, madness, hard decisions and all.

All that said, it would have been so easy for the editors of this paper to sweep under the rug the fact that one of our writers may have plagiarized a review that ran a few days ago. But, they didn't. They chose instead to be honest; to let you know what happened and what has been done about it. There are those who say the writer should have been fired instead of just suspended. To those people I say this: Until you have been in the position where you have to decide what is and isn't right, you cannot say we have made a bad call.

This could have happened to any of us. Every student on this campus has been there: We have a paper to turn in and can't find words of our own to say what we need to. The words are there, though, in the book or the newspaper in front of us, and it would be so easy to just rephrase them, make them our own without attribution. Some of us do it; some of us don't. But I challenge any of you to tell me that you haven't at least thought about it. Find me someone who says they have never entertained the idea of not sourcing their work, and I'll show you someone who is lying.

The writer in question has assured the editors that this has never happened before and would never happen again. There is no reason not to believe him. The 90 stories with this writer's byline were carefully scrutinized. No other evidence of wrongdoing was found. It was decided this was a one-time occurrence, and now it is time to move on. To be clear, however, this is not something to be proud of, and it's not something I endorse. But it's not necessarily something to condemn someone for either.

Understand we are a learning paper. We do the best we can with the resources we have, and we try our hardest to be professional in every way. We do a good job of pretending to be full-grown, responsible adults, but the truth is that we are still students. We still make mistakes, and we will learn from them, but that is what college is for.

Down here, there are differing opinions about what happened this past week, but it is rare for us to all agree on anything. One thing is certain: no matter how much bickering there is amongst the staff of The Collegian, we don't turn our backs on one of our own.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

On equality and fair judgment

Morris Singer

In a world seemingly driven more by realism, perhaps every nation should be given the chance to defend itself from terror, war and violence.

Although the last half of the previous century was defined by increasing multilateralism and faith in trans-national organizations, shown by the seemingly exponential development of such entities, the world has reached a new era in which powerful nations seem to exercise their will on a more unilateral basis, regarding coordination of efforts across a multi-national front as more of a hindrance and formality, a vestigial or primitive part of foreign affairs and international policymaking.

The United States has provided such examples in recent years, specifically in its pursuit of terrorism overseas. America has endured wars in the Middle East for the sake of her domestic security. The justification of the military action in Afghanistan has been that the security of America, her interests and her citizens, depend on the rooting out of terrorists and nations supportive of terrorism.

The world as a whole stood by and watched the United States take on Afghanistan after Sept. 11, 2001. Although resistance and protest did exist to some degree, many nations were quick to jump on the bandwagon in supporting U.S. forces throughout its campaign in the name of justice for terrorists. The "coalition" was not militarily necessary, but was arguably politically necessary. The U.S. could have and would have acted alone, if required. Regardless, the war was not criticized.

The world, however, is quick to criticize other nations when they turn to the same tactics for much the same reasons.

The Associated Press reported Sunday that Israel struck a reported Islamic Jihad training base inside Syria, marking the first time Israel had taken military action in Syrian territory in three decades.

Instead of recognizing that the solution to Israel's security concern was the destruction of this training base, world leaders were quick to censure Israel in the harshest terms.

A nation can take the actions it needs to protect its country and its sovereignty, especially when another nation attacks it first — except when Isreal is involved.

"Many people across the globe feel that Israel is above the law," said Fayssal Mekdad, Syria's U.N. ambassador.

This seems to be a well established trend in world thinking: A nation can take the actions it needs to protect its country and its sovereignty, especially when another nation attacks it first — except when Israel is involved.

The widely-accepted U.S. attack on Afghanistan, including its removal of the Taliban from the country, which is remarkably similar (although on a larger scale) to Israel's attack on Syrian land, has been seen in much different light. In the case of Afghanistan, the U.S. removed from power a government which was understood to be harboring terrorist group al-Qaeda. Al-Qaeda was responsible for the attacks on the U.S. on Sept. 11, 2001.

In the case of Syria, Israel has attacked land in a country which is understood to be harboring terrorist group Islamic Jihad. Islamic Jihad is largely responsible for the attacks Israel has endured in recent years, including the attack Saturday in Haifa, which killed 19 innocent bystanders including four children.

Although the two situations are similar, the world has been quick to judge — and quick to do so more harshly and more unfairly than ever before — simply because the situation involves Israel.

In the most recent situation, multilateral approval was not necessary. Israel acted alone in the interest of her safety, using a conventional approach established by the example of the U.S. We should support Israel in her quest for safety and security, her actions on realist principles and the same acceptable methods that we have previously founded.

As Americans and as human beings, we need to be more careful in recognizing the similarities in these situations and in understanding the root causes for why so many see them as different. We need to be more careful — and less hypocritical — in our judgment of other nations. We need to stop critiicizing Israel simply for being Israel, and we need to realize when our criticism comes for such a reason.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

'Manny' reasons to love the Sox

Matt Brochu

Hey, you. Yeah. You — the chick with "COWBOY UP!!" written in her instant messager profile in the blue and red font. The closest you've ever come to baseball was last week when you got to second base in JQA with that kid with clammy hands. Many people are going to be upset with you and other bandwagon jumpers this week, but not me. Welcome aboard, baby, and join me on the play-off train.

Whether you saw Games 3 and 4 at Fenway Park for free with a girl on your shoulders (like I did), or you watched them on TV to get close-ups of Johnny Damon, it no longer matters. You could be anywhere in the world right now, but you're right here with me ... and I appreciate that. You see, I was actually like you once.

I hated baseball when I was little. At age seven, my dad brought me to my first Red Sox game on Father's day. To thank him, I fell asleep by the third inning, on his shoulders, and my Bubblicious ended up causing that bald spot on his head that never really grew back (Happy Father's Day, Dad). My favorite parts of the day, which of course had absolutely nothing to do with the game itself, were "the weird man with green hair" in front of us on the T and the look on my dad's face when I said that out loud. It was a great day with my favorite guy on the planet, but I probably would've been just as happy chilling in my sandbox. For years, my apathy toward the sport persisted ... until three seasons ago.

Now, not only am I a lifetime member of Red Sox nation, I'm also a client. So here's what I, and 10,000 of my closest friends here at the University of Massachusetts, love about the Red Sox:

- Like me in competition against any guy who can play guitar in a "chicks wanting us" contest, the Sox are always an underdog.
- My Remdawg pin — that I'll be wearing all week. If you see me, rub it for good luck. It's on my pants.
- Watching Manny play left field like the overweight kid in Little League with ADD.
- My beloved Souvenir Sluts (Jen, Kate, Lindsey, Moe, Rachel and Toni).
- Watching Pedro Martinez in the dugout when he's not pitching —both with and without a headband.
- The ambiguously gay duo of Tim Wakefield and Doug Mirabelli. I'd like to see their lives taped and made into a reality show, with every aspect of daily life driven by Tim giving and Doug receiving. I see it now. Grocery shopping; Wakefield picks up the Chef Boyardee and throws it into the shopping cart pushed by Mirabelli. Household chores; Timmy sweeps and Doug holds the dustpan. They hardly need to speak, because they use signs for everything. And every episode ends with, "Night Timmy." "Night Doug." Lights out, cue music ("Somewhere Our There" from that Feivel movie), with each hopelessly staring at the ceiling wondering when the other's going to make the first move.
- David Ortiz's homerun swing, where he whips the bat around his head like a lasso.
- Triple-fisting $5.00 Miller Lights.
- My roommate John's play-off beard.
- My autographed Marty Barrett card.
- People at Fenway waving at the jumbotron when they see they're on TV, instead of at the actual camera.
- That I thought Trot Nixon was black for about two years. The only more extreme case of this was in 1996 when I found out that Bing Crosby was the whitest man to ever exist. Honorable mention goes to the lead singer of Blessed Union of Souls.
- That they're not the (expletive)-ing Yankees.
- The owner of the Red Sox can't be seen in cheesy Visa commercials ... with a player who once dated Mariah Carey.
- Hugging and high-fiving random fat people at Fenway, without caring what STD's you might pick up, because Billy Mueller just hit a home run.
- COWBOY UP.
- Knowing that putting on your beat-up, sweat-stained, broken-brimmed Red Sox hat can make you friends no matter where you go ... even New York.

That about does it ... except maybe: when 1918 becomes nothing more than a number that Roger Clemens can't count up to.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Tuesday. Interested in applying? Contact Erika Lovley or Paige Cram.
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New voices in NoHo
Ari Hest at Iron Horse

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

When Ari Hest takes the stage of the Iron Horse Music Theater, to open for Stephen Kellogg Sunday night, he is hoping things go a little better than the last time he was in town.

"We played at some café, and everybody there was over 60. It was a few years ago, when I was in this band Synapses. We didn't have a good following in the area. We didn't really have good songs either," he joked. Though Hest and the rest of Synapses tried to get the crowd into the show, they weren't having it. "I am really looking forward to playing there again and wiping the slate clean," he said.

This visit to Northampton should be a little kinder to New York City native Hest. A little older and years ahead of his days as the Synapses front man, Ari Hest has made a name for himself as a solo artist and acquired a modest but dedicated following. Fans have flocked to the acoustic rocker's sound, somewhere between Peter Gabriel and Dave Matthews and with each show the crowds seem to grow a little bigger. It is thanks to this devoted contingent that Hest is where he is today.

Enlisting the help of the 'A-team,' a group of 100 or so fan representatives from around the country, to promote up-coming shows and record releases is a tool that Hest says has proved invaluable.

"It's nice when I get to a town I've never played before and people already know my songs," said Hest. "[Having a team of reps] gives you a lot of freedom. It's like owning your own record label or something." Without a big label to heavily promote him, Hest feels it is vital for independent artists to take the initiative, mobilize and spread the word.

Like Ari Hest, Charlotte Martin has relied heavily on word-of-mouth to get her music out to a larger audience. It was through the grapevine that one very important person came upon her EP 'In Parenthesis.' Howie Day, rapidly rising acoustic rocker, was in search of an opening act for his fall tour when some told him about Martin and her unique and sometimes haunting piano driven sound.

"He was going through a lot of CDs trying to find someone, and then he was given mine and he was really impressed," said the Indiana native. "Or at least that's what he told me," she laughed.

When Day offered her the opening spot for a string of tour dates across North America, which recently brought her to Providence, she readily accepted. "The more people that can hear my music, the better" Martin said.

At five feet even in height, the diminutive Martin looks fairly unassuming. No one would ever suspect that behind the long blonde hair and wide eyes this former Illinois beauty queen hides the ferocity that emerges when she sits behind a keyboard.

From the moment she opens her mouth to sing, people are calling her 'the next generation's Kate Bush,' but something seems off about that comparison. Charlotte Martin's music is truly unique. Though she openly claims Bush as an inspiration, Martin is revolutionizing the world of piano-based alternative rock. With her chilling vocals and willingness to put it all out there, Charlotte Martin sounds like a perfect mixture of Tori Amos

Continued on page 5

COURTESY KELLIE WALSH/4 EYES PHOTOGRAPHY

Preformer Ari Hest will bring his unique musical stylings to the Iron Horse in Northanpton.

UMass ready to get punked
Good Charlotte performing tonight

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Poppy punk stars Good Charlotte will make their Mullins Center debut tonight, with opening assists from burgeoning favorites Something Corporate and Mest.

Good Charlotte — or GC, as loyal fans often refer to them — have made a dent in the music world, bringing their ultra-catchy brand of polished punk to the mainstream and introducing a storied world of music to a new generation of fans who maybe unfamiliar with the sounds of the Ramones or the Sex Pistols.

Good Charlotte
Mullins Center
Oct. 10

Fans first took notice of Good Charlotte with their self-titled debut, which spawned minor MTV-friendly hits with the songs "Motivation Proclamation" and "The Clique." But the band hit the mainstream with the release of their latest effort "The Young and the Hopeless" which has since gone double platinum on the strength of such radio friendly songs as "The Anthem" and "Lifestyles of The Rich and Famous."

Unfortunately, some punk fans have questioned the credibility of the band because of the group's newfound, widespread popularity. Songs like "The Anthem" were voted into top positions on pre-teen friendly shows like "Total Request Live." Since these shows often catered to the Britney-and-Justin crowd, punk purists could often be heard crying sell-out when it came to Good Charlotte.

But the guys of Good Charlotte – which includes its twin front men, Joel and Benji Madden – never let the sell-out label get to them, and continue to make music that matters to them and their fans. The Madden brothers, who grew up in poverty and without a father, use their life story and the way they managed to work their way into fame as basis for many of their songs. The group has stayed true to its young fans, often staying behind to sign autographs for the eager Mohawked kids.

In addition to Good Charlotte, the ascendant turks of Mest and Something Corporate will be filling out the bill. Mest just recently released a self-titled new album this past June, including a collaboration with Benji Madden on the first single "Jaded (One of These Years)." It's an excellent collection of pop-punk songs that could satiate the hunger of GC fans looking for similar sounds.

Meanwhile, Something Corporate will be releasing their sophomore album, "North," on Oct. 21. Their debut, "Leaving Through the Window" made its mark a couple of years ago, selling a quarter of a million copies and whetting fans appetite's for their more mature follow-up.

COURTESY VH1.COM

Joel Madden cranks out many of Good Charlotte's more poignant vocals.

COURTESY SAM ERICKSON/ESP PICTURES

Good Charlotte seemed unfazed by accusations of being sellouts. Despite Hard-Core punk community hostility GC shows no signs of changing what they are all about.

New album a real catastrophe
Belle and Sebastian work seems out of time

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

There is no God.

Sorry for all the emotion, but this really is the living end of tolerance. Okay, maybe it's not that bad. Oh God, it really is. It truly is. Were we that bad? Sure, we had our little sonic detours and transgressions. You can forgive us for that easily, but how could any caring deity deliver us the mess that is "Dear Catastrophe Waitress."

Belle and Sebastian
'Dear Catastrophe Waitress'
Sanctuary

True, it's never a crime for a band to attempt to reinvent itself. In fact, many cases do so, and rightly. Belle and Sebastian's last project, writing incidental music for Todd Solondz's predictably controversial film "Storytelling" seemed like sketches of pieces to come. Their previous album "Fold Your Hands Child, You Walk Like a Peasant" had its ups and downs and even glinted with refreshing bites of cheese ("Beyond the Sunrise") from an extinct era.

The album launched the band as a less traditional rock ensemble wherein different band members could switch roles and instruments when appropriate (and sometimes when not). It seemed like a steppingstone. Perhaps since this last experiment, they have lost the ability to criticize each other and simply greenlight every half-cooked new idea rushed forward.

Flashback to 1996, Belle and Sebastian came seemingly out of nowhere and made what is considered (by me and many critics alike) one of the greatest albums ever made. The album was at once so precious and so deliciously naughty that they had to call it "If You're Feeling Sinister."

It was a triumph of the heart and soul. Stuart Murdoch sang like an angelic reincarnation of Nick Drake (whom he'd never heard before), while spouting lyrics so bittersweet that they evoked "Queen is Dead"-era Morrissey.

The music, on the other hand, whisked through all four seasons æ from a fictitious summer of love to a hostile winter with foxes starving in the snow. It was like Vince Guaraldi and Burt Bacharach playing together at Fairfield Convention with Thomas Pynchon as master of ceremonies. Yes, the name of the game was the '60s, but the actual '60s never sounded as blissfully actualized, as they did in 1996 on Matador records.

Much has happened since then. Bassist Stuart Campbell formed Looper, perhaps the first tweetronica band, garnering a new era for delicacy in electronic music that Lali Puna and The Notwist would capitalize on. The band gained a cult following — both within and outside of the Belle and Sebastian circle. It caused David left to pursue the project full-time. Isobel Campbell explored new sonic territory with the Gentle Waves and excused herself publicly from the band. Perhaps most importantly, director Wes Anderson began to make gorgeous films that both sounded and felt like an abstract homage to "If You're Feeling Sinister."

With this in mind, those popping in "Dear Catastrophe Waitress" would expect to be lifted in a to a similarly whimsical world of wonder. That is not the case. Within the first few notes of the album it is immediately apparent that something is wrong. The trumpet and flute are nothing out of the ordinary. What it most irksome about this first track, "Step into My Office, Baby," is the feeling that the "office" in question is located somewhere along Sesame Street. Sunny days have pushed the clouds away and the dreadful result for thousands of sulking Belle and Sebastian fans is what may reluctantly be called — gulp — "happy" music. The moronically jumpy "Step," which Belle and Sebastian have chosen to be their first single, has listeners questioning whether they perhaps grabbed the wrong album and if they can tolerate another 40 or more minutes of this.

For the next five songs, there is an anticipation that things will get better, an anticipation that is never fulfilled. The whole range of all emotions is felt: denial that it could suck this bad, anger at the loss of the beloved Scots, bargaining with oneself that it could not get much worse (and it didn't), deeply traumatizing depression, and finally, acceptance. I went for a walk down by the pond with just my thoughts sobbing to myself like I'd lost a relative I could never say goodbye to. I passed out cursing Jim Henson

Continued on page 5

Something new from England
Stereophonics 'Come Back' with best album yet

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Welsh rock group Stereophonics' fourth album, "You Gotta Go There To Come Back," opens with a few seconds of near silence and then a mildly distorted, dark laugh. After that comes a heavy, bluesy guitar riff and the first song, "Help Me (She's Out Of Her Mind)," officially begins. In the next seven-plus minutes, Stereophonics present numerous and masterful fills with Kelly Jones' distinct, scratchy voice, an astounding mixture of Kurt Cobain, Chris Robinson and Jones' layered vocals in the chorus. It is immediately evident that "Help Me" is one of the best songs Stereophonics has ever recorded … and then the album gets better.

Stereophonics
"You Gotta Go There To Come Back"
V2

Stereophonics is one of the biggest bands in the United Kingdom, and rightfully so. They have continued their tradition of constantly improving by making the best disc of their seven-year, four-album career — despite that no one in America has noticed. The 'Phonics wear their classic-rock influences on their sleeves but, unlike Oasis, Stereophonics are creating a career of their own rather than just living off the fat of their predecessors. "You Gotta Go There …" is no exception to this; it finds the 'Phonics traveling even further away from obvious influences of bands like The Black Crowes and The Rolling Stones.

Tracks such as "Help Me," "Madame Helga" and "High As The Ceiling" are flat-out rockers blowing away most modern rock bands and making risking blasphemy to rival anything heard on classic rock radio. "Maybe Tomorrow," "Getaway" and "Nothing Precious At All" are quieter songs, yet not folky ones showcasing the band's talents for more subtle arrangements. It is in the way the band has learned to mix different sounds and dynamics — with Jones singing and playing guitar, Richard Jones on bass and Stuart Cable drumming — that has brought it so far from the mostly one-note debut, "Word Gets Around." In fact, it seems as if the biggest criticism this album might attract is from narrow-minded fans who want to see the 'Phonics stay in their brash classic/alterna-rock mindset forever.

Lyrically, Jones has developed his introspective writing skills more, while still showing his talent for writing songs that tell stories about others. "You Gotta Go There …" seems to be a slightly darker album than previous 'Phonics albums and contains more personal songs as opposed to "Word Gets Around," which is nearly all songs about other people from Jones' point of view. Jones still does find time for others on songs such as "Nothing Precious …" which begins with the line "I've been people watching again/ They can watch me too," before it becomes a story about a young woman working at a coffee house that Jones frequents. "You Gotta Go There …" is, however, a very personal affair, and while some listeners may miss Jones' wonderful storytelling that can be heard on earlier albums, there is no doubt that "You Gotta Go There …" is Stereophonics' most lyrically mature and well written album to date.

It is the mixture of the aforementioned sounds and styles, which are entirely new to Stereophonics and make up the best songs on "You Gotta Go There …" "Rainbows And Pots Of Gold" finds the 'Phonics experimenting with string arrangements as Jones laments about his ex, whom he found sleeping with his best friend. "I Miss You" is a muted, bluesy tune that finds the band experimenting with different types of piano and guitar sounds that all compliment the despair in Jones' voice as he sings "Are all my old friends gonna leave me and die / I'm helpless, It's gonna get us / Before it gets us I wanna kiss you goodbye." "Since I Told You It's Over," begins with Jones softly crooning, while slightly strumming an acoustic guitar. The band, plus a piano, comes in, and Jones spends the next four-and-a-half minutes straining his heart and his perfectly emotive voice to a point where listening becomes emotionally draining: One can practically see Jones holding his head in his hands, as he pours everything he has into apologizing for mistreating and

Continued on page 5

Magician taken by the scruff
Roy Horn attacked by his own white tiger

By Robert Macy
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Exquisite white tigers have been Roy Horn's passion for almost 40 years. Then last week, one of the beasts brought him to the brink of death. A modern day Dr. Dolittle who called the cats his children, Horn spent vast amounts of time, energy and money on animals that have left millions of show-goers here in awe since 1966.

The menagerie developed by Horn and longtime stage partner Siegfried Fischbacher includes 63 rare white tigers and white lions. Horn has been on hand for many of their births.

"The first voice they hear is mine, the first touch they feel is mine, the first human face they see is mine," Horn said in an interview in late 2000. "They just think I'm a strange tiger who walks on two legs."

On Friday night, just 20 hours after Horn had celebrated his 59th birthday with hundreds of friends, one of the beasts inexplicably turned on its owner at the Mirage hotel-casino.

Horn sauntered onto the stage with 7-year-old Montecore, a white tiger who has appeared in the show since he was 6 months old.

Bernie Yuman, the magician pair's longtime manager, said Friday he thought things went awry when Montecore got distracted by something in the audience.

"Roy – heroically, from my perception – got in front of him and started to nudge him," Yuman told ABC-TVs "Good Morning America."

"They were both out of their routine. One thing led to another, and it was a tragic accident," he said.

Montecore was told to lie down, but balked and grabbed Horn's arm in his mouth. Horn struck Montecore with his microphone, trying to get him to loosen his grip. Montecore then grabbed Horn by his throat, dragging him backstage where handlers subdued the tiger by spraying him with a fire extinguisher.

Horn remained in critical but stable condition Tuesday.

Horn prided himself in knowing his animals and his animals knowing him. In more than 40 years of close encounters with some of the world's most exotic animals, Horn was never injured by any of the creatures, Horn said in a 2000 interview for the book "Siegfried & Roy's Gift for the Ages."

"Siegfried and I have spent every waking moment with our animals," Horn said. "We watch and observe. We talk to them, take walks with them, swim with them, meditate with them. Day by day, we learn about each other. But you must have patience and respect for Mother Nature. Because when an animal gives you its trust, you feel like you have been given the most beautiful gift in the world."

Horn said whatever situation he's put in with his animals, "I always try to think as they think. We can always solve our arguments in an understanding way because I respect them and they respect me."

Only once was that philosophy tested, he said in the 2000 interview.

He was playing hide and seek with a Siberian tiger named Sahra. "After rolling around in the grass together, she suddenly laid on top of me and pinned me down," Horn recalled. "Our eyes met and I realized she was no longer playing; she was about to bite me."

Trusting my instincts, I raised my head and bit her nose as hard as I could. "Totally perplexed, she jumped up and pretended it never happened. I immediately made our friendship sound – ff-fuff, ff-fuff. She never attempted to bite me again."

COURTESY AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Siegfried and Roy have lived the last 50 years surrounded by their tigers, both on and off the stage.

Rockers fail at redefining themselves and the Bush administration and whatever else could have caused this travesty.

Continued from page 4

After a slow recovery over the next week, the album was generously given one more whirl. Skipping the first track, a new thought arose, "Hey! This isn't that bad. It's not great, but no too bad either."

In fact, there's some really groovy stuff on "Dear Catastrophe Waitress." That's the problem with first impressions. Boy, did Belle and Sebastian blow their first impression this time around. In fact, the title track which immediately follows "Step into My Office" sounds like the second coming of Christ when compared to the latter song. And it isn't even that good.

Amidst all the b.s. on Belle and Sebastian's fifth official studio album (excluding "Storytelling"), there's an amazing EP and a mediocre outtakes disc. The third track is where things really take off. "If She Wants Me" is a swinging summer day loungin' tune wherein breezy organs interact with "wah wah" guitars for that classic feel that only our favorite Scots can elicit. Oh, and by 'swinging' think swing set not big band. Vocalist and brainchild Stuart Murdoch may pull off the ultimate rock slant rhyme when he sings, "If I can do just one near perfect thing I'd be happy/ They'd right it on my grave or when they scatter my ashes," but all is forgiven when we learn what the title means and the big payback comes. "On second thought I'd rather hang around /and be there with my best friend if she wants me."

The name of the new game is seventies, and it's a tricky affair for Belle and Sebastian to pull off. "I'm a Cuckoo" cranks out a real .38 Special riff that would have easily rocked suburban convenience store parking lots thirty years ago. With the rise of trucker hats and shaggy hair, it wouldn't surprise me if it had the same effect on today's indie rock kids. "Roy Walker" is another bizarro cut that sounds like Neil Young and America by way of Guys and Dolls that could have tragically failed in the same way that the dirty, dirty first song did. Luckily, the traditional Belle and Sebastian style production dull the country twang.

It's not all peaches and cream. Isobel Campbell's contribution to the album is the one track that almost announces itself as a parody of Belle and Sebastian, but Murdoch's inquiries into Mike Piazza's sexuality seemed equally unnecessary.

Earlier this year, Belle and Sebastian announced a rearranged track listing with a few tracks taken out. Hard to imagine given that the current order still seems disoriented and half of the material is just a tier above sub par. Overall, the good stuff are tracks to shuffle into the mp3 playlist, but bear no real gravity appearing next to each other on a 12 song album. I guess whatever faith I had is back in place, but for God's sake heed my advice: Take caution when listening to track one.

Welsh Rockers still going strong wrongfully dumping a girlfriend.

Continued from page 4

While those songs are high-points on an album filled with high-points, "I'm Alright (You Gotta Go There To Come Back)" is clearly the pinnacle. It is truly the standout song on the album and probably the deepest, darkest and most experimental thing the 'Phonics have ever done. Over a programmed drumbeat and other miscellaneous noise, Jones sings of destroying himself in order to make someone else happy. "I'll drink another drink for you / One, two, three, four, five, once I drank a fish alive / I'll drop another pill for you / Six, seven, eight, nine, ten, did it before, and I'll do it again," Jones threatens. He then looks his target square in the eye, and repeats, "I'm alright" before reminding himself of the album's title and thesis: "You gotta go there to come back".

Jones' message is that you have to hit rock bottom before you can get better. Judging by his lyrics, he has been through some rough times in the past two years. From the rest of the album, it seems that he has indeed "Come Back," and the band (Stereophonics is, despite the media's obsession with Jones, a full band, not one man's vision) have produced its best album yet …and one of the best albums of the year.

The Stereophonics got off to a bit of a false start with their first album. However, the two subsequent ones were nothing short of stunning. The band has somehow found a way to make an even larger leap in every area from 2001's "J.E.E.P.," and has truly become a musical force.

"You Gotta Go There …" is a flat-out, amazing album that cements Stereophonics' place on the list of absolutely great rock bands and should finally bring the band its due with audiences in the United States, who have thus far been completely neglectful of such masterful work.

COURTESY ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Stereophonic prooves in their new album that the world of British rock is still evolving.

Two new stars make their presence felt and Fiona apple. Her voice is melodic and guttural all at once and is even at times reminiscent of Ben Folds. However, there is an underlying darkness to Martin's music that can be attributed to her love of Goth rock, The Cure and Nick Drake.

Continued from page 5

Despite their efforts to do something musically unique, the fact that they are both singer/songwriters operating as solo artists has inevitably caused some to draw comparison between Hest and Martin and performers like John Mayer and even Howie Day (who have been excessively compared by major media outlets themselves.) This places Hest, Martin and many other up-and-coming singer songwriters in a compromising position. With the success of those before them comes an added interest in their own music, yet they also run the risk of being deemed another Mayer knock-off, or simply riding the coat tails of those who have 'made-it.'

"I totally admire and respect what he is doing," Hest said of Mayer, "but I think we are coming from two different places musically. He is definitely into the blues. I can't even name two Stevie-Ray Vaughn songs." Though Mayer and Hest both wield an acoustic guitar and have incredible singing and song writing skills, the similarities stop there.

"We both write very melodic rock songs," Hest said. "I think that John is definitely more of a musician than I am or hope to be. I want to write good songs, yeah, but I really want to be a singer more than anything."

Martin also has heard comparisons being drawn between her and the current king of acoustic rock, Mayer. "I think it's great that people think that I am on the same level as [Day and Mayer], but I don't think that we are doing the same thing at all." She can't say for sure where she fits into the recent outburst of singer/songwriters but she is glad to be along for the ride. "Some of the best shows I've had no one knew who I was, but they were into the music," said Martin, pointing out probably the best part of this current influx of solo artists on the airwaves.

"Do I want to be famous? That's a good question," said Ari Hest pausing for contemplation. "I am not really excited by the fame part of it. I think people in general like to get attention for things they are good at, and I am no exception. It's not really fame I am looking, for but really that I would like to have my music heard by a lot of people." If he happens to hit big after Mayer, so be it.

Residence Hall Students

UMass Residential Telecom now has

LOWER INTERNATIONAL RATES

when you use your room telephone!

Rates are per minute (as of 10/03/03)

China	.55	Japan	.15
France	.17	Taiwan	.22
India	.55	U.K.	.10

For LOWER RATES in other countries, check out our Web site (http://telecom.oit.umass.edu/students), and click on Rates.

AT&T ACUS One Rate Plan® users have been automatically switched to the new, lower rates! Plus, your monthly fee has been waived! Please call Residential Telecom at 545-2103 with any questions.

Just use your PSC code!

(For questions about your PSC code, please call 545-2103)

PLUS, DOMESTIC LONG DISTANCE IS JUST

7.9 cents per minute, 24/7

Anytime, anywhere, in the United States when you use your room telephone!

No Monthly Fees

No Connection Fees

No Roaming Fees

No Sign Ups

Small crowd, big noise

Continued from page 8

reminded of their location. If the five freshman starters for UConn were a little bit nervous in their first ever collegiate contest, the anxious crowd didn't help the cause.

Darkness struck again, the light show reappeared, the excitement had commenced, and it was time to introduce the UMass squad. Out stepped Greg Mauldin, Stephen Werner, Tim Vitek, Jeff Lang, Thomas Pöck, and Winer, each greeted with a hero's welcome.

Kevin Hollister's beautiful rendition of the National Anthem sent the crowd into a frenzy, and when he finished, it was time to play some hockey.

The Minutemen were mostly quiet in the first 10 minutes, but an announcement of Wednesday night's ALCS score received a loud ovation. Pöck finally ignited the faithful UMass fans when he netted the first goal of the game.

The Minutemen would strike once more before the few UConn fans who made the trek from Storrs got the opportunity to cheer, on a goal from Matt Scherer, but as the Minutemen marched to the 6-3 win, the UMass faithful ruled the roost.

As it turns out, there aren't any days off for the "Maroon Platoon," an organized student fan group that debuted at football games this fall. The platoon ensured that players on the ice continued to be fired up, belting out the usual array of chants, such as "UConn High School."

The second period featured the highly anticipated slug-fest between the new-look Sam the Minuteman and Mr. Slice.

Finally, with 1:00 showing on the clock in the third period, the raucous group got out their keys and jingled to their hearts' content, signifying the Minutemen's first win of the season, over the visiting Huskies. The traditional sendoff remained, even if many had departed to get back to baseball. But no matter the length of the Red Sox' October run, it's clear that hockey in the Valley is back.

Vitek starts it up

UMass drops Huskies in opener

Continued from page 8

probably used a lot of energy there in the first 10 minutes, and then they kind of wore us down and we didn't handle it well after that."

The Minutemen, who looked nothing like the playoff-bound team of six months ago early in the game, soon gathered momentum. That process was spearheaded by a pair of nifty plays from junior Greg Mauldin and senior captain Thomas Pöck, who broke the ice with a one-timer off a pass from sophomore Chris Capraro. Pock played a quick game of catch with Capraro, and on the return, fired a low shot that hardly left the ice and beat UConn goaltender Scott Tomes in the five hole to give the Minutemen a 1-0 lead with 8:03 remaining in the first period.

Senior Nick Kuiper added another goal less than three minutes later, and Capraro was involved again. The Medford, Mass. native cycled all the way around the net, found Kuiper on the point, and dished. Kuiper then steadied the puck, and snapped a shot that found its way past Tomes for the Minutemen's second goal.

The Huskies managed to get on the board just before the end of the first period when freshman Matt Scherer waltzed out of the corner on UMass goalie Gabe Winer's left side, and threw a shot on net that deflected past Winer to make it 2-1.

"We're a pretty young hockey team, and I think youth was served a little bit," Marshall said. "But there were things that I liked about our hockey team that we're going to take some time to fine tune."

UConn added another score at 10:27 of the second period. Scott McDougall broke through the middle of the UMass zone, and although Winer made the initial save, McDougall persisted to cut the defecit to 4-2. However, junior Jeff Lang extended the UMass lead 1 1/2 minutes later by maneuvering out of the corner, faking once, and skating past Tomes to open up the net and make it 5-2. Hanson added his second goal of the day at 11:41 of the third to finish off the Minutemen's scoring.

Four minutes later, Trevor Stewart camped out in front of Winer and waited for a pass from Jarret Scarpaci, which he banged home to make it 6-3 UMass, but the Huskies were silenced for the remainder.

Xavier, Dayton invade Rudd Field to battle Minutewomen

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts coach Jim Rudy is sick of this bad luck streak.

Several injuries, half the starting line-up suspended last weekend and a six-game losing streak, the Massachusetts women's soccer team is looking for something positive. Unfortunately for them, the Minutewomen's (2-6-1, 1-2 Atlantic 10) weekend will feature the two toughest opponents within the A-10, Xavier Friday followed by Dayton Sunday.

"My goal is for us to just get through this weekend healthy and get some points, because we need them," Rudy said. "If we can through this weekend and have everyone back next week with no injuries or suspension, maybe we can get back to who we really are."

The Musketeers (6-4-1, 2-1 A-10) usually a team who starts out the season slowly, is off to one of their best starts in five years. Their lone conference loss was to Atlantic 10 powerhouse and UMass' Sunday opponent, Dayton (73, 3-0 A-10). Seven key players will not play against Xavier due to a continuing suspension.

"They are bit of an older team with six upperclassmen starter, but are still a difficult opponent," Rudy said. "They always do well on the restarts and are coming off their best start in years heading into the heart of A-10 season."

The Maroon and White will be focusing a variety of players on both sides of the ball.

The major of attention will drawn to leading scorer, senior forward Lindsay Yonadi, and her deadly free kicks. She has developed a reputation as a deadly sharpshooter from anywhere on the field when the ball is at rest. Tallying 12 points including five goals, she is also one of the more accurate shooters, scoring on 30% of her shots and putting 77% of her shots at least on goal.

One player who could sneak up on her opponents is 5'4" freshman forward/ midfielder Amber Silvis. Silvis is all-time leading scoring in Ohio high school soccer, collecting 182 goals. Silvis' past prestige makes her two goals a slow start but she is still deadly scorer with a lot of explosiveness.

When UMass nears toward the goal, they will need to watch out for Xavier's defensive anchor, junior sweeper Melissa Clavier. Clavier has the speed and intelligence to cut pass and players with the perfect angle. Her coach, Ron Quinn, holds her as a player who continues to improve and as vocal leader.

"The keys to winning this game is to play away from the sweeper and make sure we don't give up any free kicks," Rudy said.

Dayton holds the top spot in the A-10 and has received Top 25 National votes from national recognized magazine, Soccerbuzz. Dayton has quality through their entire roster with six players racking up five or more points. Dayton is no doubt the toughest A-10 opponent the Minutewomen will face, but Rudy is taking this weekend one game at time.

"I'll worry about that when we get there," Rudy said. "I just want to get through Friday ... I just want to get the upperclassmen on the field. [Dayton] has a physical defense, quality throughout the entire starting line-up, a great bench and two good goaltenders."

A host of different players could cause damage, with the focus no doubt on last week's A-10 player of the week, Reba Sedlacek. The sophomore forward had her first career hat trick leading Dayton past Temple, 6-0, and her first two career assist efforts in 5-1 win over St. Joseph's two days later.

Countering the balanced attack, Rudy will install a technique called Italian Catenaccio. This defensive strategy will lure the offense in as the defense plays back to look for an interception to start the break.

UM hits the road

No. 13 Minutemen travel to Ohio

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The utmost respect for any college team is to be nationally ranked by its peers.

This is precisely what happened to the Massachusetts Men's soccer team last week after extending its unbeaten streak to seven games.

As the 13th-ranked Minutemen (7-2-1, 1-0-1 A-10) go on the road this weekend it will face one of its greatest challenges. The Maroon and White will take on Atlantic 10 foes Xavier and Dayton (6-1-3, 1-0-1 A-10) as a favored challenger.

"Now we've got a big bulls-eye on our back, and everybody wants to beat you ... everybody wants to beat you. We're not going to come in unannounced, we're not going to come in and have people look at us lightly," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

The Minutemen will play Xavier (1-10, 0-2 A-10) today at 7 p.m. and will be facing a team that has all the components to win, but lacks the necessary cohesion. The Musketeers have been shut out 10 times this season, a school record.

Koch doesn't look at Xavier's record as indication of their talent level. He believes that there is a home field advantage that needs to be considered.

"Xavier is struggling, and yet they are not a bad team. We are playing them on a small field which will give them an advantage," Koch said.

The Musketeers are definitely the underdogs on paper, but have several players that have the ability to be game breakers. Xavier's best player is on the defensive side of the field in junior goalkeeper, Brian Schaeper.

The Maroon and White will have to face an Xavier team with extra incentive to win, looking to win their first A-10 game and getting it against a top-25 team.

"The ranking, putting us in the top 20 has only fired them up so they're going to be extremely excited to play us and knock us off," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

On offense the Musketeers have several players that have the ability to score, but have had trouble finishing on opportunities. The leader of this offense is Matt Kmetz, who in only six games has scored a goal and dished an assist. He also leads the team in shots with 14.

"Even though they are doing the things they need to they haven't been putting the ball away. We just hope we aren't the team they start doing it against," Koch said.

Dayton brings an entirely different challenge to the Minutemen. The Flyers were ranked No. 18 this week and are a clear and present danger to any team that they play.

"They have a very good midfield with a couple of guys that played club together that know each other and find each other well," Koch said, "They combine well together, they are going to be a tough midfield to slow down and stop."

The Flyers leader on offense has been forward Chris Rolfe, who leads the team with 11 total points. Rolfe has been a key component to Dayton's success this season

"They have one of the best goal scorers in the conference [Rolfe], who is a handful and single-handedly beat Wisconsin when they played," Koch said.

UMass's offense will have a challenge of its own, trying to figure out Dayton keeper Matt Handy. Handy has recently earned the starting spot for the Flyers, giving up only two goals in 410:21 minutes.

Handy was the A-10 player of the week and named to the College Soccer News team of the week in late September. In four starts he has recorded two shutouts and only allowed two goals.

The Maroon and White are currently riding the best start in school history, with the most inexperienced team in recent memory. Koch is concerned about whether his team can handle the pressure of being in the national spotlight and looks at this weekend as a test.

"It's nice. I think the guys have worked hard to get here and I'm very pleased for them. With it comes another responsibility, I think we are a young team and I'm really not sure if we're ready for it," Koch said.

Field hockey to open A-10

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Correspondent

After a tough road trip, the Massachusetts field hockey team (2-9) will open its Atlantic 10 season with a two-game homestand this weekend at Garber Field.

At the last home game, September 20, the Minutewomen lost a nail-biter to Providence College in overtime, 2-1. Since then, the Minutewomen have not scored a goal, having lost on the road to Northeastern, Connecticut and Syracuse by a combined 20-0.

As coach Patty Shea knows, there are no easy games in the A-10.

"I think a lot of the teams in the conference are really even. You really have to throw all those records, statistics, everything out the window, now that conference play has started," Shea said.

She also noted how much better her team is at this point in the season, as opposed to last year's senior-loaded squad that finished second in the A-10 despite their horrendous start.

This weekend, all eyes will be on the goalies, as three superb netminders will step onto the turf in what should make for some classic showdowns.

The A-10 season officially gets underway tonight at 5 p.m. for UMass, when they square off against Temple (5-6) for what looks to be another goalie's duel.

The opposite net will be boasting one-time ECAC Goalkeeper of the Week Erin Conroy, who has been stellar in the cage thus far this season. She currently leads the A-10 in saves (117) and save percentage (.860). Conroy recorded her first shutout as an Owl last Sunday in a 1-0 win over Fairfield, having faced no shots on goal.

While Minutewomen goalie Christine Tocco has yet to attain any shutouts, and her save percentage has dropped (.700), she is still fun to watch. She currently ranks second in the A-10 in saves (108), right behind Conroy, and has been a bright spot in what seems to be a slump as of late.

"Erin has a little more experience, but I do think we have the better goalkeeper," Shea said. "I think Christine is smarter in her skills, smart in her decision making ... Erin's style is a little more unorthodox, but it works for her. It's a good style for her."

Nonetheless, it will be an interesting matchup between two outstanding goalkeepers.

Offensively, the Owls boast a few young guns that shouldn't be taken lightly. They will be led by three-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Monica Jiao, a redshirt freshman. She is second on the team in points (seven), with two goals and three assists to her credit. A vital asset to the offensive attack, Jiao made a key pass to set up Caitlyn Bowers' game-winning goal in the 1-0 defeat of Fairfield.

The Owls will also look to Bowers, team points leader Haley Dervinis, Talia Ruth and Rachel Barber to keep Tocco busy in the cage.

But the chance for an offensive turnaround is as good as ever for the Minutewomen offense. The Owls' defense has allowed an average of 17.8 shots per game. If the Minutewomen can keep the ball in front of Temple's net, it may mean a long night of trouble for Conroy. The defense of Dannon Mehaffy, Jillian Thomas and Rachel Kasper will be on their toes. But as conference play often dictates, teams can't take anything for granted.

The second game commences Sunday at noon, when the Hawks of St. Joseph's University will look to keep the ball rolling after a nail-biting double-OT victory over Rutgers last Tuesday.

"St. Joe's will play us tough. They always do. They're not afraid to be physical," Shea said.

Tocco will be facing another stellar goalkeeper, junior Courtney Huff, arguably the string that has kept St. Joe's from falling apart. "Her team has a lot of confidence in her. When a team has a lot of confidence in the player behind them, they tend to take more risks. [But] our team has a lot of confidence in our goalie [too]," Shea said.

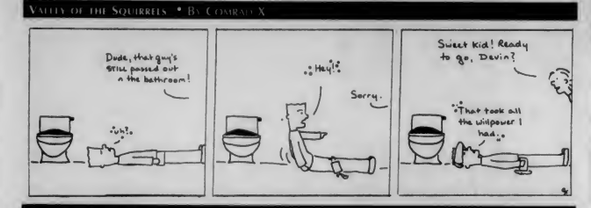
Through the first 11 games, Huff has made 97 saves, including 18 in last Tuesday's thriller, has a save percentage of .776 and has one shutout thus far. She has been on fire as of late, and if the Minutewomen are to put out the torch they will have to pressure her into more one-on-one situations.

Not to be outdone is the firepower of the Hawks' offense, led by one-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Nicole Antonini. The explosive midfielder leads the Hawks in points (15) and goals (seven). The Minutewomen as a team have only scored as often as Antonini (seven goals). Joining Antonini up front will be sophomore Katelyn O'Brien, freshman Julie Lentz, and senior Amie Schmoltze.

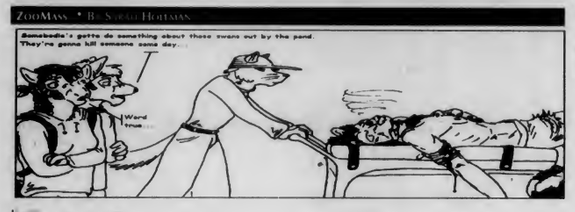
The Minutewomen offense, led by Marije Tigchelaar, Adrianne Moncao and Jamie Bawden, will be optimistic to put pressure on a St. Joe's defense that is allowing more than 18 shots per game. But in the end, it will come down to the last line of defense — the goalie — in what should be a great matchup.

HALLOWEEN Extravaganza
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL YOUR HALLOWEEN NEEDS!
In the Hampshire Mall, near J.C. Penney.
Mention this ad and get 10% off your purchase with a Student ID!

MUSIC • SOFTWARE • MOVIES • BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101



Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland (Located on bus route).
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Lavender Paraffin hand dip for $6!)
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!



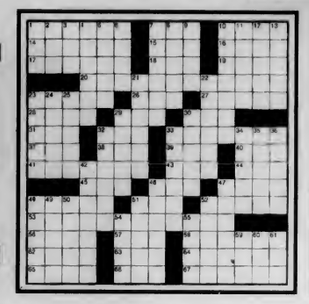
Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Masterpieces are not single and solitary births; they are the outcome of many years of thinking in common, of thinking by the body of the people, so that the experience of the mass is behind the single voice."

-Virginia Woolf

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 Scents
7 Deadboard into
10 Shut hard
14 Put on the 15 Prospector's
16 Hawaiian city
17 Dinosaur bone, e.g.
18 Poorly lit
19 Award at 20 Nursery item
23 Loathes
27 Pub order
28 Bullfighter, see
29 Arab prince
30 Before, in verse
32 Corder
34 Lend a hand
36 "— Doubtfire"
39 Wicked
42 Genetic material
46 Verne's "— la Plume"
47 Eggs, in biology
48 Muslim prayer
49 Type of suave
50 Make an offer
52 Funny Charlotte
56 Wood residue
57 Cast spleen
60 Cast ballot
61 Novelist Levin
62 Impudent
63 Very fast
64 Try to persuade
67 Impair
68 Type of waltz
69 Retinal layer
70 Bird's plaint
84 Quality
85 Decorated
86 Fall mo.
87 Cuddle up

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ZEBRA DAMS MCAN
ADELE OMOO NARE
AMIR ROWE ORAL
EMPTY ERIE
ARMOR ALAS
EMINENT ALAN ADORE ANA
ADULT ONTO TRESS ANNAL
USERS ERIS

10-10-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Carrie in comment
2 Vintage auto
3 Sights of surprise
4 Polite address
5 Dhut melodies
6 — like hotcakes
7 Unit
8 Type of rate
9 Blow down
10 Disturbers
11 Singer Ronstadt
12 Modify
13 Docks
21 Frontiersman
"Kit"
22 Disgusting
23 Lassoed
24 — acid
25 Kind of pool
29 Hall-of-Famer
Banks
30 Twinkle
32 New York river
33 Teeter-totter
34 Freight riders
35 Misfortune
36 June honoree
42 Come before
46 Mountain in Turkey
47 Cowboy cooks
48 Knock down
49 Rimsky-
Korsakov
50 A bright star
51 Physicist
Newton
52 Like some remarks
54 Lyric poet
55 Nonsense!
57 Turgenev
58 "— to worry!"
60 Zero
61 Had a bite

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish Nuggets
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

DINNER
- Fried Shrimp
- Beef Strudel
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 44

SATURDAY
- High: 72
- Low: 41

SUNDAY
- High: 67
- Low: 42

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Megan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Emilie Duggan/ Oliver Chong

comics meeting
tuesday
october 14 4 p.m.
in the graphics room
collegian offices

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
It's amazing what you think about late at night.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Take a late night excursion to Wendy's. Get a frosty and fries.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Keep a permanently confused look on your face. It amuses others.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Stay inside today. It's best.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Rent a piece of furniture from a store. Try stuff out before you buy it

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Eat your potato chips one at a time. They last longer.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Stand on something; it will make you feel tall.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Try your best. It's all you can do.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Careful of holes in your pockets. You'll loose money.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Watch out for sniper photographers..

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Does your mother know you speak like that?

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
It feels hotter when you're standing in the spotlight.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR SALE

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

One bedroom, near UMass Amherst Center Bus. 2 Large Rooms, low heat cost, $575 per month. 586-0746

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon AC/Power 17,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1998 Volvo V70 AWD Wagon Turbo Auto 130,000 Miles Loaded $10,000/OBO 253-0733

1994 Volkswagon Jetta, 160K, includes 4 snow tires, $2,000/ OBO. Julie 253-4240

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

CHILDCARE

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. Old triplets 1 to 3 days a week. In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Win FREE ILLIG FASHION WWW.ILLIG.COM Enter to win $100 worth of Free ILLIG Fashion! The coolest clothes on the planet. WIN FREE ILLIG FASHION WWW.ILLIG.COM

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES
Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED! 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TUTOR

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

WANTED

Weekend Cook: To prepare meals on Sat & Sun between 10-5. Please Call 549-6202 for more information.

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.00/hour call 545-6837 Leave Message

Reach thousands of potential customers! Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

To begin, a win

First game a success for Minutemen

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It wasn't a perfect night for the Massachusetts hockey team, on or off the ice, but six goals — including three from defensemen — gave UMass the win in its first game of the season, 6-3 over Connecticut in front of 5,379 at the Mullins Center.

Tim Vitek's goal at 3:17 of the second period solidified the Minutemen's victory, and although their play was less than spectacular, and the attendance number didn't hit the targeted 8,000 they were hoping to have for the first official game of the 2003-04 season, it was enough to beat a young Husky squad that lists no less than 15 freshmen on its roster.

UConn	3
UMass	6

Vitek was Johnny-on-the-Spot when a loose rebound slid in front of him 3:37 into the second period. The junior from Dresden, Ont. quickly collected the loose change for his first goal of the season, making it 4-1 — enough for the Minutemen (1-0) to handle the Huskies (0-1).

"We're happy to get the season started," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "You get into these situations of trying to play a game literally nine or 10 days after you begin, and you're not sure what you're going to get. It's nice to see a couple of guys like Timmy Vitek and [junior] Josh [Hanson] come in and chip in goals in game one, seeing where our goals are going to come from, it's nice to see people finishing. It gets us off and running, and hopefully it gives us a sense of what we need to do to get up to speed in our own league and play successfully."

Hanson was the top goal-scorer of the evening with two, one just under a minute before Vitek's clincher, and another midway through the third period.

Connecticut looked impressive early on, and although UMass eventually took control and momentum away from the Huskies, the young squad showed promise.

"I think we showed a lot of energy and excitement in the first ten minutes of that hockey game," UConn coach Bruce Marshall said, "we were moving the puck pretty well, being so young we

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGUITI/COLLEGIAN

Thomas Pock is mobbed by teammates after scoring a goal 11:57 into the first period of last night's game, jumpstarting the Minutemen towards a 6-3 win over Connecticut to open up the season. Tim Vitek scored the game-winner at 3:17 of the second period.

Crowd is small but spirited

By MATT STEWART
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last night was the highly anticipated "Operation 8K" game. For weeks, UMass hockey fans have been counting down the minutes for the inaugural face-off of the 2003-04 season.

But then, Operation 8K faced a major roadblock. The beloved Boston Red Sox were also playing Game 2 of the American League Championship Series last night. This understandably put a damper on Operation 8K night, but a group of 5,379 diehard UMass fans sacrificed the beginning innings of the ball game to witness "The Next Revolution" in action.

The anxiety level climaxed as the clock ticked past 6:30, as the fans now realized that the wait was almost over. The lights were dimmed and the Mullins Center energy began to build. Finally, the wait was over, and the place erupted. Spotlights scanned the crowd creating a wave of excitement, which was coupled by the rapid flashing of strobe lights to jolt the mayhem.

Suddenly, Seth Gerard, the evening's PA announcer shouted out the words: "Here comes the Mass Attack", music to the UMass fans' ears. The Minutemen stormed out of the locker-room and onto the ice. Leading the Maroon and White out of the gates was sophomore goalie Gabe Winer. With techno music blaring, the Minutemen let the fans know that they were ready to play. Not only that, they had a new look to go with the new season

The new UMass marks brought with them new uniforms for many teams, and hockey was no exception. The Minutemen featured a black shirt with the word "Massachusetts" written across the front, along with the school's Maroon color on the shorts. This new attire brought another element of excitement to the game. The cheers of the crowd halted swiftly when the visiting UConn Huskies stepped on the ice.

Then came time for the starting lineups, where the Huskies were

Continued on page 6

Yanks prove mettle

Pettitte leads N.Y. to victory

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — Andy Pettitte and Nick Johnson showed the Boston Red Sox the grit that makes the New York Yankees so tough in October.

Pettitte fought off early struggles to hold down Boston's bashing batters, and the slumping Johnson hit a go-ahead, two-run homer that powered New York to a 6-2 victory Thursday night and tied the AL championship series.

Red Sox	2
Yankees	6

Seven of Boston's first nine batters reached base, but the Red Sox failed to score after loading the bases in the first and got only one run in the opening two innings despite having six hits.

New York, coming off a 5-2 loss in the opener, went ahead on Johnson's two-run homer in the second off Derek Lowe and opened a 4-1 lead by the fifth.

Pettitte made it stand up, tying Greg Maddux for second with his 12th postseason win, one behind John Smoltz.

Jose Contreras pitched 1 1-3 innings and Mariano Rivera got the final three outs, combining with Pettitte to hold the Red Sox to four hits over the final seven innings. Jorge Posada added breathing room with a two-run double in the seventh off Scott Sauerbeck and fans serenaded Boston with chants of "1918" during the ninth, a reminder of how long it's been since the Red Sox last won the World Series.

The best-of-seven series resumes Saturday in Fenway Park, where former Red Sox great Roger Clemens pitches in Boston for the final time, opposed by current Red Sox ace Pedro Martinez. Pettitte has often been the Yankees' October savior, called on to pick up his team when their postseason push was on the verge of spinning out of control. After New York lost the first-round opener to Minnesota, the 31-year-old left-hander pitched them to victory in Game 2, starting a run of three straight wins that put the Yankees back in the ALCS after a one-year absence.

He struggled mightily at the start against Boston, falling behind in the count to five of his first six batters. Gabe Kapler singled leading off but was caught stealing by Posada as Bill Mueller struck out. Boston then loaded the bases on singles by Nomar Garciappara and Manny Ramirez (his fifth straight hit), and a walk to David Ortiz. But Pettitte got out of trouble when Kevin Millar popped out.

Jason Varitek doubled leading off the second, and scored on singles by Trot Nixon and Damian Jackson, but Kapler bounced into a double play and Mueller grounded out. That started a run in which Pettitte retired 10 of 11 batters, challenging and beating the best offense in the major leagues with high fastballs and cutters that moved across the outside corner.

Pettitte, starting on six days' rest, came out after 118 pitches, allowing two runs and nine hits over 6 2-3 innings. Contreras relieved with a runner on first and got Garciaparra to pop out on his first pitch.

When Boston lost out to the Yankees in the bidding for Contreras in December, Red Sox president Larry Lucchino called New York the "Evil Empire," causing a new round of Northeast sniping between the rivals.

Johnson, meanwhile, woke up a New York offense that was flustered a night earlier by Tim Wakefield's knuckleballs. After Posada walked leading off the second and Hideki Matsui hit into a forceout, Johnson hit a long drive over the right-field wall. Johnson had been in a 1-for-33 slump dating to the regular season, which included a 1-for-16 (.063) skid in the playoffs. He also had been 2-for-14 against Lowe, whose relief performance at Oakland on Monday night preserved a lead and got Boston to the ALCS.

Bernie Williams had an RBI single for the Yankees in the third, then hit a double in the fifth and scored on a single by Matsui for a 4-1 lead. Varitek hit a solo homer for Boston in the sixth.

UMASS

Weekend Schedule

Friday, Oct. 3

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	at Xavier	7 p.m.
Women's Soccer	Xavier	3 p.m.
Men's Cross Country	at New Englands	12 p.m.
Women's Cross Country	at New Englands	12 p.m.
Field Hockey	Temple	5 p.m.

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	at William & Mary	1 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at UMass-Lowel	7 p.m.

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	at Dayton	1 p.m.
Women's Soccer	Dayton	1 p.m.
Field Hockey	St. Josephs	12 p.m.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 29

UMass to alter admissions policy

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Based on a United States Supreme Court ruling in June, the University of Massachusetts decided last month to abolish the system of awarding points to applicants based on race.

Last summer, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the University of Michigan's undergraduate admissions process did not properly review all of the qualities applicants would contribute to the diversity of the student body. The University's point system was said to give more weight to an applicant's race than to certain measures of academic performance.

"What the Court said is that it is up to the institution if it wants to consider race in when looking at applicants," Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano said. "But if they are going to, admission cannot be based solely on race or ethnicity."

Previously at UMass, applicants were reviewed through a point system. In addition to their ability to bring diversity to the student body, applicants were assigned points for high school grade point average, for Massachusetts residency and for various achievements and honors. Points were also awarded to applicants for being international students and for being the first generation in the family to attend college.

Although UMass will continue to consider a student's minority status when deciding on admission, the University will no longer continue to award points to a student for any of these categories, including race.

Gargano said that based on the Supreme Court ruling, there will be no points; therefore, admissions will take a more holistic approach.

"It's a work in progress. We will use race as just one of the considerations. We will do a more comprehensive review of each student application," Gargano said.

Gargano expressed that having a diverse student body covers more than looking at race and ethnicity. He expressed that many factors go into making the student body diverse, including looking at socio-economic geography factors, sexual orientation and gender. In addition, paying attention to students with learning disorders and to international students is necessary. Gargano mentioned that putting a greater weight on all of these factors is important.

"I personally am not a fan of the point system," Gargano said.

Gargano said that fewer students are filling out the section that asks for race on the UMass application for admission; he said that most students do not see themselves fitting into any of those categories.

"Most students want their admission to be based on their own merits," Gargano said. "They don't define themselves in terms of those categories. They want to know that they did on their own."

When predicting the outcome of the new policy, Gargano said he doesn't think the number of minority students applying and being accepted will decrease.

"I think for those universities that don't include race in the admission process, their numbers will drop," he said.

Numerous universities across the country are reviewing admission policy changes regarding race, including the University of Georgia, the University of Washington and the University of California. Earlier this month, Ohio State University adopted a similar policy to UMass'.

Unlike UMass, however, Ohio State University will change its undergraduate application, adding four essay questions in an effort to take a closer look at prospective students.

Gargano said he believes that right now, the UMass student body reflects the state demographic, but he hopes to strategically move along to have the student body be reflective of the national demographic.

EMILIE DOUGANIS/COLLEGIAN

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, is working to create an admissions policy that will more accurately depict diversity in society.

U.S. on hunt for Baghdad bombers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqis are evacuated out of a building after a suicide attacker slammed an explosives-rigged car into a barrier outside the Baghdad hotel in the Iraqi capital on Sunday.

By TAREK AL-ISSAWI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The American administrator in Iraq vowed to hunt down those responsible for a car bomb attack that shook central Baghdad, killing at least six bystanders and wounding dozens of others.

Sunday's attack outside the Baghdad Hotel was the seventh fatal vehicle bombing in Iraq since early August. The bombings have killed more than 140 people.

"We will work with the Iraqi police to find those responsible and bring them to justice," Iraq's U.S. civilian administrator, L. Paul Bremer, said after Sunday's bombing. So far, none of the planners of the previous bombings has been found.

Two cars exploded nearly simultaneously, but military spokesman Lt. Col. George Krivo said yesterday it was unclear whether the second car was part of the attack or if its fuel tank had been ignited by the first blast.

The Pentagon said gunfire from Iraqi guards and U.S. personnel aborted the plan to hit the hotel, home to officials of the U.S.-led occupation authority here and reportedly some members of Iraq's interim Governing Council.

At least one guard was reported among the six bystanders dead; the two drivers also were presumed killed, but was not clear if one or both were suicide attackers. One member of the 25-seat Governing Council, Mouwafak al-Rabii, told Al-Jazeera satellite television he suffered a slight hand injury.

The lunchtime attack sent terror-stricken Iraqis fleeing up Saadoun Avenue, over broken window glass from banks, restaurants and shops and past the bloodied bodies of injured. American helicopters and combat vehicles converged on the chaotic scene as black smoke from burning cars billowed over the central city.

The six victims and 32 injured reported at al-Kindi Hospital were all Iraqis, authorities said. The U.S. military said three Americans were slightly injured. Along Saadoun Avenue, feelings ran high against the Americans and their inability to stop the bombings. As rubble burned, a crowd chanted slogans calling the U.S.-led regime a failure.

The military said yesterday that two U.S. soldiers were killed and three wounded in two incidents in northern Iraq.

One soldier was killed and two were wounded in a rocket-propelled grenade attack Monday during a patrol in Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit.

A U.S. soldier was killed and a second was slightly wounded in when their vehicle struck a land mine Sunday night in Beiji, 120 miles north of Baghdad, the military said.

The deaths brought to 96 the number of U.S. soldiers known to have been killed in hostile action since May 1, when President Bush declared major combat over.

An explosion on the outskirts of the southern city of Basra slightly injured a British soldier yesterday, the British military said, but it gave no details. Basra residents said the explosion occurred as the soldier's vehicle was passing a gasoline station.

On Sunday, two U.S. military police were slightly injured in a blast, apparently from a roadside bomb, just outside the main U.S. Army base in Tikrit, 120 miles north of Baghdad. Another soldier was wounded when his convoy came under small-arms and grenade attack 60 miles south of the northern city of Kirkuk.

In other developments:

Hundreds of thousands of Shiite Muslim pilgrims concluded a weekend of religious celebration in the holy city of Karbala, south of Baghdad. The festival was peaceful despite a fiery Friday sermon by hard-line cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, who railed against the U.S. occupation and announced formation of his own Islamic "government."

Members of a visiting U.S. congressional delegation expressed American determination to stick it out in Iraq. "We are here to stay until these people are ready to take over," said Rep. H. James Saxton, R-N.J., referring to members of Iraqi security forces with whom the delegation met.

The heavily guarded Baghdad Hotel sits at the foot of a short side street running from Saadoun Avenue. A tall wall of concrete guards the intersection where the street meets the avenue. Bremer's Coalition Provisional Authority said some of its staff and contractors reside in the hotel, and for weeks it was rumored to be home to CIA staff, although the U.S. intelligence agency denied Sunday it was its headquarters.

Witnesses said two cars sped toward the intersection, one going up the wrong lane on Saadoun, a two-way road, and suddenly veered behind the barrier, toward the hotel.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
MOVING TO THE RIGHT
AN APOLOGY TO CONSERVATIVES
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
CHARLOTTE IS GOOD BAND LIVES UP TO ITS NAME AT MULLINS
SPORTS
PAGE 12
MINUTEMEN ROLL
HOCKEY VICTORIOUS AT UMASS LOWELL
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

Microbe generates electricity from sugar energy source

By DAN O'BRIEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Professor Derek Lovley of the University of Massachusetts Microbiology Department and postdoctoral researcher Swades Chaudhuri have discovered a microorganism that is capable of long-term electricity production, which could be an alternative source of energy in the near future.

The organism, Rhodoferax ferrireducens, is able to transfer electrons directly to an electrode as it metabolizes sugar into electricity. The electricity is produced by putting a wire between a microbe and an oxygen cell. This process collects the electron flow that otherwise would go directly to oxygen.

The application of this new energy source is still in its beginning stages. However, scientists have ideas concerning how the microorganism could be used to generate power. One idea is a tracking device for the government, explained Professor Lovely.

"It might be applied for something like a monitoring device for the Department of Defense, or possibly as an underwater tracking device, because it would be a lot easier to harvest the energy from that environment."

The researchers made their discovery by placing a bacteria and sugar with a graphite electrode in a closed glass container. When the bacteria began to eat the sugar, it came into contact with the electrode and began depositing electrons onto it.

When Lovley and Chaudhuri connected the electrode to another electrode exposed to the air, an electrical current began to flow.

Lovley also explained why there has been interest that considers using the microbes to generate electricity from sugar as an alternative to fossil fuels.

"There's been a lot of interest in microbial fuel cells trying to convert sugar into electricity," Lovley said. "But in the past, they've converted 10 percent or less of the available electrons, and we're up to over 80 percent."

The project began two years ago and was supported by the Office of Naval Research and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, as well as the U.S. Department of Energy.

Lovley explained that such attempts have been made before; however, the experiments resulted in little success. He said that previous experiments have required an electron shuttle between the sugar and oxygen. Unfortunately, this poses a potentially toxic situation for humans.

"People have done it without an [electron shuttle] before, but their recovery of energy was less than one percent."

The discovery by Lovley and Chaudhuri is receiving a good amount of press. The researchers have been interviewed by the Boston Globe, The New York Times and Science magazine. Most notably, their findings have appeared in the October issue of Nature Biotechnology.

The first step of this project has been considered a success; however, Lovley said it might be some time before the energy source can be used commercially.

"There are still issues with getting a high enough voltage and converting the sugar to electricity fast enough," he said. "Although the process is highly efficient, it is slow. And as the process is right now, we're not talking about a lot of power. It's barley enough to run a calculator."

Although this new finding cannot be used to power up your lawnmower or cell phone today, much progress has been made in the area of microbiological fuel cells.

"I don't want to give the impression that it's 'Back to the Future,' where we stuff a banana in the engine and go, but it's a pretty good leap from where microbial fuel cells were before," Lovley said.

EMILIE DOUGANIS/COLLEGIAN

Crouch, hold, engage!

Paul Sousa "Junior" of the Massachusetts Rugby Football Club engages in a scrum during the last home game of the season. The team defeated Boston University and is now tied for first in the Green League.

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a limited liability partnership, each of which is a separate

Woman reports assault by boyfriend

Offensive graffiti found in Coolidge Tower lounge

police log

compiled by Tom Coyle

Saturday, Oct. 4

12:48 a.m. A caller reported a fight among eight to 10 people underneath the overhang at Mackimmie Hall. The responding officer reported that the fight broken up and all was quiet.

1:26 a.m. An officer checking Southwest parking lots reported an individual involved in an assault and battery in Lot 22. Christopher DiDonato, 19, of 3 Nelson Rd., Burlington, Mass., was arrested for disorderly conduct.

2:30 a.m. An officer reported a couple of subjects running toward Health Services carrying a sign. The officer reported finding a subject meeting the suspect's description. Subhash Patel, 20, of 9 Dale St., Woburn, Mass., was arrested for misdemeanor larceny.

10:59 a.m. A report was received of a missing 10-year-old girl at the Campus Center Hotel. Amherst Police were advised. Her father called back to report that she had returned to the hotel and been reunited with her parents.

12:28 p.m. A party reported that someone had broken into his car in Lot 22 and had taken electronic components for his vehicle's performance.

8:19 p.m. A resident assistant in Washington Tower reported a round robin on the 13th floor involving 50 people. The responding officer reported that a small amount of alcohol was dumped.

Sunday, Oct. 5

12:42 p.m. A report was received of offensive graffiti in the 5th floor lounge of Coolidge Tower.

12:42 p.m. A caller reported that his car was damaged in the riots when another car was flipped onto it. He reported being able to grab the I.D. of the person responsible.

2:02 p.m. A laptop computer valued at $2,100 was reported stolen from Coolidge Tower. Michael Kelly, 21, of 46 Elmwood St., Somerville, Mass., was arrested for breaking and entering in the daytime to commit a felony, felony larceny and possession of a Class A substance.

5:52 p.m. A party in Washington Tower reported receiving several annoying phone calls. She was advised of her options for changing her number and was advised to have no further conversation with the perpetrators.

9:16 p.m. A caller in Melville Hall reported an ongoing problem with another resident regarding drugs. The responding officer reported being able to detect an odor, but there was no answer at the door.

Monday, Oct. 6

12:24 a.m. A distress call was received regarding several individuals stuck on the 17th floor in the No. 2 elevator at Washington Tower. Housing Services was advised and was reported to be en route.

2:30 a.m. A caller at the Agricultural Engineering Building reported being assaulted by her boyfriend. Amherst Fire Department was notified and the Amherst Police captured the suspect. Jorge Quinonez, 30, of 111 Meadow St., Amherst, Mass., was arrested for assault and battery and threatening to commit a crime.

8:40 a.m. A caller reported an accident involving a state vehicle hitting Munson Annex. The responding officer reported that the vehicle was extremely close to the building but had not struck it.

2:32 p.m. UMPD served two warrants in Washington Tower. Alexander Hamilton, 18, of 227 Middle St., West Newbury, Mass., and Derek Kuykendall, 19, of 136 Oakridge Dr., Ayer, Mass., were arrested on warrants.

3:35 p.m. UMPD served a warrant in Patterson Hall. Michael Heilner, 18, of 1 Essex St., Littleton, Mass., was arrested for warrants. The Dean of Students was informed.

5:22 p.m. Officers spoke with subjects kicking field goals against Coolidge Tower. The officer reported that the individuals had left when asked.

11:35 p.m. A resident assistant reported a group of 200 people gathering in the Orchard Hill Bowl. A second call reported that the subjects were getting naked and heading to Southwest.

Tuesday, Oct. 7

12:27 a.m. A subject jumped off the overhang at Berkshire Dining Hall and injured his leg. An Amherst Fire Department ambulance was on scene to transport the subject to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

9:16 a.m. Officers arrested a subject at a traffic stop on Commonwealth Ave. David Brown of 524 Groton St., Dunstable, Mass., was arrested for unlawful possession of fireworks.

10:09 a.m. Three breaking and enterings were discovered in Lot 13. The first vehicle had a broken vent window and 50 compact discs taken; the second vehicle had a smashed vent window; and the third vehicle had a broken door with a lock that appeared to have been drilled out. Police are investigating.

1:07 p.m. A caller reported that her gray Huffy bicycle had been stolen from outside Prince Hall.

1:27 p.m. A caller in John Quincy Adams Tower reported that his laptop computer had been stolen during the fire alarm the previous evening; a report was taken.

4:19 p.m. An anatomical model was reported stolen from the University Health Center.

5:08 p.m. $150 worth of books were reported stolen from the Textbook Annex.

5:36 p.m. A party reported that his roommate was having a seizure in Gorman Hall. The party was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Police summonsed Asher Gumbiner, 20, of 10155 E. Lake Dr., Englewood, Co., for possession of a false/stolen license and being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Wednesday, Oct. 8

10:32 a.m. A party reported that her vehicle was damaged in Lot 63 during a disturbance Monday night; a report was taken.

5:28 p.m. A subject filed a report of vehicle damage in Lot 11. The passenger side window was broken, the stereo was removed and the dashboard sustained substantial damage.

Thursday, Oct. 9

12:10 a.m. A party reported finding a blue Samsung cell phone in Guessmann laboratory.

10:34 a.m. Parking Services requested an officer's opinion on whether or not a vehicle had rolled into or had struck a car. The owner agreed to pay for the minor damage caused in the accident.

5:17 p.m. A toaster was reported stolen from Berkshire Dining Hall.

6:24 p.m. David Beauvais, 53, 723 Federal St., Belchertown, Mass., was arrested for trespassing at Totman Gym.

Friday, Oct. 10

12:12 a.m. An officer reported checking on a subject in John Quincy Adams Tower who may have been in possession of fireworks. The officer stated that the subject had two cans of pepper spray, has been trespassed and has surrendered his firearms identification card.

1:12 a.m. An officer reported checking on a subject sleeping in his car in the area near Alumni Stadium, formerly known as "The Maze." The officer stated that the subject had fallen asleep while reading.

2:05 a.m. An officer reported a subject using a megaphone near the Southwest Pyramids. The officer stated that the megaphone had been confiscated.

2:06 a.m. A cadet stated that there was a fight about to start involving 10 to 12 subjects in Lot 11. Officers reported that there was no physical violence involved and they arrested Christopher Donadio 20, of 182 420 East St., Weymouth, Mass., and David Wooten, 20, of 182 Pond St., South Weymouth, Mass., for being minors in possession of alcohol. Wooten was also charged with possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle.

2:39 a.m. A resident assistant reported an unruly, intoxicated individual who refused to leave Van Meter Hall. William Odamtten, 26, of 1 Woodward St., Worcester, Mass., was arrested for assault and battery.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Saltaker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagstic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

WRITE FOR NEWS

Ignite Your Spirit

UMASS MINUTEMEN

If you are spotted wearing UMASS gear the week before homecoming (Oct 14-17)

you'll be entered to win :

- a Drew Bledsoe autographed football
- Celtics tickets, Bruins tickets
- 2 Airline tickets to anywhere in the continental US some restriction dates apply
- ...and more

Remember:
You must be present at the Homecoming football game this Sat Oct/18/03 to win!

For a schedule of Homecoming events visit:
http://www.umassalumni.com/ignite/index.htm

Campus Activities
Homecoming Steering Committee
umasshomecoming@yahoo.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Liberal learning: where higher education falls

While sitting in a seat in a typical lecture hall college class, more than half the class will probably refuse to participate. The 50-minute period will consist of a somewhat interactive lecture while we scribble our notes, and then the day ends. In a week or so, we sit down for an hour and regurgitate the information with a series of multiple-choice bubbles for an exam. This is the process most universities call learning.

More now than ever, students are jumping into the job market with a diploma, a plethora of memorized facts, and not much else. According to a national report, "Greater Expectations: A New Vision for Learning as a Nation Goes to College," our generation of college graduates appears in the job force lacking analyzation, critical thinking and problem solving skills.

The blame is boiling down to the institutions of higher education. If a university is draining our life's savings in order to hand us a degree, we would assume we are gaining all the bonuses of a high priced education. This is not always the case. We must question the validity of a class that asks us to memorize and recite an entire textbook, without requiring much forethought or afterthought, for that matter. This image seems to mirror a high percentage of college courses today.

A movement sparked 30 years ago by a philosophy professor named John Dewey first began to reintroduce critical thinking into the classroom. The movement encourages students to dispel their usual reliance on notes, textbooks and test-based curricula. Rather, education is emphasized by group work, analyzing and hypothesizing on different topics. This process is known as "liberal learning."

Hands-on work is generally more memorable, and leaves a much deeper impact than any textbook memorization could have. In order to produce these results, professors often believe that smaller class ratios are necessary, a standard that major universities, such as the University of Massachusetts, may find hard to uphold.

The purpose of our time spent at UMass is not to cram our over-stimulated minds with more facts. Perhaps the real point of higher education is to train our minds to become better learners, philosophers and analysts. To be able to take information, process and represent in our own finished product is proof of true understanding and knowledge.

Patricia King has been conducting experiments on students at the University of Michigan for 25 years in educational psychology. "They're making what we call quasi- reflective judgments," she said. "Even four years of college only brings traditional-age college students to a very low level of critical thinking and judgment."

While competent and well-educated adults are needed for the workforce today, a generation of unreasoning machines will be the demise of the philosophical and reasoning world. Unfortunately, critical thinking is not inherited, it can only be taught.

As students at UMass, we have witnessed the devastating effects of the budget cuts on our classes, faculty and the quality of our education. It is obvious that lawmakers are not going to take responsibility for our education. With the dwindling numbers of UMass faculty, our professors may not have the funds or means to provide us with an education that encourages us to reason and analysis, rather than recycle textbook quotes to satisfy a general education requirement.

If we find that this university cannot provide a critical thought environment, we must pride ourselves enough to raise our hand in the class of 250 snoozing law students and explain why the Crucible demonstrates the demise of theocracy. We, the students of UMass, must take an active stand for our own education.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the UMass Daily Collegian Board of Editors.

Info for this editorial was used from www.christiansciencemonitor.com.

Dear Conservatives: an apology to the right

Johnny Donaldson

Dear Conservatives,

I want to say I'm sorry. On behalf of all liberals, everywhere, I must apologize for being too ignorant and arrogant to not be a liberal. I have to concede now, that you were right. I'll cry "uncle" and say that the Conservatives have won.

I must say, though, that being a liberal was rewarding for a time. I really enjoyed the way that I could accept someone even if they were of a different race, religion or — dare I say? — sexual orientation. Being a Liberal, I was inclined to give almost everyone a fair shake when it came to acceptance. I never saw anything wrong with being gay, or being black, or being Jewish or Islamic, for all that matters. That's just who people were.

It'll only be a matter of time before I, too, am a conformist zombie bowing down at the alter of bigotry, prejudice and good, old-fashioned patriotism.

But I understand now that I was wrong. See, I never knew that what people did in the privacy of their own homes was morally wrong. Geez, I'm kicking myself because I feel as though I should have been aghast sooner. When I found out that I should have been outraged by such filthy, reprehensible acts, I tried to act as outraged as I could. Granted, I'm still a novice at this whole conservative thing, but I'm sure I'll be able to fathom up the right amounts of righteous zeal in due time. It'll only be a matter of time before I, too, am a conformist zombie bowing down at the altar of bigotry, prejudice and good, old-fashioned patriotism.

Now if only my fellow Liberals follow suit, then we will be one big, happy, George Bush worshipping family.

As a former Liberal, I must say I am ashamed of the antics of such stammering liberal mouthpieces like Al Franken and Michael Moore. How could anyone stand the deeply self-absorbed arrogance of these braying liberal jerks? I mean, look at the mouthpieces that represent the conservative side. Would you ever see someone like Bill O'Reilly or Ann Coulter act in such a phenomenally shallow and narrow-minded way? Moore is nothing but a blowhard, but, by golly, O'Reilly is an insightful political genius.

Being a Conservative is so much easier because I don't need to think too hard about what to think and what to like. As a newly minted Conservative, I am told what to think and what to like, and so the pressure is let off me, which feels absolutely terrific. No more enlightened thinking or expanded intellectual horizons for me. I don't have to worry about infecting myself with such dirt-laden trash like hip-hop or rock music, or movies in which there might be bloody violence or sex.

I don't have to worry about accepting people for who they are. I can demonize Goths as members of some Trenchcoat Mafia because they dress in black and listen to industrial. I can rail against the idea of marriage for gays because being gay is evil and wrong. And abortion? Now I'm against it. The best way to terminate a pregnancy is to not get pregnant after all. It makes life so much less complicated if I am constantly told what is right and what is wrong. Not thinking for myself never felt so good.

And as for following politics ... well, politics have never been so simple! All I gotta do is tune in to the Fox News Channel and I get everything and anything I need to know right there. I just click on the tube and watch a few minutes of Bush at a press conference, and I'm fully prepared for a day's worth of debates.

Look at the great, great, great service that El Presidente has done for a country this year. We got Saddam out of power! Ain't that grand! Sure, we had to lie our way into a war and risk the lives of our soldiers, but desperate times call for desperate measures. Now I say we fork over that $87 billion so we can rebuild Little America.

But it was Good Charlotte who everyone came to see, and the band was awesome. From the moment that a giant curtain descended displaying a portion of the "Young and the Hopeless" cover, with strobe lights flashing overhead, you knew that the band was going to deliver on what it promised: a killer live show.

So, to all you Conservatives out there, I apologize. I apologize for my former life as a stupid, ill-bred dork who truly believed in helping the environment, avoiding war and accepting his fellow man. I was wrong. I admit that now. I was under a fog of rebellion, too narrow-minded to see past the lies of my hippie Liberal professors. But now I am better and I am looking forward to a life of making the world a more uptight place. Now, won't all the Liberals join me in converting?

With a heart full of joy, and an eye on the Patriot Act, yours sincerely,

Johnny Donaldson.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

The aura awaiting Saturnalia

Robert Carey

In California, the recall circus is at an end; and I, never one to bet against the stupidity of the American populace, became a slightly richer man for it. In Iraq, the circus is becoming deadlier by the day, and the locals are wondering when the U.S. is going to strike its tents and move on. In other parts of the world, the sad saga of Afghanistan continues, Cuba continues to be crushed by foreign boots, China has begun blasting itself into space and West Africa is dealing with public disgruntlement over the rise in penis snatching (seriously, no joke).

And what's going on in our corner of the world? Why, it is postseason baseball goddamn it. It's a time in autumn when there is an all too short overlap between America's two finest sports: baseball and football. Need I type more?

Waiting for the beginning of every postseason game is excruciating. They push the start time back an hour to hype it up, and to show you the crummy fall line-up on FOX. When it gets within 15 minutes of game time, they give you the announcers: Joe Buck, and baseball's John Madden-version of a senile analyst, Tim MacCarver. And for some strange reason, Mariners' second basemen Bret Boone is there in the box as well.

I suspiciously wonder when Boone's contract is up with the M's, remembering that the Yankees are going to need a good second baseman next season after they move Soriano to the outfield. Wouldn't it be great, I thought — in a "hurray for all things Yankee, George Stienbrenner" kind of way — if the boss acquires Bret and then he would be playing in the same infield as his big brother Aaron? But whether or not Bret's appearance as an announcer is some Yankees-sponsored PR stunt, he does a good job of correcting Tim MacCarver when he begins to rant about how the game was played in the '60s.

Everyone who remotely knows anything about baseball has a team they're rooting for in the ALCS. And what kind of decent, fair-minded person doesn't want to see the Sox win? Everyone likes to see arrogance defeated, to watch an Empire crumble, and to see Goliath fall back on his heels.

The Red Sox have a history as the underdog. Who wants to see an insipid Yankees' win-all rerun World Series that has caused every respectable baseball fan to seethe at the mouth with disgust?

But this year the Sox bandwagon is rolling, picking up fans and non-fans alike, all chanting the two-word phrase that, out of personal annoyance, I will not repeat here.

Right now in New England, amongst the red-orange autumn explosion, a new page is being written in Boston sports history. And everyone can feel a sense of unity in the fact that they are taking a part in it. At my work, we can't help but spend the day talking about it. I spend the morning explaining to Andy, my foreman, why Manny Ramirez is the best hitter in the American League, despite being completely aloof and incompetent in every other aspect of the game.

This year the Sox bandwagon is rolling, picking up fans and non-fans alike, all chanting the two-word phrase that, out of personal annoyance, I will not repeat here.

But I really want to continue my argument with Paul, one of my co-workers, as to why a feces-throwing chimp could do a better job managing the team than Grady Little. But he has gone to secure a Kubota tractor from Hydro-seeder Shaun McNeely — brother of the famed "Hurricane" Peter McNeely, who became Mike Tyson's human punching bag for approximately 92 seconds.

In the bars, I share stories with the other sports fanatics. One guy tells me of the time he saw Derek Lowe stumbling drunk during his meltdown 2001 season outside a bar in Cleveland. I tell him the time I met recently acquired AAA prospect Jamie Brown — he showed me his Tommy John scar, and told me of all the great hitters on rehab stints who had taken him deep in his short career, as we watched the All-Star game at Applebee's. We talk about Bellichechian football, the recent managerial moves (or lack thereof) of Danny Ange.

But of course no conversation is as dear to our hearts as Red Sox memories. I talk to fans of all ages that remember where they were in '67, '75, '78, '86 and all the other crucial moments in Sox history. In recent memory, we reflect on the Brunansky catch, Big Mo and the Indian series of the late '90s, Pedro's reign of dominance, and the Rocket's departure.

For Sox fans, all of these memories are collecting like dead wood at the bottom an unmanaged Yellowstone forest, waiting for that one spark of victory to erupt into a conflagration, a chaotic Saturnalia celebration that will turn the world upside down. As Sox fans, we do not only root for our team, but for the chance to release our years of disappointment of seasons ended too short.

The foolish riots conducted by student fans right now are nothing but adolescent hiccups, for what could potentially be the greatest celebration in sports history. To those premature celebrators, I say: "Patience my friends, patience."

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Selling out your security

Despite the overwhelming liberal sentiment on this campus, I like to believe that I'm not the only one whom these stories of illegal aliens committing felonies when they shouldn't be in the country in the first place irritate.

The latest such reported incident came out of Miami a few weeks ago. A Honduran man named Reynaldo Rapalo was arrested and charged with raping seven women and with sexual assault on a 10-year girl. The heart-warming part of this story is that, despite three prior arrests, the Immigration and Naturalization Service did not detain him, and he has a valid Florida driver's license.

Dan Cote

Right now there are close to 8 million people in this country who shouldn't be, and President Bush hasn't done anything about it. Neither did President Clinton. The right pressures with promises of cheap labor, and the left and ethnic interest groups pressure with the race card.

As someone who works in restaurants, I've had the experience of working with some of these people, and most of them are honest people just trying to make their lives better. However, the federal government is constitutionally bound to protect our borders and enforce naturalization laws. They will not do that of course. Right now, the Internal Revenue Service is providing 6 million illegals with taxpayer IDs so that employers can deduct taxes, but they are refusing to hand over those names to Homeland Security.

Local governments in the following cities are instructing their employees to not report illegal aliens to the Federal Government: San Francisco; Los Angeles; New York City; Portland, Maine; Oregon; Seattle; Denver; and Chicago. The feds and states currently supply welfare checks to 200,000 families that are here illegally. The state of California spends about $3 million a year in providing services for illegal aliens. Say hello to the recall election and Gray Davis pandering to the illegals.

The legislature in Texas gives health care to undocumented aliens. So many Americans are uninsured, and yet people who aren't supposed to be here get free health care. Rep. Luis Gutierrez (D-Ill.) and a number of special interest groups are supporting a bill that proposes general amnesty to millions of illegal immigrants in the United States.

My one-time home, Arizona, has an initiative on the ballot that would stop funding to illegal aliens, and as of right now, over 70 percent of the state is in favor. However, the governor and Senators McCain and Kyl are not in favor.

Even the most hopeless idealist can tell that the federal government has no intention of enforcing immigration laws. God forbid you put up with the left calling you a racist or the right telling you you're hurting business. Yet government officials act as if there is something wrong with putting ropes on the border. All over the world, if you want to cross borders you have to pass by heavily armed gentlemen. How many people will try to come over if they are looking at a soldier with an M-16?

Of course, the left has no solution. If any of them get elected they won't do anything; they don't even talk about having a plan. Howard Dean especially could care less about being here illegally, as long as you have a job. General Wesley Clark is a shell for the Clintons, so we all know where he stands. I don't know about you, but I certainly don't have any hope that our government is going to see any change in its policies.

Information from www.boston-globe.com, www.foxnews.com and www.fairus.org was used in this editorial.

Daniel Cote is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

America's REAL problem

To the Editor:

As I picked up the Collegian on Oct. 9, I began reading, much as I usually do. Turning to the editorials, I expected to see the normal gripes regarding rioting students and whatnot. Imagine my surprise, when I got to Jim Nee's piece: "Four things you can't say at UMass."

His blatantly racist opening paragraph caught me extremely off guard. However, the true impact of his piece didn't really set in until the end. Despite the fact that Jim is clearly an ultra-conservative, he is a terrible one at that. As I'm sure his heroes are Bill O'Reilly and What's-His-Name Scarborough (after all, he boldly states, "... Fox News is the only semi-conservative network that we can rely on to help us see the entire story ..."), he doesn't take an extremely important cue from them: the fact that, throughout his entire commentary, he doesn't present us with a single fact to back up his disgustingly misguided arguments. So, I've decided to go back through his piece, rework it a bit, and go that extra mile.

Anyone with a shred of common sense will know that his first "argument" is extremely weak on its own. He announces, "It's a fact: black people are more racist than whites." They are? That's quite a feat, interviewing the millions of African-Americans that make the U.S. their home. Well, I suggest Mr. Nee talk to my African-American friends. If they do hate me because I'm white, they do a really good job of hiding it.

Next, he complains about the overt racism he faces every day. However, he doesn't mention where the derogatory remarks come from. Logic says it would not be in the minorities' best interests to perpetrate hate against the majority ... it just doesn't make sense.

I will agree that Fox News is definitely a conservative network. But semi? I'd go as far as to say ultra-conservative. A recent study, showed something different than what Jim says: Heavy viewers are four times more likely to hold untrue positions regarding the war in Iraq, compared to media consumers who rely solely on NPR or PBS (both somewhat conservative news sources). A sample of the questions, developed by the research center — characterized as being severely wrong misconceptions — are as follows:

1.) Saddam Hussein was directly involved with Sept. 11; 2.) Weapons of mass destruction have already been found in Iraq; 3.) World opinion favored U.S. military action in Iraq.

Isn't Fox News' tag line "Fair and Balanced"? Hardly.

Next, the issue of welfare arises. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, overall, welfare rates have dropped between March '02 and March '03. The two states with the highest percantage increase? Idaho and Maine. California and New York actually decreased in this period, so forget those racist assumptions. Between 1960 and 2000, there was a slight increase in the numbers on welfare. However, the change was only 0.4 percent.

There is a population out there called the working poor that conservatives will have no choice but to recognize. As for the unwed mothers and illegitimate children, that's clearly aimed at African-Americans, and is nothing more than a racial stereotype. Ask all my childless African-American friends, while you are questioning them on their feelings toward white people.

I hope this serves to show why people like Jim Nee, with completely unfounded biases, are what is entirely wrong with this country. Instead of pointing an accusatory finger, we need to recognize that we are a melting pot of the world. This is what we were founded on, and what we remain. If this message isn't conveyed, just realize that if anyone is going to voice such strong opinions, please provide evidence to support the ideas. Otherwise, you just look stupid.

Chris Canton
UMass student

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Friday. Interested in applying? Contact Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Good times all around

GC rocks Mullins crowd

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was a blessed sight when Good Charlotte rocked the Mullins Center Friday night.

Colorfully attired fans — young and old — came out in force to watch as the modern era's preeminent face of punk took to the stage to wow the gathering masses. And Good Charlotte did not disappoint, delivering an electrifying performance that kept the crowd on its feet and jumping around with wild abandon.

Good Charlotte w/Mest and Something Corporate Mullins Center
Amherst
Oct. 10

Good Charlotte was the centerpiece of the nearly four-hour-long show, playing songs off their self-titled debut and their multi-platinum follow-up, "The Young and the Hopeless."

Opening acts Something Corporate and Mest provided solid support during their performances. Both bands managed to overcome the stigma that usually comes along with opening act territory by getting the crowd to cheer and sing along during their slots.

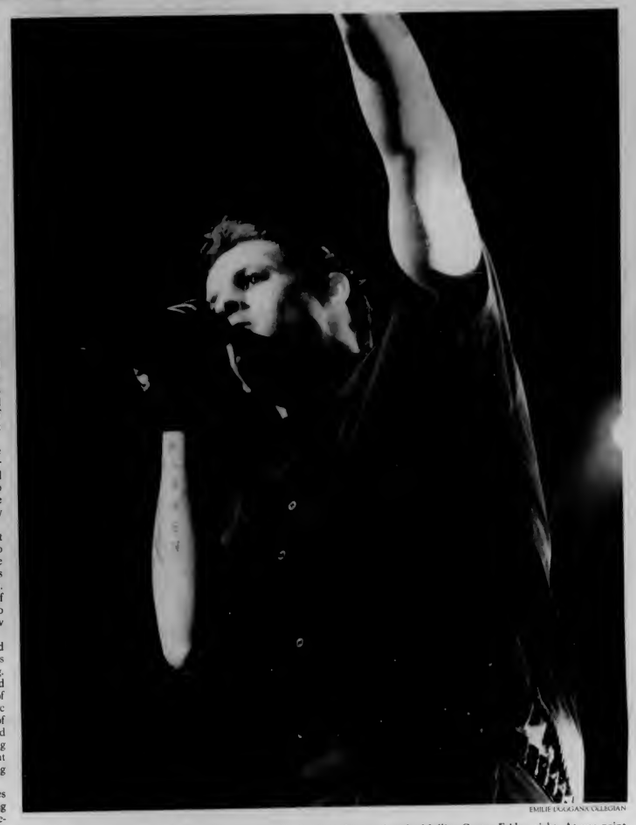
But it was Good Charlotte who everyone came to see, and the band was awesome. From the moment that a giant curtain descended displaying a portion of the "Young and the Hopeless" cover, with strobe lights flashing overhead, you knew that the band was going to deliver on what it promised: a killer live show.

EMILIE DOGGANS/COLLEGIAN

Andrew McMahan and the rest of Something Corporate opened for GC.

GC — as fans have christened the band — roared through an assortment of popular songs, with the set bookended by its two biggest hits, "The Anthem" and "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous." Fans cheered when the opening notes of each song floated through the arena, and many a fan favorite was heard, including "Girls and Boys," "Little Things" and "Motivation Proclamation." They only disappointed by not playing a personal favorite, "East Coast Anthem."

The boys also have great stage presence, bantering back and forth between songs and getting the crowd to chant, "Yankees suck!" while extolling the virtues of the Red Sox. (A nice way to worm your way into the graces of the UMass crowd.)



When lead vocalist Joel, his guitar-slinging twin Benji, and guitarist Billy sat down for the acoustic ballad "Emotionless," jokes abounded at the expense of sensitive emo-rocker Chris Carrabba of Dashboard Confessional and his communal sing-along shows. Of course, many of Joel's jokes were taking at Benji's expense, too.

Good Charlotte easily won over the crowd, welcoming those who have never been to a GC show into "the family." And the music was played with enough sharp energy and professionalism to get the crowd pogo-ing up and down where they stood.

Mest kicked off the show with a decent gig, but one that paled in comparison to Good Charlotte's later performance. The band sounded good, mostly playing songs off its recent self-titled album. Unfortunately, GC also seemed sort of static on-stage; vocalist Tony Lovato offered a few wisecracks, but the show could have used more energy.

Something Corporate followed, and they delivered the energy that was strangely muted during Mest's opening. Unfortunately, some poorly designed sound engineering took the sting out of Something Corporate's sails. The music sounded a bit tinny, while the vocals of Andrew McMahon came out garbled and indistinct. Diehard fans could still sing along, but the few new songs that McMahon introduced (off the upcoming album "North") were left out-of-reach.

Still, while there were a few glitches here and there, the one-two-three teaming of Mest, Something Corporate and, especially, Good Charlotte made for a spectacular live show.

EMILIE DOGGANS/COLLEGIAN

Good Charlotte frontman Joel Madden plays to a loud and roudy crowd at the Mullins Center Friday night. At one point during the show the power pop punk band led the crowd in a cheering of, "Yankees suck!"

Spearhead hits target with new and old fans

Frontman Michael Franti talks about the tour, his politically-driven lyrics and the new album

By NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Michael Franti has been making music for almost 20 years; he has been signed to a major record label, has received critical praise and has even had airplay on commercial radio and MTV. However, it has not been until this past year that the band he has been fronting since 1994, Spearhead, has properly received credit.

Michael Franti and Spearhead
Tues., Oct. 16
Pearl Street
Northampton
$17.50 Advance
$20/ door

When Franti and his band play Pearl Street tonight, they are sure to be playing before an audience of longtime hardcore fans and new, curious listeners who have only just been turned on to Spearhead.

The reason for the recent boost in attention for the band is they latest release, "Everyone Deserves Music." It is a politically conscious, musically diverse album in which Franti and his band look at the world we live in and set out to make it better.

"In the verses I state the problem," Franti said. "The bridge is a musical uplift where I come to a resolution." Having this formula makes songwriting easy for Franti, who wrote all the music on his guitar, as he certainly has plenty to say about modern society.

"We can chase down all our enemies / Bring them to our knees / We can bomb the world to pieces / But we can't bomb it into peace," he sings in a relaxed voice on "Bomb the World."

PHOTOS COURTESY ARTIST DIRECT INC.

Michael Franti and Spearhead bring their politically-conscious hip-hop/reggae/rock music tonight to Pearl Street in Northampton.

Franti's suggestion on this song is simply "Power to the peaceful / Love to the people."

If Franti's lyrics seem at times too hopeful, it's because he is trying to combat the heaviness of the times.

"It was a conscious decision to make an album that wasn't so heavy that at the end you felt like, 'ah, the whole world sucks,'" he explained. "It's easy to feel that way when you watch CNN. I wanted to make an album that would address all emotion." And Spearhead has no doubt succeeded with "Everyone Deserves Music."

Franti articulated the album's title as: "Music is a healing art. Through music we have the opportunity to feel emotions we never felt. You listen to the blues when you're sad. You listen to samba when you want to dance. You listen to punk rock or heavy metal to release aggression."

Franti believes, as he sings in the title track, "Even our worst enemies, lord, they deserve music," so that everyone may experience a wide range of emotions.

This album, like 2000's "Stay Human," was released as a joint effort though Franti's own label, Boo Boo Wax, and iMusic. Spearhead previously spent its career on Capitol Records, which promoted the band well and treated them properly; but Franti saw with the recent technology boom that there was no reason left to stay on a major label.

"These days, as artists, we have the ability to record our own music in a cheaper way than it used to be so we don't need to get tons of money from a label," he said. Franti is now able to record his albums by himself and not have to worry about the label taking unfair percentages of the gross.

Lyrically, the album does tend to dwell on political strife, although Franti does his best to see the light, even with a war looming over his shoulder. While Spearhead is classified as a "hip-hop" group, the album travels over many different styles of music — from relaxed acoustic pop, to reggae, to hip-hop — in order to keep an upbeat mood and an aurally interesting album.

Franti notes that in making an album filled with different types of music — all of it very clean and glossy sounding — he was trying to make a commercial-sounding album. The phrase "conscious music for the masses" is scrawled across the back of the album booklet and Franti's press release frequently talks about his desire to make mainstream music with a strong message. "Everyone Deserves Music" succeeds on all counts.

Through his talents as a musician and through his lyrics, Franti has over the past two decades proven himself to be one of the most forward-thinking, influential voices in hip-hop, even if a lot of mainstream hip-hop still has a negative image.

Franti recalls, "Rick Rubin [a highly influential producer who has worked with many hip-hop and rock groups] used to say it's like wrestling ... you create these characters that are larger than life." Franti does not have any anger or frustration at the music business or the artists that partake in these practices; he just understands that they are "selling an image."

Spearhead, being one of the few bands in an increasingly growing wave of politically conscious hip-hop groups, has been singled out to target a very specific audience. Likeminded people of all ages and of all tastes in music have been drawn to Spearhead. However, as Spearhead's popularity contin-

Continued on page 7

First D.C. sniper movie to be made, but is it too soon?

By BEN NUCKLOS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE (AP) — Less than a year after the arrests of John Allen Muhammad and Lee Boyd Malvo, the first movie about the shootings that terrorized the suburbs and exurbs of the nation's capital is here.

"D.C. Sniper: 23 Days of Fear," which premieres 9 p.m. EDT Friday on USA, was admittedly rushed through production to be finished while the shooting spree was still fresh in people's minds.

(Also keeping it fresh in their minds: today's scheduled start of Muhammad's trial.)

Following books about the sniper probe by Montgomery County Police Chief Charles Moose and two Washington Post reporters, this relatively evenhanded docudrama doesn't reveal much.

And while it's nearly impossible to replicate the feeling of waking up every morning wondering if there's going to be another shooting, the movie does capture both the pervasive anxiety of the region and the stunning randomness of the attacks.

"The main question would be, 'Is it too early?' And my answer to that is, 'This is America. We move on very fast,'" says Charles S. Dutton, who stars as Moose. "I didn't want to do anything exploitative or disrespectful to the victims' families, and I don't think this is."

Not only does Dutton bear a passing resemblance to Moose, he also has ties to the area. A Baltimore native, he lives on a farm in Howard County, Montgomery's neighbor to the north.

"I was physically here during just about all the shootings, and those guys were captured maybe 15 miles from my place," Dutton says by phone from his home. "So

Continued on page 6

New horror flick is barely living

'House of the Dead' could be the worst movie of 2003

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

No one expects high art from a horror movie adapted from a zombie shoot-'em-up arcade game, but one expects that it will at least be a guilty pleasure. "House of the Dead," on the other hand, makes "Resident Evil" — the last movie adapted from a zombie shoot-'em-up arcade game — look like a model of cinematic sophistication by comparison.

This is the latest in a recent line of horror movies that harkens back to the grindhouse cinema of the '70s and '80s, which, at their best, delivered gritty classics like "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" to audiences. But unlike Rob Zombie's genuinely disturbing "House of 1,000 Corpses," or Eli Roth's genuinely clever "Cabin Fever," the filmmakers of this Z-grade travesty seem more content to rip off the worst that the genre had to offer.

One wonders how a film this cheap and this cheesy managed to escape the direct-the-video dungeon and receive a theatrical release. It's even sadder when one sees a truly good horror movie like 2001's "Ginger Snaps" tossed to the side in favor of something like this.

True to form, the filmmakers populate their minimal plot with the stupidest of characters enacted by the worst of actors. Here, a group of dim collegg kids charter a boat from salty sea dog Captain Kirk (the first of many lame, self-referential jokes) to take them to the "rave of the year" on the Isla de La Muerte in the San Juan islands. As Kirk's creepy, hunchbacked first mate helpfully explains, "muerte" is Spanish for death.

When this group of morons gets to the island and finds the rave mysteriously devoid of people, do they think to listen to the one reasonably smart girl in their midst and hightail it out of there? No, they tap the keg, split up, and leave the two biggest idiots behind to have sex. Meanwhile, the rest of the group finds a trio of ravers huddled in a mossy old house and discovers that a horde of nasty, violent zombies have ravaged the island.

'House of the Dead'
Directed by Uwe Boll
Starring Jonathan Cherry, Tyron Leitso
Artisan
Rated R
90 mins.
Grade F

"House of the Dead" is a movie made by people who are so obviously enthralled in making a horror movie that they forgot to make it a good horror movie. Obviously, there are no scares here, but there is absolutely no tension, either. There is no suspense to the proceedings. The characters are such charmless, brainless ciphers that not only do you not care if they live, but you don't even get a morbid rush seeing them getting ripped to pieces. All the exploding heads and gratuitous topless breasts in the world can't save this garbage.

Director Uwe Boll and his writers, Mark A. Altman and Dave Parker (the latter, ironically, made a direct-to-video zombie movie of his own, "The Dead Hate the Living!," that was actually better than this), seemingly have no grasp on the mechanics of moviemaking. "House of the Dead" is at times hilarious in the fact that the victims spout the most idiotic dialogue imaginable, without the merest hint of irony. It's as if they played a particularly cruel joke on their not-at-all talented young cast, of which I will be charitable and not name names. Nor will I mention the German "Das Boot" star who took on the role of Captain Kirk — I assume for the paycheck, because this will no doubt find itself erased from his resumé.

Boll shoots the movie as if he's auditioning for a low rent Xerox of "The Matrix." He throws in a lot of slo-mo bullet footage and freeze frames, and then he splices in footage of the actual videogame. During a spectacularly violent zombies-vs.-humans melee that is the movie's centerpiece, he does at least capture the feel of a playing a videogame. Unfortunately, it feels as though someone else is playing. It's the one moment in the movie, after a long, tiring slog through some dreary exposition, that at least had the potential to entertain — a potential that was horribly squandered by the repetitiveness of the sequence.

It isn't worth it to get into the numbing amounts of contrivances that pile up on screen, nor is it really worth the effort to pinpoint the worst aspects of the movie — mainly because "House of the Dead" is the worst aspect of "House of the Dead." This is a movie with no reason to exist, since all it adds to the zombie genre is swimming zombies. This is the kind of horror movie in which the brain matter is more likely to be splattered on screen rather than used by the filmmakers.

COURTESY ARTISAN

Director Uwe Boll's "House of the Dead" has all the aspects of a classic horror film, however, the movie fails to entertain the audience like its predecessors.

Nepalese music legend exchanges fame for security

By Foster Klug
Associated Press

BALTIMORE (AP) — For millions of Nepalese worldwide, Prem Raja Mahat's rich, mellow voice is an instant portal to an idyllic picture of life and love beneath the vistas of the highest mountain range in the world.

The Nepalese music superstar is currently crafting his 47th album — while working as a restaurant manager in Baltimore, where he makes about three times what he did as his country's version of Bruce Springsteen.

Mahat abandoned fame and his homeland seven years ago to protect his wife and four school-aged children from an insurgency that has killed more than 7,000 people. Guerrillas inspired by the late Chinese revolutionary leader Mao Zedong have fought since 1996 to replace Nepal's constitutional monarchy with a communist state. The government calls them terrorists.

"I miss Nepal, because they love me there. I miss being famous," Mahat said recently, sipping a frothy yogurt lassi and watching the early dinner crowd stroll past the Mughal Garden restaurant, where he earns about $3,000 a month.

"But in my country there is fighting and death and poverty. That is why I left," he said. "Every parent in the world ... wants to do well for their children. I am no different."

There are approximately 50,000 Nepalese in the United States, according to Krishna Aryal, first secretary at the Embassy of Nepal in Washington.

Forty percent of Nepal's 23 million people live in grinding poverty, and tourism to Katmandu, the country's culturally rich capital, and Mt. Everest, which straddles the Nepal-China border, has dropped because of the violence. The Himalayan kingdom lies between China and India.

Todd Lewis, a professor of religion at the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., who has lived in Nepal periodically over the past 23 years, said Nepalese from all parts of society have left the country in search of better lives.

"Having talent, even recording, doesn't necessarily get you anywhere financially in Nepal," Lewis said. "Even a modest, middle-class life here running a restaurant would still be vastly more lucrative than staying in Nepal and living off of one of the poorest communities in the world."

Mahat, 42, is one of the most famous people to have left Nepal. While fans at home feel the loss, Nepalese in the United States revel in the handful of concerts he gives every year.

When Mahat takes the stage, he usually carries a sarangi, a small stringed instrument that's played upright, like a miniature cello. He wears a high topi, the national cap of Nepal, and a brightly colored vest. His hit love song from 2002, "Hiunchulima Hiun," or "Snow in the Snowcapped Mountains," runs more than 20 minutes.

"We call him the 'King of Folk Songs,'" said Ram Kharel, who hosts an American public access television show on Nepalese news and culture. "At every Nepalese event in America, even if he's not there, people sing his songs. He is that popular."

Mahat originally came to the United States to visit friends. He decided to stay when he realized the opportunities his children would have here. Mahat plans to return once the violence subsides and his children are grown. In the meantime, he visits Nepal every year or so to record the songs he writes before his shift at the restaurant.

The important thing, he said, is that his children understand what he has given up — and why.

"They thank me for bringing them here and giving them this opportunity," he said, flashing a wide, album-cover smile. "They understand my sacrifice, that I am giving up my name and good job — for them."

For people who grew up idolizing Mahat, seeing their hero toiling in an everyday job can be jarring.

"We are a little sad because he is so famous in Nepal. It would be great for him to be singing rather than working in a restaurant," said Roshanee Shrestha, who recently watched him bus tables and greet guests. She first heard Mahat's voice as a little girl, curled up in her home in the shadow of the snowcapped Himalayas.

"In the villages of Nepal, I think he is like a Michael Jackson," said Shrestha, 30, who now runs a variety store outside Baltimore.

D.C.-area sniper TV movie in the works

Continued from page 5

although I was maybe 30 miles north of where everything was happening, you could still really feel the anxiety in my area."

Director Tom McLoughlin and screenwriter Dave Erickson, who also collaborated on USA's "Murder in Greenwich," did as much research as they could in the time they had — speaking with investigators and Montgomery County Executive Doug Duncan, among others.

But Moose, who was embroiled in a dispute with the county's ethics commission over whether he could write his book, was not involved with the project. And Dutton, who was performing on Broadway throughout preproduction, came to the set cold.

"I've never met Charles Moose. He wasn't on the set. I finished the play April 4, flew to Vancouver April 5 and we were shooting April 6. I had no rehearsal time," Dutton says. "So one thing I didn't try to do is try to capture his speech patterns or dialect because I really didn't have time to work on that."

Dutton did, however, study tapes of Moose's news conferences. "At the podium, he had a certain pensiveness. You could see him thinking before he answered a question. That was really fun to play, that introspection."

"D.C. Sniper" cuts quickly between the investigation and the alleged shooters, Muhammad (Bobby Hosea) and Malvo (Trent Cameron), as they pick out their targets, elude dragnets and try to initiate communication with investigators. While certain elements are exaggerated, it's still shocking to see their phone calls ignored and see them slip away from police because they didn't match what investigators were looking for.

Still, inaccuracies are likely to needle those who followed the case closely, particularly those who live in the region. A passer-by greets Doug Duncan (Jay O. Sanders) with "Good morning, Mayor Duncan" (he's not the mayor of anything); Moose pops up at crime scenes, even those out of his jurisdiction, just minutes after the shootings, when in reality he was holed up at police headquarters.

Ultimately, there are few surprises in "D.C. Sniper." While Dutton has some powerful moments, he plays Moose largely as the world saw him: at times steely and determined, at times bumbling and frustrated, at times overcome with emotion at the plight of the victims.

CAN'T WAIT TO SEE THAT MOVIE?
DON'T.

Get MOVIES IN MINUTES™ with Movielink. Just visit college.movielink.com and pick from our library of new and classic movies. Dowload and start watching the movie in minutes. There's no subscription fee and no late fees. All students get 50% OFF their first download, and 25% OFF the rest.

COLLEGE.MOVIELINK.COM

Free Quiznos* Philly Cheesesteak Sub with every rental*

Movielink™

©2003 Movielink, LLC. *Limited time offer. Terms and conditions apply. See college.movielink.com for details.

Come Down - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
• Monday •
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
1/2 Price Appetizers, Wings & Nachos 'til Midnight
• Tuesday & Wednesday •
1/2 PRICE WINGS
Open to Close...eat in only!
Coors LIGHT
PITCHER
$6.50
October Special

The Source
(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

TuesdayOctober14

BOOKS

Well-known essayist Sue Halperin reads from her first novel, "The Book of Hard Things," tonight at the Odyssey Bookshop. The reading is free and starts at 7 p.m.

MUSIC

Project/Object presents "22 Years of Live Invention," a reunion of three generations of Frank Zappa Band members. The show, which starts at 7 p.m. at the Iron Horse, hopes to honor the live Zappa experience, boasting a unique and inventive set for every stop on the tour. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

WednesdayOctober15

PERFORMING ARTS

"Visual poetry, music and fantasy," according to the press release, come together in "The Star Keeper," a play without words, to be performed tonight and tomorrow in Bowker Auditorium. A play for all audiences, "The Star Keeper" is a sensory-oriented production that the New York Times has called "enchanting." The show starts at 7:30 p.m. and tickets are $7 and $10 for Five College students.

BOOKS

Today marks the start of a Caribbean women writers series, "Voices from Hispanola: Haiti and the Dominican Republic," hosted by Smith College. Readings will be given by award-winning authors Edwige Danticat (today at 4:30 p.m.), Loida Maritza Perez and Myriam J. A. Chancy (Oct. 16), and Nelly Rosado (Oct. 22). The readings will be held in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. They are all free and open to the public.

ThursdayOctober16

LECTURES

Dan Kennedy, media critic for The Boston Phoenix, will speak today at 1 p.m. in Herter Hall, Room 227, and at 4:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, Room 904. A frequent panelist on "Beat the Press," Kennedy is considered to be one of the prominent press critics in the United States. The talks are free and open to the public.

FridayOctober17

MUSIC

Trina Hamlin and Amy Speace perform tonight at the Pioneer Arts Center of Easthampton at 8 p.m. The two female singer/songwriters bring their acoustic stylings to Easthampton for $8 in advance, $10 at the door.

SaturdayOctober18

FESTIVALS

The 8th annual Boston Vegetarian Food Festival gets underway today at 10 a.m. at the Reggie Lewis Athletic Center on Tremont Street in Boston. With over 90 exhibitors, the festival promises cooking demonstrations, consultations with registered dieticians, free samples and more. The festivities go on throughout the day, ending at 6 p.m., and are free to the public. For more details see www.bostonveg.org/foodfest.

PERFORMING ARTS

The Stonewall Center presents "Laughing Out Loud," an evening of comedy performances in honor of National Coming Out Week. Featuring Marilyn Pittman and Steve Jay, the show starts at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $6 for UMass students, $8 for Five College students and $12 for the general public.

SundayOctober19

BOOKS

University of Massachusetts professor Arthur Kinney leads a discussion on "Twelfth Night" as part of the "Sundays with Shakespeare" series at Odyssey Bookshop. The discussion starts at 11 a.m., is open to all and is free of charge.

weeklypinup

BATTLE OF THE BANDS

Friday at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, the University of Massachusetts Minuteman Marching Band, Symphony Band and Percussion Ensemble, among others will take the stage for the 29th annual Multiband Pops concert. The concert features performances by seven of the University's musical ensembles. Tickets are $12 for students, $18 for the general public.

Spearhead hits up Pearl Street

Continued from page 5

ues to grow, they have found themselves more on the public radar, which has caused problems.

"One of the band members' family is in the military," Franti said. "His family was visited by military officers. They had records of everywhere we had been on tour, phone calls."

Despite this threatening visit, Franti and his band decided to continue on, bringing their messages to the masses. "We felt scared, but we talked about it and decided we had to go on," Franti remembered.

Next up for Spearhead is a set of DVDs and a book called "Food For the Masses" that Franti is in the midst of writing. But first, touring is on his mind.

"[I like to] inspire others to speak out and that's what I feel is the best form of activism: that which empowers the silent," Franti explained when asked about taking the band on the road.

COURTESY ARTIST DIRECT PAGE

Spearhead's new record is called "Everyone Deserves Music."

The music lends itself to an upbeat, party atmosphere and Spearhead makes sure that the audience has a good time. The group is out promoting "Everyone Deserves Music" and welcoming new listeners but still make sure to play old favorites, as a way of giving back to a devoted cult of longtime fans.

World Scientific offers 20% discount to UMass Students
Date: Oct 15 - Nov 15, 2003
Venue: University Campus Store
Book offerings in:
• Medical & Life Sciences
• Material Science
• Popular & General Science
• Environmental Science
• Business & Management
• Economics & Finance
• Chemistry
• Computer Science
• Engineering
• Mathematics and Physics
World Scientific www.worldscientific.com
ICP Imperial College Press

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher
• ID Card
• Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Attention all Arts & Living writers: Important Arts & Living meeting today in the Newsroom at 5:30 p.m. Please attend. Contact Glen if you cannot make it.

UMass Boston
A Great University in a Great City
October 2003

UMass Boston Hosts Open House 2003, October 25th @9 am

What's next for you? With more than 100 programs to offer in graduate study, undergraduate study, and professional development, UMass Boston has what's right for your next step in higher education. Come explore our many educational opportunities with other, like-minded students at our Open House on Saturday, October 25th, starting at 9 am. There'll be a lot happening, and it's the perfect opportunity for you to see what UMass Boston is all about, up front and in person. Plan on it. Register today by calling 617.287.6000, or by visiting the UMass Boston web site at www.umb.edu.

Meet friendly students, accessible faculty & helpful staff.
Find out about our undergraduate, graduate, corporate training, & distance learning opportunities.
Tour the campus with student guides.
Attend workshops about academic programs & services.
Discover our day, evening, weekend, and online courses.
Ask questions.

UMASS BOSTON
To register for Open House 2003: call 617.287.6000 or visit www.umb.edu

$$ HIPPODROME $$
Coming Soon!
Rain Entertainment Complex
• Bartenders
Cocktail Servers
Lighting Tech
Cashier, Video Tech
Door Security
Floor Staff
Barbacks
Coat Checkers
Floor Staff Dancers
Disc Jockey
Apply In Person Only
Dates: October 14, 15 & 16 from 5- 8:00pm
Place: 10 Stearns Square, Downtown Springfield (formerly the HOT CLUB)
www.hdrome.com

LINCOLN LABORATORY
MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY
www.ll.mit.edu

On-Campus Recruiting at University of Massachusetts Amherst

MIT Lincoln Laboratory stands as a driving force behind the nation's most exciting and challenging technological advances – carrying out our mission of applying science and advanced technology to critical problems of national security. We offer the competitive salary and benefits you'd expect from a premier technology employer hiring top-tier scientific thinkers.

The Laboratory will be hosting an on-campus information session and will be conducting interviews. Please visit our website or your Career Center for more details.

If you are pursuing a degree in any of the following majors or a comparable scientific or technical field, our technical staff members would like to consider you for an on-campus interview

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING
PHYSICS
MATHEMATICS
COMPUTER SCIENCE
MECHANICAL ENGINEERING
AERONAUTICS/ASTRONAUTICS
MOLECULAR BIOLOGY/ BIOCHEMISTRY
MATERIALS SCIENCE

You must apply by using your Career Center's online recruitment system by October 20, 2003.

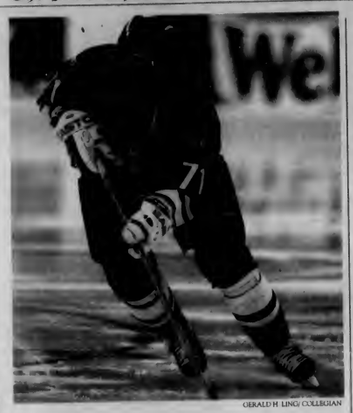
E-mail (preferred) to: resume@ll.mit.edu; or mail to: Human Resources, MIT Lincoln Laboratory, 244 Wood Street, Lexington, MA 02420-9108
An Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F/D/V • U.S. Citizenship Required

Where great minds go to work

STUDENT TRAVEL
student discounts
great student fares!
London.....$310
Paris.....$371
Rio de Janeiro.....$643
Los Angeles.....$262
Las Vegas.....$262
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply
44 Main St.
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE.
exciting things are happening @ www.statravel.com

In-state rivals face off

Continued from page 12



ue with the same high level of physicality. The fact that this was a vital conference game this early in the season just added another degree of intensity.

Players from both teams battled back and forth for a highly entertaining hockey game. Some of the players laying down the big hits for the Maroon and White were Thomas Pöck, who cleaned a Lowell forward's clock when he came streaking down the ice mid-way through the second period and Peter Alden, who was physical the whole game and made a huge hit to start the third period. Nick Kuiper and Dusty Demianiuk made hard hits all game long.

"We always know that they are a hard hitting team and a powerful skating team," Pöck said. "And we know that it's a lot of work to get a 'W' out of here. Tonight we put the work in, we played not really well in the last two periods, but we work our butts off and we did what was necessary to win."

Fourteen penalties were called in all, and they were evenly distributed between the two teams a seven apiece. Lowell had a five-on-three opportunity late in the second, which the UMass penalty kill thwarted off.

The series will continue on Jan. 3, when UMass travels to the Tsongas Arena for a 2 p.m. showdown. The final game of the 2003-04 battle for the Alumni Cup will be played on Jan. 4 at the Mullins Center at 3 p.m., the first and only time the River Hawks will visit the Valley this season.

GERALD H. LING/ COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Thomas Pöck led a two-minute five-on-three penalty kill by the Minutemen.

www.dailycollegian.com

Pastime past its time? Not what it used to be

Becky Horowitz

Sitting on my father's lap watching the 1986 World Series between the New York Mets and the Boston Red Sox is one of my earliest memories. We yelled at the TV and jumped up and down as the ball rolled under Bill Buckner's glove and the Mets took Game 6, and a game later, the Series.

I don't think I've ever been as excited about a baseball game as I was that night. Maybe it's because I was four and everyone else was excited, or maybe it's because baseball just isn't that much fun anymore.

It seems that rivalries are now being created for controversy rather than the actual quality of the matchup. Games between top-notch teams are overshadowed by the possibility of a bench-clearing brawl. Both the media and the fans spend more time covering and talking about fights and fines than the actual game.

The Red Sox have a chance to go to the World Series for the first time in 17 years. They have a solid set of starting pitchers and their relievers are finally settling down and coming into their own. On a good day, their lineup is devastating as everyone in the order can hit one over the fence; some are even known for doing it in clutch situations.

But if the Sox don't make it to the World Series this season, it won't be because the Yankees are better or because of "the curse." It'll be because they've forgotten what it's all about.

It isn't about baseball anymore. It seems that the only things that are important to many of the players are their paychecks, their pride and their precious egos.

Saturday's ALCS game at Fenway Park was set to be a battle between Pedro Martinez and Roger Clemens, arguably two of the greatest arms in baseball. Unfortunately, it turned into a brawl of costly proportions.

My dad and I were in our usual spots, parked in front of the TV, ready for what we anticipated to be a pitchers' duel. It was definitely a pitcher's duel, but not the type we had envisioned.

Karim Garcia had some words with Martinez when a pitch flew over his back and popped up off his bat. In retaliation, Garcia took out Sox second basemen Todd Walker, igniting the flame. Words were exchanged as Pedro threatened to hit Yankee catcher Jorge Posada in the head.

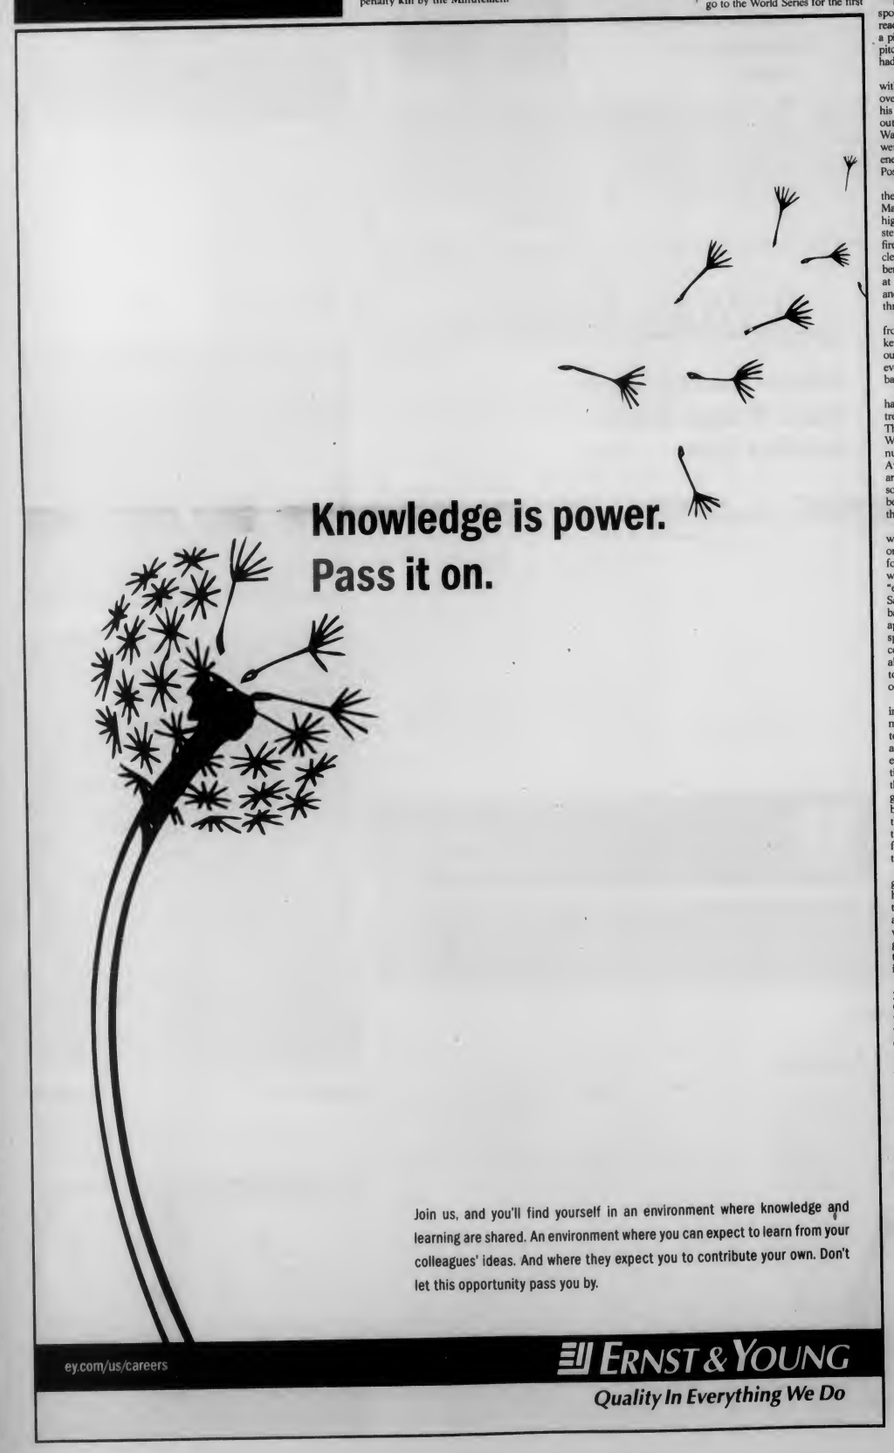
The tension remained high into the bottom half of the fourth when Manny Ramirez overreacted to a high pitch from Clemens and stepped toward the mound ... the fire began to spread. The benches cleared and 72-year-old Yankees bench coach Don Zimmer charged at Martinez. Zimmer took a swing and Martinez grabbed his head and threw him to the ground.

Amazingly nobody was ejected from the game. My father and I kept watching as Clemens struck out Ramirez and the Sox blew every chance they had at a comeback.

Baseball, America's pastime, has remained strong through tremendous amounts of turmoil. The sport has thrived through two World Wars, segregation and numerous strikes and protests. Avid supporters and life-long fans are giving up on their teams and in some cases, the sport in general because, short of a fight, there's no thrill anymore.

I've never been as disgusted as I was Sunday night when I turned on Sportscenter to see Zimmer, a former Red Sox manager, crying while he apologized for his "embarrassing" behavior during Saturday's game. That's what baseball has become, an abundance of apologies, fines and brawls. A sport that has been there through a century worth of problems has always given Americans something to rely on, something to be proud of.

After the past few seasons, my interest in a sport that I've spent my entire life watching has begun to dwindle. I can't support and appreciate a sport where the players lack heart. I'd rather spend my time watching a little league game than a major league one. Little leaguers play because they love it, because every time they step on that field they're happy. I can't say that the guys in the majors don't feel that way, but if they do, I can't tell anymore.



Those little boys play each game with everything they have hoping to one day make it in the pros like their idols. What are they supposed to think when they sit down to watch a game and they all the see are their idols swearing and throwing punches at other players?

Baseball has altered over the years, evolving with an ever-changing society, sometimes for the better but recently for the worse; if things continue in the direction they're headed, America's pastime will become just that — a thing of the past.

I miss that feeling I had in '86; I miss how exciting it was to sit in front of a game and really care about the outcome. I miss how much fun I had watching each game, pitch-by-pitch, never once turning my attention away. I knew every statistic there was to know about my team and I loved watching the same players do great things year after year.

It's different now. Baseball is something I put on while I'm doing other things. I keep it on the other channel so I have something to click to when the show I'm watching goes to commercial. I wish I could sit down in front of a game with the same butterflies and anticipation I once had. Maybe things will change and the focus will go back to the game and how amazing it is and maybe I'll click back.

Becky Horowitz is a Collegian columnist.

Field hockey splits weekend

By Paula Aden
Collegian Staff

With two conference games this weekend at Garber Field, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team was finally able to snap its eight-game losing streak with a 2-1 victory over St. Joseph's (4-9, 0-2 Atlantic 10) on Sunday after a tough 1-0 loss on Friday to Temple (7-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10).

UMass	2
St Joseph's	1
UMass	0
Temple	1

Temple's game marked a huge improvement of play for the Minutewomen (3-10, 1-1 Atlantic 10). The teams were evenly matched on the field, and UMass managed to play as a solid unit rather than a collection of individuals.

Melissa DeCesaris scored the winning goal off a penalty corner, assisted by Lindsay Holman and Haley Dervinis. The best scoring opportunities for both teams came from penalty corners where the Owls had an 11-8 edge, and managed to turn their fifth one into the game's only goal.

"Sometimes corners just go in, it's a free shot and that's about it," senior back Kristin Hopwood said. "You can't really help it."

UMass' defensive play on Friday was a vast improvement over anything they have done in the past, managing to hold their own against a strong offensive team. Hopwood was a key player in keeping the action out of their circle and away from goalie Christine Tocco.

"I felt like I had a day off, a little break for once," Tocco said.

Facing the Atlantic 10's save leader, Erin Conroy, the Maroon and White kept her busy with seven shots on goal. Conroy stopped all seven, while Minutewoman goalie Christine Tocco saved three of the four shots on goal she faced.

Temple and UMass had an intense battle for the entire length of play, with the action evenly distributed between both sides of the field. Still down 1-0 at the end of the second period, the Minutewomen's last 10 minutes of play were among their best this season.

"We attacked the space, we played with a purpose. We attacked with a purpose, we defended with a purpose and that made all the difference in the world," Massachusetts coach Patty Shea said.

A penalty corner was awarded to the Minutewomen just as the clock ran out on the second period. UMass piled its entire team just behind the circle, in hopes of tying the game and sending it to overtime.

In a suspenseful turn of events, the Maroon and White was given a second penalty corner during the scuffle that followed its first attempt, but it was unable to make either shot materialize into a goal.

In Sunday's game against the Hawks, the Minutewomen finally managed to score after four consecutive shutouts. Gina Sanders scored the team's first goal in 351:43, a scoreless streak dating all the way back to a 2-1 loss to Providence on Sept. 20.

The Maroon and White's two goals were scored in an almost identical fashion, both off penalty corners. Nine minutes into the first period, Katelyn Woolfrey faked a shot and passed to Sanders. Before St. Joseph's goalie Courtney Huff was able to react, Sanders successfully slapped the ball into the cage.

"On corners, I don't think of anything except for practice; it's just like I do in practice," Sanders said.

For the winning goal, Jaime Bawden managed to get past Huff after Marije Tigchelaar similarly faked a shot and passed to Bawden. Bawden is now the only Minutewoman with more than one goal this season, leading the team in both points (5) and goals (2).

"We've been working really hard on corners because we always get so many and we can never turn them into goals," Hopwood said. "Today was a great feeling, finally being able to get some in and actually get a goal."

With eight minutes left in the game, St. Joseph's got on the scoreboard. Katelyn O'Brien earned control of the ball at midfield and passed to Lauren Luft. Tocco moved forward to block the shot, but Luft's attempt managed to get past her.

Tocco and Huff each had six saves in the game, bringing Tocco's total to 117 this season.

Road game snaps streak

Continued from page 11

Colwell assist, tying the game at two at the half.

The Minutemen outshot the Flyers 7-4 in the second half but were unable to convert. Overall Dayton held the edge on both shots and corners, 11-10 and 7-3 respectively. Goalkeeper Colin Burns tallied three saves in loss for UMass, matching the save total for Handy.

The Maroon and White suffered a disappointing loss Friday at Xavier. Although each player made the trip, not as many showed up for the game.

Freshman Toni Skudrzik and senior Brandon Lalley combined in the production of offensive marks for the Musketeers as they defeated the Minutemen 3-1. Skudrzik led his high school team to the 2002 Indiana State Championship and was named to the Atlantic 10 preseason team.

Skudrzik and Lalley combined for the first goal of the game just a minute and a half in as Lalley booted one over Burns off a Skudrzik feed, giving Xavier an early 1-0 edge.

Fifteen minutes later, Skudrzik managed an unassisted goal as the game remained in the Musketeers control.

Skudrzik struck again at 40:43 from the middle of the box off a Lalley pass giving Xavier a comfortable lead (3-0) at the half.

UMass tried to muster a comeback at the 60:50 mark when freshman midfielder Rob Charest scored his first career goal off a Todd Skelton rebound. The Minutemen's attempt at a comeback ended there, as they fell to the underdog Musketeers.

The Maroon and White was dominated in almost every aspect of the game as Xavier outshot them 17-12 and held the edge on corners 5-3. Musketeer's goalie Brian Schaeper had two saves in the win while Burns gathered seven in the loss.

UMass hasn't recorded a win in its past three contests and has been outscored 6-3.

Hockey East season starts with win

Continued from page 12

the conference scrap.

"It's very hard playing the first game against such a good opponent as UMass, and it's a hockey east game right off the bat, with an extremely young team," said Lowell coach Blaise MacDonald. "You'd rather make some mistakes and not pay such a dear price but you've got to play them to the best of your ability, I thought we did tonight, but we have an awful lot of room for improvement."

"This was a type of win where it wasn't a gimme win, it wasn't an easy game," Trovato said. "It was a scrappy game for sure, and we're a scrappy team for sure, we're going to have to get down low in the corners, going to have to hit people, and at the end of the game I think you saw that, we tried to disturb their breakout. That's the type of team we have to beat."

Leading the way for the River Hawks was Ben Walter, who notched both of their goals. Lowell struck first when the disorganized play that has become a first-period trend for the Minutemen allowed Andrew Martin to fire off a shot, and although Winer made the initial save, Walter wound up on the rebound in front and took it glove side high, making it 1-0 in favor of the hosts.

Walter added his second at 7:38 of the third, when Martin unintentionally kicked the puck at Winer along the ice. The sophomore netminder stopped the puck, but Walter banged the rebound home to tie the game at two.

Greg Mauldin made two key plays for the Minutemen, stopping Martin with a legal hook that held the sophomore away from Winer's net until he was out of the danger zone, and then scoring a goal at 8:12 of the second period. Mauldin took a feed from Pöck at the blue line, skated in, and zipped a wrister past Davidson to give the Minutemen a 2-1 lead.

For the second straight game, Pöck scored the Minutemen's first goal. Thirty-five seconds into the second period, with his team down 1-0, Pöck took it upon himself to pick up the slack, and went on a coast-to-coast cruise before firing a wrist shot that beat Davidson stick side high.

As for spells, the victors gained an advantage in the three-game race for the Alumni Cup, the trophy given to whichever UMass squad wins the season series. While the prize isn't as highly regarded as certain other accoutrements, the squads still give a hoot about who earns the trophy — and the bragging rights.

"At the end of practice yesterday, we always get together and have a little chant, and it was 'Alumni Cup,'" Trovato said. "So we know about it, and I don't know if we'll carry it around the ice [if we win it], but surely we'll know that we won."

Sox even series at home

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — No beanballs or brawls, just a dynamite knuckleball by Tim Wakefield that gave the New York Yankees fits and allowed the Boston Red Sox to knot the AL championship series.

Red Sox	3
Yankees	2

Wakefield struck out eight over seven-plus innings, and Todd Walker and Trot Nixon provided the offense with solo homers, leading Boston over New York 3-2 last night to tie the best-of-seven series at two games apiece.

There was none of the fighting that marred Game 3 Saturday, and Wakefield beat Mike Mussina for the second time in the series, which now must return to Yankee Stadium later this week.

Pinch-hitter Jason Varitek added important breathing room for Boston with an RBI grounder in the seventh, just beating the throw to first as the Yankees tried to complete an inning-ending double play.

It turned out to be important.

Derek Jeter drove in New York's first run with a fifth-inning double that hit third base and pinch-hitter Ruben Sierra homered off Scott Williamson with one out in the ninth, ending a streak of 19 1-3 shutout innings for Boston's much-maligned bullpen.

Williamson, who had relieved Mike Timlin to start the inning, struck out Dave Dellucci and Alfonso Soriano to earn the save.

The series continues at Fenway Park today, originally a travel day. David Wells pitches for New York against Derek Lowe in Game 5.

After Sunday's rainout, fans had a festive time on the warm autumn night, booing Yankees catcher Jorge Posada, who screamed Saturday at Pedro Martinez after the Boston pitcher hit Karim Garcia with a pitch. Posada went 0-for-4 with two strikeouts, leaving seven runners on base.

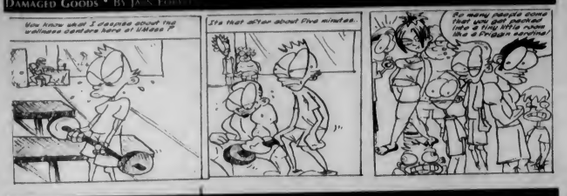
They also chanted, "We want Nelson," a reference to New York reliever Jeff Nelson, involved in Saturday's ninth-inning bullpen scuffle. Nelson entered to boos in the eighth inning just after Felix Heredia hit Walker in the shoulder. There was no hint of trouble on this one — Walker went directly to first base.

Still, there was at least one dispute.

After Nelson's first pitch, Boston manager Grady Little came out to talk to the umpires, who then checked the pitcher's belt and glove. But they apparently didn't find anything against the rules, and Nelson got out of the inning with a double-play grounder.

There was extra security in the Yankees bullpen following the Game 3 fight that involved a member of Boston's grounds crew. There was a police officer stationed there from the start of the game yesterday and no grounds crew personnel.

Wakefield improved to 4-0 in LCS play — he also went 2-0 for Pittsburgh in 1992 against Atlanta. His eight strikeouts matched his season high, and he allowed just five hits.



While the Yankees had runners in four of the first five innings, Wakefield pitched out of trouble, holding New York to 1-for-8 with runners in scoring position and leaving the bases loaded in the fifth, when Posada ended the inning with a flyout.

Wakefield then struck out the side in the sixth and retired the side in the seventh on four pitches.

Boston's offense, which led the major leagues

Damaged Goods • By Jason Forbes

1 in 40 Billion • By Matthew Rodgers

Valley of the Squirrels • By Gabriel X

Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Kryzkowski

ZooMass • By Sarah Holman

Quote for the Day

> If you can't outsmart people, outwork them.
>
> -Bill Veeck, former owner of the Cleveland Indians, St. Louis Browns and Chicago White Sox

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 People who talk
5 Time period
10 Accommodate newcomers
14 Wish, to Pierre
15 Hogwash
16 Lab culture medium
17 Cowboy stir
18 Foundation
20 Inundate
22 Casual top
23 Bad-ass up
24 Turkish coins
25 Derby town
26 Party
30 Fixing (an election)
34 Mountain flower
35 Endowment needs
36 Stag's mate
37 Yours and mine
38 Give the slip
39 Hard (on many)
41 Application
42 Woman
43 Trees protected
46 Most profound
47 "Get outta here!"
48 "Now — seen it all"
49 WCW button
50 Not fresh
52 Hunter's viewport
54 Derailed
56 Natures
58 Kitchen appliance
61 Travel choice
62 Actress Lena
63 Aorta's arc
64 Dot in the sea
65 Dot
66 Model-airplane wood

DOWN
1 Log part
2 Fairies' office
3 Mexican money
4 They've learned
5 High school VIPs
6 Unchained
7 Plaintive reads
8 Sherlock's rival
9 Chick's mom
10 Swerving
11 Gift course
12 Dressing hoods
13 Cohorts
14 Pubs along
21 Very serious
26 Let go
28 Movie inventors
27 Not whispered
28 Take a break
29 Blender button
30 Wednesday victim
31 Boise locale
32 Facial features
33 Silly ones
35 Settle up
38 Computer stir
39 Cut off
40 On the horizontal
44 Frigid wind
45 Swipe
47 Snake bite
48 Countrified
50 Mist
51 Curtis' cream
57 Salty health
53 Arizona river
55 Wallet load
56 About 2:2 pounds
57 Killed
59 Subside
60 Teachers' org

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- BBQ Beef Sandwich
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 71
- Low: 47

WEDNESDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 37

THURSDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 35

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd

COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas P. Markantonatos/ Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't try to crowd surf; 12-year-olds can't hold you.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Just get in your car and drive somewhere. It doesn't matter where — just go.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stare at someone incessantly today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Learn the lyrics to random songs. It will impress people.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You aren't like your hero. You will never be cool.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Separate spirituality from religion. It will open your eyes.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you ask for a fry, but you really want five, just ask for five. Don't sneak them.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your pathetic attempts at self-improvement are useless.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Why did you panic?

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
What a let down; you get so excited for something, and it totally falls through.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Hurry up — people are waiting on you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have terrible taste in music. Don't subject others to the pain you call music.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

One bedroom, near UMass Amherst Center Bus. 2 Large Rooms, low heat cost, $575 per month. 586-0746

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 BO 253-5537

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon AC/Power 17,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1998 Volvo V70 AWD Wagon Turbo Auto 130,000 Miles Loaded $10,000/OBO 253-0733

1994 Volkswagon Jetta, 160K, includes 4 snow tires, $2,000/OBO. Julie 253-4240

CHILDCARE

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. old triplets 1 to 3 days a week. In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6947 Ask for T.J.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.iagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus, in Northampton 584-1966 or visit www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Per-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial 508-221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

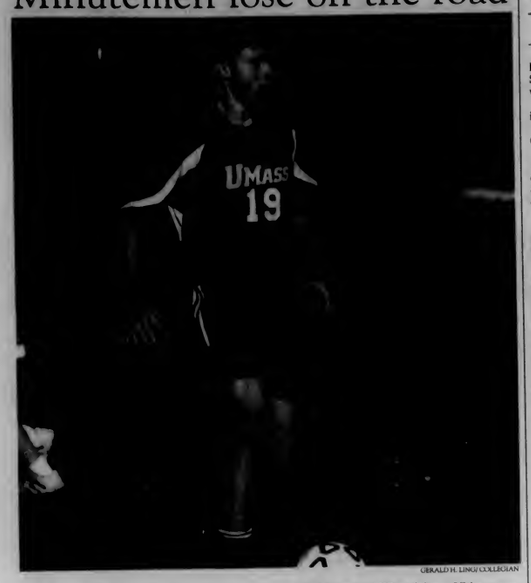
Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TUTORS



Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

WANTED

Rent us your ears! Participate in listening experiments $7.00/hour call 545-6837 Leave Message

YOUR AD COULD GO HERE! CALL 545-3500 FOR DETAILS!

Minutemen lose on the road

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Sophomore Tim Kitchell has been a vital component of the Maroon and White defense. UMass comes home to play LaSalle Friday at Rudd Field.

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

Ranked No. 13 by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America, and on a seven game unbeaten streak, the Massachusetts men's soccer team was riding high entering the weekend.

Their high ended abruptly as the Minutemen dropped two in Ohio to conference foes Dayton (8-1-2, 3-0-1 Atlantic 10) and Xavier (2-9-1, 1-2-0 A-10). UMass (7-4-1, 1-2-1 A-10) lost a tough battle yesterday, 3-2, to No. 18 Dayton. It was the first time two ranked men's soccer teams had ever faced each other at Baujan field. Although the Maroon and White was not up to par, it still played the Flyers evenly.

UMass	1
Xavier	3
UMass	2
Dayton	3

Dayton sophomore George Nanchoff clanked one off the post and in at the 63:36 mark scoring the game-winning goal and extending the Flyer's unbeaten streak to seven.

Junior Oral Bullen started the games scoring 10 minutes in when he drilled one past Dayton keeper Matt Handy off of his own rebound giving the Minutemen an early 1-0 lead.

Dayton answered quickly when freshman Antti Arst scored his first collegiate goal six minutes later. Arst chased down his own deflected shot and placed it in the bottom left corner past UMass keeper Colin Burns.

Arst started in place of Flyer's leading scorer Chris Rolfe (4 goals, 5 assists) who was unable to play due to a previous injury that gave him trouble during warm-ups.

Dayton struck again five minutes later off a textbook corner kick. Junior Tye Stebbins' corner found sophomore Nate Darrs' head, which led to sophomore Mpoki Tenendes' goal, giving the Flyers a 2-1 lead.

UMass senior co-captain Ptah Myers found the top right corner of the net from 30 yards out, off a Dan

Continued on page 9

Cubs hope for Wrigley win

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Whatever happens at Wrigley Field this week, whether his team reaches the World Series or not, Dusty Baker already has posted a huge victory for the Chicago Cubs.

He's managed to get them to shed their longtime image as baseball's lovable losers.

Cute cubby bear on their sleeves? Friendly Confines? Warm and fuzzy feel?

Forget it.

Watch Mark Prior and Kerry Wood buzz a batter, even if it's Barry Bonds. See Kenny Lofton knock down Florida pitcher Mark Redman with a loose elbow. Listen to Baker shout out Tony La Russa.

More like grizzlies than baby bruins, these Cubs.

"What we've been fighting here all year long," Baker said yesterday, a day before the Cubs played Florida in Game 6 of the NL championship series. "Everytime you lose a game, somebody conjures up something negative in history that happened before."

Ahead 3-2, the Cubs can wrap up their first World Series trip in 58 years with a win tonight. Prior will start against Carl Pavano, with Wood set to pitch Game 7 if necessary.

A win would give the Cubs a chance to claim their first Series championship in 95 years. Jack McKeon had no good reason for the Cubs' long drought.

"I don't know. I'm not that old. I haven't been following them that long to see what goes on," the 72-year-old Marlins manager said yesterday.

"There's a lot of luck involved and I don't know whether the hex or the curse in Boston ... I guess if you want to believe that, that's what will happen. So, I hope you all keep believing the hex is still on."

Baker wants to keep the focus on the field, though he knows a lot of fans will be thinking about the Cubs' past.

"Most of these guys in 1984 — Kerry Wood in 1984 — what was he, like 8?" Baker said. "Half of this stuff doesn't apply to them. They can't help the fact that they are playing for the Cubs, Dodgers or A's or whoever they are playing for, and they can't help what happened in the past.

"I was watching a game the other night and in between innings this goat kept running across the street. I thought that was the craziest thing I ever saw in my life. Or 1-800 whose curse is the strongest, the goat or the curse of Babe? Man, that's crazy," he said. "You either don't pay attention to it or you laugh at it. Those are the two choices you got."

Sammy Sosa sure wasn't laughing after a 97 mph from Josh Beckett whizzed past his head Sunday in a 4-0 loss in Game 5. Sosa sprang up, pointing his bat at the young Florida pitcher, and several Cubs rushed to the top of the dugout steps, ready to rumble.

Ernie Banks was Mr. Cub and the ultimate gentleman, entertaining crowds with his call of "Let's play two!" But he never made it to the World Series during his Hall of Famer career.

Baker guided San Francisco to the Series last year, losing in Game 7 to Anaheim, and then took over a Cubs team that had gone 67-95. This season, Chicago went 88-74 and won the NL Central.

After the Cubs beat Atlanta in the first round of the playoffs, Baker admitted he did not think the turnaround would be so swift. He said new players and a new staff helped bring success, along with an extremely positive outlook.

"I remember back in my days with the Dodgers, I mean, with Tommy Lasorda, he genuinely believed and he would always tell us, 'You've got to believe it,'" Baker said right before the NLCS. "I remember when I was going for my 30th home run on the last day of the season, and I had come back to the dugout, and I said, 'I don't think I'm going to do it,' and I must've said it too loud because he heard it.

"He went into this long dissertation about the children of Israel standing by the Red Sea, and they didn't believe and those that didn't believe and fled perished, and those who stayed there and waited for the Lord to deliver them and the sea parted, and I was like before he finished, 'OK, Tommy, I believe.' That next at-bat, I went up against J.R. Richard, my nemesis, and I hit it over the center-field fence."

So what would a championship represent?

"Oh man, it would mean everything," said former star second baseman Ryne Sandberg, who nearly led the Cubs to the World Series in 1984.

Offense sparks Minuteman victory

Continued from page 12

the year, snagging a Campbell pass in the corner of the end zone on the preceding drive, preserving Massachusetts' fourth consecutive victory.

"We just wanted to come down here and find a way to get one more point, and credit our kids they did a good job," Whipple said. "It was good to get on top early on the road, but I think we fell asleep a little bit again. It's just the complacency factor. You feel like 'hey, the game's over,' and it's never over. But our guys, when they concentrate, are pretty good."

UMass struck first on its opening possession when Demers scored the first of his two one-yard touchdown runs to cap off a 12-play, 79-yard drive just 4:43 into the opening frame.

Freshman placekicker Michael Torres then gave the Minutemen a 10-0 edge just before halftime, when he connected on a 29-yard field goal after another lengthy, 12-play drive.

After the Minutemen again put together another lengthy drive which covered 61 yards in 14 plays, Demers' second touchdown of the afternoon pushed the lead to 17-0 at the eight-minute mark of the third quarter before Campbell's pass to Hargrove finally got William & Mary on the board early in the fourth quarter.

The Tribe signal caller was 23-of-29 for 265 yards with a touchdown and an interception, despite being victimized by an anemic ground game that netted only 48 yards.

On the other side of the ball, Krohn was 23-of-32 for 242 yards and a touchdown despite throwing two interceptions.

Starting wideout Jason Peebler caught three passes for 72 yards before leaving with a hamstring injury in the second quarter. He is out indefinitely. Dominque Stewart led all UMass receivers with five catches for 52 yards and a touchdown.

All-American wide receiver Rich Musinski was a non-factor for the Tribe, catching only three passes for 30 yards. He now sits just three catches short of tying a school record for career receptions, and its threatening Brian Forster's conference record of 3,944 career receiving yards.

College of Humanities & Fine Arts
Dean's Seminar Series – 2003/2004
CHFA in the World: Alumni Entrepreneurs
A degree in the humanities and fine arts opens up a world of opportunities!
Come meet some of the College's leading alumni entrepreneurs, who used their degree to launch business ventures, create educational campaigns and much more.
Entrepreneurs Fall 2003
Miriam Zoll BA 1964
"From UMass to the United Nations"
Ms. Zoll is a writer and communications strategist and producer of public education campaigns for domestic and international organizations. She is the founder and national co-director of A CALL TO ARMS, a new national initiative for America's sons, and the founding co-producer of the Ms. Foundation for Women's annual Take Our Daughters to Work campaign.
4:30 P.M. Wednesday, October 15, 2003, Room 168, Isenberg School of Management
Reception immediately following
Lawrence Wilker MFA 1987
Tony Award Winning, Emmy nominated Producer
Mr. Wilker is a Tony Award-winning, Emmy nominated producer and entertainment executive. He was the President of the John F. Kennedy Center from 1991-2000. In April 2000, Wilker launched Theater Dreams, a theatrical production enterprise and a new media company, ShowOnDemand. TheaterDreams has successfully co-produced two hit Broadway shows, The Diva Project and Urinetown.
10:10 A.M., Monday, November 17, 2003, Curtain Theater, Fine Art Center
Reception immediately following
Andy Arons, Gourmet Garage
Mary Lou Andre, Organization By Design
John Jacobs, Life Is Good, Inc.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass ices Lowell

Rivalry starts on right track

By MATT STEWART
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's only week one of the 2003-04 Massachusetts hockey team's season and not only does it have a Hockey East victory, it's against rival UMass Lowell. But the win wasn't easy.

Lowell holds the advantage in the all-time serious against the Minutemen, with a record of 20-11-4. The River Hawks have gotten the better of the Minutemen in the last 10 games as well, with a record of 5-3-1. The longest winning streak that UML has ever had against UMass was six games, starting prior to the discontinuation of the hockey program in Amherst (Nov. 19, 1977) and ended after it was reinstated (Nov. 10, 1995).

The longest winning streak the Minutemen have held against the River Hawks was three games (Nov. 26, 1968 to Nov. 24, 1970). Lowell has had the advantage in overtime as well, bettering UMass with a record of 2-1-4 in the series. Surprisingly for the Minutemen, they have performed better in Lowell (7-9-1) than they have on their home ice (4-11-3).

Lowell has undergone many changes prior to becoming the University of Massachusetts at Lowell. Long before the name UMass Lowell, it was known as the Lowell Technical Institution. Then due to a merger of Lowell Tech and a teaching college, the University of Lowell was founded. University of Lowell later became incorporated into the UMass system.

Lowell was one of the original members of the Hockey East Conference, along with Boston College, Boston University, Maine, New Hampshire, Northeastern and Providence College. UMass joined Hockey East 10 years after its creation in 1994-95.

Last season, UMass took the series over Lowell 2-1. On Nov. 15, Greg Mauldin and Stephen Werner both lit the lamp twice as the Minutemen cruised to a 6-3 victory.

In win number two, the Maroon and White, down 3-1, rallied to score three answered goals to capture the 4-3 win. Mike Warner netted the game winner. Lowell avoided the sweep with a 3-2 victory on Feb. 8, when Ben Walter scored the clincher to break a 2-2 tie.

Saturday's matchup would contin-

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Peter Trovato scored the game-winning goal with 2:20 left in regulation against UMass Lowell. The Minutemen return to action against St. Lawrence on Saturday.

UMass squeaks by

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

LOWELL — The Massachusetts hockey team has a penchant for slow starts and strong finishes. While those finishes are warming to the UMass faithful, the starts are rough on coach Don Cahoon's blood pressure.

The trend continued in the Minutemen's second game of the season, as they trumped UMass Lowell 3-2 at Tsongas Arena Saturday night.

Peter Trovato's rebound goal with 2:20 left in regulation put the Minutemen ahead after a chippy game that showed where UMass' strength is thus far: Special Teams. Trovato's goal was set up when the Minutemen held off a Lowell power play in the wake of Dusty Demianiuk's obstruction penalty, and James Solon fired a shot that bounced off of goaltender Chris Davidson and landed at Trovato's feet.

UMass	3
Lowell	2

"Perfectly executed penalty kill that we've been working on all week," Trovato said. "We jam up the middle when they're breaking in, and the next thing you know, the puck squirts to Jamie, and hats off to Jamie Solon for taking that wide, getting that on net, and that's a gimme goal. It popped right up, and I just stuck it in the net. Those are the types of goals that I get. I'm a rebound goal-getter."

UMass flourished both in man-down and man-up situations Saturday. The power play unit accounted for one UMass goal, from Thomas Pöck, and in addition to Trovato's game winner, the penalty kill put in one of the best performances of the night, stifling the River Hawks for a full two-minute five-on-three after Nick Kuiper (slashing) and Marvin Degon (unsportsmanlike conduct) both went into the box at 16:55 of the second period.

During the two-minute span, the River Hawks hardly breached the Minuteman penalty killers, and the closest Lowell got to capitalizing on the two-man advantage was a shot that went off the outside of the post to Winer's left side.

"That was definitely good for the team," Pöck said of the kill. "The ref got us down on the five-on-three, and it's always tough when you're in a five-on-three in the first place, and they had us running around pretty good there. But we managed to stay on top, and not give up a goal, so that definitely helped the team."

In the earliest Hockey East opener for either team, the contrast between conference and non-conference play was evident as the two squads beat up on each other to the tune of 31 combined penalty minutes. In the end, the young River Hawks took the brunt of

Continued on page 9

Minutemen roll over Pride

Maroon and White remain undefeated in conference with win on the road

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following a preseason scrimmage, a reporter asked Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple if an unknown fullback who had carried the ball late in the game would factor into his team's rushing attack during the season.

UMass	24
W & M	14

"He was only carrying the ball for his friends and family in the stands," Whipple said, laughing.

That unknown fullback was UMass Lowell transfer Rich Demers.

And Whipple isn't laughing anymore.

With Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week Steve Baylark limited by a high ankle sprain that kept the team's leading rusher out of practice all week,

Demers amassed 171 yards and two touchdowns on 26 carries, and also caught three passes for 26 yards as the Minutemen (5-1 4-0 A-10) downed William & Mary, 24-14, before a rain-soaked crowd of 4,868 at Walter J. Zable Stadium. It was the team's first meeting since 2001.

"Steve [Baylark] did not practice all week and we weren't sure he was going to be able to go. He didn't do anything [Friday] and didn't even take the boot off," Whipple said. "We were planning on going with Rich every other series, but we threw him out there out of necessity and he really came up big for us."

"[Demers] did not catch us by surprise," Tribe coach Jimmy Laycock said. "It did surprise us that they used him a lot, but we knew he was a very, very good back. He's a very versatile back, he can do a lot of things."

It was not all positive for the Minutemen, however, as they continued two alarming trends that have plagued them over the last two weeks, including being unable to avoid flags, as Whipple saw his team penalized 11 times for 95 yards.

Another problem that again reared its ugly head on Saturday after becoming evident in wins over Maine, James Madison and New Hampshire, was complacency, as UMass again allowed its opponent to battle back from an early deficit.

The reigning A-10 co-Offensive Player of the Week, W&M junior quarterback Lang Campbell, got the Tribe on the board early in the fourth quarter, as he capitalized on a Baylark fumble with a 51-yard touchdown pass to tailback Steven Hargrove which pulled the Tribe to within 17-7 with 14:38 remaining.

UMass quarterback Jeff Krohn was picked off on the following drive by the Tribe's Travis McLaurin on a bizarre play in which the linebacker fumble on the return, only to see it recovered by teammate Adam O'Connor. Campbell sparked a five-play drive, which culminated with a 14-yard touchdown dash by fullback Nick Rogers that shrunk the Maroon and White's lead down to just 17-14.

However, it would be too little too late, as Krohn drove the Minutemen 80 yards in nine plays, hooking up with Dominique Stewart in the corner of the end zone with a 23-yard strike to make the score 24-14.

Cornerback Steve Costello then recorded his team-leading fourth interception of

Continued on page 11

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior receiver Jason Peebler had 72 yards receiving against William and Mary. The Maroon and White take on Hofstra on Saturday for its homecoming game.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 30

ALANA students demonstrate in protest of Columbus Day

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Patrick Brown, a senior Environmental Science major, checks out the ALANA demonstration outside the Student Union yesterday.

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In protest of Christopher Columbus Day, the Office of ALANA Affairs held a demonstration yesterday to commemorate the memory of the victims who have suffered from the effects of colonization.

Similar to the memorial dedicated to victims of the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, "The Truth Behind Columbus Day" displayed flags hanging on the campus center lawn with messages reflecting the loss caused by those who died. Students paused as they headed to class to glance at flags reading such messages as "Homeland security: fighting terrorism since 1492" and "Because of an unknown plague brought to America by a French trading ship, many native communities were entirely wiped out between 1616 and 1618."

The flags were designed by the organizers of the event along with members of the Native American Student Association, but any student was free to design a flag of his or her own. The flags remained up all day from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in an effort to leave a lasting effect in student's minds.

Organizers spent the day handing out flyers containing information on Christopher Columbus's arrival in America and the effect it had on the Native Americans and Africans who were brought to the Americas as slaves. Origami fortunetellers with facts about Columbus Day and Native Americans were also given out. In addition, students read poetry and Nelson Acosta, Director of OAA, spoke.

There was also a space for students to leave their opinions and thoughts on the demonstration. Most comments applauded the event. One student wrote, "This stuff still goes on, look at your shoes, look at your clothes. Who makes them?"

"We are here because we think it's important to look at both sides," said Lisa L. Robinson, the Public Relations spokesperson for OAA. "We don't want to eradicate knowledge, we want to acknowledge those who have suffered and died and who still suffer because of colonialism."

As Robinson walked along the hanging flags she pointed to one flag, "I think this one is the most powerful." The sign read, "For every Christian slain Columbus killed 100 Native Americans."

Organizers agreed that the majority of the passing students showed interest, although they did speak to a few who disagreed with the demonstration.

"The majority of students have been eager to learn more," Robinson said. "There were a few students loitering around the table being controversial. They are entitled to their opinion but they should come with correct facts. I don't

Continued on page 3

Equipment stolen from SOM over weekend

Thousands of dollars in equipment were stolen over the weekend from the Isenberg School of Management building, including laptops containing professors' data needed for courses in session.

"There have been a number of thefts this semester," said SOM Dean Dennis Hanno. "Laptops were stolen this week and an overhead was stolen a few weeks ago."

The theft will undoubtedly cause problems in the classes of those professors involved. Dean Hanno said that five to six professors lost data that was stored in their laptops. Most of the professors will be able to recover some of the data, but not all of it.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department is currently investigating the incident and Dean Hanno said that the department has recovered fingerprints. According to Hanno, there are no suspects at this time. He was confident that the guilty parties will be found.

Dining commons and dorms have experienced robbery as well. In April and in February, two separate thefts claimed thousands of dollars worth of lab equipment was from the Morrill Science Center and another campus location. Arrests were made in both cases and UMPD is hoping the evidence left at the scene of the SOM theft will help it out.

Dean Hanno has met with faculty to discuss how to prevent future theft from happening. Hanno said he's looking for changes in procedure and an increase in vigilance so faculty won't lose any more of their laptops and data.

With a possible new security system being installed on campus, the UMPD and UMass staff hope to prevent costly thefts from occurring in the future.

-Reid Davenport

Maryland sniper suspect could face death penalty

By MATTHEW BARAKAT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) – With his life on the line, a stone-faced John Allen Muhammad pleaded innocent to murder charges Tuesday as the first trial in the deadly Washington-area sniper spree got under way.

In a strong, clear voice, Muhammad, dressed in a light gray shirt and tie, entered his plea in the slaying of Dean Harold Meyers, 53, of Gaithersburg, Md., who was cut down by a single bullet that him in the head while he filled up at a gas station near Manassas on Oct. 9, 2002.

Muhammad, 42, could get the death penalty if convicted.

Muhammad and Lee Boyd Malvo, 18, are charged with 13 shootings, 10 of them fatal, during a three-week period in October 2002 that spread terror across the Washington metropolitan area and had many people ducking for cover as they ran errands. Malvo goes on trial separately on Nov. 10.

Muhammad answered a series of questions from the judge and was then asked if he understood the charges. He remained silent for several seconds, until defense attorney Jonathan Shapiro whispered in his ear. Muhammad responded, "Yes, I understand what I am charged with."

Circuit Judge LeRoy F. Millette asked if Muhammad was ready for trial, to which he replied: "I'm prepared for it, yes."

The trial then opened with jury selection. Prosecutor Paul Ebert said after the hearing he hoped have a jury picked by Wednesday.

Millette Jr. excused 53 of 124 potential jurors, mostly because work or personal reasons prevented them from sitting through a trial expected to last six weeks. Two were excluded because they said the pretrial publicity would make it impossible to for them to give an unbiased verdict.

The remaining prospective jurors will be questioned individually. A jury of 12 plus three alternates will be seated.

Muhammad stood and stared silently at the prospective jurors each time Millette introduced a group of them to him. Prosecutors and defense lawyers, in contrast, all took the opportunity to say, "Good morning."

The judge sternly warned the prospective jurors to ignore pretrial publicity about the case.

"The only evidence you are to consider is evidence presented within the four walls of this courtroom. If you cannot make that commitment to this court, you should not sit on this jury," he said.

The trial was moved about 200 miles out of metropolitan Washington to this southeastern Virginia city after the defense argued that every northern Virginia resident could be considered a victim because the shootings made them afraid.

Muhammad faces two counts of capital murder. One charge is under an anti-terrorism law passed by the Legislature after the Sept. 11 attacks; it has never before been used. Prosecutors will have to show not only that Muhammad participated in a slaying, but that the intent was to influence the government or to intimidate the civilian population.

The other capital charge accuses Muhammad of multiple murders over three years. Prosecutors will have to prove Muhammad's involvement in the Meyers killing and at least one other fatal shooting.

Defense lawyers argue Muhammad can get the death penalty on this count only if he was the triggerman, while prosecutors say they need only prove Muhammad was the "instigator and moving spirit" of the murders.

As for Malvo, he will be tried in neighboring Chesapeake in the slaying of an FBI analyst outside a Home Depot. His lawyers intend to pursue an insanity defense.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 3

HOMECOMING WEEKEND CELEBRATING UMASS SPIRIT

ARTS & LIVING PAGE 4

GETTING EVEN DAVID CARADINE RUNS FOR HIS LIFE

SPORTS PAGE 8

YANKEES WIN NEW YORK TAKES 3-2 SERIES LEAD

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

One People pilgrimage launched

By KEYANA BROWN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Various earth-based and ecologically affiliated communities came together Sunday and Monday to advocate that "all life is sacred" during the One People, One Earth First Annual Parade/Festival and Ceremony in Amherst and the surrounding areas.

Spiritual, educational, cultural, environmental, animal and other rights interest groups were all present. This two-day event represented the launching of a "Pilgrimage."

The Pilgrimage is a walk, signifying a promise to "weave people together in order to raise faith, awareness, hope and consciousness to respect for nature and the earth," said Robin MacRostie, an Amherst community member who helped with the event.

Despite the rain on Sunday, the festival and parade had an overall turnout of approximately 30 individuals.

"Thirty people may not seem like much, but this was our first annual festival and it was planned considerably late. This was a start and I am just so grateful for not having to walk alone even though I was prepared to do so," said Brother North Star, the founder of One People One Earth.

At about 10:30 a.m., the peace walk traveled from the Haigus Mall and circled around the town of Amherst and halted at the Amherst Commons. The march then turned into a festival.

Supporters of buying local collectives, sustainable living communities and eco-villages and cruelty free businesses and products were also in attendance. Supporters walking chanted: "Earth, my body; water, my blood; air, my breath; fire, my spirit."

Everyone was advised to wear earth-tone colors as well as earth friendly, cruelty-free fabric. Instead of driving to the parade/festival, everyone was advised to travel via bicycle, foot, skateboard, rollerblade or eco-friendly vehicle – some participants even camped out the night before the festival.

The festival included guest speakers, multi-cultural performances (traditional and contemporary), solar energy exhibits, animal shows, puppet shows, vending stations, earth-friendly fashion shows, instruments/sound-makers and a dragon made mostly of recycled materials that took at least five people to hold up.

"This Pilgrimage circled Amherst propagating the Internal Revolution: Rolling Back the Carpet of Consumption," Brother North Star said.

"The Gathering" took place on Monday at Mohawk Trail State Forest. One of the themes of the gathering was to "Unplug America – Give Earth a Rest Day." For example, walking instead of using fossil fuel-burning vehicles. Cherokee grandmother Jani Leverett is the President of Friends of Mohawk Trail State Forest.

"Monday turnout for the gathering was perfect because there was only about 20 people or so present and therefore there wasn't an enormous amount of people in the forest to step all over and kill a lot of rich and vibrant, potential life," Brother North Star said. "The primary focus of the gathering was not only for spiritual reasons, but also to open the idea of the possibility of trees being devoted and named after not only Native American peacemakers, but also peacemakers of a diverse range such as Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr."

The goal is to obtain state approval, so that the part of the state forest will be a "Peace Park" in which followers of peacemakers, especially individuals of Pioneer Valley, are offered a sacred location to pray and find solace.

Furthermore, many gathered in an area within the Mohawk Trail State Forest called the "Trees of Peace" and said prayers from various spiritual communities. Ancient cultures such as Mayan/Aztec, African, Shinto, Wickens, Druid, Celtic and Hindu gathered in the ceremony as well as various faiths including Quakers, Buddhists and Muslims.

Kennedy to give book talk

By EMILIE DUGGAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Boston Phoenix media critic and award-winning writer Dan Kennedy will be on campus tomorrow to speak about the media and read from his new book, "Little People: Learning to See the World Through My Daughter's Eyes."

Kennedy will speak about the state of the media and his recently published memoir. From 1 to 2:15 p.m. in 227 Herter Hall, Kennedy will give his views on where the state of the media is heading.

The second part of Kennedy's visit, held from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. in Campus Center 904-908 will consist of a reading from his recently published memoir about raising his daughter.

As a writer for the Boston Phoenix, Kennedy is well known for his outspoken, no-holds-barred criticism of both the Boston and national press. Some of his recent columns have covered issues ranging from the war in Iraq to the ousting of former UMass president William Bulger, and it was with the help of Kennedy's research that the Boston Globe fired Mike Barnicle in 1998.

"Dan is an equal opportunity critic – he goes after the left and the right, which makes him unusual but makes him well worth listening to," journalism professor B.J. Roche said. "It's really a very interesting time for journalism."

"Right now, with issues related to the Iraq war, the issue around the Fox News Network and whether or not it has bias in it's reporting; we thought it would be interesting to talk about this right now. Dan Kennedy is one of the best people in the country on the topic of where the media is heading," she continued.

According to an interview he did with Mediaman.com, Kennedy said that his book "is about the culture of dwarfism."

"It's partly a memoir – our 10-year-old daughter, Rebecca, is an achondroplastic dwarf – partly journalism, partly historical research and partly cultural criticism," he said.

Rodale, the publisher of Kennedy's book, says the book is about Kennedy's daughter and "about Dan's search for meaning in his daughter's difference."

"This book is very interesting," Roche said. "It's a subject you don't think about and that isn't talked about."

Kennedy started at the Boston Phoenix in 1991, and is now the senior writer and the media critic. He got his start at the Daily Times Chronicle in Woburn in 1979 after graduating with a degree in journalism from Northeastern University.

While at the Chronicle, Kennedy received his master's degree in history from Boston University in 1988. From 1989 to 1990, Kennedy was the editor and publisher of the MetroNorth Magazine, a news and lifestyle publication.

Kennedy is seen and heard around the Boston area on various media analysis shows such as "Beat the Press" on WGBH-TV and "The Pat Whitley Show" on WRKO 680 AM. His writing is not limited to the Phoenix, and articles by Kennedy can be found in The New Republic, Slate and Salon, among others.

Both events are open to the public, and are sponsored by the journalism department.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Stresch
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Erika Lovley
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzaker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Merelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com

Weekly Calendar of events

October 15 - October 21 2003

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Wednesday 15

Lenka Reinerova, author of Alle Farben der Sonne und der Nacht (2003), will present her book at 4 p.m. in the Porter House of Amherst College. The presentation will include a short reading from her book in German, followed by a panel discussion in English of her life and memoirs.

At 4:30 p.m., a Microsoft representative will be at the Career Development Office of Smith College to discuss summer internships, full time jobs and technical positions.

Students are invited to Smith College's "The People Speak: Smith College Students Debate America's Role in the World" to hear and join a debate on American Foreign Policy at 7:30 p.m. in Seelye 106. Topics will include role of international institutions and use of military force.

UMass' Theatre de l'Oeil will be performing "The Star Keeper" in Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. "The Star Keeper" tells the adventure of its main character, Pretzel, in his attempts to return a star to the sky. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center. The cost is $7 for UMass students, $10 for Five College Students, $10-$25 for all others.

Thursday 16

Dan Kennedy will give a talk, sponsored by the UMass journalism department, from 4:30-5:30 p.m. Kennedy is the author of "Little People: Learning to see the World Through my Daughter's Eyes." Kennedy will discuss many issues of the "little people" and sharing his own experiences concerning his daughter Becky, who is a dwarf.

Mount Holyoke College presents Tariq Ali, the editor of "New Left Review" and author of "Bush in Babylon", giving a lecture titled "Bush in Babylon: Recolonization and Resistance in Iraq." The lecture begins at 7 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium of the Art building.

At 8 p.m., Mount Holyoke's production is seeking actresses and actors to audition for "Jacques Brel is Alive and Living in Paris" in Black Box, Rooke Theater. Casting seeks eight to 12 singers and four dancers. Auditions are also being held at 7 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 17 and at 1 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 18.

Friday 17

Dr. Mary Simmonds, the president of the American Cancer Society, will give a lecture titled "Cancer: Hope. Progress. Answers." at 4:15 p.m. in McConnell B05 at Smith College. The lecture will be moved to McConnell Auditorium if space is required.

Smith College will have "POPS! A Night of Magic" which will feature musical works by Steppenwolf, ELO, Heart and more, sung by student ensembles and a cappella groups. The event begins at 7:30 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. Admission is $4 for Five College Students, $7 general.

Saturday 18

Vision and Resistance Gathering is a weekend-long gathering of workshops, trainings and paneis on the theme of interconnected forms of oppression and ways to transform them through resistance and teamwork. Various events will be taking place both Saturday and Sunday at Franklin Patterson Hall of Hampshire College. For more information contact 559-5292.

From 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Amherst College will host the Five College workshop on African Historical Production as part of the "Listening (Again) for the African Past: A Five College Project on Historical Production" conference. Historians from various African universities will discuss their latest research in the Cole Assembly Room of Converse Hall during the day. The conference will be held on both Saturday and Sunday. For information, call 413-253-3904.

Sunday 19

Rebecca Hart Olander, Bob Susskind and S.G. Tyler will give a Writing Collective Poetry Reading at 3 p.m. in the Neilson Library Browsing Room of Smith College's Library.

Monday 20

Sridhar Poiavarapu will hold a seminar, "Entomology Seminar – Sex pheromones, selective chemicals, and slender worms: An integrated approach for the management of oriental beetle" at 3:30 p.m. in the Alexander Confrerence Room on the second floor of Fernald Hall at UMass. Refreshments will be served at 3:15 p.m.

Joe Klein, author of "Primary Colors" and "The Natural: The Misunderstood Presidency of Bill Clinton", will give a lecture titled: "The American Presidency Since 9/11" at Amherst College at 7 p.m. in the Babbott Room of the Octagon.

At 7:30 p.m. Sr. Joan D. Chittister, author of "Scarred by Struggle, Transformed by Hope" will give a talk, titled: "God, Women and the World: Telling the Story Another Way" at Helen Hills Chapel at Smith College.

Tuesday 21

The Amherst Feminist Alliance is welcoming Kim Gandy, the President of National Organization of Women, who will speak in Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College at 7 p.m., to promote the March for Choice.

Teach for America will have an info session at 7 p.m. in the Wright Hall Common Room at Smith College. The program places college graduates into teaching jobs in underresourced public school districts. For more information, visit www.teachforamerica.org.

Nobue Socho Yamashita will host a Japanese Tea Ceremony in Washinan, Eliot House at Mount Holyoke at 7:30 p.m. The ceremony is free and open to the public. Please call 536-6364 or email nyamashi@mtholyoke.edu for reservations.

ALANA demonstrates on Columbus Day

Flags memorialize Natives who died in colonization

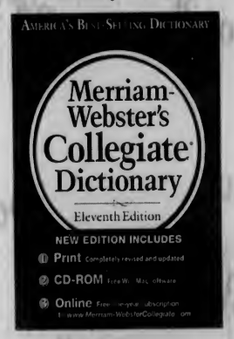
Continued from page 1

think we changed the students' view but we may have altered it a little."

Overall Robinson said that the event was a great success. "It touched a lot of people," she said.

In addition to the events of today, organizers passed around a petition to change Columbus Day in Massachusetts to Native American Day. Currently, 17 states do not recognize Columbus Day, in South Dakota it has been changed to Native American Day and in 1996 the city of Berkeley, California renamed the holiday to Indigenous Peoples-Columbus Day.

Robinson said that the petition wasn't as successful as the entire event, but the office will continue to advocate for more signatures. She said that the petition would possibly be posted outside of the OAA for the entire year.



"There's so much apathy in our nation, it takes a long time to change anything, all you can do is things like this," she said.

The anti-Columbus day demonstration will not be the only event of the year sponsored by OAA, as the office has recently created a volunteer organization that acts as an outreach team. The outreach team will set up a table a few days of the week in the Campus Center to keep students informed of upcoming events

News meeting Monday at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center Basement

What's in a Dictionary?

How does a word get added to the dictionary? Will electronic publishing make the print dictionary OBSOLETE?

FIND OUT

Thurs., October 16 11:30am–12:30pm

Representatives from Merriam-Webster will be on hand to answer questions

University of Massachusetts AMHERST UMASS UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545 2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

It's a great time to get your Merriam-Webster's Collegiate® Dictionary, 11th Ed. with CD ROM and the subscription to merriam-webstercollegiate.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Homecoming weekend: A chance to show UMass spirit

It's that time of year again. The leaves are turning, the air is getting cooler and the marching band can be heard practicing all the way up on Orchard Hill. That's right, the whole campus is gearing up for the flood of alumni that will come rushing in to Amherst this weekend.

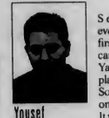
It's Homecoming, a time for past students and current students to celebrate together what the University of Massachusetts is really about. A lot of preparation goes into this three-day festival: students are hired to work, events are elaborately planned and road trips are taken from all over the state just to be here for it all.

Last year, since Homecoming fell on Columbus Day weekend, many students did not attend the events, as they had all fled home for the first three-day weekend of the semester. This year, however, Homecoming promises to be a huge success.

The festivities will kick off Friday night with a bonfire and pep rally to support the UMass football team, which will hopefully draw big crowds. Then, there will be an afternoon of tailgating before the big Homecoming football game against Hofstra where both the team and the marching band promise to put on a good show. And, if you just can't get enough of your UMass sports, the mighty Minutemen of the hockey team will be taking on St. Lawrence in our very own Mullins Center that night at 7 p.m.

Then, for those of you who like to get down and dirty, Oozefest, the annual mud volleyball tournament, will take place on Sunday afternoon. And trust us, it's something you really won't want to miss; last year, even Chancellor Lombardi made an appearance.

It's going to be an action-packed weekend, and it'll give all of us a chance to show our spirit in a positive way. The last couple of weeks have put a negative spin on the true vivacity of our student body. This is our chance to show our alumni that we don't only put our energy into things like rioting and destruction, but that we also put it toward showing our pride for UMass. We all know we have it, but now it's time to prove it.



So, regardless of what's going on with the Red Sox, get out there and participate this weekend. Let's show them that there's still something worth cheering for. After all, if we're worried about the image of our school, we should be doing something to change it, and what better chance do we have than mingling with the very alumni who have begun to question our character?

We at the Collegian hope to see you out there. Bring your pom-poms, bring your rally towels, and make sure to sport your UMass gear. And don't worry if you don't have any; you still have a few days to get down to the U-Store and grab some.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

No crying in baseball

Yousef Munayyer

On the September evening when I first arrived at campus, the Yankees were playing the Red Sox in a heated one-run game. It was fun, exciting to watch and a good way to get to know some of the people in the hall quickly. I knew from then on that people here were really into their baseball team and really hated the Yankees.

I was never a huge baseball fan. It's great to root for the home team, but my priorities were always hockey and football, putting baseball a distant third. I'm not from Massachusetts or New England. In fact, I grew up just five miles outside New York City. So I cheer for the Yankees.

Now that last statement may get me into more trouble than anything political I have ever written on this campus. It's sad but true.

Shortly after that game, the Yankees were in the World Series and they lost in a nail-biting ninth inning. What happened after that really made me think about this rivalry. I experienced my first UMass riot. I really didn't understand why people were rioting. I still don't really get it. Apparently this was some form of celebration, but if you were watching the game closely, you would have seen that the Red Sox didn't win, because they weren't even playing. People gathered, rioted and burned things in celebration of a team losing. It was simply mind-boggling.

That's when I began to think about why some Red Sox fans act the way they do. And I say "some" because I know not all Red Sox fans riot and not all Red Sox fans chant "Yankees Suck!" at every family meal. After considering it for a while, I came to the conclusion that it's very similar to sexual frustration. It's a pent up frustration that has been building since 1918 and can only be relieved by a climax they just can't reach. And how do they get by in the meantime? Masturbation: in the form of "Yankees Suck!" chants.

Honestly, if your team isn't winning, don't blame it on a curse and don't blame it on another team. Do you realize that you cheer "Yankees Suck!" even after they beat you? What does that say about your team?

Then something else happened. The Patriots won the Super Bowl. Now, I was happy for the Patriots because they were due, and they played a charged game. Of course, rioting ensued. So what were the cheers at the Patriots riot? "Yankees Suck!" again. Now guys, you didn't just overlook the fact that the Yankees and Red Sox weren't playing, you got the wrong sport this time.

It's a pent up frustration that has been building since 1918...And how do they get by in the meantime? Masturbation in the form of "Yankees Suck!" chants.

So far this year we have seen more riots. After Game 4 of the first series, that's right Game 4, students rioted again. Has it really been so long since you guys have won that you have forgotten how to act afterwards? Cars were overturned, things were burned and property was destroyed, as was this school's reputation. Alumni began to write to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian telling students that they were devaluing their diplomas with their conduct. And I, as a Yankee fan, can only sit back in amazement.

Then another riot. This time, it gets more dangerous. Someone decides it would be a good idea to jump off a building. Maybe this is using the same logic that is behind the "Yankees Suck!" chant. How far is it going to go? Do you guys plan on carrying this on into spring training next season?

I blame the administration for not cracking down on this sort of behavior. Sending out letters of disapproval to all the dorms and printing it in the paper will not deter a thing. Would the administration's response have been different if that guy who jumped had died? What if the papers in Boston the following day read, "UMass riots lead to student death." That wouldn't look too good, now would it?

What should the University do? Crack down and crack down hard, because it becomes a very serious issue when people start getting hurt. Anything short of public hangings is fine by me. Suspension or expulsion will do. I've known of students who got expelled for "endangering the UMass community" because they had a few empty baggies in their room. Would you consider inciting a riot "endangering the UMass community?" I sure would. Something should be done to control this because it's only going to get worse as the postseason goes on. When will it stop? If the Red Sox lose, the students will riot after Yankee losses in the series, and if the Sox win, God help us.

You all need to get a grip. I don't like getting into the trash talk because I don't hate the Red Sox in the way you guys hate the Yankees. In fact, I don't hate the Red Sox at all. They simply have never given me a reason to hate them. Maybe this has to do with the Yankees having more championships than the Sox have fielders. Either way, if the Red Sox win, more power to them, good luck in the World Series. I'm not going to riot, and I hope you guys don't either, because it just makes everyone look bad.

The New York-Boston rivalry has been huge and this past week was no exception. Just remember when it's all over, we all have to go back to school or work the next day. However this postseason ends, it will be fun to watch, and when it does end, remember one thing: There's no crying in baseball, no matter how long it's been since your team has won.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The malleability of good and bad

Elizabeth Carter

Where do we draw the fine line that separates all that is good and all that is bad in modern society? Although it is intangible, surely it is set. To most, good and bad are communicated as the difference between right and wrong. However although one may think that some of my ideas are wrong, that does not make me "bad" necessarily, just less right than others.

So then it appears that right and wrong are subject to perception, just as are good and bad. Yet within this perceived right and wrong, is there still a more absolute form of good and bad? To most, what makes one good are good actions, likewise what makes one bad are bad actions. Yet even actions are subject to perception. The perception of the perpetrator of a "bad" action, and the perception of those who are the recipients of the negative effects of the "bad" action, come from two very different vantage points.

If a girl were to steal the wallet of a businessman, surely that is a wrong and bad action. But what if this businessman had just downsized his company, laying off thousands of people during times when the company was flourishing economically? There was really no need for the businessman to fire so many people, except that by doing so he earned himself a few more million dollars, and in turn, destroyed a few thousand lives. What if one of those laid off was the girl's mother? Is she justified in seeking revenge on this man whose greed has hurt not just her mother and family, but also many of her mother's colleagues? Are her actions "less bad" if they are justifiable by a prior wrong?

To me the answer is no, but it should now appear there are two types of wrongdoing: initial wrongdoing, and the wrongdoing of revenge. This hypothetical situation is a simple case of two wrongs not making a right. Revenge is what she was seeking, although on a very small scale. But revenge does not fix things. Rather, revenge only exacerbates wrongs, it throws salt in the wound, and creates a vicious cycle into which both parties get hurt. After a while, one tends to forget who was wronged first, and one focuses on retaliation instead of resolve.

The need for revenge is that which is destroying our own country before our very eyes. We like to pride ourselves in this country on how fair we are and how just we are. Yet with two wars abroad, maybe its time for us to stop looking for the bad guys. Maybe it's time for us to start realizing that we all are the bad guys, if we take a close enough look. What is terrorism but retaliation for the past wrongs we have committed as a nation? You think they hate us because we're rich. Quite possible, but I think they loathe us for the fact that we're rich and the fact that our companies are taking advantage of their people along with many other people all over the world. Cheap labor and bad conditions is something we don't allow or stand for in our country; that's what unions are for.

What is terrorism but retaliation for the past wrongs we have committed as a nation?

However, outside of the United States, that's how companies make their livelihood; they exploit the cheap foreign laborers, plain and simple. They hate us because we abuse them, because we butt into their feuds, their wars, their conflicts, and we pick the most profitable side. They hate us for the bombs we've dropped on them and their innocents that we've killed. They hate us for the fact that we have the money and the power to help people but instead we use those things to bully the world into doing what we want and what profits us. There are two sides to every story, good and bad, and right and wrong are nothing but perceptions. I will always think that terrorism is wrong, not just because killing innocents is grossly unjust and cruel, but also because, as simple as it sounds, two wrongs will truly never achieve what is right. I understand why people would hate us, and I understand why terrorism happens. But more importantly, I understand that if someone doesn't stop this downward spiral of revenge that we are caught in as a nation, in time, the only thing we will have left to do is crash and burn.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

Ant's eye view observations

Leah Vitale

Despite the fact that I have not ridden the public buses since my arrival in Israel three months ago due to their high terror risk, when I travel the country, I do ride private buses that go directly from point A to point B and have highly enforced security. This past weekend, I went home with my Israeli roommate on one such bus. As I stepped on the bus, aside from being hit by a sea of green army uniforms worn by faces of young boys and girls practically filling half the bus, I also noticed that the bus was already completely full and I'd have to sit on the floor. Little did I know that within the duration of that bus ride I would be provided with much insight into Israeli society.

Once situated in the aisle, I started up my Coldplay album and began to enjoy the ride. Ahead of me was the panoramic view of the open winding road surrounded by the magnificent mountains and countryside. Then, I looked in the driver's rear view mirror. I noticed that the driver alternated looking at the road and at all of us on the bus. Upon seeing the passengers all at ease and resting, he'd make this face of satisfaction, almost fatherly in a way. Something especially struck me about the bus driver: how important his job was to him, and his realization of how important his service was to Israel. You could see that in his mind, he didn't feel like some disgruntled Greyhound driver, rather, like an established essential role in Israeli society.

I started looking around on either side of me, noticing all of the shoes that surrounded me: Clogs, tattered and worn Keds, big black boots, business shoes, black leather laceups. After studying the shoes a little longer, I looked up, tracing each pair of shoes to their respective owners. The clogs were worn by an indie-hippiesh girl probably in her mid-twenties. The Keds were sported by an elderly woman wearing a head covering and long skirt. The black boots were those of a baby-faced soldier, wearing his olive uniform and cradling an M-16 rifle with its head to the ground. The business shoes were paired with a full suit and tie that were worn by an executive-looking middle-aged man. The simple black pair was accompanied by a full suit, long white beard and black velvet kippah (skull-cap). When I studied the people a little longer, the image of the young soldier sitting next to the religious man was extremely juxtaposed, yet, neither seemed to be phased in the least by the person he was sitting next to.

In a country the size of New Jersey, each and every person really matters and affects society.

It was then that I realized these people represented a cross-sectional paradigm of Israeli society. Each knew his role, however, each was also comfortable with that of his neighbor, no matter how glaringly different their lifestyles and beliefs were. Then, I realized, the reason each person was so comfortable with himself, yet also with those surrounding him, was due to the Israeli-Jewish dynamic. In a country the size of New Jersey each and every person really matters and affects society. It is as though, just as the bus driver realized, each person is single-handedly holding the country together, just by fulfilling his function.

When I spoke about it later with my roommate, she said: "The thing that is so great about Israel is that if you drive by someone's crops and see that they are bountiful, you aren't envious of him even if yours aren't, because you know that it is good for the country's economy as a whole." Instead of each person living his life in his self-important independent bubble, as we often tend to do in the U.S., each person is not only making his own salary, but also really enhancing everyone else's. This realization made me especially blissful, sitting on the hard floor of that bus, because I too, was an essential part to the whole picture. Without tourists and students such as myself, Israel's entire industry would be without a market.

Israelis are often referred to as "sabras." A sabra is a prickly-peared fruit, hard and spiky on the outside, yet soft and sweet on the inside. My experience on the bus couldn't have better exemplified this persona of Israelis. Each person sat quietly next to one another; however, I believe that we all knew we were really in this together, in a quest to live peacefully and prosperously in the face of the hardships and challenges presented in the country each and every day. Toward the end of the ride, the bus driver looked back again, except that time, I smiled.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Israel.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Friday. Interested in applying? Contact Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Getting to know about Planned Parenthood

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of the Voices for Planned Parenthood group at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity

Julia Kristan

Q. I have read that if you want an abortion, you should go to Planned Parenthood. I also know that if you need birth control you should go to Planned Parenthood. What is Planned Parenthood exactly?

A. Planned Parenthood is the world's largest and most trusted voluntary reproductive health care organization. We believe that every person has a right to choice in having children and that every child should be wanted, loved and adequately cared for. Within PP, we work for comprehensive education, research and legal activism, as well as providing health care. We stand behind rights to privacy and rights to access of reproductive health care services. Planned Parenthood is an organization which advocates women's rights, abortion rights, sexuality education and early pregnancy detection as well as working to maintain First Amendment rights in schools, libraries and other publicly funded institutions.

Founded by Margaret Sanger as the nation's first birth control clinic in 1916, PP has expanded to a broader resource focused on helping women and families nationally and internationally. You can obtain information, medical services and links to other resources through PP. We are not affiliated with any religious groups. There are jobs within PP in many areas, and volunteer opportunities abound.

Planned Parenthood might be well known for providing access to medical abortions and birth control, yet there are many other facets to our organization. At the very local level we have VOX, which is a PP affiliate here on campus. We provide information and plan events, such as Take Back the Night last semester. Take Back the Night was an event to raise awareness of the pervasive problems of violence and sexual violence against women and men. We will be organizing this event again this spring. If you are interested in VOX or Take Back the Night, please email to get information on our meetings and this semester's events.

If you need birth control, a pregnancy test, information concerning sex, sexuality and sexual health, or even an abortion, Planned Parenthood is a vital resource. Open with 125 affiliates in 49 (soon to be all 50) of the states in America, there are resources to varying degrees all over the country. Other centers for pregnancy help may steer women to certain choices, while PP aims to be as neutral as possible, providing the information and means for women to have control over their health and bodies.

Want to get involved? Want to discuss different opinions? Just want more information? Planned Parenthood is coming to UMass,

Continued on page 5

Tarantino carves up a comeback gem

All-star cast delivers in 'Kill Bill: Volume One'

By Matthew M. Burke
Collegian Staff

'Kill Bill: Volume One'
Directed by Quentin Tarantino
Starring Uma Thurman Lucy Liu Miramax
Rated R
104 mins.
Grade B+

It has been six years since writer/actor/director Quentin Taran-tino has come out with a new film. In the years that have elapsed since the 1997 release of Jackie Brown, Tarantino has been busy producing other people's projects and has remained strictly behind the scenes. All the while he was really biding his time with aspirations to explode back on the American movie scene, and stage a heroic comeback with his most ag-gressive project to date.

How hard could it be for a controversial director whose films have tapered off in recent years to come back from a long break and a lot of critical success to re-win the hearts of moviegoers everywhere? Would this be a change of the guard in Hollywood or a sad attempt to reclaim box office prowess? In fact, Tarantino is the king of career resurrection. From John Travolta to Pam Grier, Tarantino has been bringing aging actors back into our hearts for years, but his biggest test ever would come in the form of his own reanimation.

"Kill Bill: Volume One" is a gory yet uplifting spectacle that will take your breath away and at the same time end any feelings of hunger one might have had prior to viewing. It is nail biting, to say the very least, as you pull for the heroine of the picture, who is placed in one inescapable situation after another. Tarantino continues to show the wit and raw creativity that drove audiences to see "Reservoir Dogs" and "Pulp Fiction" in mass numbers. It all but assures "Kill Bill" will have a similar cult following.

Uma Thurman is powerful as "The bride," an anonymous victim of a plotted assassination. She becomes hell bent on vengeance for the death of her unborn baby, which was killed during a shooting at a wedding rehearsal by her former lover and his group of elite assassin friends.

Thurman, an Amherst native, shines in her most challenging role to date.

She plays a former assassin from the Deadly Viper Assassination Squad who, after the shooting at her wedding, sits in a coma for four years. She finally wakes up and un-flinchingly makes a list of former friends that she must dispose of in light of these tragic events.

Since four years have passed, some of her targets have moved on with their lives. Vernita Green (Vivica A. Fox) has a home in middle-class America and a small daughter. Bill (David Carra-dine) and Elle Driver (Daryl Hannah) are still on the assassin circuit, while O-Ren Ishii (Lucy Liu) has become the boss of the Yakuza in Japan due to her ruthless and bloodthirsty tactics.

COURTESY ANDREW COOPER

Uma Thurman has vengeance on her mind and a very large sword in her hands. After a four year nap and losing an eye nothing is going to stand in her way, even if she does have to fight through countless enemies and sequels.

COURTESY ANDREW COOPER

Vivica A. Fox tries to leave Thurman in her past, but Uma wants to take another stab at it.

While Bill and the one-eyed beauty, Elle, will have to wait until "Volume Two" to meet their fate, Green and Ishii have their hands full with the determined character portrayed by Thurman. She travels to Okinawa and seeks the help of the funny and brash Hattori Hanzo (Sonny Chiba). Hanzo is known to have made the finest swords the world has ever been graced with. It takes him nearly a month to make "The bride" her own sword. In the meantime she trains for the ensuing fight scenes that are as spectacular as "The Matrix" meets "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon." The only difference is that in this film blood is shed so much that the viewer will become desensitized to it within the first half hour.

In classic Tarantino fashion, the film jumps back and forth between past events and present action. This motion picture is particularly interesting as it is set up like a book with chapter markers throughout. These are complete with titles, which makes Tarantino's fourth film slightly more structured and subsequently easier to follow than previous works. He also showed that at this stage of his life he is very influenced by Japanese and Samurai culture. A portion of the film is so bloody and shocking that Tarantino chose to direct it as Japanese Anime.

This film is not for those with weak stomachs, but if you enjoy spectacular fight scenes that are set to music by Wu-Tang's the Rza then this movie is just what you've been waiting for. Tarantino's "Kill Bill: Volume One" is better than "Pulp Fiction" in almost every aspect, from acting to storyline. Sonny Chiba, the Japanese film star who plays Hanzo, will delight crowds with his skillful acting and humorous lines. The all-star cast really makes the difference in this outstanding motion picture about revenge. You can't go wrong with "Kill Bill."

COURTESY ANDREW COOPER

The showdown between Liu and Thurman has a heavy Japanese fighting influence. It is one part "Matrix," and one part "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" with a bit of women's wrestling added in for good measure. It is a classic clash between good and evil, a hero risen from the brink of death and the ex-ally who is now a mafia boss. With swords and wills clashing these two actresses produce a fight scene that transends the usual gore-fest and shows some true chemistry.

Comedian/Rocker cracks up Pearl Street: Mike Doughty pleases beyond expectation

By David Pessah
Collegian Correspondent

"Who here is Yankee fans?" were the opening words of the Mike Doughty Set. This solo acoustic guitarist hails from New York City and his question received more cheers than it would seem like a Massachusetts crowd should give him.

"I'm a Marlins fan," Doughty went on to say before concluding his opening by proclaiming, "Actually, I don't give a f, I just play music."

COURTESY PAUL GUTMAN

Mike Doughty has found his place as a rocker/comedian.

Mike Doughty
Pearl Street Nightclub
Northampton
Oct. 11 2003

This set the tone for the show. Doughty the interactive comedian who plays rock music. Blazing through a two-hour long set, he mixed new songs with old favorites from his previous band, Soul Coughing.

Doughty added a new twist to "Grey Ghost," one of his concert staples. Previously the song had been played only live with a "fake word bridge" where Mike makes up fake words to sound like the actual bridge. "I know what you're expecting," he said to cheers from the crowd as he played the riff to the song in the background. Then he went into a bridge with real lyrics most people in the crowd had never heard before. He explained at the end of the song, "I just recorded this song in the studio, and apparently you need to write a bridge to get a Grammy, and I want that dang Grammy!"

The crowd played a great role in the concert, with Doughty reacting to almost every shout before, after or even during the songs. Mid-set he asked the crowd what he should talk about, and the definitive "Yankees Suck!" came forth. Doughty's response matched his opening comments, adding, "To me sports is one big game called get the ball."

Doughty never missed a beat on any of his songs. "Rising Sign" was met with hearty cheers and "It's Only Life," his acoustic cover of Mary J. Blige's "Real Love" had the crowd singing along.

Seemingly loving to depart from rock concert clichés, after ripping through "True Dreams of Wichita," an old Soul Coughing favorite, Doughty stepped off the side of the stage before the encore exclaiming, "This is the point where I pretend to leave" before stepping back on stage with a shocked expression and witty sarcasm adding, "This is such a surprise, I really didn't think I was gonna play more music."

The five-song encore rounded out his set, with the fan favorite "Madeline and Nine" and a cover of the Magnetic Fields' "Book of Love." He ended the night's set with "Janine," another Soul Coughing hit. At the end of the song he encouraged fans to end the show with "a big obnoxious sing-along" where everyone screamed the chorus at the top of their lungs. This was a fitting end to the show where the fans were just as much a part of the show as the singer. Mike Doughty on Pearl Street was a refreshing switch from big name bands that play the music to the fans and leave.

Inciting a swinging revolution

Matthew Herbert resurrects big band sound

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

The Matthew Herbert Big Band
'Goodbye Swingtime'
Accidental Records

Rock and Roll's origins coincide with one of the most aggressively rapid periods of social change in the history of the United States. This is no coincidence. During the late 1960s popular music gained the power to unite people under tumultuous periods of duress. It proclaimed that the times were "a-changin'" and that we would, indeed, overcome. These messages of hope struck chords in the ears of the rising radical left to such a degree that at one time it seemed possible that a Bob Dylan song could free a man from death row.

As Matthew Herbert proclaims on his newest project, "Everything's Changed," the climate for protest music since the 1960s has become stigmatized by something even worse than the common tag of "idealistic." It has become cheesy and almost passé. Sure, without Peter Gabriel or Rage Against the Machine we may have never heard of Stephen Biko, Mumia Abu-Jamal or Leonard Peltier, but the overall timidity in such a radicalized political environment is a bit alarming when one considers that the men who run this country were vigilantly opposed and disgusted by everything that the 1960s stood for. By many measures, things are worse now than they were then.

Matthew Herbert chooses an odd medium for his most recent political commentary. Instead of veering anywhere near an accessible or easily utilizable genre, he digs back to a style that peaked before the second world war; swing music. The very name of the field suggests a celebratory joy that one does not normally associate with the frustration of an educated yet alienated populace. His intention, as he extensively outlines on his website "Magic and Accident," is not to scream in anguish, but rather to provide himself a space in which pop music can exist on its own without isolating the influence of the changing world around it.

This is no small feat, but it is common ideological terrain for Matthew Herbert. Recording under just the name Herbert, he redefined house music in the late 1990s by incorporating elements of glitch and IDM into his down-tempo grooves. His 1998 album "Around the House" was a cornerstone for each of those three genres, focusing on the relationships of people to their personal belongings. The album began Herbert's flirtation with the guidelines of PCCOM, a personal dogmatic set of guidelines for music composition. Rules include the complete restriction of drum machines, the promotion of musical "accidents," and a ban of synthetic replication of acoustic instruments.

The latter rule caused Herbert to independently assemble a big band ensemble to record what would become the samples that later became "Goodbye Swingtime." The result is really something extravagant; a revival of a genre lost under stacks of Vegas imitations. It's only apt that an adbusting perfectionist/electropurist could pull its corpse out from under stacks upon stacks of record jackets and shake it into the computer age.

The crisp, multilayered performance sounds like a million bucks. Every instrument is delicately captured in all its ferocity or reservation. The packaging of the album also deserves praise. A jazzy skyline on the cover gives way to a rising rainbowed sun outlined by some futuristic silver inks. Inside, the pages of the booklet itself are cut to duplicate that skyline, no doubt indicative of the various layers that the album operates on.

Continued on page 5

A fresh and revolutionary sound surfaces

Continued from page 4

All of this may seem standard in the recording community until you consider that mostly Herbert himself assembled this entire project, of tremendous scale. Coincidentally, Herbert can also claim something that his far-left peers in bands like Radiohead and Coldplay cannot; complete control over his creations. In a world where illegitimate fan-suing institutions and vigilantly pro-war radio corporations own music, something like "Goodbye Swingtime" at the very least must demand a minor level of respect.

"Certainly, the struggle of living in a world in which one's personal ideals are constantly ignored or overruled can be heard not only in the lyrics, but also in the musical struggle between harmony and dissonance," Herbert says on his website.

The album opens with the sounds of the first of many samples of pages turning in a book. It's not just any book though. It's "Rogue States" by Noam Chomsky. Herbert specifically chose recent political texts to help assemble the external drum samples on "Swingtime." In fact, literacy assunies a significant theme to Herbert. He poses it as a weapon against the corporate and institutional tyranny. "Misprint," asks us to "read all the books," but cautions us not to "pick all the meanings."

The CD itself contains a list of over 100 suggested books from Michel Houellebecq to Nick Hornby. Other samples are made from clippings sent to him about the then-impending Iraq war and the sounds of his fingers typing the web address to School of the Americas Watch. Perhaps most interesting, "The Many and the Few" contains phoned in sounds of phone books around the country being dropped to symbolize the silencing of antiwar voices.

Then there's the music. From the opening instant, the listener is plunged in as fluttering brass manipulations (call it "reticulated tweaking") give way to a languid, somber organic orchestral gesture. The standup bass holds a pulse like a ticking clock while we await the passage from the past into the future.

The closer you listen, the more you realize just how incredibly calculated and remixed this organic-sounding album is. Songs are assembled with freeform arrangements, in all likeliness from different sessions, in a manner that never buzzes too far from appreciable formulaic structure. The sounds of Herbert's printer provide light futuristic accompaniment to Mara Carlyle's elegant vocals on "The Three W's." As she croons that "Ears should be burning" when she informs us that "act on principle" has been extinguished, she's channeling Julie London inside a disenfranchised Joan Baez at Raymond Scott's Manhattan Research factory.

Speaking of Raymond Scott, the late loony-tune-inspiring swing time bandleader turned electronic-instrument-constructor would surely be proud of the fun and wacky contortions of "The Battle." Electro glitch slides playful alternate whirlwinds of piano, bass, trombone and cymbal-heavy swing music. The ecstatic cartoon vigor gleefully romps between midtempo lounging to vehemently fill-happy accelerated bursts of spontaneous activity.

Elsewhere, the tone rings vague enough for silly love songs, but alludes heavily back to the heavy-handed politics steering the album. "Not in my name" repeats the chanteuse Shingai Shoniwa, making the rhetoric of the peacenik platform familiar if not the ideas behind it. On "Simple mind," the band somehow plays their wind instruments without blowing on them, Herbert's words attempt to carry the weight of his intentions.

"You can be sure / That I couldn't be more ready / Simply to be / Different to this hypocrisy." I think that's been made abundantly clear. Now who else is ready?

COURTESY ACCIDENTAL RECORDS

Swing music has never been used in the way that it is by Matthew Herbert. The sound of the record may be light, but the music calls for political and social change.

Men bare it all for local schools

Citizens go to extremes for education

By Julia Silverman
Associated Press

JUNCTION CITY, Ore. (AP) – Cleve Dumdi – a 70-year-old respected sheep rancher, husband of a former county commissioner – was walking in this small Oregon town one day when a longtime acquaintance hailed him from across the street.

"Hey Dumdi!," the man hollered. "Didn't recognize you with your clothes on!"

It's the kind of ribbing Dumdi has had to bear ever since he disrobed and perched on his tractor for a 2004 nudie calendar featuring the men of Junction City's Long Tom Grange.

All proceeds from calendar sales go to the Junction City school district, which has had to give up at least three classroom teachers, art, music, gym class and field trips after recent severe state cutbacks in education budgets.

The calendar, which is being sold online for $17, is the latest gambit to raise money for local schools in a state where teachers already have lined up to sell their blood plasma and ranchers have auctioned off the rights to hunt for buffalo and antelope on their property.

"Anyone who knows fund raising knows you can't make enough on a bake-sale, and we have been jog-a-thoned to death," said Danuta Pfeiffer, the force behind the calendar and the wife of Mr. March, who obligingly posed holding up a well-placed pot of daffodils. "We'd do backwards handsprings if we could raise $25,000 from this, but we are dreaming of $75,000 and a movie deal."

She's not the first: the Helen Mirren film, "Calendar Girls," opening this Christmas and billed as a female "Full Monty," tells the story of a group of prim ladies from northern England, who made a tastefully nude calendar of themselves doing various housewifely chores to raise money for leukemia research. The 2000 calendar sold like hotcakes, the ladies got endorsements galore, and suddenly, a pinup girl no longer automatically meant a sultry Baywatch babe.

Since then, their idea has been copied all over the globe, by everyone from firefighters in Vail, Colo., to senior citizen belles in South Carolina, to raise money for causes from new community centers to breast cancer research.

The men of the Long Tom Grange think they are the first to drop their drawers for public education, though. Over the years, the local Grange, a social association of farmers, has made periodic contributions to the school district, such as a new oven for the home economics class or a saxophone for the band. But the current situation, they thought, called for more drastic measures.

There was some hemming and hawing. Dumdi, for example, had to be nudged into posing by his wife, then tried to show up for his photo shoot wearing swim trunks.

Mr. November, aka 53-year-old mushroom hunter Al Hasselblad, acknowledged he also felt "unnatural" stripping down in front of the male photographer for his shoot, in which he is shown crouching to cut down some especially delectable fungus.

There was some jockeying among Grange men for month position too – centerfold Mr. June, for example, scored that prime spot because he was set to pose hoisting a bag of golf clubs, and June is lovely weather for a round of golf. Chris Shown, Mr. September, laid claim to his month because that's when the grapes ripen at his Junction City vineyard; he is pictured artfully draped in grape leaves, holding up a glass of Oregon pinot noir.

The calendar is big news in Junction City, where Pfeiffer plans to hold calendar signings and rallies. The project has drawn a few angry letters in the local weekly, accusing the men of moral indecency, especially after the picture of a local school board member ran on the front page – Mr. August in all his glory, naked but for a pair of backless chaps and a lasso slung over his shoulder.

Still, there's been far more enthusiasm than complaints; Pfeiffer already has 500 pre-orders from locals.

"This one 80-year-old lady said to me, 'When is that calendar going to be actually published? Because I am a snowbird, and I want four copies before I leave for Arizona,'" Shown said.

Everything you need to be a good parent on Tuesday, Oct. 21, from 12 to 2 p.m. on the steps of the Student Union. Join us as we build support for the March on Washington. This smaller rally will provide information and garner support for the larger march, which will take place April 25, 2004 in Washington. Spearheaded by four major women's rights and reproductive rights groups – National Organization of Women, Feminist Majority, NARAL Pro-Choice America and the Planned Parenthood Federation of America – we are aiming to make this the biggest march in history for the Constitutional right of women to reproductive freedom.

Continued from page 4

The March on Washington happening this spring is to show support for women's rights, specifically our right to choose. In a time of great upheaval in our nation, let's not allow our right to choose be one more freedom taken away from us.

Julia Kristan is a Collegian columnist.

Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@hotmail.com. Confidentiality is always respected.

Three Women of musical vision and style hit the road. Virtuoso jazz vibraphonist and composer Lalo, pop-rock chaneuse and singer-songwriter Kyler, and gospel-tinged songstress Laura Berman present an unforgettable evening of song, groove and collaboration as sisters in music.

The Blue Wall Pub is located on the ground floor of the Campus Center Complex in the Blue Wall Eatery on the UMass Campus. Parking is free in all surface lots. All are welcome.

THE WOMEN ROCK WORLD TOUR HAS COME TOGETHER IN ORDER TO RAISE BREAST CANCER AWARENESS IN COLLEGE STUDENTS AROUND THE COUNTRY.

XC competes in NE championships

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams made their marks Friday when they competed in the New England Collegiate XC Championships at Franklin Park in Boston.

Senior Kate Markopoulos pulled ahead to lead the women's team, placing 96th out of 287 total women's varsity competitors, with a time of 19 minutes, 20 seconds on the five-kilometer course. Junior Alexis Anzelone was right behind her, with a time of 19 minutes, 22 seconds. Freshman Cuisle Kierans was next for the Maroon and White, clocking 19:44, while senior Tricia Silva and junior Amanda Dahlberg rounded out the top five, racing 19:56 and 19:58, respectively. With a total of 653 points, the team finished 24th overall.

Sophomore Rebecca Ruffo led UMass in the sub-varsity race, clocking a notable 21 minutes, 47 seconds on the course. Freshman Erin Larkin also performed well, finishing in 22 minutes, 38 seconds.

Sophomore Ryan Corbett led the way for the men, finishing 57th out of the 317 runners in the race in 25 minutes, 53 seconds. Junior Andrew McCarron was next for the team, running 26:22 on the five-mile course, and freshman Michael Dulong was right behind him with 26:28. Junior David Hantman finished off the top five with 26:38. The team finished 19th overall with 571 points.

Men's coach Ken O'Brien had expected the team to do a little better.

"I'd say we had two people run pretty well, and the other five I think lacked confidence in a bigger meet."

And though he hoped the team score would be better, his predictions were in the right ballpark.

"Someone had asked me what I thought we'd do [in terms of team scoring] and I said, 'well, maybe thirteenth, fifteenth, but in all reality and honesty it could be from fifteenth to twentieth.'" O'Brien sees confidence and experience as the team's main obstacles. The championship meet was the largest meet by far this season in terms of how many teams competed, and a lack of experience poses problems at meets this size.

"We have some kids returning from last year's team, but those kids weren't in the top seven last year. They weren't counted on to score. When you go to a meet and you're a back-up person, some people don't have that level of aggression, they don't learn as much," said O'Brien. In his eyes, experience is the best teacher.

"Once you're in the scoring position, you learn, you're forced to learn. I shouldn't be completely surprised that we didn't meet what I had hoped we would because there are a lot of young kids on the team and some of the returners hadn't been put in that position before," said O'Brien.

He also notes that there are consequences to not having a consistent lead runner. In order to score well, the team needs near or top performances from the first five runners. The team essentially needs five good days, and has little room for error due to the lack of a lead runner in his mind. In the end, O'Brien feels the team just needs to keep working hard and gain the needed experience.

Wells stops Sox in Game 5

Continued from page 8

Matsui contributed a run-scoring grounder in the eighth.

New York is seeking its 39th AL pennant, and fifth in six seasons, while Boston is trying to get to the World Series for the first time since 1986.

Wells is a longtime Babe Ruth fan who six years ago wore one of the Bambino's caps from 1934 for an inning against Cleveland. He both delights and distracts the Yankees, getting big wins but also causing big trouble from time to time.

"We know what he's capable of doing," Torre said.

He improved to 9-2 in the postseason, allowing one run – Manny Ramirez's fourth-inning homer. Wells allowed just four hits in seven innings, blunting Boston just as he did Sept. 7, when the Red Sox closed within 1 1/2 games in the AL East before losing 3-1 to Wells.

"He was mixing it up pretty well – fastballs, curveballs," Jeter said. "The thing with Boomer is he goes right at you."

Mariano Rivera finished for his fourth save of the postseason. He allowed his first run of the playoffs when Todd Walker tripled off the right-field wall leading off the eighth and scored on a groundout by Nomar Garciaparra – his first RBI of the playoffs.

Lowe, who lost to Pettitte in Game 2, got in trouble in the second when he walked Jorge Posada with one out. After Matsui advanced Posada with a forceout, Lowe intentionally walked Nick Johnson, and Aaron Boone hit a hard bouncer to third that went off Bill Mueller's glove and into the air, with Mueller unable to grab it with his bare hand on the first try.

That brought up Garcia, who lined a sinker into center for a 2-0 lead. When he reached first base, he kissed a finger and pointed toward the sky.

Soriano, 1-for-16 in the series at that point, hit a hard smash into right field on the next pitch for a 3-0 lead.

Boston threatened in the third, when Trot Nixon was hit by a pitch on the right shoulder and Varitek singled. Johnny Damon grounded to first to advance the runners, with Johnson making a nice pickup. Walker then flied to left and, with the crowd on its feet cheering, Garciaparra struck out on a 3-2 pitch.

Ramirez homered over the Green Monster in the fourth, his second of the series and third of the playoffs. With his 16th career postseason homer, he moved past Ruth into fifth place.

New York put runners on first and second with one out in the fourth and got runners at the corners with one out in the fifth, when Walker, Mueller and Kevin Millar failed to come up with difficult grounders during the two innings. But Lowe escaped both times.

After Soriano misplayed Nixon's grounder for an error leading off the fifth, he made a neat play on Damon's one-out grounder up the middle. Soriano ran toward second, stretched to the shortstop side of the base and with his glove flipped the ball back to Jeter, who caught it with his bare hand for the force.

Walker then singled and Garciaparra walked, loading the bases for Ramirez, who bounced into the forceout at third.

A Sox fan fires back

Continued from page 8

he loses all immunity.

Zimmer is hardly cute anymore, which after 50-plus years in baseball is all that's keeping him around. Think about it. How often can you remember seeing Joe Torre or Mel Stottlemyre leaning over and consulting with him, unless it's to gauge the sun's reflection off of his metal head?

What he did is like watching Wally the Green Monster take a swing at a little kid, and I'm sure no one would have been up in arms if Wally took a face plant.

Did anyone excuse the old man who fatally drove his car through a storefront in California from his transgressions because of his age? I think not. What Zimmer did was pathetic, and a man of his age should know better; a lot better.

He embarrassed himself, his team and the game of baseball, yet he is a Yankee, and thus, all is excused.

Headhunting

OK, so maybe Pedro did throw at Garcia's head, and maybe he didn't.

Regardless, who was more fired up about that situation than Roger Clemens himself?

The same Clemens who drilled Kevin Millar in the domepiece over Fourth of July weekend, and the same Clemens who did the same to Mike Piazza and then, instead of apologizing, hurled a broken bat at the Mets' catcher.

I totally understand the anger on the part of Garcia, who certainly has to fear for his career. But Clemens, the man who has shown no remorse over either of the aforementioned incidents, and tries harder and harder every day to enhance his tough-guy persona, needs to keep it to himself.

I don't think he realizes how lucky he was when he got a thunderous ovation upon exiting Fenway following his final regular-season start, because when I step away from the nostalgia surrounding the man who was my childhood hero, all I see is a cocky, ego-driven punk.

Mr. Overrated

No, not Derek Jeter. Jorge Posada.

You, Mr. Posada, have made yourself a target after parading around the dugout threatening Martinez after Karim Garcia was beaned.

A .270 lifetime hitter since becoming a regular in 1998, he has posted two seasons in which he hit over .280. In the other four, he hit .268 twice, .245 and .277 and has missed close to 20 games in each of those seasons.

He's also struck out at least 110 times in four separate seasons, with as many as 151 in 2000 — the best season, average-wise, of his career.

Yet the man who also holds the Major League record for passed balls in an inning starts the All-Star game every year, and gets praised relentlessly by Just For Men posterboy/nitwit Tim McCarver, among others, as one of the premier catchers in the game.

I choose to believe that if he took that hole in his swing anywhere other than the Big Apple, he'd just be the next Benito Santiago. Maybe that's my impartiality, or maybe I'm on to something.

You decide.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com

UMass splits pair with conference foes

Continued from page 8

concerned Minutewomen stood there anxiously awaiting to see how serious the injury was. Minutes later Nigh came to her feet and with the aid of her coaches walked over to the sideline and greeted Rutland with a good-luck hug.

Dayton wouldn't go easy on the sophomore, attacking her right off the bat. Reba Sedlacek nailed a point-blank shot at Rutland who dived to make the save, robbing her opponent.

But eventually the Flyers would get the better of Rutland. Sedlacek dished the ball into the box where Tesia Kozlowski received it and rifled a shot into the top left corner beyond the reach of Rutland to give Dayton the 1-0 lead.

"She did a very nice job," Rudy said of Rutland. "She was very composed. The goal was a well-taken goal."

UMass almost tied it up three minutes into the second half. Bellini streaked up the field and found Fairweather who belted a shot just wide of the net.

The second half was filled with collisions, air-borne players and nasty spills. On a couple occasions Fairweather landed hard head first on the ground, but still got back up and continued to play.

Both teams would streak back and forth for the remainder of the game but neither could net a goal, as it remained a 1-0 win for the Flyers.

Rutland allowed one goal off the bench and made three saves. Nigh racked up three saves prior to her injury.

Dayton outshot UMass 13-10, had more shots on goal (7-3), and had more corners (6-4). The Maroon and White did, however, commit more fouls (6-4).

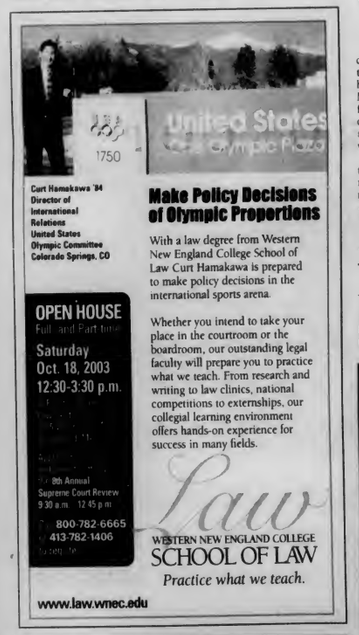
Minutewomen to face UNH

By Paula Aden
Collegian Staff

After splitting two Atlantic 10 games this weekend, the Massachusetts field hockey team heads back into non-conference action tonight against New Hampshire, beginning a series of four consecutive road games. Tonight's competition is in Durham, N.H. at 7 p.m. on Memorial Field.

Revitalized by a victory on Sunday – their first since Sept. 6 – the Minutewomen are looking to improve on their 3-10 record (1-1 Atlantic 10). The Wildcats have won their past two games, with a 6-8 overall record on the season.

UMass has only been able to win one road game this season, coming in Louisville, Ky. against St. Louis. UNH has only lost two home games; to Iowa and No. 4 Duke.



New Hampshire and UMass have faced five common opponents this season: Syracuse, Boston University, Providence, Harvard and UConn. UMass lost to all five schools, but the Wildcats were able to defeat BU and Cuse, 3-2 and 4-2 respectively.

UNH is currently tied for first in the America East Conference with Maine and Northeastern. Goalie Christine Buckley stands second in saves in the conference. Christine Tocco, netminder for the Minutewomen, is ranked second in saves in the A-10.

The last time UMass was able to defeat New Hampshire was in 2000, by a final score of 3-1, while last year UNH beat the Maroon and White 2-1. The Minutewomen and Wildcats have been facing each other since 1975, with 16 wins for UMass, 11 for New Hampshire, and two ties over the past 28 years.

The Wildcat offense has been much stronger than the Minutewomen's this season, scoring 26 goals in 14 games. In contrast, the Maroon and White have managed only nine goals in their 13 games.

Katie White leads the UNH offense in goals (10), points (20), shots (43) and shots on goal (eight). The equivalent leaders in those categories for UMass are Jaime Bawden for goals (two) and points (five), Marije Tigchelaar with shots (15), and Adrianne Monoco for shots on goal (nine).

Curt Hamakawa '84
Director of International Relations
United States Olympic Committee
Colorado Springs, CO

Make Policy Decisions of Olympic Proportions

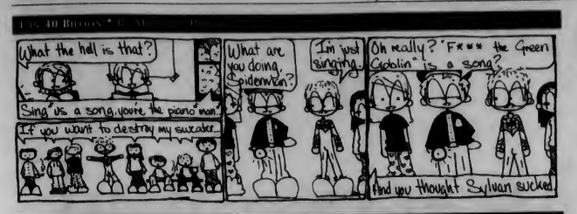
With a law degree from Western New England College School of Law Curt Hamakawa is prepared to make policy decisions in the international sports arena.

Whether you intend to take your place in the courtroom or the boardroom, our outstanding legal faculty will prepare you to practice what we teach. From research and writing to law clinics, national competitions to externships, our collegial learning environment offers hands-on experience for success in many fields.

OPEN HOUSE
Full- and Part-time
Saturday
Oct. 18, 2003
12:30-3:30 p.m.

8th Annual Supreme Court Review
9:30 a.m. - 12:45 p.m.

800-782-6665
413-782-1406



Law
WESTERN NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF LAW
Practice what we teach.
www.law.wnec.edu

The 18+ College Night
$4.00 over 21
$10.00 under 21
$2.00 off cover with this ad
HIPPODROME
VOTED #1 CLUB DOWN ON SPRINGFIELD
WWW.HDROME.COM
Featuring
The World Famous Hot Body Contest
$100.00 Weekly Prizes
Male and Female
Must Have Valid ID
Dress to Impress

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Fin · Fenian Brew · Chicken Fingers · Mozzarella Sticks · 50 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

MOPS
28th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA in the Fine Arts Center
Presented by: Department of
DANCE Music & THEATRE
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
THURSDAY & FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10 & 11
8 pm • Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets:
General Public: Thursday • $14 • Friday • $18 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18: Thursday • $10 • Friday • $12
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office
(413) 545-2511
Multiband Pepsi is Co-sponsored by:
DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE · Alumni Association · WFCR

$$ HIPPODROME $$
Coming Soon!
Rain Entertainment Complex
Bartenders
Cocktail Servers
Lighting Tech
Cashier, Video Tech
Door Security
Floor Staff
Barbacks
Coat Checkers
Floor Staff Dancers
Disc Jockey
Apply In Person Only
Dates: October 14, 15 & 16 from 3:00pm
Place: 10 Suffolk Square, Downtown Springfield formerly the HOT CLUB
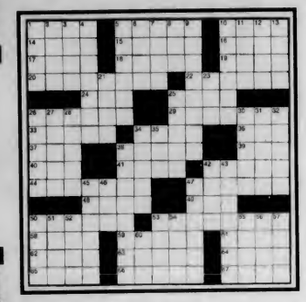
www.hdrome.com



Quote for the Day

"A positive attitude may not solve all your problems, but it will annoy enough people to make it worth the effort."

-Herm Allbright

Today's Crossword Puzzle

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. Reggae Night · Dance Party
THU. ·Murphy's Men (from Cork, IRE) 7-9p.m.
·Special Brew (Rock) 10p.m.-closing
SAT. The Equalites 10p.m.-closing
October Special!
Lobatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Popcorn Shrimp
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 35

THURSDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 33

FRIDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 38

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF Lindsay Clark/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You aren't nice. Try to be nicer. No one likes a meanie.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Listen closely – you never know when someone might call your name.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
People don't like your odor.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Why don't you relax and release some tension?

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You will have ridiculously good luck in your relationships.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It's hard to keep friends when you think you're better than they are.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't hide your love for Justin Timberlake. It's nothing to be ashamed of.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Steer clear of Southwest. Your parents will be mad if you get arrested.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You're not as tough as you think you are, so stop trying to deny your feelings.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Look at the images in the clouds. What you see might surprise you.tk

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Life is tough, get used to it.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Derek Lowe is hot. Hunt him down and tell him that.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'Hero' Biologic Warrior who Deliberately Slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'Winning' the War. Style: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. Author: AC graduate, many past productions Venue/Actors: your choice Contact: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment For Rent

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

One bedroom, near UMass Amherst Center Bus. 2 Large Rooms, low heat cost. $575 per month. 586-0746

Auto Fore Sale

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon AC/Power 17,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1998 Volvo V70 AWD Wagon Turbo Auto 130,000 Miles Loaded $10,000/OBO 253-0733

1994 Volkswagon Jetta, 160K, includes 4 snow tires, $2,000/OBO. Julie 253-4240

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer-skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Employment

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

For Rent

Ski House For Rent So. Londonberry, VT 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30 $1000/week katy.brown@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

For Sale

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office Regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Web Hosting $.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Instruction

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus, in Northampton. 584-1966 or visit www.westernmassboxing.com Accepts all major credit cards

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shear-bliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Sell Spring Break Trips! Guaranteed Best Buy 1 free trip for every 10 paid OR cash starting with first booking. Exxtreme Party Package! Protection of American Express Worldwide EXXTREME VACATIONS, INC 1-800-336-2260 www.sxvacations.com

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Exam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now . Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Yankees take series lead

David Wells leads New York past Sox in Game 5

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

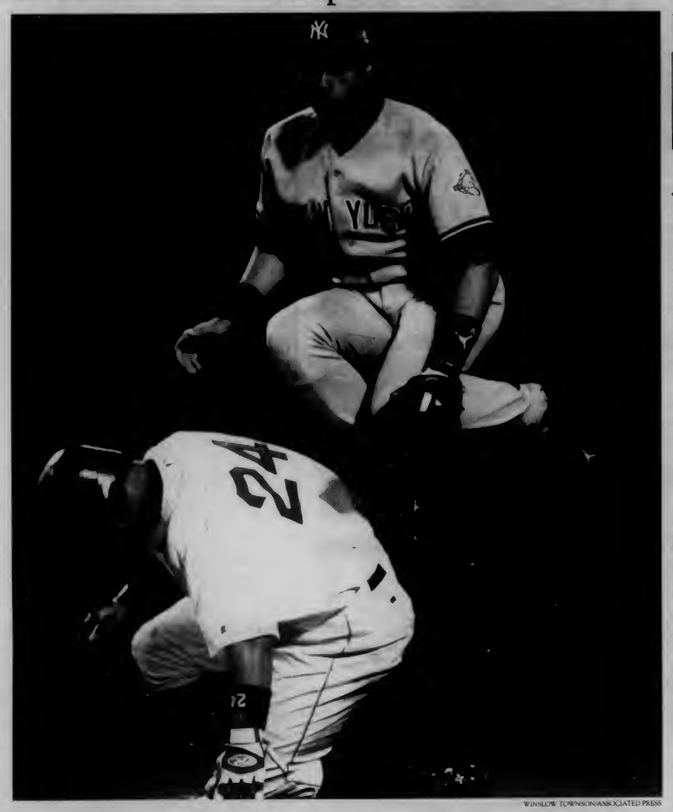
BOSTON – David Wells put the New York Yankees on the verge of another World Series, sending them back to the Bronx with two chances to keep The Curse alive.

Wells worked his way out of trouble to lead the Yankees over the Red Sox 4-2 Tuesday for a 3-2 lead in the AL championship series. With one more victory, New York will extend Boston's perennial heartache to 85 years. Andy Pettitte and Roger Clemens are rested and ready for the final two games of the series, which continues Wednesday at Yankee Stadium.

"We never get overconfident," Yankees captain Derek Jeter said.

Boston planned to start John Burkett, 0-6 against the Yankees in his career in the regular season, against Pettitte in Game 6, holding Pedro Martinez back for a seventh game rather than pitch him on three days' rest. But knuckleballer Tim Wakefield, who has both of his team's wins, said he thought he would be available if the Red Sox wanted him in relief.

"The clock is ticking on us right now," Boston manager Grady Little said. "We'll just wait it out another day and see if they can get it going."



Karim Garcia, who cut a knuckle in Saturday's bullpen scuffle with a member of Boston's grounds crew, was inserted into New York's lineup just before gametime and hit a two-run single in the second off Derek Lowe, who dropped to 0-2 in the series. Boston fans taunted Garcia in the ninth with a sing-song chant of "Jailbird."

David Dellucci originally was slated to start in right field, but manager Joe Torre told Garcia he was in the lineup after watching him in batting practice.

"His eyes lit up," Torre said. "He thanked me."

Alfonso Soriano followed Garcia's hit with an RBI single and later made a fantastic back-flip that helped stifle a Boston rally. Jeter also had a great play, making a diving stop to throw out Jason Varitek, and Hideki

Continued on page 6

WINSLOW TOWNSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The New York Yankees' Derek Jeter leaps over Boston Red Sox outfielder Manny Ramirez to complete a double play. The Yankees won Game 5 to take a 3-2 series lead.

Firing back at the Evil Empire

Touchin' 'em all

Mike Marzelli

I am a diehard Red Sox fan.

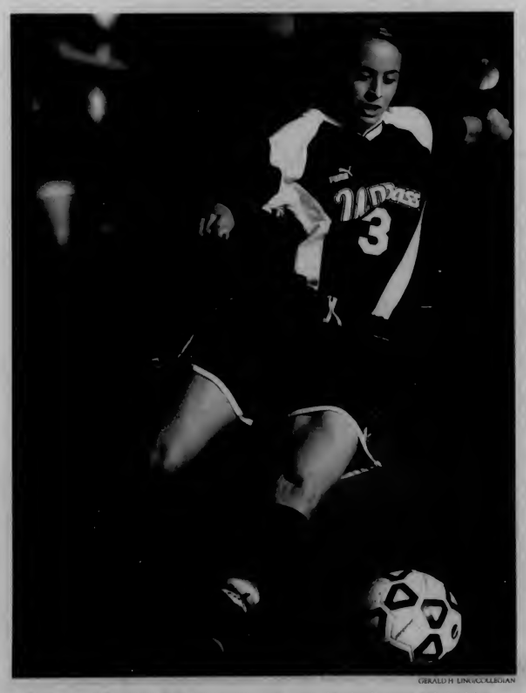
There, I said it, thus effectively elliminating any hope you may have of finding impartiality in this column.

Because there will be none.

So consider this your warning — if you root for the Evil Empire, dislike the Red Sox or are searching for an insightful, balanced analysis of the American League Championship Series, peer over just to the left and not only will you find a nice, accurate game story penned by an impartial member of the Associated Press, but you'll have shown more range than a certain shortstop your eyes will have just passed.

Thus, now having weeded out the idiots, scum suckers, no-nothings and pathetic bandwagon jumpers, I shall begin my rant.

Fenway punk?



In case you missed it, that was the headline that adorned the back page of the New York National Enquirer, otherwise known as the Post, following the incidents that transpired between Pedro Martinez and Don Zimmer in Game 3 on Saturday.

Well let's see. In the illustrious history of the New York franchise, Steve Howe sold cocaine, Jeff Weaver was caught smoking weed on an airplane, Jeff Nelson and Karim Garcia wailed on a Fenway Park employee and Roger Clemens hurled a bat at Mike Piazza, just to name a few, and none were labeled "punks."

Yet when the 72-year-old brain-dead lump of uselessness they call "Zim" comes charging out of the visiting dugout with every intention of leaving a permanent legacy on the face of Boston's crown jewel, and is sent to the ground in a move that is now almost exclusively recognized as self-defense, Martinez is not only considered one, but reinforced as a "punk" in the subhead?

The Post should be ashamed of itself. The fact that Zimmer is as ancient as he is certainly should make him immune to unnecessary physical contact, but once he steps on to that field and declares an intention to find, and hurt, the opposing team's pitcher,

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Erin Lilly and the Minutewomen split a pair of weekend contests with A-10 foes.

UM splits weekend

Minutewomen beat XU but are downed by Flyers

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, the Massachusetts women's soccer team (3-7-1, 2-3 Atlantic 10) ended a six-game losing streak when it surpassed Xavier 3-1 at Rudd Field.

However they couldn't complete the sweep as they came up short in an all-out battle against Dayton (7-4-1, 4-1 A-10), falling 1-0.

"It was probably the ugliest, most satisfying game of the season," UMass coach Jim Rudy said of the Xavier game. "We didn't play pretty. I can't say that we played well, but we won. I think if this team can put in that effort and play with a little more composure and take care of their first passes then we could do this a lot of games this year.

"They're at the verge of breaking through here, but we're not quite there yet."

Goal scoring has been a recent problem for UMass. During the six-game skid, the Maroon and White was shut out four times, and only once scored more than one goal in a game.

In Friday's matinee against Xavier (6-5-1, 2-2-1 A-10), the Minutewomen tied their season record for goals in a half, netting three by the "big three" – sophomore Adair Blyler (14 points – six goals, two assists), junior Lindsey Fairweather (eight points – four goals) and sophomore Lindsey Bellini (eight points – two goals, four assists). The trio accounted for all the Maroon and White's points against the Flyers.

UMass set the tone 10 minutes into the matchup when Fairweather, assisted by Bellini and Blyler, belted a shot past Andrea Garber to give the Maroon and White the 1-0 advantage.

The Musketeers retaliated at the 19:33 mark, when Angie Scarlato passed to Lauren Giesting, who headed it home to knot the game at one.

UMass would reclaim the lead just a few minutes later when Bellini scored her second goal of the game off a home-run pass from Blyler to put the Maroon and White up 2-1.

Fairweather capped the scoring for the Minutewomen when she beat three Musketeer defenders and found the back of the net to give UMass a 3-1 lead that would last until the final horn. Blyler was credited with the assist.

"Today was my first day back without a brace," Fairweather said. "[The brace] kind of hindered my movement. [Today] it was good and I felt more mobile."

The Musketeers had a couple of scoring opportunities of their own, but were unable to get a goal past senior goalkeeper Kelly Nigh.

For the remainder of the second half, UMass dictated the flow of the game and ensured that the Musketeers wouldn't be let back into it.

"I thought that we played a better second half than first," Rudy said. "We dominated and had them under control. We came in with a different tactical package than we usually do, just to play against [Xavier's] style and system of defense which worked very well."

Nigh put on an impressive showing, allowing only one goal and tallying nine saves. Her counterpart, Garber, allowed three goals while savings five shots.

Shots were tied between the two teams at 15-15, though Xavier racked up more corners (3-2) and fouls (10-8).

With rain coming down off and on during Sunday afternoon's game against Dayton, injuries continued for the Minutewomen, as they suffered another devastating loss when senior goalkeeper Kelly Nigh went down and had to be replaced by sophomore Kristen Rutland.

"We didn't get physical until we lost our goal keeper," Rudy said. "They were ready to be had today, they looked off their game, they looked listly, they look disinterested."

The injury occurred when the Dayton offense sent the ball into the box, where senior forward Judi Aschenbrener was in hot pursuit. Realizing this, Nigh dove towards the ball, but the wet field conditions carried her forward. Aschenbrener was unable to put on the brakes and the players collided.

Aschenbrener was able to recover after a few moments but Nigh remained down. The

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 31

BRENDAN C'HEARAIGH/COLLEGIAN

Speaker of the House, Jared Nokes, speaks one-on-one with a fellow selectman at last nights SGA meeting.

SGA debates new admissons policy and diversity issues

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association tackled senate apathy and campus diversity concerns last night, debating over the newly declared University of Massachusetts admissions policy that eliminates the use of a point system.

With 46 of 63 members of the Senate present, the meeting took place at the top floor of the Campus Center.

According to Speaker Jared Nokes, Senate President David Carr was not present for the sake of monitoring student activity in the Southwest Residential Area for Game 6 between the Red Sox and the Yankees.

Nokes announced he was not happy that none of the Senate committees had met over the past week.

"We need to reevaluate a little bit, what we're doing ... I don't think I have talked to a chair yet that has talked to all of their committee members," Nokes said.

"We have a very big role to play, and we're passing on it. We really should be doing more than this."

Nokes said he would like to see the committees meet this week and that he was also upset with a fundamental change made in terms of admission policy at the University. He said it was a mistake that the Senate was not more involved. According to Nokes, Chancellor John Lombardi didn't have to take action on the policy right away.

"We definitely should have said something," Nokes said. "At least a reaction to it."

However, Associate Speaker Christopher Eckel said the Senate meeting attendance has been great thus far. "[It's been] a lot better than previous years," he said.

According to him, the parliamentary procedure workshop for new members of the Senate took place prior to last night's meeting and went well.

Eckel pleaded for new senators to get to know University administrators.

"We do have a lot of power here," he said. "But ultimately, it comes down to them. Don't be afraid to get out there and talk to them."

According to Attorney General Mark Morrison, the SGA Judiciary is still non-existent and the application process is now closed.

"Some resumes are transparent," he said. "Some are enthusiastic."

He also said he doesn't understand why the Judicial Advisors program was taken out of the Dean of Students office. "We want to rejuvenate it because it is really important," he said.

Morrison believes a judicial body to be highly necessary this semester with the amount of students being suspended. According to him some of the students who were involved in a riot on Phillips St. about 3 weeks ago are being accused of 40 to 50 criminal charges.

Morrison said he has been in contact with seven of those students already this semester and only spoke with two all of last year.

"If we're not willing to pay for students rights to be protected I think it's kind of ridiculous," he said. "I can't get the program run-

Continued on page 2

Staten Island ferry crashes into pier

By Michael Weissenstein
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – A Staten Island ferry slammed into a pier as it was docking yesterday, killing at least 10 people, tearing off victims' limbs and sending passengers leaping into the water, officials said. At least 34 people were injured.

The 310-foot ferry, carrying about 1,500 passengers, plowed into the enormous wooden pilings on the Staten Island end of its run from Manhattan, reducing the front of the mighty boat to a mass of shattered planks, broken glass and twisted steel.

The crash happened on a windswept afternoon, with gusts over 40 mph and the water in New York Harbor very choppy.

"Everyone just jumped for their lives," rider Bob Carroll told TV station NY1. "It was like an absolute horror. ... The whole side of the boat looked like an opener on a can."

The ship's captain fled and was tracked down by police at his Staten Island home, said a high-ranking police source, speaking on condition of anonymity. The ferry's crew will be interviewed and tested for drugs and alcohol, Mayor Michael Bloomberg said.

At least 10 people were killed and 34 injured, the mayor said, making it New York's worst mass-transit accident in at least a generation. Some bodies were accidentally counted twice, leading to an initial report by city officials that 14 people were dead.

Firefighters picked their way through the debris aboard the ship, the Andrew J. Barberi, looking for victims, and Coast Guard divers searched the water. At least one body was recovered from the water.

The cause of the crash was not immediately known, although Bloomberg suggested the heavy wind as a possibility. The National Transportation Safety Board convened an accident investigation team, which will look at the weather, among other possible factors.

"The ferry was coming too fast," said witness William Gonzalez, who lives in a nearby apartment complex. "They had no control to stop the boat."

Commuters were trapped in piles of debris aboard the 22-year-old ferry, and victims screamed and dove for cover as metal crunched into wood just before the start of the evening rush hour, tearing girders, splintering planks and ripping a huge hole in the right side of the three-level, bright-orange vessel, which has a capacity of 6,000 passengers.

"People who were sitting there as the ferry docked were hit by the pilings that came through the side of the boat," the mayor said. The pilings hit on the ferry's main deck, crashing into the windows that ordinarily afford a postcard view of the Statue of Liberty.

"There were numerous injuries like fractures and lacerations," said Fire Department spokeswoman Maria Lamberti. "There were a couple of people with amputations – legs and arms."

Victims also suffered back and spinal injuries, chest pains, and hypothermia from the water, which was about 62 degrees.

The five-mile trip between Staten Island and Manhattan normally takes 25 minutes. A free ride on the Staten Island Ferry is one of the city's most beloved attractions to New Yorkers and tourists alike, giving visitors a Hollywood-style view of lower Manhattan's skyscrapers.

The seven boats that make up the Staten Island Ferry fleet carry 70,000 commuters a day between Staten Island and lower Manhattan. The boats make 104 daily trips between the two boroughs. The Andrew J. Barberi travels at about 18 mph. Service was suspended on all Staten Island ferries after the accident.

Contract struggle heats up Berkshire Gas

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Since April, the United Steelworkers of America has been working to change a labor contract that has left 79 employees and union members of Berkshire Gas Company locked out of their jobs for 199 days without pay or health insurance.

The struggle began after the employees refused to accept the company's proposal for the new workers' contract last April. The lockout includes union members of the USWA Local 12325-1, which covers the Greenfield, North Adams and Pittsfield area.

Now, Berkshire Gas Co. is understaffed, creating what Joe Carbone, union member and coordinator of New England Workers Alliance, considers a potentially hazardous situation for the public.

"There are leaks in the gas systems in Massachusetts, but they're usually repaired," said Carbone.

According to reports on the United Steelworkers of America Web site, this has not been the case. There are three types of gas leaks. An a-leak is a tiny leak. A b-leak is more serious and should be scheduled for repair when found. C-leaks are the most severe and should be fixed immediately.

Due to the lack of staff, these leaks are not getting the attention they need. Some workers have reported gas meter readings of up to 5 percent, an explosive level leak.

"These [leaks] should be repaired, but instead they are being left to be monitored indefinitely. These things don't tend to fix themselves," said Carbone. "Things aren't safe, and we're tired."

Berkshire Gas is the major gas supplier for the University of Massachusetts. When asked how the labor contract issues will affect UMass' heat supply this coming winter, Carbone was unsure of what the future held.

"Who can say? [Our customers] are all getting less service, but are paying the same," Carbone said. "The rates haven't gone down; people are just getting less for their money."

Carbone is also concerned about issues of public safety. Before the lockouts, Berkshire employees were available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to answer emergency calls. These services included in-house calls for customers as well, but the 24-hour service no longer exists. Carbone expressed concern for the elderly, especially considering the coming winter.

"At night, if they call after 10 p.m., there's no one to drive out and help hem."

Locked-out employees lost all health insurance coverage, a blow for a company where workers are generally between 40 and 50 years of age and rely on health coverage.

"I worked with a grandmother of 10 who has been on the picket lines for seven months. Her insurance and benefits had been removed immediately. Another man I worked with was 51 and forced to give up his apartment and move in with his parents," said Carbone.

The USWA seeks to reform issues drawn up in Berkshire's April proposal, such as an insurance payment raise of over 300 percent. Spouses who were not employees are required to seek health coverage through their own employers, resulting in two co-pays. "Add it all together, and that's a huge take back", said Carbone.

Also to be reformed is the two-tier payment plan, also known as the "staggered step" plan. A new employee at Berkshire Gas would be paid a lower rate than any employee hired before 1996 who was doing the exact same job. Wages for employees increase in percentages. Overtime, a younger employee could be paid as much as $5 less for doing the exact same job as an older employee.

"In the new [proposal] we want a single wage scale," said Carbone. This would allow new workers to work their way up to higher wages.

"We want to be working there; we want our contract. Many people are 30-year employees. That's [the job] we know and we do it well. It's tough to go out into market place and find a job. There we had good pay."

USWA will hold a rally to put 12325 back to work on Oct. 23 on the Massachusetts Statehouse steps in Boston from noon to 1:30 p.m. The rally will focus on public safety and awareness and feature a wide variety of speakers.

Information for this article was used from www.pittsfieldrr.net.

UMass celebrates Homecoming weekend

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will hold its Homecoming Weekend 2003 on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The campus will host numerous activities including a pep rally, a concert at the Fine Arts Center, department open houses, the MinuteFan Park event, the homecoming football game versus Hofstra University and the annual Oozefest.

Oozefest, a mud volleyball tournament will be held on Sunday at noon behind the Totman Gym. Young alumni and current students are welcome to join Oozefest, which is being referred to by homecoming organizers as "UMass Amherst's newest tradition." The event is a co-ed, three-game guaranteed tournament sponsored by the Student Alumni Relations Society (STARS) and the UMass Amherst Alumni Association. For more information on Oozefest, contact STARS at 1-800-456-UMASS or visit www.UmassAlumni.com/oozefest.

Warren P. McGuirk Stadium will turn into MinuteFan Park on Saturday from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This event will include activities such as the Coca-Cola Football Town Interactive Tour, live entertainment, face painting and games for children of all ages.

In addition to these events at the park, The Office of Fraternity and Sorority Life (formerly known as Greek Affairs) invite all fraternity and sorority alumni and their families to visit the tent. MinuteFan will also have food and beverages on hand.

The Renaissance Center will hold a tour and reception on Saturday at 10 a.m. The center is offering tea and a tour of its gardens and house. Dancers from the center will entertain guests of the tour.

The Renaissance Center is one of only six Renaissance Centers in North America and the only one in the U.S. with its own rare book library. The center is known for hosting numerous lectures, seminars and performances throughout the year. It is also the home of a popular literary journal, the English Literary Renaissance.

In addition to the Renaissance Center opening its doors to the public, several academic departments are offering open houses for alumni on Saturday. These departments include political science, communication and the Isenberg School of Management. The open houses for political science will be held from 9:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. on the second floor of Thompson, SOM from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and the communication department from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. at 120 South College.

One of the most notable activates of the day, however, is the annual homecoming football game, sponsored by the Alumni Association. UMass will be playing Hofstra University at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday. Tickets are available through the Athletic ticket office by calling 413-545-0810.

There is a tailgate for UMass students before the game, which will be held from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Students on a meal plan can enjoy a free meal. The tailgate will be sponsored by Dining Services and Laser 99.3 FM.

Editorial/Opinion
Page 4
Avoidable?
Discussing factors leading to current U.S. policy

Arts & Living
Page 6
School Rocks
Jack Black is back with "School of Rock"

Sports
Page 10
Sox win
Red Sox force game 7 against Yanks

Comics/Classifieds
Page 9

BRENDAN C'HEARAIGH/COLLEGIAN

Still Alive!

Emotions ran high at a packed Blue Wall Pub last night as the Red Sox rallied to beat the Yankees.

Belgian Waffles with Strawberries & Whipped Cream * Nova Scotia Lox * Vegan Omelettes * Chili Rellenos * Multigrain Pancakes *Build-Your-Own Omelettes * Soy Sausage *Vegan Pancakes * Potato Latkes * Homefries *

NICK'S

For the morning after...

Open for Breakfast
63 MAIN STREET
AMHERST
Mon-Fri 6:30-2
Sat & Sun 7-2
OCMP accepted

20% STUDENT DISCOUNT FOR THE FALL SEMESTER

*Homemade Cheese Blintzes * Homemade Maple Pork Sausage * Huevos Rancheros * Vegan French Toast * Tofu Veggie Scrambles *

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3999 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Saltsiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Marrin
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsey Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallach
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erika Lovely
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Mazzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

SGA discusses admissions policy

Continued from page 1

ning until we have a strong foundation for it."

Regarding the newly enacted admissions policy at the University, Secretary of Diversity Issues Russell Plato said he met with the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Michael Gargano, and announced that the new policy wasn't something the University just decided on their own.

According to him, it had to do with the Michigan ruling in which a point-based system of admissions was deemed unconstitutional.

"Legally they had to get rid of [the point system]," he said. "It's gone."

According to Plato, University admissions is going to spend more time reading applicants' files instead of looking at points. "[The University] does want to start matching national numbers," he said. Plato said he will be watching admissions and seeing how everything works.

According to Plato, the approach of UMass admissions will be similar to that of which Amherst College would take.

"You wont get it simply because you're an ALANA student," Plato said. "It's just going to be one factor among many."

Gargano does not believe the number of ALANA students will decrease, Plato said. However, Senator Gladys Franco expressed concern. The percentage of ALANA students has been decreasing since the 1990's, she said, adding her belief that the administration has manipulated the numbers by using international students to skew the current percentage.

A report to the Senate by chair of Administrative Affairs, Levi O'Brien regarding the 2003 National Conference On Race and Ethnicity (NCORE) was also highly discussed. O'Brien said he believed the nine-student trip to the San Francisco Bay area for conferences addressing diversity challenges was beneficial.

While Plato said that similar conferences could be had at UMass for less money, such as the upcoming Diversity Round Table meeting, O'Brien said the NCORE trip was relative to students and could be in the future.

"We spent money, so that the University has a much better climate than it has in the past," he said. "We can make some very powerful changes to the campus climate."

Secretary of University Policy Brian Long noted that 11 new students have been appointed to the Faculty Senate councils and committees. These students will report to him with information from each meeting that will be passed on to President Carr and the rest of the Senate.

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Senator Jason Bisonette addresses the SGA at the beginning of the meeting last night in the TOC, 11th floor Campus Center.

Need help with your Resume?

Come to a Resume Writing Workshop!

TODAY! Thursday, October 16
1 pm * 201 Machmer

Friday, October 17
2 pm * 114 Stockbridge Hall

For more information about internships, co-ops and full time opportunities go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Legislators aim to reduce drug costs

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – A growing number of state legislators are signing onto a multifaceted prescription drug bill designed to counter the rising cost of medication by negotiating better prices for state clients and employees.

The bill, which seeks to establish a bulk purchasing program and limit the drugs that can be prescribed, has been endorsed by at least 25 of the 40 state senators and 69 of the 160 members of the House of Representatives.

"The point is, we can spend the same amount of money and get a lot more drugs for those who need them," said Rep. Patricia Jehlen, D-Somerville, the lead House sponsor of the bill.

In addition to pursuing lower prices, the bill would require pharmaceutical manufacturers doing business in Massachusetts to register with the Board of Pharmacy and to disclose the value, nature and purpose of any promotional gifts, fees or subsidies distributed for marketing purposes.

"For the hundreds of thousands of seniors in the state who need drug that are affordable, please pass the legislation," Phil Mamber, president of the Massachusetts Senior Action Council, told the Health Care Committee yesterday.

Lawmakers say there is growing impetus for state action given the federal government's failure to approve a prescription program for the elderly through the Medicaid program and the increasing on the availability of lower priced drugs in Canada. In 2002, Massachusetts spent over $1.2 billion on prescription drugs.

"Now, because we're in a budget crisis, because there's no more smoke screen about the federal government doing something, now we at least have the level of support to pass the bill and override any veto," said Sen. Mark Montigny, D-New Bedford, the bill's Senate sponsor, who has proposed bulk purchasing bills several times in the past.

The pharmaceutical and biotech industry opposes the initiative. Both argue that the bill would restrict patients' access to the drugs they need and, by reducing the companies' profit, make it impossible for the industry to pursue research and development of life-saving drugs.

"These programs jeopardize the health of patients, interfere with the patient-physician relationship, and are not sound fiscal public policy," the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America said in a statement.

Supporters of cost controls argue, however, that the pharmaceutical industry is reducing access to lifesaving prescriptions by making them too expensive for many patients.

"The problem is it's almost useless to do all this research and create all these wonderful drugs if no one can afford them," said Sen. Richard Moore, D-Uxbridge, co-chairman of the Health Committee.

The bill would establish the Massachusetts Prescription Drug Fair Pricing Program. It would limit which drugs could be prescribed under the state's Medicaid program, requiring doctors to get special approval before they could prescribe anything not on the list. The goal of that part of the initiative would be to encourage physicians to steer patients to less expensive drugs.

The bill would also create a single purchasing unit that would use the state's large pool of employees and clients to negotiate better drug prices from the pharmaceutical companies. This would include the state's Medicaid patients, state employees, as well as citizens receiving services from the Department of Mental Health, Department of Mental Retardation, and the Department of Public Health.

Another section would provide prescription discount cards to those without insurance.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Springfield, Mass, Mayor Michael J. Albano speaks in front of the Mass joint committee of Health Care at the statehouse in Boston, yesterday.

Three American security guards killed in Gaza Strip explosion

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

BEIT LAHIYA, Gaza Strip (AP) – A remote-controlled bomb tore apart an armored vehicle in a U.S. diplomatic convoy yesterday, killing three American security guards and wounding a fourth in the first deadly attack on a U.S. target in the Palestinian territories.

The attack, on a convoy of U.S. Embassy diplomats entering Gaza to interview Palestinian candidates for a Fulbright scholarship, was a dramatic departure from typical militant operations, which usually target Israeli soldiers and civilians. It was almost certain to lead to greater U.S. pressure for a Palestinian crackdown on militant groups.

Secretary of State Colin Powell, in a telephone call to Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia, said the United States expected full cooperation in investigating "this heinous act and in bringing these murderers to justice," according to State Department spokesman Richard Boucher.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat condemned the attack as an "awful crime," and Qureia promised to track down those responsible.

There was no claim of responsibility, and the largest militant groups –Hamas, Islamic Jihad and the Al Aqsa Martyrs Brigade – quickly distanced themselves from the attack. Palestinian security sources said they were focusing on small groups who receive funding from abroad, including from Iran.

The attack came four months after a previous assault on a U.S. bulletproof vehicle in Gaza. That attack, which was not publicly revealed until yesterday, did not cause any injuries, said U.S. Ambassador Dan Kurtzer, providing no other details.

Kurtzer said those killed yesterday were U.S. citizens working on contracts to provide security for the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv.

The State Department identified the slain Americans as John Branchizio, 36; Mark T. Parson, 31; and John Martin Linde Jr., 30 – all employees of DynCorp, a Virginia-based security firm. The wounded American was initially treated at a Gaza hospital before being transfea rred to a hospital in the southern Israeli city of Beersheba.

After the bombing, the U.S. government advised its citizens to leave the Gaza Strip. Kurtzer said 200 to 400 Americans work in the Gaza Strip.

U.S. diplomats at meetings in the West Bank were immediately brought back to Jerusalem, and it remained unclear if U.S. travel in the West Bank and Gaza would be further curtailed.

The investigation will be a cooperative probe involving Israeli police and the FBI, according to FBI officials. FBI agents do not intend to go into Gaza immediately; instead, they will rely on the Israelis to collect and preserve evidence, with the FBI doing the detailed examinations of what is found.

The diplomats were riding in a three-vehicle convoy en route to Gaza City when the blast went off about 10:15 a.m.

An Associated Press reporter saw a gray wire with an on-off switch leading from the scene of the attack to a small concrete room at the side of the road. The blast took place about a mile south of the Erez crossing between Israel and Gaza.

The blast hit the third vehicle in the convoy just after it passed a gas station, said Mohammed Radwan, a Palestinian taxi driver who was at the station at the time.

"The first two cars drove quickly and stopped far from the explosion. Palestinian security people jumped out of the car and rushed to the car that had blown up. ... I saw two people covered with blood lying next to the car," he said.

The explosion gouged a deep crater into the unpaved road, nearly tore the vehicle in half and flipped it over. The pavement was stained with blood and littered with bits of flesh that were collected by Palestinian paramedics.

U.S. and Israeli officials said the attack underscored the need to dismantle Palestinian militant groups.

"The failure to create effective Palestinian security forces dedicated to fighting terror continues to cost lives," Bush said in a statement. "There must be an empowered prime minister who controls all Palestinian forces –reforms that continue to be blocked by Yasser Arafat."

In his call to Qureia, the Palestinian prime minister, Powell "made absolutely clear that we cannot move forward on a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict without eliminating violence and terrorism."

Zalman Shoval, an adviser to Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, said: "What happened is evidence that no one is immune, unfortunately, to Palestinian terrorism, even when we are talking about the representatives of ... the United States, whose entire goal was and remains to advance peace agreement between the sides."

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown
We have it all!

McMurphy's

6th Annual
Kegs & Eggs
Homecoming Celebration

Saturday October 18th
Doors Open at 10 am NO COVER

Breakfast Buffet
Proof of Age Required

WOMEN ROCK THE ROAD

LIVE AT THE BLUE WALL PUB
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18TH
8:00 PM
FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Three Women of musical vision and style hit the road. Virtuoso jazz vibraphonist and composer Lalo, pop-rock chaneuse and singer-songwriter Kyler, and gospel-tinged songstress Laura Berman present an unforgettable evening of song, groove and collaboration as sisters in music.

The Blue Wall Pub is located on the ground floor of the Campus Center Complex in the Blue Wall Eatery on the UMass Campus. Parking is free in all surface lots. All are welcome.

THE WOMEN ROCK WORLD TOUR HAS COME TOGETHER IN ORDER TO RAISE BREAST CANCER AWARENESS IN COLLEGE STUDENTS AROUND THE COUNTRY.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Public videotaping is necessary

A right to privacy is one of the fundamental rights of citizens of this country. It sets us apart from many other nations of the world. However, when people begin acting irresponsibly in public because they are involved in a large-scale celebration or demonstration and begin destroying private property and hurting others, they compromise their right to privacy.

The idea of police videotaping gatherings has recently received a considerable amount of attention. Amherst has taken a stand against the Patriot Act in order to preserve residents' civil liberties from illegal surveillance. Town Manager Barry Del Castilho told the Daily Hampshire Gazette that although there is a 95 percent agreement with the town resolution, some residents may be dissatisfied with the results, or more specifically, the fact that the police have a right to videotape public demonstrations and people in public places.

Nancy Foster, one of the sponsors of the Town Meeting article, told the Gazette that this kind of videotaping could have a catastrophic effect on public political demonstrations.

"It is one thing to have cameras in the squad car or in the booking room," Foster told The Gazette, "but quite another to film demonstrations or public meetings. Who gets to see them? When are they destroyed?"

This same issue has been a hot button of contention on campus. With the recent destructive gatherings taking place, Police Chief Barbara O'Connor has stated that the camera on John Quincy Adams tower will be used to identify disturbing perpetrators on campus.

Although The Massachusetts Daily Collegian strongly advocates the citizens' right to privacy, the fact remains that in these large gatherings property is being destroyed and people are being hurt. This is neither fair to those being effected by this destruction nor the remainder of the student body who will be paying for the actions of few.

The second people place themselves outside of their private homes; they become figures susceptible to public scrutiny. The same goes for people exercising large scale demonstrations or celebrations; because they are not in the privacy of their own homes, they are leaving themselves open to any kind of surveillance that may take place in public areas.

Until people can prove themselves responsible enough to not hurt others or destroy property, the use of police videotaping during large public gatherings is something that is necessary for the police to identify the actions of the few causing hurt and destruction. If you're planning on engaging in destructive behavior in a public arena, be prepared to be treated like a public figure.

Information for this editorial was taken from The Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The world of Instant Messenger

Stephanie O'Shea

Someone dig up George Orwell, because this place is falling apart like a leper on a trampoline. Computers are monopolizing our time, making or breaking our interpersonal relationships, and creating a social divide among the college population at large.

As a young woman on the prowl, nothing is more frustrating than having make-out fantasies about a potential gentleman friend from class or other mutual haunt and then coming to find out that the dude does not go online. I also feel somewhat alienated from my friends who are not permanent fixtures on my buddy list. A person without a screen name or discriminating palate for one-liners lives a lifestyle that is in direct conflict with mine. Auto response from Stephy Ska: I am addicted to AOL Instant Messenger.

My life is located on the right side of my 17" monitor, and my social structure is organized neatly into groups labeled My Posse, Fam Stylie, UMass, Hunk Corral and Randoms that descend vertically according to personal importance.

My Posse is the most exclusive group, because it is reserved for my very best homies who I appeal to in times of stress or when that episode of Seinfeld is on when George Costanza becomes a genius after giving up sex. Stephy Ska takes the narcissistic top slot of my entire buddy list so I can ensure the quality control of my profile and away messages.

Fam Stylie is where I go to get the homestead update from my brother and to scan my younger sister's online journal for signs of high school corruption. My parents cause the occasional open door noise, but I feel bad about subjecting them to fast typing and usually refer them to the telephone.

UMass is by far the largest group, and it is made up of friends, old neighbors from the dorm, and former teammates from group projects. It is the "go to" place for useful information, lewd vignettes and pictures from the riots.

Hunk Corral, also known as the man stable, is strictly for guys. It exists mainly for my own personal enjoyment, and the entrance requirements besides gender are arbitrary and dependent on how sassy I am feeling on a given day.

As a young woman on the prowl, nothing is more frustrating than having make-out fantasies about a potential gentleman friend...and then coming to find that the dude does not go online.

Randoms contain the most diverse group of people, and it does not speak highly of our relationships that they require the most scrolling to find. This is where I keep people from the late '90s that I no longer talk to because we have nothing in common or because I have long forgotten their true identities.

AOL Instant Messenger does not just warp my life into a list – it also runs it. The very first thing I do when I wake up in the morning is check the away message of everyone that is signed on. I walk to the bathroom feeling better that there are people already at class when I am still in my favorite t-shirt with the hole in the armpit so large that I have to wear a sports bra to bed as to not offend my roommates.

The away message has replaced small talk as communication's trivial yet dignified art form, and its artists post with a broad range of effort and adroitness. Amateurs waste screen space with snooze fests such as "at class" and "be back later." Those residing at the top of the bell curve leave interesting play-by-plays of their day, and the geniuses come up with one-liners that are repeated in actual face-to-face conversation.

Buddy Info, or the profile which to old-schoolers still call it, is the 1024 character version of this column. The typist has free rein to enrich minds or to make his readers dumber with each additional word. I have outgrown the popular bag of transcribing song lyrics for others to read, but my cut and pasted quotes have a crazy high turnover rate. Links to bawdy websites are also a good time.

I thoroughly enjoy sitting in front of my computer, and the realization that I do not feel as connected to those who do not was a strange one. I love giving presentations in class and being a clown among friends, but I still cannot shake this nasty keyboard habit. For now I will have to cope with the fact that my loop is electronic, and that I am missing out on dudes who do not know the joys of the IM booty call.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian columnist.

Remembering the comforts of home

Becky Martins

It is easy to get caught up in a hectic life of work, school and play. But sometimes, we should slow down and remember what is truly important in life.

For many college students not living at home, Columbus Day weekend marks a time where old friends reunite, families come together, and everyone returns to the normality of their past. We leave college life behind for three days, and fall back into the routine we once knew so well. Memories come pouring back: Of high school, of holidays celebrated with relatives and of time spent with friends. We realize we love the direction our lives have taken. Yet, we should also see the importance of remembering where we are from.

The longer we spend in college, the more we become accustomed to being independent. Upperclassmen's visits back home become more infrequent with each passing year. Even freshmen find themselves staying on campus more as bouts of homesickness subside.

We enjoy our freedom and appreciate not having to answer to anyone. College also proves to be a nice escape from problems with family and friends – issues that appear minuscule when they are miles away. But the more time we spend away from home, the more distanced we become. Suddenly, our past, and the people in it, take a back seat to our new, autonomous lives.

Sitting at a family birthday party this weekend, I began to think about my life. As a freshman, I am still getting used to this new life at school. I hardly get homesick, but upon returning home, I do see the consequences of being away. Often, I feel like I have missed out on things, such as my sister's field hockey season or spending time with an ill relative. When I visit on the weekends, I seem to notice any change, like slight alterations in my friends and family's appearances. But most apparent to me, is my newly acquired awareness of the present and future.

Last weekend, my grandmother referred to me as "an adult," and for some reason, the phrase hit home. At age 18, I legally am one, yet it is hard to believe the label applies to me. I can no longer be that person who ignores the future until it has to be dealt with. It is now my responsibility to have a handle over my behavior and decisions. Among other things, this includes which relationships I choose to keep, and which ones I let slip away.

The more time we spend away from home, the more distanced we become from it. Suddenly, our past and the people in it take a back seat to our new, autonomous lives.

College and home are often separate worlds. While away, we have different friends, different schedules and different manners of living. Yet, when we return, everything falls back into place. If we do not keep in touch with the people that helped shape us as individuals, we would be denying an important period in our lives. We may have to work harder to continue friendships and relationships, but if they are important in the first place, it will not seem like effort.

People often wonder what is important in life. My answer to this question would be the happiness found in family, good friends and the comforts of home. These things do not have to be questioned because they are meant to last indefinitely. When everything else fails, we can always count on this love and support to help us through tough times. But we cannot forget about the important people in our lives and go back to them only when it is convenient for us.

As college students, we are supposed to become independent and take the next step in life responsibly. Soon, we enter the real world, where we are at the helm of our decisions and actions. We will determine the course of our lives, but we cannot forget the people who helped us reach this point. As "adults" we may be growing up, but it is never too late to make a phone call or pay someone a visit.

Let Columbus Day weekend serve as a reminder of everything that remains important outside of school. College is a time of new beginnings, but we should also keep a place for our past. If someone is fortunate enough to have a close family, good friends and a comfortable home, he or she should cherish what they have. Not everyone is so lucky.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

Vietnam and Iraq

Michael W. Lenz

Currently, the United States is trapped in what appears to be an endless and tiresome fight for peace in post-war Iraq. What was supposed to be a quick and decisive "liberation" for the Iraqi people has quickly emerged into a precarious conflict particularly inflicting the men and women of Generation Y. There's one question that haunts us all: could the present debacle have been avoided?

In the case of Iraq, the statement proclaiming, "history always repeats itself" can be assumed to be correct. The present bloodshed draws many parallels to that of the Vietnam War. Both instances involved the justification of American aggression and the assertion of public support through propaganda.

In Vietnam, beginning with the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, the American government began a propaganda machine of claims and justifications for American involvement. Both administrations labeled Ho Chi Minh as a traitor to American ideals and charged that a communist-led regime would shift the world balance to the Soviet Union. According to Daniel Ellsberg, author of the best selling book "Secrets," Johnson stated that, "people in Vietnam were committing aggression, and the United States was there to defend South Vietnam." U.S. officials took it one step further when they said the United States was fighting for "self-determination" and "freedom." The justification above draws contradictions on two fronts.

It was long known that Minh was far from a threat to American ideals. In fact, in his September 1945 speech declaring Vietnamese independence from French and Japanese colonial rule, Minh cited specific passages from the Constitution. He referred to a person's right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Minh studied in America and even wrote former U.S. presidents Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Harry Truman asking for U.S. support in Vietnam's fight for sovereignty. So to think that Minh and the newly formed Vietnam republic posed any threat to the west is false on almost all accounts. After all, Minh was a nationalist before he was a communist, an important fact to consider when dissecting the true motives of this revolutionary.

How were the people of South Vietnam committing acts of aggression? The United States claimed that nations would reject Marxist thought and would, if given the choice, select a capitalist democracy over communism. It was reasoned that Americans were simply encouraging democracy and liberating the Vietnamese from oppressive rule. But doesn't forcing a unified nation to adopt democracy portray the "liberators" as occupiers and deny the constituency the right to select their own brand of government?

In Iraq, the propaganda machine, while as potent as that of the Vietnam era, is not as complex and has since been exposed. The Bush administration coaxed the United States to war on three claims. A) Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and his secular regime shared close ties and traded intelligence with Osama bin Laden and his fundamentalist terrorist ring Al Qaeda. B) Saddam Hussein attempted to acquire uranium from Niger, an African nation. C) Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld stated, "We know where the weapons of mass destruction are."

All three justifications have since been proven false. The administration assures the American public of one important reason for engaging in conflict – to "liberate" and "free" the Iraqi people.

During the Vietnam conflict, the United States violated the terms of the Geneva Accord of 1954, installed a puppet regime in South Vietnam, and ignored attempts by the United Nations and the National Liberation Front to arrive at a peaceful compromise.

Now, in Iraq, the United States ignored the reservations of leading members of the European Union and undermined the United Nations. The United States was consistently warned by world leaders about the consequences of military action. Jacques Chirac of France even drew comparisons between Vietnam and Iraq. "We saw what happened in Vietnam. I urge the president to reexamine what he is getting himself into."

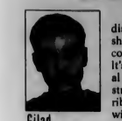
In Vietnam, the United States supported the oppressive ruler Ngo Dinh Diem. Diem was known for his violent tactics and his intolerance for opposition. Diem was imported from America and had little support from the South Vietnamese people.

More recently, the United States' favorite son, exiled Iraqi Ahmed Chalabi, has been considered a potential leader in the new regime. He shares close ties with the Bush administration, and like Diem, he is unpopular with the common Iraqi citizen.

Finally, in both conflicts, the United States could be said to have demonized the adversary. Because the Vietnamese refused to give in to the conquerors' vast weaponry and technological advantages, which included the usage of dirty bombs, and instead employed the tactics of guerrilla warfare, the men and women who defended their homeland were labeled as terrorists. In general, the Vietnamese people were considered less than human.

Likewise, in Iraq, the enemy has been demonized as less than human. Iraqis protesting the occupation have been shot – the enemy has been referred to as "collateral damage" by our defense secretary. The guarding of oil ministries, the building of oil pipelines and the awarding of infrastructure contracts have all taken priority over the well-being of the Iraqi people. Due to the chaotic scene, one can barely tell that the 10-plus years of U.N. sanctions have been lifted off the puppet nation.

Other similarities could be shown, such as the heavy burden placed on taxpayers, the negative impacts both wars had and have had on returning soldiers and the political costs of war. If we have learned anything from history, it is that the United States cannot simply force an ideological change on an independent and sovereign state. Every man and woman deserves the chance to pursue his/her own choice of government without the threat of foreign occupation. In understanding the past, the men and women of Generation Y can better prepare for the future.



The quotes above were compiled from Daniel Ellsberg and the periodical "The Nation."

Michael W. Lenz is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Friday. Interested in applying? Contact Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Israel: cruel and racist

Gilad Skolnick

Israel is a cruel and wicked discriminating racist dictatorship. Such a disgusting, foul country exists nowhere else, and it's a shame that the international community does not take a stronger stance against this terrible excuse for a nation. There will always be ignorant people who support Israel no matter what it does, either because they've been told that they should support it or because of the biased news, but the most intelligent people know the truth.

Now I know that those Israel supporters like to rant and rave that Israel is the only nation in the Middle East where all of its citizens, including Arabs, can vote for the country's parliament and prime minister. They shout out that it is the only country in the Middle East where all citizens, no matter what their nationality, is allowed a fair and open trial and to be protected by a lawyer, but they are neglecting the fact that Israel is a cruel country.

Sometimes, those fanatic Israel supporters go off on how Israel is the only country in the Middle East where members of parliament can be openly gay, where there are annual gay pride parades in the nation's two largest cities, and that it's the only country in the Middle East where men and women can be openly gay – even in the army. Even though the United States has a "Don't ask, don't tell" policy in place, Israel is nevertheless an oppressive state. An Egyptian court sent 23 men to jail for one to five years on charges including "practicing sexual immorality," a local euphemism for homosexuality, a bit over a year ago, but just because Israel is a little more flexible with letting people decide their sexual preferences doesn't make it a nicer country.

Just because Israel is a little more flexible with letting people decide their sexual preferences doesn't make it a nicer country.

What irks me most is when Israel goes about killing Palestinians. Just last week a few Palestinians were peacefully firing rockets into Israeli towns, and out of nowhere, Israel sends warplanes to fire back, killing them. What nerve! What right does Israel have to violate their sovereignty and kill them? Since when was Israel allowed to defend itself? There must be some sort of U.N. resolution against that. I just hope that the international community condemns Israel.

In fact, there is no place on Earth where suicide bombers are more discriminated against than Israel. They are routinely shot at, imprisoned and often even wrestled to the ground when they try to get a bite to eat at restaurants. Only an oppressive country like Israel would want to deny Palestinian suicide bombers their wishes to go to heaven.

Sure, you can cry that Syria murdered 20,000 of its own citizens in 1982 and that Jordan killed 3,000 Palestinians in 1971 when they rioted, but nevertheless, Israel has been killing innocent civilians who have done nothing more than try to murder Israeli citizens. Then Israel goes about building a fence between it and the West Bank, making it far more difficult for suicide bombers to hang out in Israel. If that's not racist, then what is? Imagine if America built a fence between it and Mexico. It would never get away with that, and neither should Israel.

The worst thing that Israel has brought to us is AOL Instant Messenger, though. About seven years ago the instant messaging technology ICQ was invented in Israel. This has caused countless people to burn valuable hours of their day in front of the computer screen, all wasted potential studying time. Moreover, the firewall was invented, denying people from the fun and thrill of hacking other people's computers.

If that wasn't bad enough, hundreds of thousands of women have been victims of the pain caused by the Epilady, a hand held hair removing device invented in Israel. Show that you will not support a racist state, and urge for the end of the use of the medicine that fights multiple sclerosis: don't let Given Imaging import their new camera-in-a-pill that people can swallow, which is the only way to record the functioning of the small intestines. And definitely don't take that new West Nile virus vaccine, which also was an Israeli invention in the last decade. Here and there, you can squeeze out something small and positive that has come out of Israel, but on the whole, the harm that it has caused is immeasurable.

Perhaps you could cite that in the 1960s, drip irrigation was invented in Israel, which allows modern day agriculture in sandy soil, on which all greenhouse technology is based, but other than that I can't think of much. The filthy hamster was another product of Israel, as all hamsters can trace their roots to the first colony of golden hamsters that was bred at Hebrew University in Jerusalem. Since then, guinea pigs have had a hard time making it to people's homes, being less preferred in favor of the more travel-size rodent.

Worst of all, cherry tomatoes used to die too quickly to make it to the stores, but once Israel managed to develop a strain that kept the fruit from dying before it was distributed across the globe, traditional tomato farmers began having a difficult time. Now thanks to Israel, Roma tomato growers are having a hard time competing for the treasured salad eating market. Is such a country that has committed so many wrongs worthy of U.S. support?

It's time people realized the truth about Israel. I urge you all to be intelligent. Don't eat cherry tomatoes or play with hamsters.

Information from www.israel21c.org was used in this article.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Building a better UMass

Sanam Hakim

When I was in second grade, my sister and I both really wanted one of those gigantic Barbie playhouse things. Unfortunately, my parents never bought us one. There is light at the end of the tunnel, however, because, that same year, my dad decided to surprise us and make an even bigger dollhouse for us out of wood. We filled it with all kinds of fun stuff: a bathtub, a little antique chair, a crib for the baby and little matching plates and cups for the kitchen table.

Anyway, the point of the story is that when I think back to that dollhouse, I don't think about the architectural design of the house or how sturdy the wood was. I think about the little forks and spoons and the little shirts and skirts for the baby. At the very least, I remember the dolls.

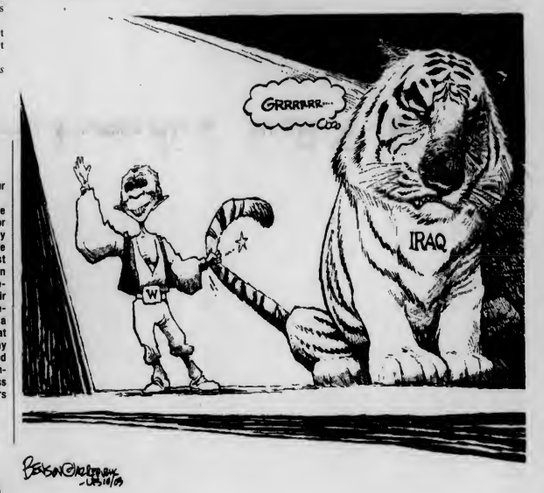
On a grander scale, UMass administrators have got it all wrong. Millions of dollars are going into the wrong things.

First of all, they've been working on the Fine Arts Center for quite some time. Recently, part of the new design has emerged through the construction – a very large field of cement. Great.

According to the UMass website, we have even more excitement coming our way. "The sidewalk from Pleasant St. to Herter Hall is widened, re-landscaped, and will get six exedras for patrons to gather at." (Exedra is the Greek word for stone bench with a seat back. Our exedra will also incorporate a tall lighting fixture with the possibility of hanging banners from it.)

I have a great idea. Instead of buying six stone "exedras" for "patrons," let's buy twelve wooden "benches" for "students" and scatter them throughout campus. We can start by, at least, putting one at every major bus stop. Then we can take the tall "lighting fixture," return it, and fix all the broken lights around campus. We don't even have to buy the banners because we could just use the money to buy some paper towels to fill the paper towel holders in the bathrooms TWICE a week instead of once.

As far as making UMass look better, as a whole, the Fine Arts Center was not the right place to start. The first step in beautifying UMass should have been knocking down that useless, ugly shack behind Worcester Dining Hall. Seriously, what is that thing anyway? It's just a waste of space and a frightening thing to walk by at night. The next step should have been paving the roads on campus. I admit –it makes my day when I'm walking to class and I see a skateboarder fall, but then I remember that instead of paving our walkways, the school is decorating select pieces of ground with cement, and it ruins the moment. The third step should have been draining the campus pond and refilling it with water, instead of leftover sewer liquids, which, might I add, is more in the "health hazard" category than the "beautification" category.



They've been working on the Fine Arts Center for quite some time. Recently, part of the new design has emerged through the construction: a very large field of cement. Great.

Going back to my dollhouse example, UMass is like that dollhouse and the teachers are like the dolls. It's the small things we notice and desire, not the big things. When students pay $12,000 to come here, they are not hoping for a new building to be built in place of teachers to teach in them. Dollhouses are nothing without dolls. Students don't want beautiful, new, Greek stone benches facing a Fine Arts Center, when the performing arts programs barely get enough financial support from the school to even hold an event. Empty dollhouses are no fun at all.

Money doesn't even seem like it should be a valid excuse. The school mysteriously comes up with sums of money all the time. Last year, $15,000 was wasted paying the Phoenix Design Group to come up with a new mascot that we didn't even end up using. The sad part is that, if we did change the mascot, and our colors, that would have been even MORE money that the school was willing to spend to repaint and redecorate everything. William Bulger left his service at UMass with $1 million. The money must be there, somewhere.

Regardless, instead of decorating the school and adding new, unimportant things, we should be improving the quality of what we already have. At the very least, knock down that stupid shack behind the Worcester Dining Common. Please.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

Yes, no more guests allowed

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Mario Pietromonaco's article published in last Thursday's Collegian. While I agree that the "no guest rule" can be a hindrance, Mario's take on the issue is way off base and way out of line.

First, let's get something straight. We do not own our dorm rooms. We live in the rooms, no matter how much money we pay for them, under a contract that we signed called the Code of Student Conduct. Under our contract with Housing Services, it is implicitly stated that we are tenants, and therefore must adhere to the rules housing puts down to keep us safe. That's right, to keep us safe. The Residence Life staff hired by housing to make sure the building is kept clean and safe does not take pleasure out of dealing with imbeciles who insist on breaking rules.

Second, I will never understand how running a tighter ship is a bad thing. The UMass administration is not on a power trip. What they are on is a mission to better the quality of our lives and education, so that our future employers-to-be don't look at our resumes as "a piece of paper that is too rough for toilet paper." You complain about how much money we spend on our rooms, but let's think also on how much we spend to be here. I don't want that money to go to waste, so if the school has to crack down on the idiots who get drunk and riot on a Wednesday to improve our University's worth, then so be it.

Finally, if you consider the "threat" that the vice chancellor sent out as empty, than apparently you didn't see the how the police cleaned out Southwest last Wednesday night. To say it was an awesome sight is an understatement, and in my opinion, their actions were totally and completely justified. Furthermore, I derive a certain pleasure from laughing at your empty threats, because any idiotic attempt at running by and breaking rules are both self harming and useless. You want UMass off its power trip? Come off yours first.

Justin Paresky
UMass student

Our rioting program

Matt Elder

The riots are getting out of control. Well duh, isn't that obvious? However, let's try to figure out what people decide to gather in Southwest and scream, chant and jump off the DC.

There have been big wins and big losses at this school before. You think this is the first time any sports team has done well? The Celtics have numerous league championships, so do the Bruins. And despite the stupid "curse of the Bambino," the Red Sox have done well in previous years. So it's not like we've never won anything before.

However, UMass, especially Southwest, is the focus of such negative publicity that now people feel that they have to riot. We are in national newspapers, local newspapers, and all over the Internet. My roommate was reading up on the Yanks/Sox series and UMass was actually on cnnsi.com (Sports Illustrated). Daily, in The Hampshire Daily Gazette they trash UMass for its reputation.

But the school can't exactly go at these news organizations. It's not like it's defamation of character or anything like that; it's certainly true.

So what can the school actually do about all the publicity?

I was driving through Southwest about two hours before the final game of the A's series, and I saw vans for Fox News and for CBS. A girl in a class of mine told me that during a riot there was somebody from ABC News getting quotes from everyone he could about what was going on (keep in mind, this is in the middle of the riots).

So how to solve this? Get the media and the press out of Southwest. It's that simple. Also, if the police see anyone with a video camera during the riots, grab them (or at least grab the tape). Getting rid of the tape recorders will greatly cut down on the amount of publicity the school gets. You can go on Kazaa anytime you want and download a handful of riot movies. You think that's good for high school seniors and their parents?

"Hey mom, UMass has a great rioting program!"

"Really?"

"Yea, take a look of this kid jumping off the DC!"

"Wow, he has great form! You're right Mike. Let's get you to UMass!"

With all the problems UMass is having, bad publicity is certainly not helping our cause. Budget cuts, forced retirements, increased tuition and increased populations are bad enough, plus we're (in)famous.

Get the press out of Southwest. If you see someone with a camera "reporting" what's happening, get them out of there. If you see some loser with a notepad asking some girl how she feels about the riots, get him out of there.

We can't stop people from saying there was a riot at UMass. We can't stop the Gazette from reporting about a huge party on Phillips Street, but we can stop Fox, CBS and ABC from being at the riots interviewing people. Two hours before a game! It makes me sick.

UMass isn't as bad as the newspapers and the news they want people to believe. You won't find a riot on a Tuesday in February. They're making it look like we do this all the time because they only cover UMass when they think it's newsworthy. Our great programs like psychology and nursing aren't newsworthy. However, our riots are.

You can go on Kazaa anytime you want and download a handful of riot movies. You think that's good for high school seniors and their parents?

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

Your apology is accepted

Waiken Wong

Dear Johnny Liberal,

Thanks for your heartfelt apology. As one who would generally identify himself as a conservative, I'm touched and humbled by your sincerity, and have new respect for the perspective and ideals you displayed in your column entitled "Dear Conservatives..." In fact, you've even helped me to realize that I must have many silly, misguided notions about the world because obviously I am no different from anyone else in the conservative camp, especially those who are most controversial and vocal. No, you're right, I fully fit the generalization.

There's no need to find out what I think personally, or if I even agree with everything the loudest conservative mouthpiece's spout.

Speaking of which, I guess I never actually thought anything personally. I used to think that even though I might label myself "conservative," I could still consider things intelligently and logically. Not only can I determine for myself what is right and wrong, what I like and dislike, what was good for me and not, but also why. I'm not sure where I picked up this crazy idea, when it's pretty clear that I was just blindly buying into the party line.

The funny thing about pretending to think for myself is that it made me feel okay about having certain beliefs, sometimes even disagreeing with other people. But I can see that it's really not. So I'd like to offer my own apology here: I'm sorry that I had opinions that were different from yours, and I'm sorry if they made you feel threatened or made you wonder why I thought the way I did. You were totally justified in writing me off from the start; I'm glad you weren't encouraged to thoughtfully consider my world view. I have a feeling, though – keeping my fingers crossed – that your joy-filled heart will accept my apology. Why? Because you're so accepting. \

Whether gay, black, Jewish, Islamic or – dare I say – conservative, you take people for who they are, giving them a fair shake. So that must include even me, a conformist, bigoted, prejudiced, patriotic zombie. That's what acceptance is about after all, and that's the moral high ground that you've claimed, right? Oops, am I allowed to refer to "morals" here? I'll retract the term if it offends anybody.

Johnny, thanks for clarifying where I really stand on many issues. I thought I too valued the environment, conservation and greater efforts towards cleaning up, controlling and eliminating industrial waste. But that can't be, since I'm a conservative and probably support drilling everywhere in the search of oil, reckless logging, and polluting corporations as long as they make money. I thought I too was saddened and angered by the injustice, violence, pain and war I read on the daily news. But that can't be, since I'm a conservative, and therefore, an imperialist might-makes-right war hawk. I thought I was capable of seeing both sides of many arguments. But that can't be, since I'm a conservative and consequently too narrow-minded and uptight to even hear what other people have to say.

Maybe I can make things a bit easier – no need for apology if I just switch sides, right? I'll try your way of things: everything is okay, and everybody is okay. No right, no wrong, things just are. Hey, you know what? This ain't bad. It was a lot of work previously to field a new issue or idea, see what my core beliefs might have to say about it, and then formulate an opinion. I don't know how I did it. It's much easier just to say that everything's great. No fuss! Not having to think never felt so good. I'm enlightened.

I'm so glad you were willing to help me expand my intellectual horizons. They're so expansive now that I guess I'll change my tune, lest I be that dissenting conservative voice in the arena of public discourse. Dissension is so un-American.

With a dying hope in the possibility of fruitful dialogue with people we don't agree with,

Waiken Wong

P.S. You're right, abstinence is not a reasonable option for being sexually responsible. Self-control could never amount to anything beneficial.

Waiken Wong is a UMass graduate student.

The Study of a RIOT
aka Riotology

Ri•ot n. 1.a noisy, violent public disorder. 2.disturbance of the public peace. 3.a profuse out pouring or display

PHOTOS BY GERALD R. LIMO

WHAT ELEMENTS SPARK THIS PHENOMENON?

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

It's 12 a.m. on a Monday, and 6,000 people choke the sidewalks in Southwest. The scent of beer and smoke fills the air, as a mob chants in unison for their beloved Boston Red Sox.

Toilet paper streams through the air, the flames tailing off pieces of two-ply as they land in a nearby tree. Beer pours down on the crowd from a dorm room above, splashing crowd surfers and women flashing their chests to thousands of men. A lit firecracker flies through the air, landing on a cluster of students.

Then it happens. Up on the roof of the Berkshire Dining Commons, a large stumbling male makes a cartoonish motion like he is going to jump off the building. The crowd sees it and responds.

"Jump! Jump! Jump!" they chant.

The man hesitates, but regains his courage and leaps. Onlookers some 15 to 20 feet underneath him scatter, and the man's legs fold underneath him as he crumples to the sidewalk. Several friends carry him away.

Daniel Dickson of East Longmeadow, Mass., or the "DC jumper," as he has come to be known, was the only person charged in connection with the Oct. 6 gathering, despite numerous fires set and several trespassers on the DC roof. The gathering, however, was the second of three major disturbances in a week, including a full-scale riot the night of Oct. 4 that included the flipping of two cars and over $20,000 in damage to Berkshire DC. All followed a win for the Red Sox. At least eight students have been charged with crimes, including serious charges such as inciting a riot and assault and battery with a deadly weapon.

What makes people act this way? Experts have conflicting opinions, and the reasons they give are numerous and complicated. One thing rings true with nearly all of them, though. Right or wrong, rioting has become a part of our culture.

Why riot?

Violent outbursts like the incidents in Southwest last week are nothing new, according to Todd Crosset, a sociologist and professor of sports studies at the University of Massachusetts. They follow a long, scripted tradition, he said.

"It's a masculine cultural product," he said. "It's part of the mentality that comes to us from mob lynching. They were big community affairs where people did violence."

Crosset's assertion that riots at UMass are driven by young, white males echoes studies done across the nation. The Ohio State University Task Force on Preventing Celebratory Riots, developed in response to the last large riot at OSU in 2002, said in their final report that active participants in celebratory riots "are nearly all white, young adult males with a large crowd of onlookers who are predominantly white, young adults of both sexes."

At least seven of the eight arrested in connection with disturbances at UMass last week were male. Racial statistics on them were not available.

Crosset compared following Red Sox baseball with listening to hard rock music.

"It's white. It's male. It's hostile," he said. "It's all a part of our culture. We look for ways to feel alive. As white folks, we don't have enough love; we don't have enough rituals."

One of those rituals, Crosset said, is watching the Red Sox.

"There's this attraction and repulsion to sports. The more you watch, the more cynical and hostile people get," he said.

Thanks to their inability to win a World Series, that hostility is at a greater level for Sox fans than nearly any others. There's been no payoff, he said, and the hostility level continues to rise.

Patrick Archbald, deputy police chief for the UMass police department, said it is tough to predict when these problems will occur.

"They start out as celebratory and pride-infused events," he said.

"It only takes a small contingent to act in a destructive way, and a group mentality takes over."

And that small, destructive group has a "selfish disregard for other people," he said.

After many of the students drifted away from the mass of people on the nights of the disturbances, Archbald said the chanting for the Red Sox and Yankees stopped, but the behavior of the students left escalated.

"It wasn't about baseball anymore. That's one of the things that indicated to me that the

Continued on page 7

Mraz casually serenades Calvin

By Michael Busack
Collegian Staff

It has become sort of an American staple these days, the wistful young pop symbol fighting his way up the charts with solely an acoustic guitar and a dream. But in the sea of Dave Matthews Band and Jack Johnson replicas emerging, one man has been offering a breath of fresh air.

Jason Mraz
Calvin Theater
Northampton
Oct. 9

Jason Mraz considers himself a California native via Mechanicsville, Va. After doing a brief stint in New York City at the famed American Musical and Dramatic Academy where he studied musical theatre, Mraz found a love for the acoustic guitar. Instantly connected to the unmarked instrument, Mraz began to perform on Manhattan streets and in the renowned Strawberry Fields.

Now 27 years old and with a great deal of experience under his belt, Mraz finds himself on top of the world. Having toured with the likes of Bob Dylan and John Mayer while his debut album "Waiting for My Rocket to Come" has been all over the charts, Mraz shows no sign of braking.

Currently he is leading his own tour with bands such as Steadman and Johnny Lang. On Thursday, Oct. 9, I had the pleasure to sit down with Mr. Mraz before his show at Northampton's Calvin Theatre. His demeanor was surprisingly far more casual than expected considering he is a man that is played daily on radio and television stations across the world.

The fact that seemed pervasive on Mraz's mind throughout the interview's entirety was the immediate urge to rest from touring. Having completed nearly 200 dates in the past year, Jason and crew desperately wish to take some time off soon.

"Life on tour is a blur," he said. "Whether it is a bus or a plane or a car, you are constantly surrounded by B.O. and B.S. looking out a window."

"I think I just want to go get a place that's real quiet and rent a cat for a month or something," he added.

As for the long-term future, the self-proclaimed "curbside prophet" is intent on touring again in the spring while beginning the recording of his new album. Although there weren't many concrete details about the new effort, listeners should definitely not expect as much of the Dave Matthews- and John Mayer-friendly tunes regardless of the fact that all the artists share producer Dave Algia.

"I have 1,000 ideas running through my head for the new album. It all comes down to four different themes that I am working on," he said. "Now I just have to decide which scheme seems most prevalent right now and make a good album out of it, but regardless they all have a lot to do with love and relationships."

Mraz and drummer Toca Rivera wind back around the United States until they plan to break for a month around Christmas time.

"Until then it is the same long road in and out of cities, but the crowds have been great and I still really enjoy myself out there."

Jack Black rocks in new heartfelt comedy

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Jack Black is no doubt an acquired taste. There are those who love Black's human tornado routine, and they'll be tickled pink by seeing him take on the role of a wannabe rocker turned substitute teacher in Richard Linklater's clever "School of Rock." But the strange and wonderful thing about this funny, witty and heartfelt comedy is that even those who can't stand Black's bellowing, astringent style of comedy will find themselves amused by his antics here.

"School of Rock" is the kind of movie that's positioned to launch Black onto the A-list, and the comedian makes the most of his newfound springboard. Having been stuck in far too many half-assed comedies to count ("Saving Silverman"), Black summons all the head banging wit and bravado he can to deliver the kind of fully fleshed out, unsung performance that is too often ignored by award-makers because of the fact that it serves a broad comedy rather than a straight drama.

'School of Rock'
Directed by Richard Linklater
Starring Jack Black, Joan Cusack
Paramount
Rated PG-13
109 mins.
Grade B+

"School of Rock" is also a solid demonstration of what can be accomplished when some sharp indie-land talent is allowed to establish their eccentric acumen in a Hollywood studio film. "Dazed and Confused" and "Before Sunrise" established Linklater's cred, while screenwriter and co-star Mike White wrote and appeared in "Chuck and Buck," "The Good Girl" and "Orange County." It's a hip resume for what is ostensibly a family film, and that's a good thing, because the creativity helps "School of Rock" transcend its rather dubious origins.

Dewey Finn (Black) is an aspiring rock guitarist who bows down at the altar of AC/DC, and earnestly believes that he can serve society by rocking out. But his endless guitar solos and stage diving antics have made him an embarrassment to his band, a group of talentless hacks who vote Dewey out of the band. After being nagged into getting a job by his timid roommate's (White) irksome girlfriend (Sarah Silverman) to pay for his half of the rent, Dewey gets a call — or rather his roommate gets a call. Dewey poses as his friend and becomes a substitute teacher at the posh Horace Green Preparatory School.

Dewey would rather give the kids an all-day recess than teach, but when he hears the young prodigies in music class, he hits on an idea. He recruits them for a "class project" called Rock Band, with plans to enlist them in a battle of the bands contest against his former band mates.

Yes, "School of Rock" is predictable, and it's not a realistic movie. But it's not a movie aiming for realism or mold-breaking. It's a movie aiming for revitalizing a tired genre by introducing an actual element of entertainment in it, and on that level it succeeds. This is one of the most immensely quotable comedies to come down the turnpike in a long while, and there are some truly witty, laugh-out-loud moments in the movie – a rarity in most mainstream comedies if you think about it.

Surprisingly, Black shares an easy rapport with the kids in the movie, and the genuine sense of kinship between the two parties is one of the best things in the movie; it is, at least, the sweetest thing in the movie. The young actors – none of them professionals, many of them blessed with actual musical talent – are a joy to watch, because they are never cloyingly, tooth-rottingly cute, as many child stars tend to be. They strike the perfect balance of wide-eyed innocence and the youthful knowingness of the young.

Joan Cusack, as the starchy Horace Green principal, adds more layers to her character than expected; there's a little glint of mischief lurking behind her stick in the mud exterior. But this is Black's show, and he owns the role. Black can get laughs just by flexing his eyebrows and he's right on his collaborator's wavelength. Black already has his rocking out credentials (he's the more visible half of mock folk-metal duo Tenacious D) and he's absolutely believable as a man who believes, deep down, that he really was born to serve by rocking. Dewey Finn may be the inspiration for the jokes, but he is not ever a joke himself.

There's one aspect that does bother me about "School of Rock:" when Dewey lectures the class about "the Man," and then admonishes them for not being familiar with rock history, he's being "the Man" himself. It's the one uncomfortable, sour note in an otherwise great comedy that proves that more iconoclastic filmmakers should tackle the weary family genre.

COURTESY OF PARAMOUNT

Jack Black stars as a former rocker turned substitute teacher in Richard Linklater's "School of Rock."

The science, elements and prevention of different types of riots

Continued from page 6

mood in the crowd had changed."

Riots a problem nationwide

Despite the recent media frenzy surrounding UMass riots, they are neither new to the campus, nor isolated to the University of Massachusetts.

"It's not a culture that's specific to UMass," Archbald said.

On Oct. 6, there were Red Sox-related riots across the region, with cars flipped everywhere from Kenmore Square in Boston to Westfield State College, a small college a half-hour west of Springfield with about 3,500 students.

In fact, rumors circulated at Westfield State that state police on the scene in Westfield that night had to leave the scene to head for UMass.

The OSU task force report showed a steep increase in the number of campus/community disturbances across the United States not associated with protests between 1985 and 2002. Clemson University, Indiana University, the University of Connecticut and Pennsylvania State were among the 19 schools the report said experienced at least one celebratory riot in that timeframe.

Professor Roland Chilton, a sociologist and criminologist at UMass, said the reason for riots and disturbances all comes down to one thing: alcohol.

"Some studies suggest that students do not learn to drink and get drunk on campus, but come to school with bad drinking habits well established," he said. "To the extent that any sizable number of students drink to get drunk, we can expect recurrent bouts of violence."

A tough problem to solve

While law enforcement officials and academics alike acknowledge there are problems, no concrete solution to them has surfaced. Chilton and Crosset both see students taking responsibility in handling it as the best way.

"Perhaps the only hope for turning the situation around is for responsible faculty and students to stress the need for civility and to indicate in as many was as possible the stupidity of arson, assaults and property destruction as entertainment," Chilton said.

The Ohio State task force suggested a more pro-active point of view, but it is too early to tell yet if actions they may have taken will make a difference. Their campaign plan included steps for potentially instilling pride in students, promoting safety and health and preventing illegal behavior. The University of New Hampshire also took steps to eliminate rioting by holding public forums, including one last month that included UMass representatives in attendance, according to the Foster's Daily Democrat newspaper.

Until things change though, police will be left to deal with the situations as they come. Archbald thinks UMPD is up to that task.

"We have a very experienced command staff and have worked with the students through takeovers, protests, the sort of things happening in Southwest," he said. "But it's a young population, and they're tough to read sometimes."

Archbald said police always have to be aware to step in only at the right time in a mass celebration situation.

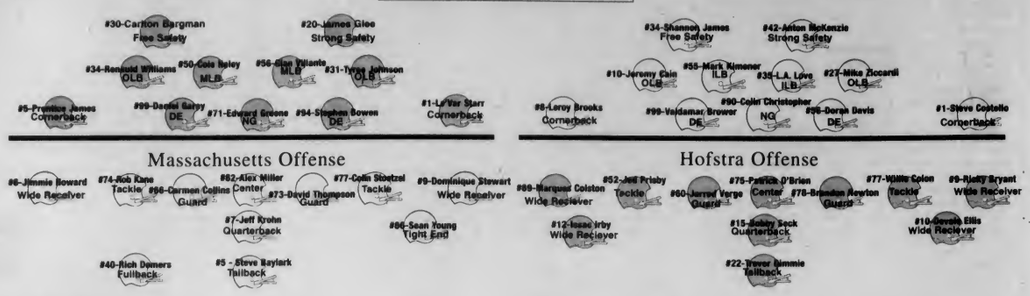
"If the police step into the celebration, it can turn very ugly, very fast," he said. "We've tried to walk that line very finely."

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Lavender Paraffin hand dip for $6!)
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
70 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Panda East 熊貓
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*QCMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: Amherst: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPECIALIST VERTICAL TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS • UMASS



PLAY QB1
Game Room - Delicious Menu - Live Bands
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
FRIDAYS
FREE PIZZA
3-5PM
Coors LIGHT
Pitcher Special
$6.50
All Month
Saturday Nights
KARAOKE
10-1am No Cover

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5. Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Seven's
Rt. 116 | Sunderland, MA
(413) 665 - 8788
Next to Cliffside Apartments
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE CONTEST EVERY SUNDAY
2 for 1 Rails
Open Mic Night
Every Thursday
WEEKLY PITCHER SPECIALS

Multiband POPS
29th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA
Presented by: Department of
Music & Dance
University of Massachusetts Amherst
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17
8 pm • Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets:
General Public: $18 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18: $12
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (413) 545-2511
Multiband Pops is Co-sponsored by:
WFCR 88.5

Massachusetts
Vs.
Hofstra
Saturday 12:30 p.m.
Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium

UM faces Pride in non-league game

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Hofstra and Massachusetts will play the oddest game of the season Saturday. The Minutemen host the Pride at McGuirk Alumni Stadium for UMass' Homecoming celebration, and while Hofstra will be playing a conference game, the Minutemen will not. Each A-10 team has a "miss" this season – one team that it will not play because of the conference's scheduling format. So while the Maroon and White play for bragging rights and little else, the Pride will be playing for its conference record.

The Minutemen's undefeated confence record will stay intact, while the Pride has a chance to improve on its 1-3 A-10 mark. It would be more than a long shot for Hofstra to reinsert itself into the A-10 race, with no less than three undefeated teams topping the standings heading into the weekend.

Massachusetts put two players on the weekly honors list for the Atlantic 10 after its 24-14 defeat of William & Mary. UMass Lowell transfer Rich Demers earned co-Offensive Player of the Week honors with Rhode Island's Wendell Williams, who ran up 243 all-purpose yards on 11 touches last week against Villanova. Demers notched two touchdowns against the Tribe, each on 1-yard runs, and scored for the fourth consecutive game.

Punter Christian Koegel earned the Rookie of the Week award for his best effort of the season – 45 yards per punt, three downed inside the 20-yard line, with a booming 54-yarder (his longest) as well.

Notebook

So close, yet so far away

Rhode Island had a chance to upset the No. 3 Villanova Wildcats Saturday, and in fact held a lead for much of the game. Up 17-14 with under a minute to go, the Rams only had to hold the Wildcats off a little longer to complete the victory, but Villanova's Joe Casamento threw to Troy Butler and John Dieser for a combined 55 yards, setting up Casamento's 1-yard keeper that gave 'Nova the 21-17 win.

Rhody held Villanova to 385 yards of total offense, a season-low for the Wildcats, and intercepted Casamento five times for 45 yards, but couldn't hold the A-10's leading passer (246.8 yards per game) in the final minutes.

Waiting Game

Maine is currently second in the A-10 with a 3-1 record (4-2 overall). But it took seven weeks for the Black Bears to notch their first home win over an Atlantic 10 foe, a 20-10 victory over Richmond on Oct. 4. With a bye last week, Maine has played just one game since its loss to UMass on Sept. 20, thanks in part to the cancelled game against William & Mary scheduled on Sept. 27. The Black Bears hit the turf for the first time in 14 days Saturday – albeit not their own – when they visit Northeastern.

Milestone for Keeler

Delaware's K.C. Keeler became the second-fastest man to reach 100 wins among active I-AA coaches with the Blue Hens' 22-21 squeaker over New Hampshire. Keeler's crew clawed out of a 21-3 hole to top the Wildcats in a stunning finish that saw UNH kicker Connor McCormick's kick float just wide of the right goalpost with four ticks left on the clock. The Hens host Rhode Island Saturday in search of No. 101 for Keeler.

Dog Days

The preseason pick to run away with the conference continued to struggle last week. Northeastern's loss to Hofstra was its third in as many games, the first time the Huskies have lost three straight since 2000. While it would take a minor miracle (and a big winning streak), NU still has an outside shot at postseason play, sitting on a 2-2 conference record (4-3 overall). But the Huskies will have to start posting Ws this week, and they'll host the well-rested Maine Black Bears on Saturday.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Wine:

Beer:		Liquor:
Harpoon 2/12 pk btl...$19.99*	Canyon Road Chard, Cab, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Bushmills 1 liter...$22.99
Coors Light 30 pk cans...$18.49*	Jacobs Creek Reserve Chard, Cab, Shiraz 750 ml...$9.99	Jagermeister 1 liter...$19.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Casa Lapostolle Chard, Cab, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99	Bacardi Rums All Flavors 1 liter...$15.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Beaulieu Vineyards Costal Chard, Cab, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99	Seagram's Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$14.99
Corona 12 pk btl...$9.99*	Inglenook Chablis, Blush 4.0 lt...$6.99	Jim Bean 750 ml...$11.99
Molson 12 pk btl...$8.99*	Santa Carolina All Flavors 1.5 lt...$6.99	Rubinoff Vodka All Flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99
	Freixenet Carta Nevada Brut, Semi dry 750 ml...$5.99
	Nathanson Creek Chard, Cab, Merlot 750 ml...$3.99

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 10/16 THROUGH 10/22

The 2004 Japan Exchange and Teaching Program

Teach English in junior and senior high schools in Japan
Learn about Japanese culture and people
Gain international experience

Requirements
- Have an excellent command of the English language
- Obtain a bachelor's degree by July 1, 2004
- Be a U.S. citizen
- Be willing to relocate to Japan for one year

Applications are now available. The deadline for applying is December 5, 2003.
For more information and an application contact the Consulate General of Japan in Boston, Federal Reserve Plaza, 14th Floor, 600 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, MA 02210. Call (617) 973-9772 ext 122 or 1-800-INFO-JET or email: japan@jiac.net. The application can also be found at www.embjapan.org.

Red Sox vs. Yankees

Have you prayed recently?

Check out Mercyhouse (it's a church!)

www.knowmercy.com

$$ HIPPODROME $$

Coming Soon!
Rain Entertainment Complex

- Bartenders
- Cocktail Servers
- Lighting Tech
- Cashier, Video Tech
- Door Security
- Floor Staff
- Barbacks
- Coat Checkers
- Floor Staff Dancers
- Disc Jockey

Apply In Person Only
Dates: October 14 - 16 from 3 - 8:00pm
Place: 10 Storm Square - Downtown Springfield - formerly the HOT CLUB www.hdiome.com

Rejuvenate
WITH OUR FALL SPECIAL

Restore the fullness and shine and replenish the moisture to your hair with our patented Color Touch conditioning treatment...that lasts four to six weeks...a $50 value

~ AND ~

Sooth your dry hands with our Citrus & Aloe Paraffin treatment...a $20 value

ALL FOR ONLY $30 a $70 value
including FREE all-nutrient hand & body lotion!

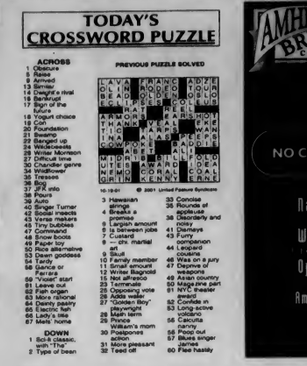
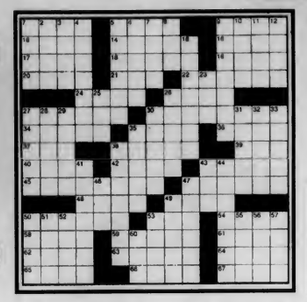
PATRICK & Company
Open Tues. thru Fri., 9:30-7:00
Sat., 9:30-4:30
102 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley • 586-7477



Quote for the Day



"In three words I can sum up everything I've learned about life: It goes on."

-Robert Frost

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Brazillian Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 37

FRIDAY
- High: 58
- Low: 39

SATURDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 36

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood/ Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Katie Dwan/ Oliver Chong

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
People always try to screw you, but you deserve it.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Screw over someone else. They deserve it, not you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Annoy someone at work today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't walk around with a target on your back.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Go to a museum. You're severely lacking culture.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
All your friends are coupled, and you're all alone. Haha.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are stuck. Try to work your way free from your boring life.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Forget your financial problems and stay put. People need you here.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
That friendly flirtation in the office should turn to something more.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You freak out way too easily. Take a deep breath, think, and then freak.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It's not worth the time. Leave it.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Things didn't work out for you yesterday. Today will be much better.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'Hero' Biologic Warrior who Deliberately Slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'Winning' the War. Style: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. Author: AC graduate, many past productions Venue/Actors: your choice Contact: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Offices, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

Auto for Sale

1995 Honda Accord Standard 125K Excellent Condition $4800.00 253-2740 Evenings

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon AC/Power 17,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1998 Volvo V70 AWD Wagon Turbo Auto 130,000 Miles Loaded $10,000/OBO 253-0733

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

For Sale

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or (413)253-0051.

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience Call Gina 253-0619

Services

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker, and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office can help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial 508-221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w/ sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sox force Game 7

Boston evens series, Martinez to face Clemens in decisive matchup

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – The resilient Boston Red Sox rallied just in time.

Trailing by two runs and nine outs from ending their season, they rebounded with a three-run seventh inning to beat the New York Yankees 9-6 Wednesday and set up a whopper of a Game 7.

David Ortiz tied it with a run-scoring single and Johnny Damon drove in the go-ahead run with a bases-loaded walk in the seventh inning that tied the AL championship series.

Red Sox	9
Yankees	6

That brings the series down to one game Thursday night, and it has all the makings of a classic: Roger Clemens versus Pedro Martinez, the central characters who set off fireworks and fights during Game 3 at Fenway Park.

Slumping Nomar Garciaparra had four hits, including a wind-blown triple that started the three-run seventh and atoned for an earlier error. Jason Varitek hit a third-inning homer off starter Andy Pettitte, and Trot Nixon added a two-run shot in the ninth off Gabe White as the Red Sox beat up New York for 16 hits and moved within one win of their first trip to the World Series since 1986.

New York and Boston will play for the 26th time Thursday – the most meetings ever between two teams in a season. It marks the first time the championship series in both leagues will go a full seven games in the same season.

Homers by Jason Giambi and Jorge Posada, and a two-run double by Alfonso Soriano staked New York to a 6-4 lead. But reliever Jose Contreras couldn't hold it.

A swirling 25 mph wind floated napkins across the field all game, and the conditions made it difficult for fielders on both teams, spinning line drives into twisting gappers.

"It's all over the place," Giambi said after batting practice.

Boston, the top offense in the major leagues during the regular season, had been hitting just .230 in the playoffs and hadn't scored more than five runs in 10 postseason games. But the Red Sox remembered back to the first round, when they fell behind Oakland 0-2 before winning three in a row to advance.

Contreras relieved Pettitte to start the sixth and struck out the side, but his pitches got up in the seventh and he wound up the loser.

Garciaparra, who didn't get his first postseason RBI until Tuesday, hit a deep drive to center leading off the inning, and the ball gusted over Bernie Williams for a triple. Garciaparra came home when the wind sent left fielder Hideki Matsui's throw to third sailing on a hop into the seats for an error.

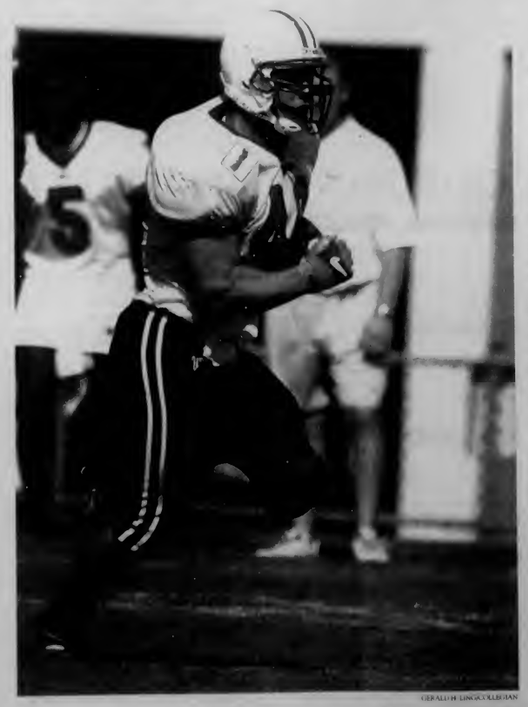
Manny Ramirez hit a similar shot over Williams for a double, took third on a wild pitch and scored the tying run when Ortiz smashed a single off first base. Felix Heredia relieved with one out and two on, threw a wild pitch that moved up the runners, then threw a called third strike past Nixon.

After an intentional walk to Varitek, Heredia walked Damon on four pitches – two of them close – forcing in the go-ahead run. Heredia then fanned Todd Walker.

Alan Embree, who struck out Giambi to help escape a big jam in the fifth, got the win. Scott Williamson, Boston's sixth pitcher, got three outs for his third save of the series.

Following the Game 3 fights at Fenway Park, security was increased as the series returned to Yankee Stadium. Two dozen police officers were in Monument Park, behind the bullpens, at start of the game. Fans greeted Ramirez, a central party in Saturday's confrontations, with the loudest boos.

Giambi's first postseason homer for the Yankees, the third of his career, put New York ahead in the first.



Pettitte breezed through two innings but got in trouble in the third, when Varitek led off with a long homer to left – his fourth of the postseason.

A walk to Damon and a single by Walker put two men on for Garciaparra, who grounded to the hole at shortstop. But Derek Jeter made a fine backhanded pickup and threw to third for the force. Pettitte then walked Ramirez on four pitches and Ortiz lined a single just over a leaping Jeter, driving in two runs. Kevin Millar lofted a soft single to center for 4-1 lead.

JOHN TODD/MLB.COM

Pedro Martinez will be on the mound for the Red Sox when they take the field at Yankee Stadium for Game 7 of the ALCS tonight. The Red Sox beat the Yankees 9-6 in Game 6 Wednesday night.

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

A-10 Offensive Player of the Week Rich Demers and the Minutemen will face Hofstra this Saturday for homecoming. Kickoff is slated for 12:30 p.m. at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

A matter of Pride

UM seeks revenge in matchup with Hofstra

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts football team takes the field at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Saturday to face Hofstra, it will be exactly 11 months to the day since it happened.

With 13 seconds remaining in a game which UMass was trailing 31-28 in a driving snowstorm, true freshman quarterback Tim Day, playing in place of an injured Jeff Krohn, had no timeouts and was faced with a second-and-five from the five yard line, and he did the unthinkable.

He got sacked.

It is a play that will forever live in infamy here in the Pioneer Valley. The Maroon and White, who needed to win the game and then defeat conference doormat URI on the following Saturday to win a share of the A-10 and qualify for the I-AA playoffs, were eliminated that very instant, and have had 11 long, painful months to think about it.

So when Hofstra visits Amherst as part of homecoming weekend, in what will be a league contest for the Pride but not for UMass, there's no question what will be on the minds of coach Mark Whipple's squad.

Revenge.

"We remember what Hofstra did to us last year," Whipple said. "They kept us from going where we wanted to go, so that's a game that gets circled on the schedule.

"They're a team that we've struggled with over the last few years. They've just been the better team."

Indeed the Pride (1-5 1-3 A-10) has been quite successful against UMass (5-1 4-0 A-10) over the years, posting a 5-1 record in the two squads six all-time meetings. In five of the six games, it was the visiting team that was victorious, as Hofstra has also gone undefeated in four games at McGuirk Stadium, and have not lost to UMass since the Maroon and White's National Championship season of 1998.

"They're never easy to play, because you know they'll show up," Whipple said. "They're well coached and always play well against us."

For the Minutemen, their 5-1 start is their best since 1992 — a season which saw them go 7-1 before finishing at 7-3. A big reason for UMass' success throughout the first half of their schedule has been the play of tailback Steve Baylark and fullback Rich Demers, both in their first years in Amherst.

Demers, the A-10 Offensive Player of the Week and Dinn Brothers/UMass co-Athlete of the Week, carried the ball 26 times for 171 yards and two touchdowns in a win over William & Mary last Saturday, and has chipped in with 263 yards on 38 carries for the season, along with two touchdowns.

"Demers is a player who's really shown us a lot in practice," Whipple said. "It just seems like when he touches the ball, good things happen.

Baylark has been equally as impressive in rushing for 100 yards in four of UMass' six games this season, including gaining 146 and 125 yards in games with James Madison and New Hampshire, respectively. Both efforts earned the rookie A-10 Offensive Player of the Week honors.

The running game has become even more critical to UMass' success after a hamstring injury to leading reciever Jason Peebler in last Saturday's win over W&M. The junior is listed as active on the depth chart, but Whipple fears he may not be back.

"Peebler hurt his hamstring, and we may not have him for a few weeks," he said.

"We have to see how he feels."

The Pride is led offensively by a very talented pair of receivers in 6-foot-4 Marques Colston and Ohio State transfer Ricky Bryant. The former victimized the Minutemen for the game-winning touchdown catch in last season's aforementioned heartbreaker, and has 17 catches for 265 yards and a pair of scores. Bryant has also had a strong season, posting 20 catches for 385 yards and a touchdown, while senior Isaac Irby has caught a team-high 24 balls for 293 yards and a touchdown.

Another weapon on offense for Hofstra will be tailback Trevor Dimmie. The senior has carried the ball 76 times for 332 yards and five touchdowns, despite taking handoffs from three different quarterbacks, including Marshall-transfer Bobby Seck, who will be under center for the Pride despite suffering a broken hand in the early season.

On the other side of the ball, Hofstra is led by senior linebacker and Buck Buchanan Award candidate Renauld Williams, who has recorded 54 tackles and two sacks on the season.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 32

Police look for clues in SOM theft

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department is still searching for clues on the theft of over $10,000 dollars worth of computer equipment last weekend from the Isenberg School of Management.

The stolen merchandise is valued at $12,100, including five laptop computers and their carrying cases. As a result, police have increased patrols of campus academic areas.

Many of the missing laptops contained professional data needed for courses that are in session. According to SOM Dean Dennis Hanno, at least five University professors will be affected by the loss, and some are left with little hope to recover much of their previous work. The thefts are also problematic for professors conducting classes where the computers were utilized for instruction.

"We know that there was a lot of work on these computers," said Patrick Archbald, deputy chief of UMPD. "[SOM] won't have a full evaluation of what was backed up or not for sometime."

According to Archbald, an unnamed employee in the SOM building arrived at the scene of the crime at 9:41 a.m. Saturday and reported her observations to a co-worker, who then contacted UMPD. The thefts are suspected to have taken place at about 3 p.m. last Friday after University employees presumably went away for the holiday weekend.

A door handle and its lock mechanism were possibly damaged by a large screwdriver or crowbar, Archbald said.

In addition to the damaged entry, the department is aware of at least one office for which a key was used to enter. The department has information that a key was stolen along with the computers, and because of this, SOM is changing the locks on the doors, Archbald said.

The department was able to recover three fingerprints, each appearing to be recent, from one of the doors to an office in which some of the equipment was stored. Archbald said police are not ruling out the possibility that there could be more than one suspect involved with the thefts.

According to Archbald, police patrols of the areas have been increased by 15 percent.

"If we [normally] have six or seven officers on a shift, we may put two additional officers in that area," he said.

Despite the incident, Archbald said he hasn't noticed an increased trend in campus larcenies.

"I think this is an isolated incident," he said. "Given my experience here, nothing has alarmed me."

According to Archbald, larceny cases are not uncommon for the University during long weekends and extended vacations.

"It seems to be an opportunity for some," he said. "There's definitely a connection, but I can't say that I'm seeing anything more in particular than any other semester.

"It's the crime of opportunity," Archbald said.

Hanno met with members of faculty this week to discuss preventative measures against costly thefts in the future. He is investigating possible changes in procedure and proposed an increased vigilance for faculty members to prevent further losses.

Last spring, University

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
UGLY BATTLE
KIDS NEED UNDERSTANDING IN BRYANT CASE
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
TALK ABOUT SEX
COMEDIANS TO GRACE BOWKER
SPORTS
PAGE 10
YANKS WIN
BOONE'S SHOT WINS ALCS
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 9

Faculty Senate meets interim president

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Interim President of the University of Massachusetts Jack M. Wilson addresses the Faculty Senate for the first time yesterday. At the meeting he touched on university funding, the University's image, and using racial factors in admissions decisions.

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate met yesterday afternoon introduced the school's interim president, Jack Wilson, who is replacing former President William Bulger after his recent resignation.

Bulger left the University after pressure to resign from Governor Mitt Romney and other lawmakers, due to his relationship with his brother James 'Whitey' Bulger, a ringleader of a South Boston organized crime ring. Wilson was serving as vice president for Academic Affairs when he was appointed.

The interim president touched upon several issues, including receiving financial support from the state government, attempting to fix a tarnished post-riot image of UMass, as well as the updated admissions policy regarding race.

Wilson regarded the current attitude of lawmakers towards the importance of funding the University as good.

"One of the things I was struck by was the level of support we're getting," Wilson said.

"[When] I spoke to senate president Travelinni, I was starting to tell the story of why the University was important and he started telling it for me."

He also said that even in the face of the state's $1.9 billion deficit, that the University contracts must be funded.

"The contracts are out there, deserve to be funded, and need to be funded," he said.

When asked by a Senate member how the University can reverse the bad image it has received from the press in recent months, and especially this past week, Wilson said receiving more funding is a solution. He explained that if the University receives more funding, either publicly or privately, it sends a message to people outside the school that the institution is worthy of the money and is therefore still reputable.

Wilson mentioned that UMass Amherst has already teamed up with Baystate Medical Center, resulting in a public-private partnership. Baystate provided funding for full and part-time faculty members to the School of Nursing, while School of Nursing provided Baystate's Staff Development Department by offering classes that prepare nurses in their role of mentoring new nurses, as a part of the partnership.

"We need to show this to the public," he said.

When asked by the new president of the graduate student body, Jose Perez, whether he believed that racism still exists on campus and how he was dealing with the minority position on campus, he began his answer by saying that he believes racism does still exist.

"I believe there's still racism," he said, "and we need to have programs to deal with that."

He then talked about the U.S. Supreme Court's recent decision in the case versus the University of Michigan, which ruled that the University could not award points to applicants based on race or have racial quotas. He said UMass would obey the court order, but that race would still be used in admissions as part of a "holistic approach."

At the end of Wilson's question and answer session, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Michael Gargano, said that Family Day, Oct. 4 was an enormous success due to a record attendance. He announced there would be two additional Family Days held this semester, the next day being October 25.

Wilson has worked in higher education for 34 years. His curriculum vitae includes jobs held at the University of Maryland and the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Some of his positions included professor of physics, engineering science, information technology and management and Dean of Undergraduate Education and Professional and Continuing Education at RPI. He was a professor of physics at the University of Maryland for eight years.

Palestinians arrest seven armed men

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

JEBALIYA REFUGEE CAMP, Gaza Strip (AP) — Palestinian authorities began making arrests yesterday in a deadly attack on a U.S. diplomatic convoy, detaining seven militants from a rogue group that includes former members of the Palestinian security forces.

Palestinian police briefly exchanged fire with militants in two of the raids, security officials said. The arrests came as an FBI team arrived in the region to lead the investigation into Wednesday's bombing, which killed three American security guards and wounded a fourth.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Paul Patin said the FBI team had begun an "open-ended" investigation. He said he did not have details of the probe, but added, "I'd imagine it might involve going to the site." American investigators were forced to flee the scene of the bombing Wednesday after being attacked by stone throwers.

The suspects arrested Thursday are members of the Popular Resistance Committees, a group of dozens of armed men from various factions, many former members of the security forces and disgruntled followers of Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement.

A Palestinian source said none of the suspects had been in the security forces Arafat controls, but the group's links to the security forces could prove embarrassing to Arafat.

Israeli officials said the group, formed after the outbreak of Israeli-Palestinian fighting three years ago, has ties to the Lebanese guerrilla group Hezbollah. The Palestinian group has blown up three Israeli tanks with massive remote-controlled bombs in the past two years — the same technique used in Wednesday's attack. No Palestinian group has claimed responsibility for the bombing, the first deadly attack targeting Americans in the Palestinian areas. The bombing was likely to increase U.S. pressure on the Palestinian leadership to move against militants.

Speaking to Israel Radio, Arafat security adviser Jibril Rajoub promised a thorough investigation. "I am 100 percent sure that we will be able in the coming days to reach who planned and carried out this attack," he said.

In an apparent nod to the United States, Arafat placed all

Continued on page 3

Media Critic talks about Boston media, raising his child

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

Boston Phoenix media critic Dan Kennedy told a crowd of about 50 people yesterday about his professional life and his new book, where he describes raising his daughter.

Journalism Professor Steve Simurda introduced Kennedy as the media critic for the Boston Phoenix before turning to Kennedy and asking what people called him.

"Dan," Kennedy replied. The laughter that followed set the tone for much of the discussion, which Simurda began by asking Kennedy what his thoughts were on the alleged liberal bias of the press.

"I think that the notion is pretty much dead wrong," Kennedy said.

He pointed out that 99 percent of people working at elite mainstream media outlets are liberal in a broad, cultural sense but that when it comes to economics and foreign policy the mainstream media is conservative.

"It's more of a cultural bias," Kennedy said.

Kennedy added that the mainstream media are "completely reactive."

"There is importance in being reactive; ... to reacting pretty quickly to what's going on," he said.

When asked if there was a place in the media market for an outlet that was proactive, he said, "To be proactive you have to invest a lot of resources in an era where media owners don't like to invest a lot of resources."

Simurda asked Kennedy to speak about the media environment in Boston. Kennedy started by explaining how the Boston Herald is going through financial difficulties and how that could affect the media scene in the city.

"The Boston Globe, whether you love it or hate it, is one of the great metropolitan newspapers," Kennedy said. "The Boston Herald is very much a local newspaper."

"I think it's important that Boston remain a two-daily-paper town," he said. Kennedy explained that having two papers gives readers a choice and forces each paper to hold tightly to ethical and journalistic standards. The Herald often has "three or four stories that the Globe doesn't have," he said.

"The most valid criticism I've heard is that media critics are grossly underpaid," Kennedy said when asked about the criticism he has heard.

When the laughter died down, he continued.

Kennedy said that the media is, in some ways, as good as they've ever been, but that major news organizations are owned by a handful of conglomerates.

"I think this is dangerous," he said.

Being owned by major companies is one way that the media loses its independence, he said, pointing out that this weekend is the 10-year anniversary of the Globe being sold to the New York Times Corporation.

The reactive and corporate stances of the media are "the two biggest issues the media face today," Kennedy said.

But Kennedy also criticized the media's coverage of politics.

"I think that the media's failure to expose the Republican's lying about [Al] Gore's inventing the Internet," he said. "When you look at how close that election was, Gore probably would have won."

That comment led to one student asking what the media's role is in determining a political candidate's viability in an election. Kennedy said that the media look at fundraising results and a candidate's stand on issues, but that it really comes down to "who do you invite to debates?"

"I don't think it's sufficient to stand back and treat everyone on the ballot evenly," he said, adding that he also didn't think that coverage should be as uneven as it is.

Kennedy said anyone who could get on the ballot in an election should have coverage and be invited to debate, not just those that are most likely to be the big contenders.

The talk, running a little over an hour, wound down with a discussion of the use of anonymous sources. According to Kennedy, more journalists are being held accountable for their actions than ever before. Recent events in the journalism world have made the use of unnamed sources widely unaccepted.

"I think in the long run it would do more harm than good," Kennedy said about whether or not journalists should reveal the names of their sources.

If they did reveal their sources, "It would be hard to get anyone to talk to them," he said.

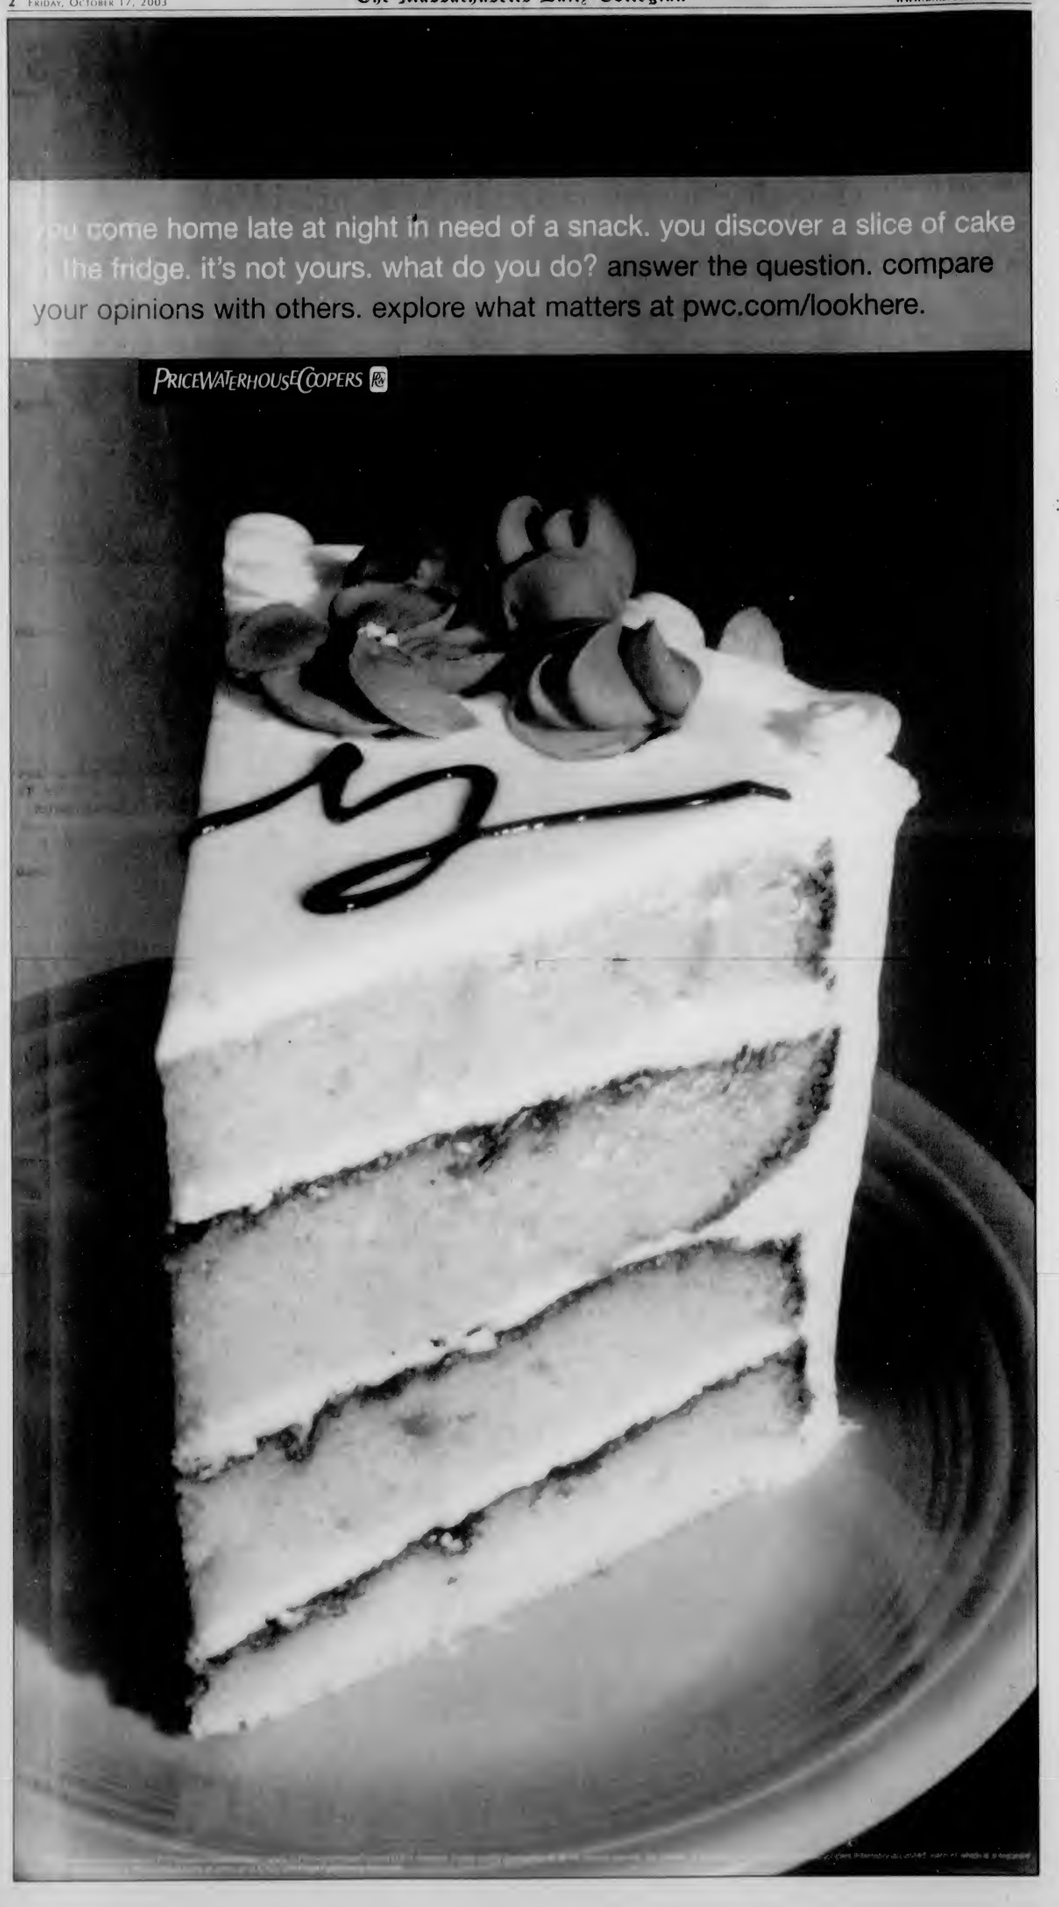
Later yesterday afternoon, Kennedy held a book reading and discussion of his recently published book: "Little People: Learning to See the World Through My Daughter's Eyes."

A small but interested group attended the reading, where Kennedy discussed his reasons for writing memoirs. His interest in the subject of dwarfism came after the birth of his daughter, Rebecca, who is now 11. Kennedy became active in Little People of America (LPA), and then became the editor of the organization's Web site, (lpaonline.org).

An online magazine wrote up the organization and Kennedy was quoted. Not long after, he was contacted by an agent, who asked if he had ever considered writing a book on his experience. He lied and said yes.

According to Kennedy, he wanted this book to be a discussion about difference today. The book uses the personal story of his family — and the stories of other dwarfs — to talk about cultural issues, and to discuss the disability rights movement as compared to the civil rights movement.

On the Net:
www.dankennedy.net.



DANIEL CLEAVER/COLLEGIAN

Dan Kennedy, the Boston Phoenix media critic, spoke to students and faculty on the state of the media yesterday. Kennedy was on campus to promote his recently published fmily memoir.

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markansonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Stgeub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Erika Lovley
News Editor Ferron Saltiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquet
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsey Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PA security tightens grip on terrorists nine Palestinian security units in the Gaza Strip under a single commander, Maj. Gen. Abdel Razek Majaidie. The United States has demanded reforms in the Palestinian Authority — especially in the security forces — and a crackdown on militant groups.

Continued from page 1

Palestinians often accuse the United States of siding with Israel, but officials are careful not to cross the line of open hostility to Washington. Arafat and Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia condemned Wednesday's bombing.

"It's clear that it is very serious and dangerous, not only against Americans, but against all Palestinians," Arafat said Thursday.

The attack could lead to a further U.S. disengagement from the conflict and deter the international community from sending large numbers of monitors — a long-standing Palestinian request.

Also Thursday, Israeli forces backed by 50 armored vehicles raided another section of the Rafah refugee camp on the Gaza-Egypt border in search of weapons-smuggling tunnels. It was the third army raid of a Rafah neighborhood in a week.

A member of the Palestinian security forces and a man identified by local people as a gunman were killed, and 13 people were wounded in sporadic exchanges of fire, hospital officials said. Two minors were among those hurt. Israel also announced the arrest of a member of the Palestinian Coast Guard who allegedly smuggled weapons into Gaza from Egypt.

In Wednesday's attack in Gaza, assailants detonated a remote-controlled bomb packed with dozens of pounds of explosives on the main north-south highway in Gaza.

The three Americans killed were identified as John Branchizio, 36; Mark T. Parson, 31; and John Martin Linde Jr., 30. They had been hired through a contract with DynCorp, a Virginia-based security firm. A fourth guard was treated in Gaza and transferred to an Israeli hospital.

fingerprints recovered

Continued from page 1

employee Daniel Hunt was arraigned on 12 charges of breaking and entering after an eight-month investigation by the UMPD Detective Bureau and UMPD line officers. Hunt was charged with 12 charges each of breaking and entering, receiving stolen property and stealing from a building. According to Archbald, the thefts totaled in excess of $100,000.

Among the items stolen were microscopes, calipers, a camera lens, a micrometer and scales that were housed in multiple academic buildings, including the Graduate Research Center, Morrill Science Center, Hasbrouck Lab, Chenoweth Lab and the Goodell building.

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What do you think of the Columbus Day controversy?"

sophomore
Undeclared

"The fact is that Columbus Day represents the takeover of a culture, and that is something that should not be celebrated."
Angelina Skowronski

junior
Sociology major

"I don't think that it should be celebrated, Columbus doesn't deserve his own holiday."
Meg Adams

senior
Sociology major

"It shouldn't be a holiday because it celebrates something that's unjust."
Abby Seaman

senior
Sociology major

"I think people should focus their energies on more pertinent problems in society."
Esther Danzig

senior
Political Science major

"I think it's interesting that some states don't celebrate it."
George Sotiropoulos

junior
History major

"I think people blow it out of proportion. It's an important part of our history that should be recognized."
Eric Michaud

Belgian Waffles with Strawberries & Whipped Cream * Nova Scotia Lox * Vegan Omelettes * Chili Rellenos * Multigrain Pancakes *Build-Your-Own Omelettes * Soy Sausage *Vegan Pancakes * Potato Latkes * Homefries *

NICK'S
For the morning after...
Open for Breakfast
63 MAIN STREET
AMHERST
Mon-Fri 6:30-2
Sat & Sun 7-2
OCMP accepted

20% STUDENT DISCOUNT FOR THE FALL SEMESTER

*Homemade Cheese Blintzes * Homemade Maple Pork Sausage * Huevos Rancheros * Vegan French Toast * Tofu Veggie Scrambles *

WOMEN ROCK THE ROAD

LIVE AT THE BLUE WALL PUB
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18TH
8:00 PM
FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Three Women of musical vision and style hit the road. Virtuoso jazz vibraphonist and composer Lalo, pop-rock chaneuse and singer-songwriter Kyler, and gospel-tinged songstress Laura Berman present an unforgettable evening of song, groove and collaboration as sisters in music.

The Blue Wall Pub is located on the ground floor of the Campus Center Complex in the Blue Wall Eatery on the UMass Campus. Parking is free in all surface lots. All are welcome.

THE WOMEN ROCK WORLD TOUR HAS COME TOGETHER IN ORDER TO RAISE BREAST CANCER AWARENESS IN COLLEGE STUDENTS AROUND THE COUNTRY.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kobe Bryant legal battle growing ugly

As the preliminary hearing in the Kobe Bryant sexual assault case came to a close this week, nearly all of what is wrong with American society was exposed.

The hearings featured smear campaigns from both sides, with Bryant's defense team painting the woman involved in the case as sexually promiscuous and not worthy of the court's trust, and the woman's legal team portraying Bryant as an arrogant athletic superstar willing to force himself on an innocent young woman.

Prosecutors accused Bryant's defense team Tuesday of smearing the woman's reputation in an attempt to discredit the charges against Bryant. They said Pamela Mackey, Bryant's attorney, made a "deliberate and calculated" attempt to get testimony on evidence that is irrelevant this early in the case.

"What was even more unexpected was her conscious misrepresentation of the evidence in order to smear the victim publicly," the Associated Press reported prosecutor Ingrid Bakke wrote in a court filing. "The bell cannot be unrung. It will be difficult enough to overcome Ms. Mackey's misstatement of the facts."

While sad, the way the Bryant case has played out so far is entirely predictable, and should it go to trial, it stands to only get worse. In terms of TV coverage, media sensationalism and hostility in the courtroom, a Bryant rape trial could stand as the most dramatic legal case in the United States since O.J. Simpson stood trial for murder in 1996. With the stakes that high, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian sees an "anything-will-go" mentality developing on both sides of the case, and believe that in trial, that mentality would only worsen.

The prosecution has told the Associated Press they used only one witness, Eagle County Detective Dough Winters, because they did not see it as necessary to use more and did not want to lay their entire case out now. While that is common practice for prosecutors, it means only that the situation will continue to escalate as a trial potentially begins and progresses.

With Bryant, such a high-profile figure adored by so many fans and children, his rape case has the potential to harm millions of children watching, listening and reading the news every night. This does not change that justice needs to be carried out and a verdict needs to be reached, but it does mean that America needs to take an active role in educating children who have questions about what they are hearing and seeing.

Nearly all of us have school-aged children in our lives. Maybe they're little brothers and sisters, maybe they're kids we babysit, or maybe they're our neighbors when we go home on weekends and vacations. Whatever the case is, we need to take an active role in making sure that any questions they have are answered, and any confusion that develops is cleared up.

The Collegian encourages University of Massachusetts students to play an active role in making sure that children are not harmed by the onslaught of terminology and accusations they will hear as the Kobe Bryant case plays out over potentially, the next year or so.

A hero has fallen, brought back to earth by at the very least, very poor judgment. With the admiration that Bryant had from thousands of youth across the country, each and every one of us needs to make sure that America's youths understand what is happening, educated in a responsible manner so that Bryant's mishap does not become one of society at large.

Information from the Associated Press was used in the writing of this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A vision of progress

Eduardo Bustamante

I've had a vision: every UMass undergraduate should put $100 into a pot each year. With 30,000 idealistic voices and a $3 million pot, the students at UMass could have the kind of power students had during the Civil Rights Movement.

Think it's realistic? What if students were getting a raw deal? How raw, you ask?

Let's say the focus of UMass shifted from serving the taxpayers that fund it to ballooning the bank accounts and prestige of its upper level officials. And as a consequence, UMass was increasingly becoming more exclusive and less supportive for students.

Let's say, strictly hypothetically of course, that UMass had lost 900 of its 1,600 teachers over the last 13 years and that the priority of the remaining teachers was not teaching but research, and so, Teaching Assistants taught an unacceptable number of classes. Say that total charges for in-state students shot up 27.4 percent in two years, even though during that period no increases were made in tuition or state taxes.

In the quest for profit, say the acceptance rates of out-of-state students are steadily increased for no other reason than they pay $8000 a year more than in-state students. Say the average family income in Massachusetts is between $30,000 and $40,000 a year and that the average UMass student's family income was between $70,000 and $80,000 a year.

Say that some students had to pay upwards of $600 a semester on textbooks and could only sell them back for one-tenth what they paid for them. Say the administration forced freshmen and sophomores to pay $1,000 a year to eat meat I hear is marked 'Grade D, but Edible.' Say students paid three times what faculty and staff pays for parking stickers even though some student lots are unpaved and a mile away from the center of campus.

Not enough?

Let's say that a search committee looking for the next UMass President only appointed one student. Say this student had to represent not just the flagship campus of Amherst, which the student does not even attend, but all of the UMass campuses.

Say the parking meters at UMass had the equivalent in cost to parking on Ocean Drive on Miami Beach: 25 cents for 15 minutes. Say students are charged extra for classes with mandatory OIT access, are forced to use Auxiliary Services for food if they want food at their events, are charged for phone service in dorms and to use space in the CC/SUC buildings that were built with student money. And more importantly, say most students couldn't get into the classes they want.

Say the veteran faculty told you that when they were UMass students, professors were their mentors and the environment was much more nurturing to students. Despite this, the priority of the administration has been to spend millions of dollars on beautifying the landscape and putting up new buildings to increase the school's real estate value.

A façade of diversity is shown to the public, but internally, a culture and climate supportive of diversity does not exist. Say the most recent President was once the largest opponent to desegregation of Boston public schools, had mob ties, and had been accused of extortion. While student bank accounts were sucked dry, this same President received a $1 million severance package with a $300,000 annual pension for retiring in the face of public scrutiny.

Let's say that a few years back the school bought software from Peoplesoft (makers of SPIRE). The administration knew before they bought it that the big seven mid-west universities had written an open letter explaining that it had massive problems.

Nevertheless, say UMass signed a contract with a company whose product was primarily known for massive data loss and phenomenal cost overruns. The UMass contract was strange; it gave Peoplesoft a percentage of the university's annual income on top of other costs. It indemnified Peoplesoft of any discrepancy between the promises made in the sales pitch for the product and the products actual performance, and it said that if UMass wanted to cut the service it would have to remove all software from every computer within only 30 days.

It is possible that it has that the nature of this contract had to do with conflicts of interest. PricewaterhouseCoopers was the consultant for the university on distance learning. The CEO for PricewaterhouseCoopers was on the UMass Business Advisory Board. And Pricewaterhouse-Coopers was an 'implementation partner' for Peoplesoft, with other auditing/consulting companies, including Ernst & Young who was fined by the SEC for pushing Peoplesoft on its corporate customers.

The appeal of this product was that it was supposed to make all computers network without mainframes. Unfortunately, what we have seen happen is massive data loss and system crashes. UMass had to buy new mainframes anyway.

Between training everyone to use the system, installing it on every computer across the state, lost time, lost financial info, and dealing with its mishaps, this may have cost UMass $3 to 4 hundred million. Yet, we constantly hear that we can't afford support services because the budget is so tight. UMRON?

Let's just say classes were so large that students are paying up to $80,000 and attending four years of classes, and at no point are they reached out to on a personal level by a professor. Most undergraduates will never have faculty or staff mentors. Most UMass graduates leave with degrees, a knack for filling in bubbles, a ton of debt, and not a clue what to do with themselves. Say you walked around Amherst, and you looked into the disappointed eyes of UMass graduates working at Dunkin' Donuts, temporary agencies, and grocery stores.

Still not convinced?

What if everywhere you turned you saw upper level officials expressing their desire to make more money by enlarging the school, accepting more out-of-state students, and raising fees? In short, what if (again, hypothetically) the students of the one major university in the Commonwealth dedicated to lower-middle class families were being squeezed for every last penny through fees, and that the priority of those that directed millions of dollars of student money was not the students?

If that were the case, would my vision be more realistic? Could there be a union for students? Could we defend our school and win? Could we inform the public? Could we hire lawyers? Boycott?

Students should be the first priority of this University. Not a single qualified student should ever have to leave UMass because he or she can't afford it. Not a single student should go through four years without a professor taking a personal interest in him or her. Not a single student should graduate UMass without an array of options for their post-graduate life.

It's a raw deal, and I can't swallow it just writing columns. I need something with more teeth. I hope that everyone who has ever read my columns finds what they are looking for.

If you are looking for what I'm looking for, I am easily found — eduardoebustamante@hotmail.com.

Eduardo Bustamante is a Collegian columnist.

How did 9/11 happen?

Jeffrey Napolitano

Since the atrocious events of Sept. 11, one would have hoped that the enormity of such a crime would have, at the very least, brought some understanding of its cause.

New York City's skyline was brutalized, Washington's symbol of military might was fractured, and yet another planeload of people was driven into the ground. Had one been told beforehand that such events would take place, the question "how" would surely have been brought up. If we were truly serious about such events never recurring, the causes behind the tragedy and how it was enabled would have been discussed and would be common knowledge. But that question, and that knowledge, while having been posed, has never been properly addressed by mainstream media or any political leader.

Although George Bush declared a "War on Terror," his administration never addressed the cause of the specific act of terrorism that inspired that very declaration. It was assumed immediately that Osama bin Laden and al-Qaeda were behind the acts, but one has to dig deep to find the reason they were blamed. How could the government be so confident that bin Laden and al-Qaeda were the perpetrators of this act of terrorism? Why was no evidence presented to either the U.S. public or the nations of the world?

Before the invasion of Afghanistan, the Taliban offered to prosecute, and later to extradite, bin Laden, if only some evidence was provided. The Bush administration adamantly refused to present any, forcing the Taliban to choose between becoming a lawless and public pawn of the U.S. or destruction. Soon after the occupation of Afghanistan, after failing to capture or kill bin Laden, the Bush administration, still failing to produce any evidence of bin Laden or al-Qaeda involvement in 9/11, insisted that Iraq was a hotbed of terrorism. The U.S. soon invaded — once again, without any evidence.

After all of this, two years after the fact, the origin of the 9/11 attacks still has yet to be addressed. Why is it generally understood that bin Laden and al-Qaeda were behind the attacks? How did they get so much power?

First of all, I agree that the assertion bin Laden and al-Qaeda were involved in the crimes of 9/11 is pretty reasonable. Given his prior statements and the composition of the group of terrorists involved, he was likely complicit in some form. However, no one can say for sure, because there simply is no evidence, and it is quite possible that all evidence of responsibility died with the suicides of the perpetrators.

The reason we know so much about al-Qaeda, and other similar radical Islamic terrorist groups, is because we used to employ them. During the late 1970's and 1980's, during the Cold War, Afghanistan was the center of the U.S./Soviet power struggle in the Middle East. The invasion of the country by the U.S.S.R. was not morally objectionable to the U.S., but the threat to U.S. dominance in the region was intolerable. We know that the invasion itself wasn't morally objectionable to its U.S. government because the U.S. response was perhaps more damaging than the invasion. This response: to import the most violent terrorists that could be found to Afghanistan.

The CIA, with White House approval, created a network of fanatical islamists, bin Laden being perhaps the most prominent among them, recruiting them from Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, and other Middle Eastern countries. After arming them, our government sent them into Afghanistan to, quite simply, cause as much damage as possible. The idea was the U.S.S.R. would have no choice but to withdraw, a strategy that worked quite well.

These violent terrorist groups, backed by the U.S. government, drove out the Soviets, with the side effect of absolutely destroying the country. And after the Soviets were driven out, the U.S. turned its back on the war-torn country, its dominance in the region once again assured, leaving native Afghanis to be subjugated by the terrorists left behind. if you read the newspapers and wonder where the "wariords" in Afghanistan come from, now you know — we funded them, we armed them, and we threw them into Afghanistan.

Some terrorist groups went on to bigger and better things than being warlords, and of this bin Laden is perhaps the best example. When Bush stands up and declares a "War on Terror," he neglects to mention the U.S. role in creating some of the worst terrorism in the world, and certainly neglects to mention U.S. support for the perpetrators of the greatest terrorist crime against the U.S. He and every other politician, most foreign policy critics, and shamefully, the public, never mention that the reason we have so much terrorism in the world today is because we have fostered much of it ourselves.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, the U.S. national security advisor who shared responsibility in importing terrorists into Afghanistan, summed up the sentiment of the U.S. government in a 1998 interview with "Le Nouvel Observateur," when asked if regretted supporting Islamic fundamentalism, giving arms and advice to future terrorists?"

Brzezinski replied, "What is most important to the history of the world? The Taliban or the collapse of the Soviet empire? Some stirred-up Muslims or the liberation of Central Europe and the end of the cold war?"

i doubt he would have given the same response in an interview after Sept. 2001, after the world witnessed what his "stirred-up Muslims" did in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania.

At the very least, we should all know how the terrible events in our country happened, how our own government enabled the perpetrators, and not be so ignorant of the origins of such violence. Sept. 11 was not the result of any maliciousness inherent in mainstream Islamic culture, but the result of seeds of hatred and fanaticism our own government planted in its support of al-Qaeda and other terrorist groups.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Friday. Interested in applying? Contact Paige Cram.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to Diet 101

Jen Hodson

A couple of weeks ago, I started my new diet. Yes that's right, a diet. How many of you out there are trying to lose weight right now? I know I am. I have turned myself into a health fanatic and exercise machine over the course of just a few weeks. Would you like to know how?

Well, in order to stay healthy and lose weight, one must eat well. This means not starving yourself at any cost. A lot of people think that if they starve themselves they will lose weight faster. This may be true, but it's not a wise idea. Once you start eating like a normal person you will gain the weight back, plus some. Your metabolism will slow down and hold on to any food that is put into your body. People are recommended to eat five small meals a day or three regular-sized meals a day, a tradition that I normally follow. They say that the daily calorie intake should not fall below 1200 calories for women and 1500 calories for men.

Alcohol consumption could be a big factor in losing weight.

So far I have been eating healthy breakfast meals such as cereal, fruit, yogurt, and breakfast bars. I watch the calories though, and of course, the fat. It's good if what you are eating contains a lot of dietary fiber in it as well. Fiber helps flush out your system. At lunchtime, usually a veggie wrap or salad is healthy to eat. Something with greens is good and you can even have a low calorie dressing. The dressing that I've been putting on my salad has zero calories, zero fat, and zero carbohydrates. Dinnertime is the best time to have protein, like chicken or fish. Add some vegetables or a salad and you're golden.

if you get hungry in between your meals and you absolutely can't wait until later, make sure you snack on things like fruits or veggies. Sometimes I have celery with peanut butter, which is a tasty snack. Drink lots of water, too. Water fills you up and is really good for your body. They say you should drink eight glasses of water per day.

You should also cut out things that aren't good for you. I cut out soda and snacks like chips, cookies, ice cream and other favorites. They all contain empty calories and are high in saturated fat. Another big thing to cut out is pasta. Carbohydrates are really bad to eat a lot of. The less carbs you eat, the better.

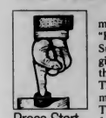
Protein shakes are good, too. Make sure the one you are drinking is a weight control shake, and that it has all the vitamins and nutrients you need. Last weekend, I started drinking them to replace my breakfast meals. My mother recommended it to me though, so make sure you don't get one that's a total bomb. Don't get one with high calories, fat, or carbohydrate intake. I drink one that has only 110 calories, and it fills me up until lunchtime, which is great for when I'm on the go. Never drink protein shakes, though, if you have already eaten. Only drink them to replace meals.

Eating is very important, but watching what you put in your body is only half the battle. The other half is exercising. Exercise is also known to increase confidence and self-esteem while aiding in the reduction of stress. Going to the gym, runhing, playing sports or being involved in activities that require good exercise is very important to your health as well. They say you should workout about three times a week. Spread out the physical activity during the week so you decrease the risk of related injuries as well. Go every other day instead of every day. I go to the gym about five to six days a week for about 50 minutes to an hour a day. Make sure that if you do go more than three times a week, you have at least one day off. It's not healthy to go to the gym everyday. Your body needs to rest.

I spoke to a trainer at my gym, and she was quite informative. She told me that when you're at the gym, do something you like. Don't force yourself to run if you don't like running. If you are dreading the gym, then you will most likely stop going. There are all kinds of machines that you can use to get the same effect. If you are trying to lose weight, it's unsafe to lose more than two pounds per week. Any more than that could result in gaining it back. She also told me that limiting alcohol consumption could be a big factor in losing weight. Although we are all college students and like to drink, she said to try and minimize it to one night per week. Any more than that is bad for your diet and your health.

If you're trying to diet like myself and you want to look and feel better, just remember these important words. A healthy body is a happy body.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New racing game soars full throttle into the lead of its genre

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

An old classic returned to the market when Nintendo revamped "F-Zero GX" for Gamecube. The Super Nintendo classic has been given a total face-lift to fit in with the rest of the 3-D gaming world. The levels are some of the most mind-blowing racing levels ever. The drivers are very animated in the full motion video sequences and the machines are well built.

The game gives users the chance to build their own race pod. As you compete and complete levels of story mode, you get credits towards purchasing parts to create your vehicles or to purchase new racers to use in the Grand Prix mode. You can also compete with up to four players in multiplayer challenge.

Making your own ship will require taking some time using the ships you have available to you and finishing the levels of Grand Prix. If you make a machine with the first parts available, you are going to take a serious beating from the computer. With every Grand Prix level you finish, you earn credits and usually a new part comes into the shop for purchasing. if you play enough you can finally have the best parts available.

'F-Zero Gx'
Gamecube
Publisher: Nintendo
Developer: Amusement Vision
Racing
Rating: T
Grade: B+

Creating a ship can be deceiving; each part is graded on how well they work. Just throwing three grade-A parts together doesn't mean you're winning any easy championships. it will take time to learn what parts work well together. it's a bit of a task, but sometimes you luck out and build a very good machine.

Another part that makes building a racer enjoyable is the ability to change color of the parts and creating you own decals. You can pimp out your car so even if you eat the dust of the computer, you can do it in style.

Story mode is the weak point of the structure. Every chapter beyond chapter 2 will require you to purchase the next chapter. Not only that, but you pay more per chapter as you advance in story mode. This is an easier task if you go through Grand Prix mode a bunch of times, buy parts and racers, then keep playing until you have a load of credits saved up to buy the chapters.

"F-Zero GX" also carries the 'frustration factor.' This means there's something that always seems to happen when you're winning the race or you are two boosts away from taking the lead. in "F- Zero GX" the problems include falling off course, which will happen a lot, and the computer characters are apparently indestructible. The easiest way to surpass this factor is by practicing the tracks over and over until you know where to turn, boost, and slow down. Also, figuring out the correct acceleration and maximum speed choice will be best for each specific course. Sometimes you will find that going too fast will just make you go off track every time.

Overall, "F-Zero GX" is a good game for fans of the older version, racing games, and those who like good multiplayer games. The wide variety of game play makes this updated classic one with plenty of replay value, and it also has the ability to save the data to your memory card to use in the upcoming arcade version.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

Laugh-out-loud comedy with a point

Love, sex and death all exposed in one evening at the Bowker

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

Do you find yourself worrying too much about life, love, sex, spirituality and death? if you do, then consider yourself among the majority of struggling individuals terrified of these things that leave us unable to sleep at night.

Laughing out loud
Bowker
UMass
Oct. 18

But what if those daunting questions of whether or not he or she likes you, if your relationship is going anywhere, or even the most embarrassing taboo questions about sex and sexuality could be explored?

Tomorrow at Bowker Auditorium, critically acclaimed solo performance artist Stevie jay will present an evening of comedic counseling "Life, Love, Sex, Death...And other Works in Progress."

COURTESY STEVIEJAY.COM

Steviejay takes a humorous approach to all the little things that people stress over breaking taboos with comedy.

While sexuality has easily been categorized as being gay, straight, or bi-sexual there is an entire landscape of gray area that we cannot define. Can we label sexuality? Or must we first realize who we are and what we love?

"The show delves into the struggles we all go through as human beings, to live honestly and passionately — to love fearlessly, and to reach out to people we're attracted to, even when we're scared," said Steviejay about his work in a telephone interview with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

After five years of developing his monologues and soulful skits, Steviejay has created a solo performance that has been presented in London and Scotland and is now the stable of his tour of colleges and progressive venues around the country. Drawing on his life experiences, Steviejay has compiled uncensored, humorous stories, recognizing that serious issues can be discussed more effectively through the medium of comedy. He believes that his very own personal incidences compiled into a series of "Vagina Monologues" are meaningful, and realistic when performed this way.

"We are more relaxed in a humorous atmosphere making awkward themes become more fun and palatable," he said.

When asked Steviejay what drives him to this kind of work he said, "it is a blast to make people laugh and think outside the box at the same time. The show also throws the concept of sexual labeling out the window and I'm more than happy to provide that service for people! There is so much grief about sexual orientation nowadays — and what a psychic drain that is, distracting us from what really matters."

Steviejay said intimate relationships are difficult for all people — it's a universal struggle.

"As far as I'm concerned, the key question is not whether one loves a man or a woman, but whether one loves a human being, period. Love is love is love is love," he said.

COURTESY STEVIEJAY.COM

Marilyn Pittman has made a name for herself in the comedian community, with her unique style of stand up comedy. She will be taking the stage following the conclusion of Steviejay's performance.

Audience members have repeatedly told Steviejay that before seeing his play, they were concerned about their relationship and after watching the more than therapeutic performance, they felt as if a new door had been opened in there lives.

"Obviously there's something about this material that hits a nerve in people," he said. "The show cuts through all the ancestral shame and guilt we've inherited. In 90 minutes, you see one person who's funny, smart, awkward, confident, sexual, embarrassed, angry, scared, on and on. Through outrageous humor and naughtiness, the play offers a glimpse of accepting all parts of oneself — the good, the bad, and the ugly. And that's what has people returning to this show — they're experiencing their own long-lost love for themselves. i'm sure of this."

This emotional roller coaster is aimed at leaving students with a better understanding of not only themselves but the desires of all people as well. Although the material is generally suited for college-aged students, everyone can benefit from it.

"This is definitely a show for everyone, for people from all walks of life — all ages, sexual orientations, as it explores the universality of the human experience," Steviejay said.

"Laughing Out Loud" is hosted by The Stonewall Center and begins at 8 p.m. sharp with Steviejay. San Francisco stand-up comedian Marilyn Pittman follows. For more information be sure to check out Steviejay's website at http://www.steviejay3.com/. A visit to the website may be just the preparation one will need before going to Saturdays "multishakra extravaganza!"

Album is a very brief auditory assault on the eardrums

Daughters' new disk is 10 tracks and 11 minutes of classic grind glory

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

COURTESY ROBOTICEMPIRE.COM

Though this band may have no qualms about using dirty language in their music, they waste no time in cleaning up once the work is done.

I'm going to try to rush and finish this article by the time the Daughters album finishes. Okay so here we go. First off it's really fast ... um, what else? It makes me feel like I'm on speed. i kind of get dizzy, or at least think about being dizzy.

Daughters
'Canada Songs'
Robotic Empire

Oh! I think we're done with two or three songs already, I lost count. It seems that the drumming is really fast-paced, which doesn't necessarily mean good or incredible but they sure don't leave us enough room to contemplate it. Overstatement seems to be the name of the game ... it's pure aggression uninhibited and raw ... the disjointed guitars ... Damn it! Track five already. Scratch that idea.

How does a consumer approach an album that guarantees to run them about a buck per minute? A friend from Fiji could play the same listener the album 20 or so times over the phone at a better rate than buying the 10-song, 10-dollar, 11-minute album.

"Those had better be the best 11 minutes of my entire week," says a weary new owner of Daughters' "Canada Songs."

The hotly anticipated new Daughters full-length album does indeed accomplish a lot in those precious 11 minutes. Whether the net worth is justified remains to be seen. Like fellow noise-rockers Liars, Daughters is one of those anomalies whose grating musical sound is suitably titled with an absence of the word 'the,' leaving frustrated review editors to grind their teeth as the grammatical mishaps abound.

Daughters would like nothing better than to instigate that grind, as that is the name of the genre from which it was spurned. Grind emerged from overseas in the late 1980's as a safer alternative to hitting yourself in the face with a hammer.

It took the fluttered feedback frenzy of no-wave with the aggravated contempt of industrial noise and layered it atop speed metal. Lyric sheets often provided eloquent insight into the temper tantrums, but the overall incomprehensibility of the vocals made them unnecessary. When Napalm Death began churning out albums, they set the standard for heavy melodic music. In comparison, Slayer was transformed into Poison and Black Sabbath eroded into Kenny Loggins (and Jethro Tull still wasn't metal). Heavy music was dead.

However, in the spirit of one of the genre's most beloved topics, necrophilia, grindcore continued humping out agitated scowls. Then sometime in the 21st century, it almost became relevant again. Mathematicians like the Dillinger Escape Plan got into the game, making the frantic dirges John Zorn embraced once again acceptable for jazz fans. The Locust chainsawed its way in from San Francisco, trucking pal Kid606's penchant for playful, thoughtful song titling like "A Nice Tranquil Thumb (in Mouth)."

Daughters belongs in the same family as The Locust. It weaves similarly intricate webs of brief noise and employs the same maniacal humor to its creations. Daughters is only missing one crucial element that separated The Locust from the lots of hording screechers — moog synthesizer. As a result, Daughters has to try 10 times harder,

Continued on page 6

COURTESY ROBOTICEMPIRE.COM

Daughters is a band that wastes no time in getting their thoughts across with there music.

COURTESY UMASS AMHERST DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC & DANCE

Jazzin' it up

The members of the UMass Jazz Ensemble I, conducted by Professor Jeffery Holmes, will bring their own style of jazz to the 29th Annual Multiband Pops concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Hall. Other groups at the event will be the Chapel Jazz Ensemble, directed by David Sporny, the Minutemen Marching Band directed by George Parks, and The Marimba Ensemble directed by Thomas P. Hannum. Tickets are on sale through the Fine Arts Center Box Office and they are $12 for students and seniors and $18 for general admission. To contact the box office, call 413-545-2511.

Better live than recorded

Spearhead hits the mark at Pearl Street

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Michael Franti and his band, Spearhead, arrived at Pearl Street Tuesday night to a packed crowd of hardcore, anxious fans. Even before the band came out the audience began cheering and hollering. When Spearhead finally took the stage the crowd went wild and began bouncing and moving to the music. Some members of the audience were singing along and throwing their hands in the air with the tunes; others were just lost in a world of their own dancing.

Spearhead / Pearl Street / Northhampton / Oct. 14

Franti himself was jumping up and down and running across the stage nearly the entire show. Even when he was playing guitar, Franti was still very animated. The entire band was completely in control of the audience. No matter how many times Franti shouted, "how ya feeling Northampton," (which, for the record, was nearly every song) the crowd would scream back with the same amount of enthusiasm.

Pandering or not, Franti and the band brought a positive vibe and left no one unsatisfied.

The set list was a good mixture of old Spearhead favorites and tracks from the new release, "Everyone Deserves Music." The set allowed Spearhead to show off their eclectic style as the band bounced between hip-hop, reggae, and rock. Franti showed off his many talents as he rapped, sang, and played both electric and acoustic guitar while still managing to maintain the party atmosphere.

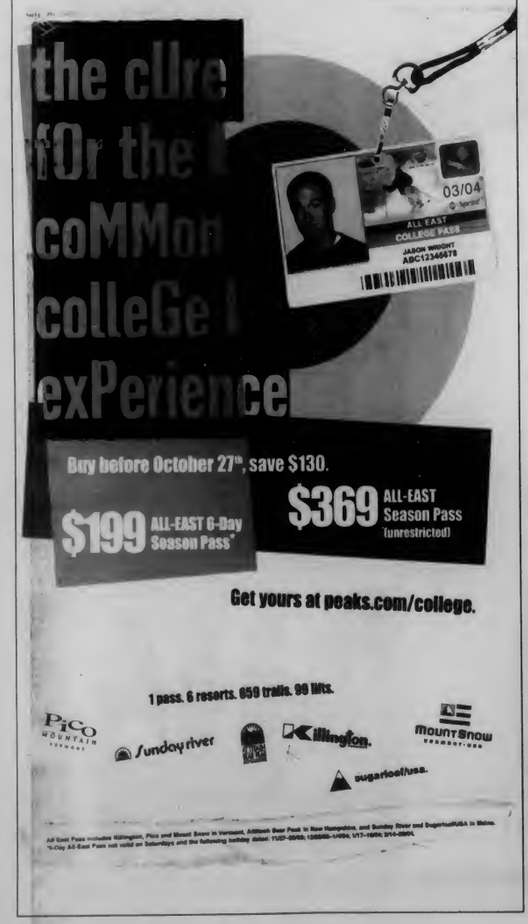
Franti also brought out guest artist, MC Radioactive who demonstrated his beatboxing and rapping skills, including freestyle that name-dropped the five colleges and the local nightclubs. He, along with the rest of the band, added background vocals and new elements to the songs, giving them more life on the albums. In fact, Franti and the band turned a lot of the songs into extended jams that showcased each individual musician's skills and personal style.

Spearhead, of course, brought politics into the mix. Midway through the show Franti slowed down a song and announced, "Cameras, videotapes ... mp3s ... it's all good with us," inciting a thunderous response from the crowd. During one of the centerpieces of the show, "Everyone Deserves Music," Franti stopped to make sure the crowd knew that, indeed, everyone deserved music. "Not just the rich folk, the poor folk deserve music too. Not just the menfolk, the womenfolk deserve music too ... not just the healthy folk; pill-poppers like Rush Limbaugh deserve music too," Franti said, again inciting a riotous cheer from the audience.

Spearhead is a multi-faceted and very talented band, though their records can sometimes fall a bit flat. Yet no one can deny that when Spearhead performs they truly do meet and exceed any expectations set by their albums sound. The band brings every song to life and inspires the crowd, filled with longtime fans and curious newcomers alike, to fully invest themselves in the music. Not only does everyone deserve music, but everyone also deserves to experience Spearhead live.

Nothing slow about Daughters' new grind album

Continued from page 5



Try. Oh lord, does Daughters try. With song titles like "I slept with the Daughters and all I got was this lousy song written about me" and "Pants, Meet Shit," Daughters certainly isn't your father's heavy music. That's not to say that this is a stupid band with a stupid name singing stupid songs with stupid titles, like "Anal Ct" for example. The band's grade school musings must be justly weighed with the lyrics to these actual songs. Once listeners delve deep into the heart of the album, it becomes clear that "Canada Songs" is an open forum on postmodernism.

Just look at the title. None of the tracks contained on "Canada Songs" are even remotely related to that maple-syrup guzzling nation up north. The titles allude to possible themes of the various pieces, but sometimes require heavy meditation to establish connections. Instead, the listener is treated to the darker side of absurdity. "They shaved off fourteen points for ugly/ they dumbed down the structure like some amputee" reads one set of lyrics from "I don't give a shit about wood, I'm not a chemist."

One could certainly make the case that grind was the appropriate avenue to convey one's opinions regarding postmodern thought. The words are literally useless symbols, since they are screamed in unintelligible spurts of calculated intensity. The lyrics sheets, while fascinating, are futile for one trying to follow along. I'm pretty sure that most of the time the vocalist (who, like the rest of Daughters, is not named in the liner notes, their website, or their interviews) is not even singing the written lyrics most of the time.

"Fur Beach" starts off the album in a dizzying and maniacal fury that evokes images of the most violent washing machine cycle in the history of mankind. The second tune "Jones from Indiana" does not let up for a second (or in Daughters time, a fourth of a second). It smacks your face up and down with no-wave guitars bending every which wrong way towards ahar monic perfection while that unknown vocalist busts out some fuzz effects to counteract the screaming fits.

It is hard to describe what goes on in a Daughters song because, for the most part, its gone before you even heard it happen. In a sense, the songs win you over with this confusion. There's little you can do after the draining tension mounts to a head, but savor that one-second pause before the next track and say to yourself, 'I don't know what the hell just happened, but it kicked my butt.' In the end, price margins may seem as absurd as the lyrics to "Nurse, would you please prep the patient for sexual doctor," but these are a terrific eleven minutes. And I don't think I could stand a twelfth minute.

McMurphy's
6th Annual
Kegs & Eggs
Homecoming Celebration
Saturday October 18th
Doors Open at 10 am NO COVER
Breakfast Buffet
Proof of Age Required

Amherst Brewing Company
Live Music
Karaoke
Cover Charge

Surging Minutewomen hit the road

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Lindsey Fairweather and the Minutewomen visit La Salle and Fordham this weekend.

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team continues to battle through the heart of its Atlantic 10 schedule. After breaking a six-game losing streak with a 3-1 win over Xavier this weekend, the Minutewomen look to continue their winning ways in an A-10 weekend doubleheader.

UMass travels to Philadelphia today for a 3 p.m. contest against the La Salle Explorers. Game two of the weekend road trip will feature a stop in The Bronx at 1 p.m. on Sunday afternoon for a game against the first place team in the A-10, the Fordham Rams.

The Explorers also ended a long losing streak this past weekend. But the winning drought for La Salle was slightly more severe than the UMass streak. After drawing 1-1 with Seton Hall on Aug. 29, the Explorers went on to drop nine straight games, including four conference games against Fordham, St. Bonaventure, Duquesne, and St. Joseph's, suffering six shutouts. La Salle finally ended the streak Sunday with a 4-0 shutout of the Temple Owls.

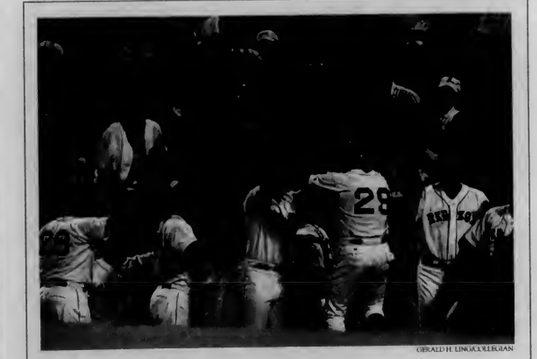
Against Temple, four different Explorers got on the scoreboard, the most points and scorers that La Salle has achieved all season. Among the players to score in the contest was Krista Lee, who scored the Explorers' first goal. Lee is the biggest threat in the Explorer battalion. Her four goals (eight points) put her atop the statistical charts.

Last year, as a freshman, La Salle goalkeeper Marisa Suarez faced some tough competition against experienced senior Kerry Schamberger for the starting spot. Suarez shined, playing in two fewer games than Schamberger, posting a 4-3-1 record as opposed to Schamberger's 5-5 record and began to show signs of improvement towards the end of the season.

This year, the Explorers have stuck with Suarez, starting her for eight out of the eleven games this season. Suarez has struggled, though, with a 1-6 record, 69 percent save percentage, and a 2.22 goals against average. Schamberger has racked up a 0-2 record, 76.9 save percentage, and a 1.86 GAA.

Fordham has yet to lose a conference game (4-0-1). Highlighting the Rams conference streak is an offensive explosion against Temple last weekend, a 7-0 blanking of the Owls. Fordham hasn't lost a game since Sept. 17, when it suffered a heart-breaking 4-3 loss to St. John's.

The Rams showcase a wide array of weapons in their arsenal. Arguably the most dangerous weapon is Sarah Hopkins. Hopkins leads the team in goal scoring (eight) and also leads in total points (18). Her stats rank fourth in the A-10 in points, fourth in points per game, and tied for second for goals. Corey Dunfey and Beth Purcell are Hopkins' sidekicks in the Rams offensive attack. Dunfey leads the team in assists (7), and is second on the team in points (15). Her seven assists rank her first in the A-10. She also leads in the conference in assists per game. Purcell has earned five assists this season while totaling 11 points. Purcell is second to Dunfey in assists and assists per game both for the Rams and conference-wide. 13 different Ram players have at least one point this season.



Shannon Misiaszek will be handling the net-minding responsibilities for Fordham. Misiaszek has put up decent number thus far, with an 8-3-1 record, .694 save percentage, and 1.23 GAA.

Sophomore Adair Blyler, Lindsey Bellini, and junior Lindsey Fairweather all tallied up points this past weekend. The triumvirate has generated the majority of the UMass offense this season. Whenever the Maroon and White hasn't been shut out, one member of the trio has scored.

Blyer leads the Minutewomen in scoring (six) as well as in points (14). Bellini, solid throughout her sophomore campaign, earning four assists and eight points. With the removal of her knee brace, Lindsey Fairweather has been looking much like her old self, as she climbs her way up the leader list with a total of eight points (four goals).

The Minutewomen will look to their defense to provide to shut down their A-10 opponents this weekend. Freshman Nadia Villarroel has taken on a leadership role. The Belmont native is a dominating force in the backfield for the Maroon and White.

Friday's starting goalkeeper has not yet been determined for the Maroon and White. After senior goalie Kelly Nigh went down hard in a sliding collision against Dayton, Kristen Rutland was thrust into the starting role. Rutland allowed one goal in the 1-0 loss. Nigh has put up a 3-5-1 record, .811 percent save percentage, and a 1.64 GAA. Nigh is the A-10 leader in saves, with 76 this season.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Wait til...

Gabe Kapler (29) returns to a joyous Red Sox dugout during Boston's 10-4 win over Tampa Bay on July 23. There will be no joy in the dugout until next year, after last night's ALCS final.

Wildcats show teeth

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts field hockey team came into Memorial Field in Durham, N.H. Wednesday night looking to continue its winning ways. But in the end, first-half mistakes spelled a 5-2 victory for the New Hampshire Wildcats.

UMass	3
Fordham	1

The loss drops UMass to 3-11 on the season, while the Wildcats move to 7-8.

The Minutewomen offense did, however, show signs of improvement, with goals coming from Adrianne Monaco and Robin Dziedzic. Coach Patty Shea expressed great approval of the improved offense.

"Without a doubt, there was a great improvement on offense tonight. I thought Caitlin Beresin was the most outstanding player on the field tonight," Shea said.

It was a back and forth battle between the Minutewomen and the Wildcats at the start, but it all changed quickly when White knocked in her first goal at 9:32, assisted by senior Jen Stamp. Four minutes later, White followed a convoy through the Minutewomen defense for her second of the night, assisted by Gillen. White found the back of the cage again at 19:10 for the hat trick, assisted by MacKenzie Stuart.

The Minutewomen struck back, however, when Dziedzic rattled one in, unassisted, through traffic, at 26:22. The comeback was quickly halted two minutes later, however, when Gillen pushed a rebound into the cage to round out the first half scoring.

"I don't know where my head was [in the first half]. I should have been a lot more aggressive," UMass goalie Christine Tocco said. Tocco finished the night with four saves, despite facing many two-on-one and open net situations early.

There were a lot of positive things to say about the second half, as the Minutewomen clearly picked up the slack.

"The second half was great," said Shea. "But we've got to come out and play like our second half in the first half ... we made a couple of mistakes early, and they capitalized that. We just can't dig a hole like we did."

Gillen scored again early in the second half, assisted by Sam Carr, but it was all UMass after that. Monaco racked a goal, unassisted, at 49:37 but the rally wasn't enough.

UMass heads out to Richmond, Va. Sunday at noon for the second leg of its four-game road trip, where the team will face the No. 14 Richmond Spiders (11-2, 2-0 Atlantic 10).

Shea is confident the momentum from New Hampshire will carry into this Sunday's conference matchup.

"We're getting better and better every game, and I think we're a much better team than last year. There's a lot of positive happening; they're doing a great job, they really are," she said.

The Minutewomen offense will face perhaps their toughest challenge all season long, against a Spider defense that hasn't let up a goal over its last three games, and has let up just two over the last 505:43.

The Spiders are led defensively by their outstanding goalie, sophomore and former A-10 rookie of the year Michelle Swartz. She has six shutouts in the last seven games, and ranks ninth nationally with a conference-best GAA of 1.05.

The impact of Swartz makes for yet another exciting goalie's duel with Tocco. While Tocco doesn't compare to Swartz in save percentage (.688, to Swartz's .774), she is miles ahead of Swartz in the saves column (121, to Swartz's 48). Nonetheless, it will be interesting matchup to watch.

Also to watch on defense for the Spiders is sophomore Allie Howard, who leads the team with 10 goals and eight assists for 28 points. Together with sophomore Michelle La Force and senior Lydia Decembrino, the Spiders defense is a force to be reckoned with. In their last match against A-10 opponent LaSalle, they did not allow one shot.

Offensively the Spiders will be led by freshman Inge Van Bogerijen, sophomore Whitney Wells, sophomore Emma Bradley, and sophomore Colleen Wevodeau. Together, the quartet has scored 18 goals and seven assists for 43 points. On the other side, the Minutewomen as a team have scored just 11 goals for the entire season.

The Minutewomen are winless on the road (0-7) thus far this season, and are 0-5 against Top 25 teams. Regardless, they are confident coming into Sunday's game.

"Obviously, I'm worried about all the other teams, but Richmond is going to be a good one," senior captain Kristin Hopwood said. "If we can beat Richmond, then we know we've come a long way since the beginning of the season."

Banner night for N.J.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Sergei Brylin scored with two seconds left in regulation and the New Jersey Devils salvaged a 2-2 tie with the Toronto Maple Leafs after raising their Stanley Cup championship banner Thursday night.

Jay Pandolfo also scored for New Jersey, and Martin Brodeur made 12 saves as the Devils remained unbeaten at 1-0-2.

Nik Antropov and Darcy Tucker scored second-period goals for the Maple Leafs. Ed Belfour finished with 31 saves.

Lightning 5, Coyotes 1

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Martin St. Louis and Jassen Cullimore scored 25 seconds apart in the second period as Tampa Bay spoiled Phoenix's bid for its first 4-0 start in franchise history.

St. Louis put the Lightning up 2-1 during a power play at 8:07. Cullimore made it a two-goal game, scoring from close range at 8:32.

Brad Lukowich scored his first goal in 71 games for Tampa Bay. His previous goal came in last year's season opener — against Florida.

Mike Johnson scored for Phoenix.

Blue Jackets 2, Blackhawks 1

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Rick Nash had a goal and an assist and Marc Denis stopped 30 shots as Columbus won its third straight game at Nationwide Arena — the best homestand in the team's four seasons.

Todd Marchant had a goal and Geoff Sanderson added two assists for the Blue Jackets, who are off to a 3-1-0 start.

Brett McLean scored his first NHL goal midway through the third period as Chicago lost its third straight.

Thrashers 0, Rangers 0

NEW YORK (AP) — Pasi Nurminen stopped 29 shots for Atlanta, and New York counterpart Mike Dunham turned aside 30.

It was the first scoreless tie in the five-season history of the Thrashers, who are off to their best start ever at 2-0-2. The four-game unbeaten streak matches a franchise high.

New York (0-2-1) became the last team in the Eastern Conference to earn a point in the standings. But the Rangers haven't scored in 157 minutes, 13 seconds.

Red Wings 3, Canucks 2

DETROIT (AP) — Ray Whitney broke a tie with 1:06 left, and Dominik Hasek made 36 saves as Detroit extended its winning streak to three games.

Whitney's backhander in the slot was his first goal with the Red Wings. He was signed as a free agent from Columbus in the off-season.

Detroit also got goals from Brendan Shanahan and Nicklas Lidstrom. Mathieu Schneider had two assists.

PLAY QB1
Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
Sports Bar & Restaurant
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
Fridays
FREE PIZZA
3-5PM
Coors Light
Pitcher Special
$6.50
All Month
NFL Sunday Ticket
Saturday Nights
KARAOKE
10-1am No Cover

Multiband POPS
29th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA
Presented by:
Department of Music & Dance
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Friday, October 17
8 pm • Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets:
General Public: $18 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18: $12
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (413) 545-2511
Multiband Pops is Co-sponsored by:
WHMP
Alumni Association
88.5fm WFCR.org

MIFA Massachusetts International Festival of the Arts fall festival 2003 fall festival 2003 fall fes
Cookin' at the Cookery
Music/Theatre
The music & times of legendary blues singer Alberta Hunter.
Featuring 16 classic songs including "Sweet Georgia Brown." Infectious and funny, with show-stopping singing. Now touring in Canada to rave reviews!
Thu. Fri. Sat. Oct 23 24 25 8pm
Academy of Music Northampton
Tickets $45, $35 800 [illegible]
A loving tribute to Hunter's extraordinary life and career. Her bold and sultry singing style bridged the gap between classic blues, hot jazz, and cabaret pop. She was the toast of American and European audiences from the 1920s to World War II. Then, after a 20 year career as a nurse, she launched a stellar comeback at The Cookery in New York's Greenwich Village at age 82! A dynamo of style, soul, and spirit!
Dance/Theatre
Odyssey
Homer's Odysseus encounters a women who envelop him in sensuous waves of dance, music, and song on his long journey home.
Wed Thu Fri Sat Oct 15 16 17 18 8pm
Mill 3 Theater at OpenSquare Holyoke
Tickets $40 800 [illegible]
Theatre
The Island
Athol Fugard play about 2 inmates on South Africa's most infamous prison, one a political activist, the other about to be released. Hope and despair are timeless themes of freedom and civil disobedience.
Thu Fri Sat Oct 16 17 18 8pm
Sat Sun Oct 18 19 2pm
Rookie Theatre Mt. Holyoke College S. Hadley
Tickets $25 800 [illegible]
Music & Dance
Rembetika
Irresistible rhythms, impassioned songs and vivid pictures of the Greek Blues, which inspired poets and agitated social change and the Greek hit songs and party, star folk dances forming the roots of Rembetika. Post performance Gyrodi celebration with food, wine, music & dancing.
Sun Oct 26 4pm Academy of Music Northampton
Tickets $4 800 [illegible]
www.mifafestival.org www.mifa
Daily Hampshire Gazette The Republican Advocate

UMASS
Weekend Schedule

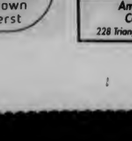
Friday, Oct. 17

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. La Salle	3:30 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at La Salle	3:00 p.m.

Saturday, Oct. 18

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. Hofstra	12:30 p.m.
Women's Swimming	at UConn	10:00 a.m.
Women's XCountry	at Albany Invite	12:00 p.m.
Ice Hockey	vs. St. Lawrence	7:00 p.m.
Men's Swimming	at Husky Invite	All Day

Sunday, Oct. 19



Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. Fordham	1:00 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at Fordham	1:00 p.m.
Field Hockey	at Richmond	12:00 p.m.

Through USAC, a consortium of U.S. universities, you can choose to study in Alicante, Bilbao, Madrid or San Sebastián, or at 26 other sites around the world. With 20 years of experience, you can be sure that you have someone to turn to throughout your educational adventures.

· Summer, semester & year-long programs
· Wide range of academic courses · Internships
· Language classes at all levels
· Field trips & tours
· Small classes
· University credit
· Scholarships · Housing

Spain
USAC
Your Gateway to the World

HALLOWEEN Extravaganza
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL YOUR HALLOWEEN NEEDS!
In the Hampshire Mall, near J.C. Penney.
Mention this ad and get 10% off your purchase with a Student ID!

7 jeans for all mankind.
8,844 guys.
9,032 girls.
2 parties tonight.
1 unique you.
ZAMA
downtown Amherst

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Lavender Paraffin hand dip for $6!)
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

Hockey takes next step

Continued from page 10

changes both on special teams and overall. Chris Capraro was seen as recently as Wednesday wearing an orange practice jersey, which would put him on a line with Greg Mauldin and Stephen Werner, no slouches themselves. Cahoon stressed that the Capraro move is simply a part of pre-conference season maneuvering.

"We're looking at it just as an option. I don't know if it's a perfect fit," Cahoon said. "We did it more to see how we could construct some other lines."

"I think you'll see the lineup change quite a bit over the next month, just because we need to see people playing with different people, and that's part of the process. With the dynamics of the team, there are still new players, and guys fulfilling different roles, so we're going to be making changes until we get comfortable, until we get the perfect fit."

Mauldin also played a cameo role at the point during a 4-on-3 power play against Lowell, and while the option worked out quite well last year, it was a non-factor on Saturday.

While special teams have thrived, the Minutemen have struggled in the first period this season, going more than a quarter of the period without submitting a shot against Connecticut, and being outskated for much of the opening stanza last week at Lowell.

"I think that's been a little bit of a problem since the beginning," Cahoon said, "guys have been fooling themselves in the sense that things are alright and moving forward, and 'we'll be OK when the games come' but the games become a lot more difficult when the practices aren't intense."

"I think by addressing the intensity in practice, we indirectly attack the issue of sustaining intensity in games."

While there's no rush, especially with another non-conference opponent (Holy Cross) on the way before his team begins the meat of the Hockey East slate, Cahoon won't depreciate the early season.

"We need to be a better team at the end of the year than we are at this time of year. We've got to be a better team in March than we are in November, and the motivation's got to be there to improve, so we can obtain that goal.

"These games that we're playing now are important on a couple of fronts. People are going to play themselves in and out of lineups and situations, and it sets the tone for having a good season, winning as many games as we're capable of winning, and hopefully creating an opportunity for us to be considered for the NCAA tournament."

Looking for a turnaround

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

After its most disappointing weekend of the season the Massachusetts men's soccer team is coming home, and looking for redemption.

The Maroon and White (7-4-1, 1-2-1 Atlantic 10), which had a seven-game unbeaten streak snapped last Friday against Xavier, will play A-10 foes La Salle and Fordham this weekend, in a series crucial to UMass's tournament seeding.

"We have to go back to business and get the job done that we need to do, which is qualify for the Atlantic 10 tournament. That's our only goal and only focus right now," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

The Minutemen will meet La Salle (3-6-3, 1-3-0 A-10) today in another game against an underdog opponent with its back against the wall.

The Explorers have had slow start to this season, and with three losses in the conference they'd need to turn things around quickly to qualify for the A-10 tournament. Their lack of offense has been their downfall thus far, averaging less than a goal a game.

"They have some good individuals and they have their backs against the wall so they are going to come to play," said Koch, "They know if they have a bad weekend their season is over."

LaSalle's best player has been their keeper, Stash Graham, last year's A-10 Defensive Player of the Year. Graham has maintained outstanding numbers in goal with a 1.25 goals against average. Although his effort has been stellar, his record reflects the lack of cohesion in LaSalle's offense.

Leading the way for the Explorers has been Tom Kenney, who leads the team in points with seven. Kenney single-handedly gave La Salle its first conference win of the season over St. Bonaventure, scoring the only two goals of the game.

The rest of the team has six goals between them for the season. But LaSalle has yet to win on the road this season, going 0-4-1. The Minutemen are happy to return to the comforts of Rudd Field.

"I think we're excited to play. We want to play and get back on the winning track. We're happy to be at home. I'd rather be at home then on the road," Koch said, "To be honest it doesn't matter where we play on Friday. We want to get back on the field and turn this around."

Fordham brings a very defense-minded team to Amherst this weekend, sporting one of the stingiest backfields in the A-10. The Rams have only let up 1.87 goals per game, but like La Salle has had its share of problems finding the back of the net.

Fordham (2-7-1, 1-3 A-10) only has two players with more than one goal on the season. Riad Mehovic and Patrick McNamee are the leading goal scorers on the season, with three and two respectively.

The reason for the offensive struggles may be related to the stacked backfield that the Rams use against their opponents. Fordham tends to play conservative soccer, waiting for opportunities, rather than attacking the goal.

"Fordham is very solid defensively. They play with nine guys behind the ball," Koch said, "They are hard to break down. They are going to sit back and defend and look for a counterattack. That's hard to play against."

The Rams are another team on the brink of elimination and will be high on emotion come Sunday. The Maroon and White will need to pick up its offense, which has been struggling recently.

Last weekend there was a lack of cohesion between the offense and defense, which caused the Minutemen to get swept in Ohio. Koch does not want the same inconsistency to remain or UMass may soon have its back against the wall.

"Obviously we got beat. We got beat by not being prepared to play on Friday … so now our team understands how hard it is to win with that bull's eye on your back. We don't have to worry about it now," Koch said.

Freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman has been sidelined since he suffered an ankle injury against George Washington. Koch remains guarded as to Billman's status for the weekend, but senior Colin Burns is a near lock to see at least some playing time.

"He's still injured. He trained yesterday," Koch said of Billman. "We'll see how he is today. Right now it's still touch and go," Koch said.

XC enters Albany free-for-all

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross-country teams will compete Saturday, along with 24 other teams at the Albany Cross Country Invitational.

The number of teams attending the invitational has gone up considerably from last year. The increased size is due to the Northeast Conference Championships being held at Albany this year. As a result, a sizeable number of teams in that conference will compete to get an idea of the course.

Middlebury, New Hampshire, Albany, and Binghamton are among the strongest women's teams at the invitational. Middlebury and New Hampshire should produce quite a duel, as both have had great programs in the past few years. Binghamton, the team that defeated UMass in come-from-behind fashion in the second half of the race, should make its mark as well.

Women's coach Julie LaFreniere is confident about the race. While her squad is hitting mid-season form, she's still nervous about this weekend's race, which has the chance to become a free-for-all.

"The team is really starting to gel," LaFreniere said. "What I worry about when it's that many runners together are things like people tripping, or incidents like the last meet where [senior] Tricia [Silva's] shoe was pulled off in the beginning of the race. She made an incredible comeback, but it only takes one incident like that."

LaFreniere also has high hopes for junior Lauren Donohue.

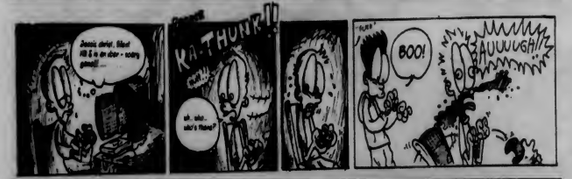
"Lauren's been looking much better," she said. "She's starting to look very different in her races and workouts, much stronger. I'm looking forward to seeing what she can do."

For the men's teams, Syracuse looks to be near the top, as their lead runner is the defending champion for this meet. Marist, the defending team champion for the meet, looks to be in the top three as well, and a good match for Syracuse. New Hampshire also looks strong, as it placed well in the New England championships even with several runners sitting out due to injuries.

Albany also poses a threat for the UMass men. The Maroon and White placed fifth last year, with Albany outpacing it by a ten-point margin, and that's one of the few things coach Ken O'Brien would like to see change this year.

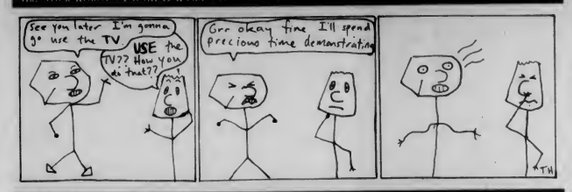
"It would be tough for us to crack that top three, but I'd like to see us narrow the gap there was between New Hampshire, Syracuse and us last year at this meet," O'Brien said.

O'Brien poses that as a goal, and also hopes to improve on the team's performance from last week.

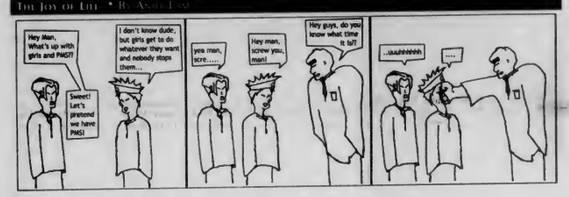


"I was a little disappointed, but I chalked it up to a lack of experience. I'd like to see if the kids learned from that experience within the last seven days," said O'Brien.

He likes the meet for its competitiveness, its placement in the schedule (two weeks before Atlantic 10 championships), and its size. With 25 teams competing, it's a bigger meet that serves as excellent preparation for the A-10 and NCAA championships.

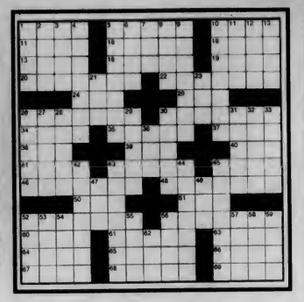


O'Brien thinks the team's performance last year at the meet can be duplicated on Saturday, even though the field will be significantly tougher.



"Instead of having a lot of our scorers between about 25th and 40th like last year, I think we can put a few more in the top 25."

Quote for the Day



"We didn't start the fire
It was always burning
Since the world's been turning
We didn't start the fire
No we didn't light it
But we tried to fight it"

-Billy Joel

Today's Crossword Puzzle

ACROSS
1 "—here long?"
5 Kind of part
10 Pounds, e.g.
14 Harvard rival
15 Party hearty
16 Singer Guthrie
17 Explorer — the Red
18 Get out
19 Sorority
20 Salsa?
24 Guacamole base
25 Craft or aunt
26 Lord Byron's daughter
28 Keep at it
29 Rapscallion
30 Impresses greatly
35 Tomato product
37 Competed
38 Minion of films
39 Presidential monogram
40 Ms. Lupino
41 Musical ensembles
43 Vine-covered
45 Pelleted
46 Conceal
48 Rock groups
50 SPY group
51 Evergreen
52 Fearsome vampire
54 TV adjuncts
60 Bebop
61 Speedy koala
62 Burns by the campfire
64 Mayberry kid
65 Full-grown
66 Cathedral part
67 Hoses down
68 Some shoe sizes
69 Timed

DOWN
1 Brief farewells
2 Tombstone abody
3 Director Kazan
4 Fruit juices
5 Bird's gamebag
6 Ceremony master
7 "Ain't that a shame"
8 Arizona city
9 Hotel
10 Mark Twain's tome
11 Type of soda
12 Mineral
13 Decompressed
21 Teals
23 Serengeti room
26 Stage groups
27 Cognizant
28 Flea-market caveat
29 Guitarist
30 Hard metal
31 Japanese robert
32 Comic Murphy
33 Faculty heads
36 Place in a saloon
42 Some prophets
43 Mary Vernon
44 Oregon native
46 Stuck, as a shoe
47 Outback bird
48 Goal
52 Uneven-ragged edge
53 Wicker
54 Got down
56 "The Egg —"
58 Tick off
59 Waiter's side
58 Root projection
59 Winter transport
62 Press for payment

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish & Chips
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
- Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Salmon Miso
- Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 35

SATURDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 33

SUNDAY
- High: 52
- Low: 36

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy/ Sheryl Wolnik

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros

PRODUCTION STAFF
Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Stop wondering why you're being stared at.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't go to work today, you deserve a day off.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't be possessive with your partner, buy them a six-pack and let em'go.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Yes, you have a booger in your nose. Now pick it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
It is time to let the world know who your true love is.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
When you feel like no one likes you, just think of Derek Jeter!

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Next time you are belting Piano Man in your car, put the windows up.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stop taking your anger out on your friends. Instead, talk bad about the Yankees!

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be careful when walking past the library. You may get blown away.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Make up the work you missed while sitting on your butt and watching baseball.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Jump in a puddle this weekend, it will be fun!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you are having an ugly day, think of Don Zimmer and how lucky you are.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'Hero' Biologic Warrior who Deliberately Slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'Winning' the War. Style: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. Author: AC graduate, many past productions Venue/ Actors: your choice Contact: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Apartment for Rent

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

Auto for Sale

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 b/o 253-5537

Auto for Sale

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1995 Honda Accord Standard 125K Excellent Condition $4800.00 253-2740 Evenings

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon AC/Power 147,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Furniture

Moving Sale Patricia 413-529-9458

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject – visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweep-picker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

Place your classified ad in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace! Visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Yanks in Series

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Mariano Rivera struck out three and allowed two hits in three innings of work last night, helping the New York Yankees to their 39th American League Championship. Bret Boone's leadoff home run in the 11th inning sent the Yankees to a World Series meeting with Florida.

Boone's leadoff HR wins ALCS as New York downs Boston

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Aaron Boone set off bedlam in the Bronx on Thursday night with a leadoff home run in the 11th inning to give the New York Yankees a 6-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox for a trip to the World Series and their 39th American League pennant.

Red Sox	5
Yankees	6

New York trailed 4-0 in the fourth inning and 5-2 in the eighth as Roger Clemens made an early exit in what looked to be the final game of his storied career.

But the Yankees bounced back, rekindling all those painful memories that have haunted so many Red Sox fans — thoughts of Bucky Dent, Bill Buckner and decades of New York domination.

This was the fifth pennant in six seasons for the Yankees, who haven't won the World Series since 2000, and the 26th time they played these old foes — a baseball first.

The final words of the ultimate chapter revealed it was the same old story, one that the Red Sox perennially curse: pinstripes in the World Series, despair back in Boston.

Only the names change in the annual fight between New York and New England, never the result.

Mariano Rivera didn't allow a run in his first three-inning appearance since Sept. 6, 1996. It capped a triumphant night for a New York bullpen that had failed so often. This time, it allowed just one run in eight innings, and Rivera walked off with the MVP award.

Wakefield, who relieved to start the 10th, had baffled New York with his knuckleball in Games 1 and 4 and started with a scoreless inning.

Boone, acquired from Cincinnati on July 31, then homered into the left-field seats, settling the old ballpark shaking. There wasn't a doubt from the moment it left his bat.

It was the first pennant-winning, extra-inning homer for the Yankees since Chris Chambliss' ninth-inning shot against Kansas City in 1976.

Rivera went right to the mound, dropping to the ground and pounding the pitching rubber with his right hand. He seemed to be sobbing by the time coach Willie Randolph got to him and hugged him.

The Yankees waited for Boone at home plate, hopping with excitement, and mobbed him when he arrived.

"Wow. I can't even talk," Boone said. "It's unbelievable. Mo ... so many heroes today. Unbelievable. This is awesome. Like Derek told me, 'The ghosts will show up eventually.'"

Rivera had probably pitched his final inning. Jose Contreras, who wasted a two-run lead in Game 6, was starting to warm up in New York's bullpen. Rivera had thrown 48 pitches.

"I see those guys coming back, coming back, coming back, and I think 'I've got to hold this,'" he said.

Trot Nixon's two-run homer in a three-run second inning and Kevin Millar's solo shot in the fourth chased Clemens, who walked off slowly in what then appeared to be the final appearance of his storied career.

Jason Giambi, dropped to seventh in the batting order for the first time since July 1999, started the comeback with solo homers in the fifth and seventh innings innings.

A parade of New York relievers — including Mike Mussina in the first relief appearance of his major league career — held Boston scoreless until David Ortiz made it 5-2 with a homer in the eighth on David Wells' first pitch of the game.

Derek Jeter then sparked the eighth with a one-out double over Nixon in right, and Bernie Williams singled him home. Hideki Matsui followed with a double down the right-field line — on an 0-2 pitch — that put runners on second and third, and Posada looped a hit to center that scored both runners, with Matsui slapping the plate as he slid in and his teammates coming out of the dugout. Posada wound up on second base as no one covered the bag.

Martinez, who had thrown 123 pitches, was removed in favor of left-hander Alan Embree, who retired Giambi on a flyout. Mike Timlin came in and intentionally walked pinch-hitter Ruben Sierra and Karim Garcia unintentionally, loading the bases for Alfonso Soriano.

He hit a ball off the mound and it bounced to second baseman Todd Walker, who raised his glove, grabbed it and threw to second for the forceout.

The next step

UM set to host St. Lawrence

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team's season is two games old, and already the Minutemen have played a Hockey East opponent, made roster switches, and shaken up lines.

When they host St. Lawrence tomorrow (Mullins Center, 7 p.m.), they're hoping it won't be two steps forward, one step back.

The Saints are a relative unknown for UMass coach Don Cahoon and his charges. SLU last visited UMass on Jan. 2, 2000, going to overtime before Jay Shaw knocked home the winner for the Minutemen with just nine seconds left in the extra frame. Prior to that, the teams met on Nov. 27, 1993 in Canton, N.Y., and the hosts took a 5-4 victory. So, outside of scouting reports, neither team will be familiar with the other side entering tomorrow's game.

However, Cahoon does remember a few things from his days at Princeton, where the Tigers went 5-10-3 against SLU.

"I know quite a bit about the style of play because I was in that league for so many years. I know they're in the midst of a resurgence, and their program has a great tradition, and when they're a good team they've been a very good team, a Frozen Four team not so many years ago.

"They're a team that usually has very good offensive concepts. They usually do very well outnumbering people on the cycle. They're usually very good on special teams. The power play was always a really difficult power play to defend."

The Saints have struggled the last two years, posting back-to-back 21 loss seasons (11 wins each.) They've been shut out of NCAA tournament play three straight years. However in 1999-2000, they finished third in the nation, winning both the ECAC regular season and tournament titles as well.

This year, the Saints are sitting on a 1-1-2 record, but the one win was a 3-1 defeat of Central Collegiate Hockey Association member Miami University (Ohio).

As for the Minutemen, they have the chance to win the first three games of the season for just the second time since the 1993 reinstatement of the program. The last time UMass got off to such a start was the 1995-96 season, when it went to 4-1 en route to a 10-19-6 overall record (4-14-6 Hockey East.) The hot start has been thanks much in part to the surging special teams, which have produced three goals — including Peter Trovato's shorthanded game winner last Saturday against Lowell — and killed off all 11 penalties the Minutemen have received this season. Through two games last year, the UMass penalty killers were only 7-for-11.

"We're still a work in progress," said Cahoon, always the skeptic. "We've made some line changes, and that will change special teams to a degree. I'm happy with our PK up to now, but every week is different."

The Minutemen are also experimenting with some

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Stephen Werner (19) tries to bang a puck past Lowell's Chris Davidson during the Minutemen's 3-2 win over the River Hawks last Saturday. UMass plays St. Lawrence at the Mullins Center tomorrow.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 33

15 arrested following Sox loss

Group leads police on chase

By Dan Lamothe and Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Fifteen people were arrested early Friday morning after a group of people frustrated with the Boston Red Sox' American League Championship Series loss led University of Massachusetts police on a cross-campus chase, vandalizing windows, fences and other property as they went.

The action marked a contrast from several recent Red Sox-related disturbances in the past two weeks. For the first time, people involved in the disturbance took their vandalism out of the Southwest residential area. At least 100 people worked their way up Massachusetts Avenue with some attempting to set fire to a bus stop near Sunset Avenue.

"Southwest really wasn't the problem," Barbara O'Connor, UMass police chief said. "The problem became the behavior on Massachusetts Avenue and across the campus."

Immediately following the game, which ended around midnight, a group of about 150 to 200 students gathered in the Southwest courtyard near Berkshire Dining Commons, chanting "Yankees suck," "Let's go Marlins," and several other expletive-filled phrases. Two T-shirts were burned, one with an "I love N.Y." phrase on the front, the other with "Yankees suck."

A steady stream of beer cans and other debris poured out the windows of John Quincy Adams Tower and Washington Tower, including several firecrackers and fireworks.

After a half hour of chanting, the UMass Police Department issued a warning over a public address system at 12:40 a.m. telling the crowd to disperse. Riot police formed a line along Washington tower at 12:45 a.m., marching in lines forward through the courtyard past Berkshire DC, using officers mounted on horseback and a police van.

Police sealed off the courtyard in Southwest using eight police dogs, sending students into their residence halls or away from the area completely.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

A police officer stands guard near the bus stop in front of Southwest residential area on Massachusetts Avenue early Friday morning.

Once dispersed, much of the group made the move away from Southwest. Cars and buildings were damaged across campus, including the Fine Arts Center, Herter Hall, Kennedy Tower, Melville Hall, according to O'Connor. The fire alarm system in Thoreau Hall also sustained serious damage, she said.

"The calls for vandalism are still coming in," she said.

A group of students made their way to the Northeast quad and set a large fire there. O'Connor said that the fire was composed of a couch, among other materials. About 75 to 100 students stood in the quad between Crabtree Hall and Mary Lyon Hall, with some jumping over the fire and others yelling.

Two police cars and a fire truck were posted between Dwight Hall and Lewis Hall. After the police issued a warning for students to clear the area, , riot police marched in from the direction of Eastman Lane. Police began shooting pepperball and telling students to move in doors. Students quickly ran into the surrounding dorms, as riot police continued to shoot students as they attempted to fit in crowded doorways. The fire was quickly extinguished, and police remained in the quad to clear the area.

UMPD used the services of about 50 UMass police officers and 40 state police, who arrived by bus. Amherst police also assisted, O'Connor said. Massachusetts Daily Collegian reporters witnessed at least one arrest made by plainclothes officers.

"We had these pockets of resistance... instigating a mob mentality," O'Connor said.

Eleven of the 15 arrested are UMass students. The 15 include:

— John T. Beggan, 21, of 187 Plain St. in Pembroke, Mass., was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

— Peter W. Hutchings, 18, of 95 Mattapoisett Neck City St. in Mattapoisett, Mass., was arrested and charged with inciting a riot, failure to disperse in a riot, and disorderly conduct.

— Nicholas Mitchell, 18, of 3 Antassawamock St. in Mattapoisett, Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Joseph Gelinas, 18, of 611 South St. in Dalton, Mass., was arrested and charged with inciting a riot, failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Matthew Falcone, 19, of 10 Linden St. in Winchendon, Mass., was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

— Jonathan E. Cohen, 19, of 37 Highland St. in Sharon, Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot.

— Timothy J. O'Neill, 18, of 125 Summer Ave. in Reading Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Jared Sinkwich, 29, of 54 Pomeroy Lane in Amherst, Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Harold Galpin, 19, of 104 Green St. in Rockland, Mass., was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

— Evan Meyer, 19, of 188D Warner Hill Rd. in Charlemont, Mass., was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and mistreating a police dog or horse. O'Connor said the charges are tied to him allegedly throwing rocks at the animals.

— Patrick McGillicuddy, 19, of 30 Bay St. in Quincy, Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Erik W. Drauschke, 21, of 77 Libby Ave. in Reading, Mass., was arrested and charged with unlawful possession of fireworks, inciting a riot, failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Wesley Cullinane, 20, of 58 Anson Rd. in Concord, Mass., was arrested and charged with failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Kenneth Petkunas, 18, of 221 So. Main St. in Sherborn, Mass., was arrested and charged with inciting a riot, failure to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct.

— Brandon Horn, 22, of 50 Meadow St., Unit 8, in Amherst, Mass., was arrested and charged with malicious destruction of property valued at more than $250, resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest and disorderly conduct.

All but Gelinas, Sinkwich, Pentukas and Horn are students. O'Connor said she thought it was possible Amherst police arrested more students near Sunset Avenue. Amherst police could not be reached to confirm that.

O'Connor showed video tape to media during a press conference at UMass police headquarters Friday, and issued a floppy disk with the still photo of what they believe to be one of the main instigators of the crowd activity. She said the man is about 5-foot-9, with a goatee or mustache. The man was one of two people who burned their hands badly after picking up smoke canisters fired by the police. Anyone who can identify the man is encouraged by UMPD to call the police at 545-2121.

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, said students will be held accountable for their actions.

"It's not fair for the good students who are trying to do good things for the University," he said. "We are all paying for this, hundreds of thousands of dollars."

O'Connor said UMPD has paid

Continued on page 3

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Students burn T-shirts outside of John Adams tower in the Southwest residential area early Friday morning.

COURTESY PHOTO

Police say this man was one of the main instigators in Thursday's vandalism.

UMass hosts Autumn Event

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Staff

About 4,000 prospective new students and their families gathered Saturday at the annual, day-long Autumn Event, hosted by the New Students program at the University of Massachusetts.

Students arrived from local Massachusetts and as far away as Kentucky and Michigan to learn more about UMass. Students came with plenty of questions and concerns, many were eager to grab a glimpse of what campus was really like while their parents raised concerns over tuition and the quality of life on campus.

The Autumn Event began with a gathering of all the prospective students at the Mullins Center for an Opening and Welcome featuring speakers including Ann-Marie Watt, a graduate of the class of 2003.

Watt summarized what she believed the University offered to the students with a slogan called, " The 3 C's: Excellent Classroom Education, Campus education and Community."

Following Watt's comments, the 270-member Minuteman Marching Band held a performance.

The welcoming then continued, with speeches with both President Jack M. Wilson and Chancellor John V. Lombardi giving speeches.

"This [UMass] is a place with a set of unique characteristics," Lombardi said. "The first is, it's big enough for power, yet small enough to be understood... The second characteristic is the quality of the faculty."

The prospective students then moved out to explore various events ranging from informational meetings of the individual colleges, tours of the campus and its residential halls, performances by various student groups, a RSO club fair, and panel discussions aimed to answer questions about what campus really holds in store for students.

Many students left the informational sessions with new information on the University and the individual colleges. Many drew comparisons between UMass and other schools they are considering.

"I looked at Bentley and it was pretty comparable," James Burns of Foxboro, Mass., said after attending the Isenberg School of Management showcase.

Many students came away with a positive impression of the campus.

"It looks better in comparison to bigger colleges like Boston University," another prospective student, Kelly Gazzano of Cape Cod, said.

"We just came out of the tour of the theater," said Angela Formica, of Auburn, MA. " Its absolutely beautiful."

The Autumn Event not only left an impression with prospective new students, but with parents as well. Parents paid closer attention to issues concerning the quality of life on campus.

"It looks like its very secure here, which is very important to a parent whose student lives six hours away," one parent, Donna Merryman of Landburg, Penn., said of the police presence on campus.

Overall, the Autumn Event seems to have left a positive impression on many prospective students and parents.

"[It was] very well organized, there's plenty of staff here to help - they're friendly and polite," Eileen Schaffer of Potsdam, N.Y. said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
MAGICAL RUN
SOX SEASON DRAWS CAMPUS TOGETHER
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
ALBUM SURPRISES
CAMPFIRE GIRLS
ALBUM MATCHLESS
SPORTS
PAGE 8
CAPPED OFF
UMASS ROLLS OVER SLU
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

Canadian drugs gain support

By Mike Travis
Collegian Correspondent

As Massachusetts Attorney General Thomas F. Reilly joins in the crusade to combat costly prescription drugs statewide, Springfield Major Michael J. Albano calls on state legislature to act without hesitation.

Reilly urged the Food and Drug Administration last Monday to reverse its opposition to imported drugs from Canada and other countries. "The actions by the attorney general will go a long way," said Albano. "I am hopeful that the intervention by a person of Tom Reilly's status in this state, in this country, may lead to the FDA at least considering doing a private project in Springfield."

Albano testified last Wednesday at the statehouse hearing in Boston, urging Massachusetts Legislature's Joint Committee on Health Care to back the state's prescription drug and fair pricing act. The bill, if approved, would establish a bulk-purchasing program for state employees and Medicaid recipients. The pharmaceutical and biotech industry opposes the initiative. Anthony C. Wisniewski, a director for the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, argues that the bill would limit patients' access to the drugs they need and, in reducing the companies' profit, make it impossible for the industry to pursue research and development of life-saving drugs.

Springfield started its Canadian drug import program for city employees, in defiance of the FDA, "as a matter of survival for public services," said Albano. Healthcare costs have risen over 100 percent since Albano took office in 1996. He plans on using the estimated nine million in savings the initiative will provide for police, fire, education, and a number of other public services gouged by budget cuts.

Many cities throughout New England, including Pittsfield, Massachusetts and Burlington, Vt., are watching Springfield closely before taking measures of their own to import prescription drugs from Canada. "It's developing some momentum on its own in congress and a lot of mayors all around are waiting to see what happens here...I believe as mayor of the city that my employees should have the same benefits as those people that get on buses or go on the internet," said Albano.

On Oct. 21, the mayor and some legislators will take a bus tour from Boston to Springfield to promote a bill that would direct the state to apply for a federal waiver to distribute information and materials on how to buy prescription drugs from Canada.

In response to continuing support for Springfield's cause, the FDA has stepped up its surveillance, surveying packages as they enter the United States and documenting any problems found. They are also using the one documented case of a batch of insulin shipped to Springfield improperly refrigerated as proof of the risk of these re-imported drugs.

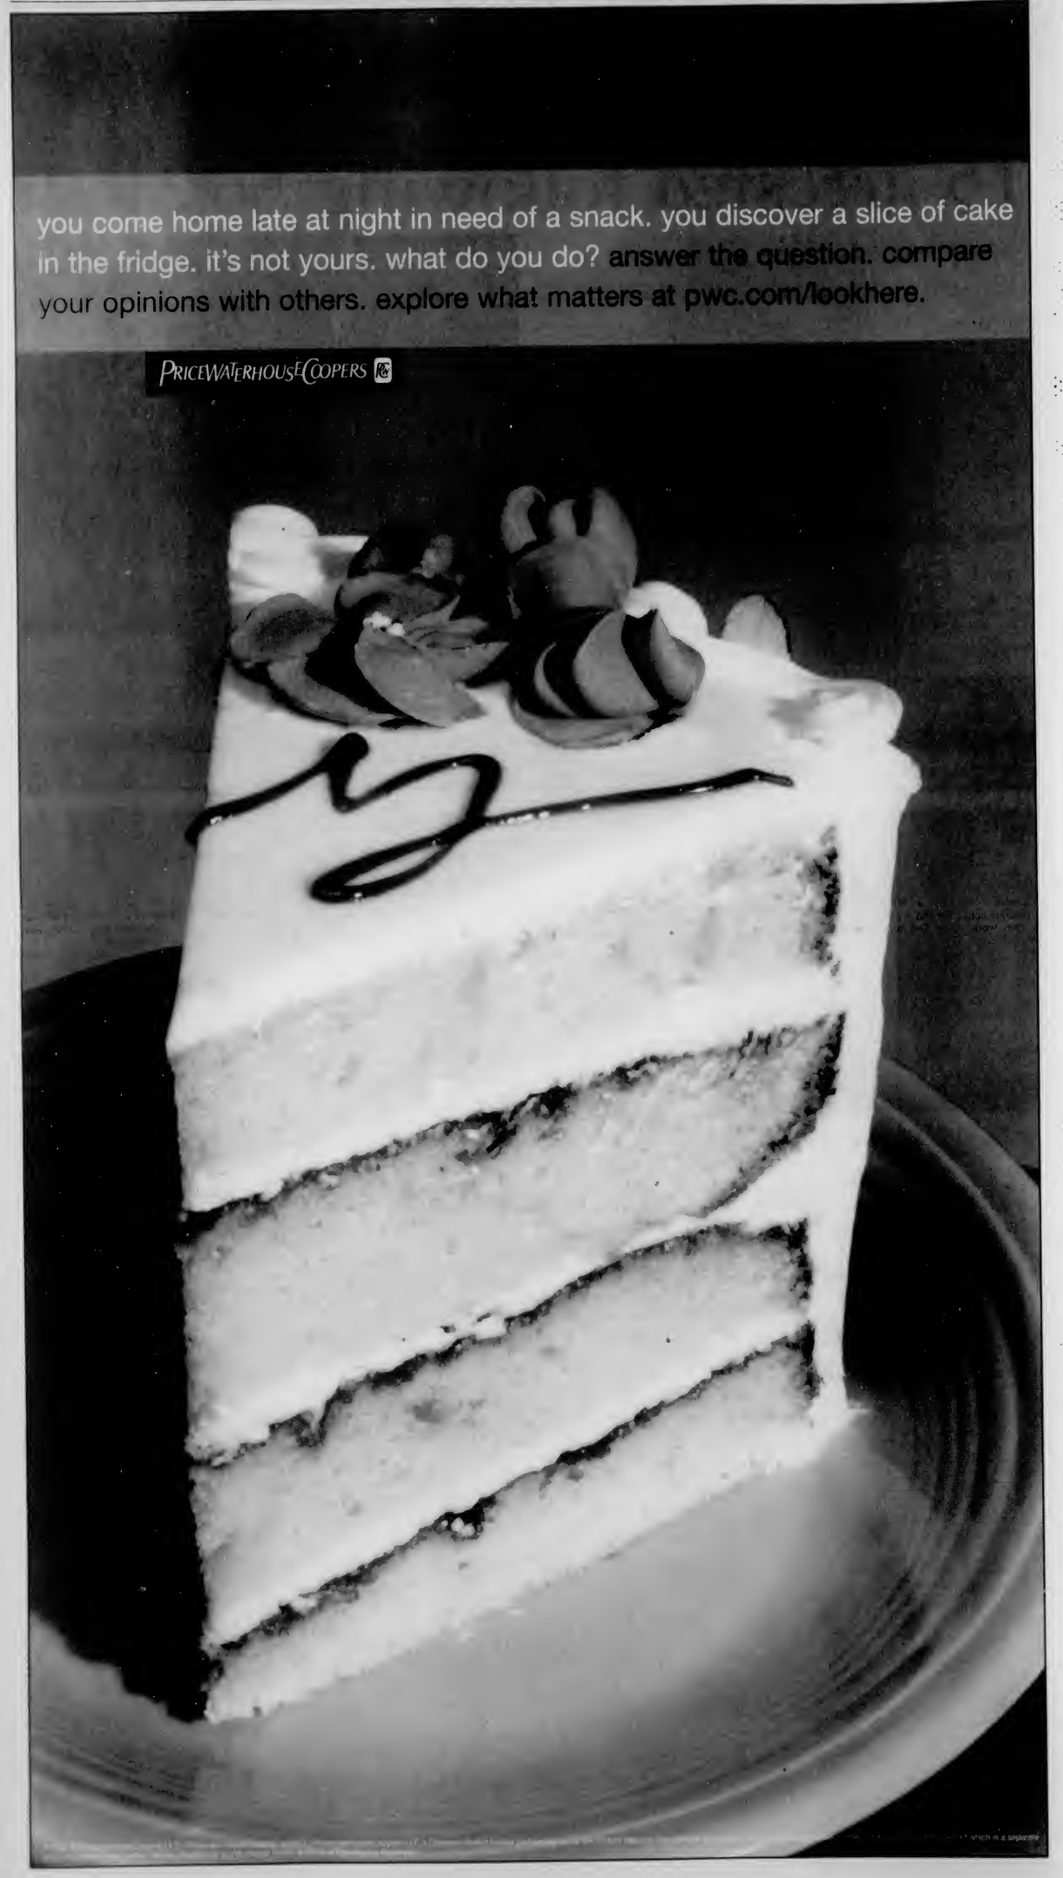
"I can see their concern about the safety issue, but if seniors can't afford their medication, that's a safety issue," said Albano. "If they lower their heat so much that it becomes a danger to their health because they can't afford to pay for both, that's a safety issue."

Commonwealth to welcome Klein

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts's Commonwealth College will welcome author Joe Klein as a guest lecturer tomorrow at noon in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Klein's visit is part of Commonwealth College's Dean's Book series, his novel "The Natural: The Misunderstood Presidency of Bill Clinton," is the Dean's Book selection this semester. The lecture will be followed by a discussion period and is free and open to the public.



Commonwealth College traditionally invites the author of their chosen Dean's Book to speak to students and faculty each semester. This summer the College invited Klein but did not hear back from him until recently. Dean Linda Slakey announced Klein's visit just last week. Unfortunately, whereas most authors visit before the conclusion of the seven-week Dean's book course, Klein will speak the final week of Dean's book, after many classes have concluded their study of his book.

Klein is said to enjoy speaking to student audiences. One Dean's Book instructor advised her students to be prepared to ask questions as well as answer questions Klein may have for them.

900 students, enrolled in 65 sections of Dean's Book this semester have read, discussed and presented projects about The Natural.

Matt Daniels, a sophomore, has decided not to attend Klein's lec-

Continued on page 3

American Cancer Society President speaks at Smith

By Paul Connelly
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON—Dr. Mary Simmonds, national president of the American Cancer Society spoke at Smith College on Friday, continuing the Biological Colloquium Series on hope and progress in cancer research.

Simmonds, a 1971 graduate of Smith College and long-standing volunteer for the ACS, addressed the progress being made in the fight against cancer but stressed the responsibility of organizations like the ACS to educate the public on controlling the disease.

"It's gratifying to see the progress being made," Simmonds said. "We've gone from the Curie's to radiation treatment and now we have medication like Tamoxofen and Amend coming out and they're all bringing us closer to the end of the disease."

Although cancer death rates have dropped dramatically since 1990, it's still the second leading cause of death in the United States behind heart disease. Lung cancer is the most common form of cancer in both men and women, according to an ACS Facts and Figures document.

"To control cancer, we need more research and better prevention education," said Simmonds. "Cancer can be prevented by lifestyle changes. People are still smoking and drinking excessive amounts of alcohol. They're still exposed to radiation, viruses, chemicals and they're too physically inactive. They may seem like simple things to avoid, but some people just aren't getting that they're deadly."

Cultural and environmental factors play a large role in causing cancer too, said Simmonds. Liver cancer, which is found prominently in third world countries where the disease is less preventable, was recognized as the most common worldwide cancer in the annual ACS Facts and Figures report.

But however close pivotal prevention is to stopping cancer, Simmonds said it falls behind early detection and successful treatment as the most important step in curing the disease.

"Sometimes cancer only gets worse when you treat it," Simmonds said. "Things like acute toxic reactions, organ damage, carcinogenesis (cancer producing agents) and teratogenesis (agent causing malformation of an embryo) can occur. But with better research, we're learning as we go how to deal with these problems."

When treating cancer patients, Simmonds relies heavily on psychosocial support, long and short-term palliation, symptom relief and clinical research. But Simmonds attributes much of a cancer patient's recovery to the dedication of ACS volunteers.

Klein Speaks

Continued from page A1

ture. Daniels said that although he isn't "into politics" the book was "relatively not as dry" as other political books he has read. However, he did not believe the book was a good choice for Dean's Book because it was difficult to discuss and to relate to for those not knowledgeable or interested in politics.

Katrina Wright-Singer, a junior, agreed, "I thought the book was not a good choice," she said. "I couldn't relate to it at all."

Klein anonymously authored the best-selling "Primary Colors" in 1998 based on the 1992 presidential race. "Primary Colors," later turned into a film starring a hefty John Travolta as the Clinton-esque Jack Stanton, was Klein's first book concerning the Clinton's. Klein's next book, "The Running Mate," follows "Primary Colors," this time following Jack Stanton's opponent Charlie Martin, based loosely on Senators John McCain and John Kerry.

"The Natural," written following Clinton's presidency and published in March of 2002, is Klein's account of Clinton's two terms in the White House. Klein analyzes Clinton's character, his policies, the culture in which he governed and sheds light on Clinton's personal maturation and his rise to political power.

Klein, currently a Time magazine columnist and senior writer, worked for The New Yorker as their Washington correspondent from 1996 to 2000, and as a staff writer from 2000 to 2002. Additionally he has written for The New Republic, The New York Times, The Washington Post, Life, and Rolling Stone.

In addition to the three books previously mentioned, Klein is the author of two nonfiction books, "Payback: Five Marines After Vietnam" (1984) and "Woody Guthrie: A Life" (1980).

Klein is a member of the Council on Foreign relations and a former Guggenheim fellow.

Information from the Commonwealth College and Time magazine Web sites were used in this article.

GRAILLE / DAILY COLLEGIAN

Mudslide

The Guys Over There were the champions of the 2003 Oozefest mud volleyball tournament held at Totman Gymnasium Field yesterday afternoon. The rain earlier on in the day aided in the making of the ideal muddy condition that was required for the event.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lonsdale
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salsiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagitic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erica Lovely
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1901, The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been printed by Spec January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction: Due to an editor's error, the caption for the picture accompanying Friday's American League Championship Series game story misidentified the New York Yankees' Aaron Boone as Bret Boone.

Blair hospitalized for heart problems

By Jack Garland
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — British Prime Minister Tony Blair, who has been under increasing political pressure because of the war in Iraq, was hospitalized Sunday with heart palpitations, his office said. Doctors restored Blair's normal heartbeat with electrical stimulation and he was feeling "fine" at home.

Blair, 50, was taken to London's Hammersmith hospital, treated and released after five hours, his office said. The prime minister was feeling "fine" after returning home, his office at No. 10 Downing Street said in a statement.

"This was completely successful. He was in hospital for four to five hours and is now back at Number 10. The hospital says this is a relatively common condition and is easily treated," it said. "He has suffered no damage and he is fine. There is no reason why this should reoccur. They have advised him to rest for 24 hours."

Blair was expected to return to work full-time Tuesday, his office said. He will not make a planned statement to the House of Commons on Monday about a European summit he attended last week.

Blair was spending the weekend at Chequers, the official rural retreat for prime ministers, when he became ill. He initially was taken to a local hospital, but then went to Hammersmith, which has a specialist coronary-care unit.

"There it was established he had an irregular heartbeat and a cardioversion was administered to regulate it," Blair's office said.

That means his heart was electrically stimulated to restore a normal rhythm.

This was the first hint of any health problems for Blair, who took power 6 1/2 years ago. He is not accompanied by a physician on his travels, his office said.

This year has been the most stressful for Blair since becoming prime minister. He has faced a storm of criticism across Britain for his decision to commit British troops to military action in Iraq earlier this year.

Blair also has appeared increasingly tired in public, often looking haggard at press conferences and other forums where he has faced constant criticism from a hostile media. He also has fended off discontent inside his Labor Party, whose left wing is unhappy about his centrist policies.

11 students arrested

Continued from page A1

more than $60,000 in overtime to police officers over the last two weeks for time spent in Southwest in connection with Red Sox-related disturbances.

Gargano's next course of action to prevent vandalism and destructive behavior will be sending out a letter to parents to inform them on the record of what the cost for the damages are, he said.

Student Government Association President David Carr said he felt the police handled the situation better than they have in the past.

"They actually told the crowd that they were in violation, so they gave the crowd the opportunity to leave," he said. "People got caught in the crossfire, those who were not there for the original purpose, they became involved by necessity, not by choice."

Students celebrate UMass Homecoming

By Keyana Brown
Collegian Correspondent

A crowd of about 400 people attended and participated in the Homecoming Weekend pep rally and bonfire next to the Campus Pond Friday evening.

Beginning at approximately 7 p.m., the University of Massachusetts dance team, cheerleaders and marching band livened up the crowd with various performances.

"We have been practicing for a week for this event and I hope the audience enjoys our routines," said Adriana Falcon, a UMass dance team member.

Despite the cold weather, the cheerleaders still managed to give an enthusiastic performance. In addition to the team's new dance routines, the Minuteman Mascot had a new look.

"I couldn't stop laughing when I saw the mascot dancing with a lively, elderly woman," said sophomore Megan Banks. "The new mascot seemed to boost up the crowd's energy."

At about 7:40 p.m., the crowd cheered on the UMass Minuteman football team as they walked towards the pep rally from the Campus Center in their burgundy sweat suits. The bonfire was then lit and the coach, as well as football team player Doram Davis, gave short speeches and urged everyone to come and support the team for the game against Hofstra University on Saturday. Before the football team departed from the pep rally, they gave the crowd a brief surprise performance as they danced to hip-hop music.

More than half of the crowd left the pep rally by 8:30 p.m., but many stayed to listen to the feature performances by Medicineline, the Jon Frederik Band, West Entrance and DJ Hipnotiq.

For those who were still present at the end of the rally, a concert in the Fine Arts Center with the UMass marching band was held.

Teri Barrows, Amy Hfich, Nathaniel Jewell, and Corey Rusenberg organized the Homecoming event.

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS
University Drive
UMASS
Route 9

GREENLEAVES
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
• Monday •
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
1/2 Price Appetizers, Wings & Nachos 'til Midnight
• Tuesday & Wednesday •
1/2 PRICE WINGS
Open to Close...eat in only!
Coors LIGHT PITCHER
$6.50
October Special

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES
OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years
Free Legal Advice,
Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
545-1995 • 922 Campus Center

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Red Sox season unites UMass

Early Friday morning, the Boston Red Sox came in second place once again. Following the 6-5 loss to their hated nemesis, the New York Yankees, in the 11th inning of Game 7 of the American League Championship Series, immense disappointment fell upon all members of the Red Sox Nation as the opportunity to "reverse the curse" ended as fast as Aaron Boone's homerun left the park.

Immediate blame has been put on Boston manager Grady Little. His neglect to take out Red Sox ace Pedro Martinez in the eighth inning, with the score 5-3, led to the Yankee rally and consequently New York won the game and a World Series birth in the extra innings.

The idea of coming in second place once again — and to the Yankees, of all teams — leaves an extremely bitter taste in the mouths of Red Sox fans across New England.

However, this second place finish for the Sox is far different than what Boston fans have been accustomed to in the past decade. This finish is not worth a bitter feeling; it's worth a feeling of pride.

In the past 10 years, the Boston Red Sox have been your classic sports fan tease. Big names and big potential have added up to disappointment, as late-season August breakdowns have branded many of the past clubs as underachievers.

This year's squad dodged that late-season collapse. The 2003 Red Sox, compiled of modest superstars and old-fashioned ball players sporting sweat-stained hats and mullets, captured the hearts and minds of New Englanders, whether you're a baseball fan or not. A rallying cry of "Cowboy Up!," an unknown batting champ in Bill Mueller, and the excessive hugging by everyone on the team made people feel as if they were watching something special every time those old-school red-trimmed gray and white uniforms were on the field.

The amazing season that the Red Sox pulled off this year did more than just increase the respect around the sports world for the boys who call Fenway Park home; it build a community amongst inhabitants of New England.

The University of Massachusetts campus is a fine example. During the final weeks of the regular season and the playoff run, students came together, watching the games, wearing Red Sox gear everyday and enjoying the blessing of rooting for a team in October. Professors explained their material in class by using the Sox as examples, and the Blue Wall Pub was finally filled with tipsy students watching the plasma televisions and eating 10-cent wings. The Sox helped UMass become a community, even if like the Red Sox season, it couldn't be perfect. A riot and several other disturbances in Southwest resulted in damage to property and personal injury to a few.

UMass students should learn from the baseball experience though. Because you never know. There's always next year.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

And now, it's my turn

Mark Ostroff

The past week, a lot of columnists wrote their pieces on rioting at UMass, and who can blame them? It's a problem that keeps asserting itself at UMass, year after year and game after game. It's a chance for dorm-dwelling muscleheads, hyped up on cheap beer, cheap tobacco, and testosterone, to show off their masculinity and so-called "loyalty" — as one student put it, to "have something to tell my kids." Now, if that doesn't represent white-trash culture, I don't know what does.

Not all baseball fans are like this. I like baseball; my friends like baseball, and I want to see the "curse" broken like every other loyal Sox fan. But when the game is over, win or lose, there is studying to do, there are calls to make, and due to mass stupidity, there is property to protect.

The fact is that rioters at UMass are the lowest people you will ever meet in the world of Academia. These cowards, who commit their acts under the assurance of human rights and within the confines of a drunken mob, use machismo and a loser baseball team as their only guiding lights.

Because we have such a high standard for the rights of criminals in this country, rioters at UMass know that, in a flash, they can turn from Southwest-slimeballs into wannabe-Kent State victims, as fast as cops can turn from civil protectors into victimizing fascists. If they were in another country like, say, North Korea, these idiots wouldn't have the guts to clap out loud at their favorite baseball players, let alone destroy private, state and federal property.

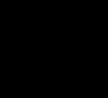
You also don't see this brand of dirt acting individually. They need to make sure there are at least a hundred of them around, so those trying to keep order can't get to them. Real macho, huh? Ever wonder why they resort to throwing bottles and rocks and never actually approach the police? Because they are, in fact, afraid to spend the night in the clink. This is where the line is drawn — when they have to go it alone.

Some say that taking on the cops is actually just a way to challenge authority. Well if that's the case, then 10-year-old Palestinians kids have still shown far more courage than the oh-so-manly men of UMass riots. And hey, at least they have something to fight for, which brings me to my next point.

These idiot rioters not only undermined the mission of UMass, they flipped it over and set it on fire.

If people want to riot, can they at least find something worth rioting over? Is there not enough of a charged political atmosphere for you in this country? If tanks with red stars came rolling into Washington, these idiots still wouldn't move unless beer, toilet paper, and a stick and ball were involved.

I'm sure that most of you know the mission behind this university, but let me discuss this again for those that seem to just not get it. This university, its administrators, and its faculty believe that everybody deserves the chance for a quality education, and a higher standard of living, regardless of what neighborhood you come from. They spend their careers challenging those who believe that most of you have no right to be here. Many people believe that your rightful place in society is not in Academia, but Proliteria. And rioting at UMass proves it.



These idiot rioters not only undermined the mission of UMass, they flipped it over and set it on fire. In the eyes of many, UMass and Walpole Prison are one and the same. And in the end, it's your faculty, your University, and even your baseball team that come out looking foolish, while you, the nameless cowards of this university, retreat to your dorms and wait for your next chance to ruin this school in a haze of Budweiser and empty pomp.

Well, here is a chance for all of you UMass dregs to do something right for a change:

If you have any ounce of courage or dignity, you will go over to Whitmore and sign your walking papers. Make room for the real students who don't take this opportunity for granted. I guarantee they will be an asset to this school, not a liability. I know that I'm not being realistic, because cowards don't take responsibility for their own actions. All they do is run away.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Medicinal marijuana debate unnecessary

Allison Edles

The issue of using marijuana as a medical form of treatment for pain relief has once again been introduced with the recent rulings of the Supreme Court last Tuesday. The justices stood by their previous ruling that doctors may not be investigated, threatened, or punished when advising patients of the medical availability of marijuana for treatment by federal regulators. The issue was brought about by the Bush administration backing up the Clinton administration's statements disputing the Compassionate Use Act put in place in 1996 in favor of marijuana for medicinal purposes. The goal of the executive branch of the United States government should not be to disavow the Judicial Branch, but to cooperate jointly along with the Legislative Branch, the system that this country was founded on.

As many people know, the United States government is based on a system of checks and balances. This is set in place so that one certain branch of the government is not able to gain any more power than any other branch. The Executive Branch is responsible for vetoing congressional legislation and nominating Supreme Court Judges. The Legislative Branch is responsible for approving the presidential nominations and controlling the budget. It has the power to pass laws over the President's veto the ability to impeach him or her from office. In addition, the Legislative Branch also confirms the President's nominations and can impeach Supreme Court Judges and remove them from office. The Judicial Branch has the power to declare presidential acts and laws passed by Congress unconstitutional.

In 1996, the Clinton Administration stated that allowing doctors to recommend marijuana to patients "will lead to administrative action by the Drug Enforcement Administration to revoke the practitioner's registration." With the Bush administration's reintroduction of this statement to the Courts after seven years, it demonstrates their lack of faith in the governmental system and only further enforces their stubbornness and inability to see the benefits of a medical treatment that will help ease pain for many patients nationwide.

For a patient whose only source of pain relief...may be a few regulated standard puffs of marijuana daily, it is devestating to hear...that the medical procedure cannot be afforded to them

According to Dr. Ethan Russo, M.D., a clinical neurologist, researcher and author, "marijuana used for medicinal purposes may provide relief for many diseases and symptoms including post-amputation pain, multiple sclerosis, and nausea of cancer chemotherapy." However, the use of medicinal marijuana is not permitted to be used for every little pain and cramp. There are many criteria for its use. Among these criteria are

1. Failure of all approved medications to provide relief has been documented.

2. The symptoms can reasonably be expected to be relieved by rapid-onset cannabinoid drugs.

3. Such treatment is administered under medical supervision in a manner that allows for assessment of treatment effectiveness.

4. Involves an oversight strategy comparable to an institutional review board process that could provide guidance within 24 hours of a submission by a physician to provide marijuana to a patient for a specified use.

The trend and consequent debate of legalizing marijuana as prescribed by doctors for specified patients first began in California. Currently, the states that have authorized medicinal marijuana are Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Maine, Colorado, and Maryland. In California, the law states that a patient whose doctor has approved or recommended marijuana will not be prosecuted by state law enforcement authorities.

The risk for many doctors and personnel involved in the medical profession from the federal government is becoming highly intimidating and unnecessary. For a patient whose only source of pain relief after an intensely traumatic life-altering experience may be a few regulated standard puffs of marijuana daily, it is devastating to hear from their doctor that the medical procedure cannot be afforded to them because of qualms between their physician and the federal government.

The Bush administration, rather than arguing with the judicial branch over something that has been medically proven to ease the pain of patients suffering from extreme, chronic discomfort, should focus on more important issues at the moment, such as foreign policies. The debate regarding the use of medicinal marijuana will always be in the foreground, but the way to settle it is not by discounting different branches of the United States government.

Information from this article was compiled from the 1999 U.S. government-sponsored Institute of Medicine Report.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax:
413-545-3699

Mail:
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

Letters to the Editor: police brutality

In the line of fire
To the Editor:

The Boston Red Sox lost Game 7. I've been a Sox fans since I've known what baseball was, so of course I was heartbroken. Yet, I slowly walked back from Coolidge to Patterson with my roommate, and we smoked what were supposed to be our victory cigars and reminisced over the past seven months of baseball. Riot cops soon gathered around John Adams, and we watched as they formed a straight line across the stairs to intimidate any potential rioters or deviants.

Peacefully, we smoked our cheap cigars and discussed the days when Shea Hillenbrand left town, and when the bullpen-by-committee theory dissolved. We talked about 2004, and how that would be the year. Suddenly, as if commanded by Jozef Stalin himself, a "cop" in riot gear began yelling orders and pointing his paint ball gun. "Get inside the building!" he yelled.

I flicked my cigar, gave him one last glance, and as I noticed that he was pointing his gun at me, I put my hands in the air and slowly began walking up the stairs and into the entrance of Patterson. I was unarmed and cooperating with authority, doing exactly as the officer had instructed when he opened fire on me.

The first shot grazed my shoulder. I was stunned and horrified by the surreal situation that had been created by this renegade cop, yet I kept my composure and proceeded to walk inside. I passed through the doorway and was shot at two more times, one hitting me in the back, and the other paint ball hitting me in the shoulder. The pepper spray temporarily incapacitated me, and I briefly fell to one knee before rushing to the bathroom to wash the pepper spray off of my face.

Justifiably enraged at the situation, I began yelling obscenities and wondering why I had been attacked. I was assaulted. I had no weapon, posed no threat, and had no means to defend myself. Still, the officer found it necessary to shoot me. I had been quiet, calm, and cooperative, yet I was still viciously ambushed. Excessive force was used: there were no riots, no fires, no DC jumpers. Yet an innocent kid who just wanted to go to bed was shot in the eye with a pepper spray paint ball gun. Who can control those sent to control others? The University tried so hard to crack down on violence that it created a consequence-free situation for cops and ironically, contributed to more unnecessary violence.

The man who shot me should be prosecuted. If I were to walk down the street and shoot someone with pepper spray for no apparent reason, I would be put in jail. I guess the same laws don't apply to faceless drones in riot helmets. This University makes its own laws, putting natural rights behind political image, and it's disgusting. This won't make Fox News. Newspapers will stifle it, and everyone will hope that it's forgotten about. But I will never forget. I can't see out of my right eye.

John Oates
UMass student

The police's fault?
To the Editor:

Cops suck. This cop today, she gave this guy a ticket for speeding — Jerk! Why weren't they there when my friend got hit by a car that was speeding? Idiots! I heard about this cop that hit a kid with his nightstick even though all he did was push the cop — Ass! Another cop saved this baby from being beaten by his mother, and then he put her in jail — Nazi! This cop risked his life helping a woman taken hostage by her husband — Who asked him to get involved?

I saw a cop arrest this woman because she threw a beer can and hit him — How could they? Cops are so racist; all those people helped in 9-11 must have been white — idiots! Another cop arrested the guy who stabbed me. He resisted, and they maced him — Morons!

They shot mace pellets at a bunch of rioters who would not leave — bullies! All those students did was call them names — Pigs! Yeah a couple threw things, but they were only trying to have some fun — Jerks! I heard one cop got hurt badly and can't help his wife take care of their children anymore. Yeah, well he deserved it. It's okay to disrespect cops. They're human beings, and it's okay to be mean to people.

My bank didn't approve my loan, so I threw rocks at the police jerks! I've never been abused by the police, but I know of people who have so I have every right to hate them, hurt them, and do everything I can to make them feel bad about themselves!

The police have it in for me because they shot me with a mace pellet and told me to go home! A cop was mean to me once so all cops must be mean. I was robbed by a black man once, so all black men must be robbers.

I can't believe that they didn't help the DC jumper. Oh wait, they did. Why can't cops do something about all the violence in the U.S.? Why do they pick on me? I'm not a criminal. What we did during the riot was not wrong.

They had no right to stop us from burning, tipping over and destroying cars, destroying UMass property, throwing bottles from the top of the towers onto peoples heads, and telling them to go screw themselves.

I didn't do any of those things anyway. All I did was cheer when it all happened. That stuff is fun. Besides who is going to stop it from happening, anyway? We should be allowed to do what ever we want. This is college, after all. I don't care what people think of me; authority figures don't do anything but tell you how to live. Now I guess I have to call my mom for bail money.

Alex Spear
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass laughs out loud with StevieJay

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

On Saturday night there was a curious anticipation among the crowd of theatergoers gathered to watch the two-hour comedic event, "Laughing Out Loud," which featured StevieJay and Marilyn Pittman. The echoing beats of jazz/lounge group St. Germain set the mood for early arrivers, while performer StevieJay mingled with his audience in between last minute preparation of lights, sets, and monologues.

Laughing Out Loud — Bowker Auditorium, UMass — Oct. 18

Sparkling with energy, StevieJay shot onto the stage and the audience became silent, uncertain of what kind of rabbit this comedian might pull out of his hat. The show, designed as a one-man operation, brought a lighter perspective on the matters of life, love, sex, and death, and ultimately reached everyone sitting in the room.

Although his monologues are scripted, his enthusiasm and originality go hand-in-hand with his ability to share his personal and spiritual ideologies, making for a truly natural performance. Throughout the night spectators became engaged in the "cosmic variety show," helping StevieJay read pieces of his script and supporting him with positive reactions to his all-too-true witty sarcasm. In one hour he invents an awkward conversationalist starved for attention, a fantasizing pervert that alarmingly imitates the emotionally disturbed person within each and every one of us.

StevieJay keeps the role of gender ambiguous throughout his discussion of relationships. This technique gives his material more perspective and erases the erroneous use of sexual labels. StevieJay kept the attention of his crowd with his fast paced exploration of things like the awkwardness of trying to get a phone number on the treadmill. His only comedic downfall lies in his parodies of the clientele he has come in contact with as a professional masseuse, as they were far too reliant on recycled ethnic stereotypes.

StevieJay presents a clever understanding of the definition of love in our present day society. Although he cannot fix relationships in one hour, he puts nature on the table and lets the audience decide where to go from there.

So how can we make ourselves people better fit to survive in the dating game?

To StevieJay it takes more than evaluating every aspect of your partner until the point that you've decided you're "too good" for them. An evaluation of your own life and energy may be the first step towards a potential healthy relationship.

Campfire Girls won't burn out

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

"Junkies like to listen to records by junkies," reasons Christian Stone, a Methuen, MA native and guitarist/singer for the alternative-pop-rock band Campfire Girls.

When asked why Stone Temple Pilots singer Scott Weiland took a shining to his band, Stone says "he probably related to our music because the records he was listening to were the ones from when we were really strung out." For Stone and his longtime musical partner, bassist Andrew Clark, this was basically the latter half of the 1990's.

The Campfire Girls — "Tell Them Hi" — Interscope

The beginning of the decade started well. Stone moved out to L.A., met Clark and Jon Pikus, and formed the band Campfire Girls. Soon the band was generating a major buzz throughout the city and major labels took notice. Interscope records eventually signed the band, but shortly there after Stone and Clark fell into a dark and destructive period of drug use that seemed to put an end to all of their plans. Years later Clark was touring with the band Bicycle Thief, which was opening up for Stone Temple Pilots.

Weiland professed his love for Campfire Girls' early work and insisted that Clark work with Stone again. When the tour ended, Clark and Stone began playing together once more; Weiland even offered them practice space and support.

Soon Campfire Girls were back in full force. Pikus left his slot as the drummer and the band recruited Stone's old friend, and former Failure drummer, Kellii Scott, with Mike Semple rounding out the lineup as an additional guitarist.

Not only was the band able to escape what could have been a fatal drug habit, but they were also resigned to their old label. "They're suckers," Stoné jokes, explaining why, in such a cut-throat industry that has become notoriously artist-unfriendly, Interscope would resign a band that proved to be a mistake the first time around.

"It says a lot about them, doing that," Stone says. "We really appreciate the opportunity to prove ourselves again. We really blew it the first time." And although the band is thankful for all that they have survived and all that they have been given, they refuse to forget the past.

"I think it's such a part of who we are, it would be wrong to ignore. Our strongest point is that we've been through that stuff and hopefully we're over it. Our eyes are a bit wider."

Despite lyrical content that is often dark, Campfire Girls have loaded their new album, "Tell Them Hi," with beautiful harmonies, pop melodies, choruses and verses that will inspire even the most contemptuous listener to sing along. "Tell Them Hi" is certainly no generic pop-rock record though.

While Stone writes the basic song structure, each member puts their distinct stamp on the record and each member's various influences are beautifully and subtly melded together. Campfire Girls is easily more than a sum of its influences; they are the perfect example of how a band can bring together many different sounds and make a great, coherent rock record.

"The three P's-" Stone says when asked about his pop influences — "Pixies, Pavement, and PJ Harvey." Stone also cites the heavy metal he listened to in his youth — Black Sabbath, Iron Maiden, and Judas Priest — as an influence. It's one of Stone's favorite bands, however, whose sound comes through the most on "Tell Them Hi."

"Failure was definitely a big influence," Stone gladly admits.

Although Stone now finds himself working with Scott who was a member of the seminal, acclaimed 90's art-rock band, it's not a big deal; Stone knew him before. "I've known Kellii from when I first moved [to LA]; he was one of the first people I met ... He joined Failure after I was already a fan, so it wasn't like Kellii from Failure; it was like my bro Kellii is in Failure."

While Campfire Girls establish themselves on "Tell Me Hi" as a band that could not possibly be confused with either Failure or STP, Stone notes that he was aiming for that sound. "It was a conscious decision," Stone explains. "A lot of it had to do with working with Scott [Weiland]. He opened my ears ... it couldn't help but have an influence."

"I look at songwriting as a challenge," explains Stone. "To write a great song that can get on the radio is just as much of an art form as people who make noise. You have to make the decision; we want to make songs that people want to listen to over and over again. Marrying those two [pop music's catchiness and art-rock's integrity] is the challenge."

Christian Stone and the Campfire Girls make the most of their second chance with 'Tell Them Hi.'

Stone and the rest of the band prove they are more than up for the challenge. On "Day Before", a song written by Semple, Stone lets out a chorus of "do-do-do"s that, even as they're sung with so much weight, almost distract from the heavy air of the song, which is about being abandoned and falling apart.

"Junkman" is a perfect dark, brooding rock song. Although it sounds like something Alice in Chains could've made, it is one song not to be confused as a drug-struggle track. "I don't really like explaining my lyrics in most cases," Stone prefaces before explaining that this happens to be his most misunderstood song. "It's about a guy who used to live next door to us who used to beat up his wife and he used to have junk sales every year." The song describes the man putting on the front of charitable junk sales to mask his abusive behavior.

Despite recording what is one of the most exciting new releases of the year, Stone is still humble. On the day of the album's release Stone was with his friends, trying to go grocery shopping. "All the grocery worker's are on strike, we're all trying to find yellow pages," Stone said. "We all work to make ends meet. People at work were like, 'Christian doesn't your album come out this week?'"

Far from living the rock star life, Stone sounds happy when he said, "this [interview] is probably the most exciting thing I'll do today." When the interview is over Stone doesn't have any pseudo-intellectual deep thoughts about his music, in fact he wants to make sure he doesn't come off as an art-rock snob. "I just want to qualify that interviews are pretentious," Stone laughs. "It's really hard to talk about yourself without coming off pretentiously."

While "Tell Them Hi" is a matchless album, there are momenis that shine the brightest. On the track "Make It" the band seems to recognize just how much talent they have in their hands. Stone complains "Now they don't make the songs like the way that they used to / And you can wait so long if you find that you need to." The listener realizes that there is no wait necessary; "Tell Them Hi" is packed with great songs.

Campfire Girls have delivered the surprise album of the year; songs that will stick in your head for weeks, yet still maintain an original sound that is neither a carbon-copy of another band nor apt to be duplicated by lesser musicians. The band has been given a second chance in every sense of the word and they have fully taken advantage of it.

Media-shy poet laureate won't follow in predecessors' footsteps

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Critics praise Louise Gluck for wringing powerful emotions from simple language, and for poetry that resonates equally with experts and common readers who recognize her evocations of grief and loss, and of falling in and out of love.

But despite the accessibility of her work, America's new poet laureate is an intensely private person.

Gluck (pronounced "Glick") has made it clear to the Library of Congress, which appointed her and pays her privately endowed $35,000 stipend, that she won't be following in the footsteps of predecessors, who transformed the position into a kind of traveling salesman to promote the art.

The man she succeeded, Billy Collins, went on cross-country tours, got behind a program pushing schools to choose a poem a day for pupils to read, and has even recorded poetry selections for a Delta Airlines' In-flight audio channel. Robert Pinsky, Rita Dove and Robert Haas all took part in high-profile initiatives to promote poetry appreciation.

But many of her fellow poets say that role would never suit Gluck, and she should follow her own course.

"The poet laureate is very free to lead a poetry circus or stick to one's own knitting," said Collins. Said Pinsky, a close friend: "It's not a public relations job. It's not any kind of a job. It's an honor." The Library encourages laureates to craft the position in their own way, but limits its official duties. Gluck is scheduled to give her inaugural lecture at the Library this week and has events planned in February and May 2004. Jill Brett, the Library's director of communications, said Gluck has expressed an interest in programs to encourage young poets, though she had no specifics.

"Obviously, the idea of the poet laureateship is to have a wide variety of poetic styles represented and personal styles that go with those styles," she said. "She is a poet of unusual qualities and certainly is of a very high caliber. We're very delighted to have her."

Gluck declined to be interviewed, and during a brief telephone conversation, said she preferred not to act as an intermediary for readers' experience with her work.

"I have no concern with widening audience," she said, adding she prefers her audience "small, intense, passionate."

Born on Long Island, Gluck struggled with anorexia in her youth, but flourished under the teaching of Stanley Kunitz, himself a laureate, at Columbia.

"She was already marked for the virtues that continue to be demonstrated by her in her work, not only a command of the medium but a sense of time and history that gives her work a dimension beyond the personal," Kunitz said.

Gluck's nine books of poetry, including the 1992 Pulitzer Prize-winning "The Wild Iris," range across a variety of styles and settings – from Ancient Greece and the Old Testament to gardens. In topics from marriage to death, her evocations are often melancholy but beautifully nuanced and lyrical - with rhythm and punctuation often packing as much of the emotional punch as the words themselves.

"I don't find her work bleak," Pinsky said. "It cheers me up, because it makes me think there are fresh things to be said in the world."

From her earliest experience reading poetry as a child, "I preferred the simplest vocabulary," Gluck wrote in an essay "Education of the Poet," published in her 1994 book Proofs and Theories: Essays on Poetry. "What I responded to, on the page, was the way a poem could liberate, by means of a word's setting, through subtleties of timing, of pacing, that word's full and surprising range of meaning. It seemed to me that simple language best suited this enterprise."

Gluck has taught at numerous colleges and been married twice, most recently to John Dranow, a founder of the New England Culinary Institute in Vermont. She lives on a quiet Cambridge side street and commutes to her current teaching job at Williams College in Williamstown, clear across the state.

Those who know her describe her as serious and private.

"She has a temperament that requires, as most poets have found, a certain degree of solitude in which to do her work," Kunitz said. But Pinsky described her as witty and amusing, and an excellent teacher.

Stephen Burt, an assistant professor of English at Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., who has written on Gluck's work, welcomed her appointment.

"I think it's very good to have the next poet laureate be someone who's less focused on poetry as entertainment and more focused on poetry as a serious search for wisdom in language, on poetry as something that can have great difficulties and correspondingly great rewards," he said.

Said Pinsky: "It's very important that (the laureateship) be able to go to poets who aren't gregarious. Wouldn't it be horrible to think that a great poet wouldn't be selected to this post because she didn't want to go on television?"

Collins said what matters is that Gluck's body of work, which had already won nearly every other major poetry honor, deserved this one as well.

"There are so many kinds of poets," he said, noting the differences between Walt Whitman and Emily Dickinson, arguably two of America's greatest poets. "Whitman was outgoing, gregarious and self-promoting, and Dickinson stayed in her room. "But if you look back they are the two pillars of 19th century American poetry, and they each did it their own way."

Poet Laurete Louise Gluck will make a rare public appearance at the Library of Congress this week.

MondayOctober20

LECTURE

Well-known production designer Partizia von Brandenstein will speak at Smith College's Wright Hall. With credits such as "The Man on the Moon," "The People Vs. Larry Flint," "Shaft," and "A Chorus Line" to her name, von Brandenstein will discuss her accomplishments and explore the creative process that goes along with working in the film industry. The talk is at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

TuesdayOctober21

Music

The University of Massachusetts Jazz Lab Ensemble will perform tonight at Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored by the UMass Department of Music and the Residential Arts Program. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $3 for students.

ARTS

Augusta Savage Gallery, located in the New Africa House, will be showing the film "The Desert Is No Lady," an exploration of the Southwest from the perspective of nine different female artists. The film starts at 7 p.m. and is free.

WednesdayOctober22

Book

The Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley will host "An evening of Hispanic and Cuban Poetry: Espada and Guillen." UMass professor and nationally acclaimed writer Martin Espada will read from his new book "Alabanza," a collection of works with both political and poetic sensibility. Also reading will be Roberto Marquez, editor and translator, sharing the works of revered Cuban poet Nicolas Guillen. The event starts at 7 p.m. and is free.

ThursdayOctober23

MUSIC

Visiting artist Bertram Turetsky takes the stage of the Benanson Recital Hall tonight at 8 p.m. Turetsky, a world renown contra-bassist, will be joined by flutist Nancy Turetsky. Tickets are $3 for UMass students and $ 10 for the general public.

SaturdayOctober25

COMEDY

Tonight marks the third annual Northampton Women's Comedy Festival. The event, to be held at the Northampton Center for the Arts, features comics Tissa Hami, Betsy Golden, Linda Morgan, Jennifer Myszkowski and Boney T. Also appearing are the Villa Jidiots and The Dessert Singers. Host Kelsey Flynn kicks the show off at 8 p.m. Tickets are $12 at the door.

MUSIC

New York City's own bluegrass band, Big Apple'achia, hits Amherst tonight at 7:30 p.m., appearing at the Unitarian Meetinghouse, in the center of town. Opening will be local string band Few and Far Between. Tickets are $13 at the door or can be purchased in town at Stammell Stringed Instruments for $11.

SundayOctober26

MUSIC

Professor Laura Klock plays Bezanson Recital Hall tonight at 8 p.m. The accomplished horn player will be accompanied by UMass faculty members Nadine Shank and William Hite. The repertoire will consist of varied musical and cultural pieces. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public.

COURTESY UMASS ANTHROPOLOGY DEPARTMENT

A REAL HISTORY LESSON

Today an anthropology colloquium will be held on the 20th anniversary of the U.S. military invasion of Grenada in the West indies. The film "The Future Coming Towards Us" by John Douglas will be presented, and a discussion will follow with the filmmaker. Covered in the film are the reasons for Grenada's fall in 1983 while Maurice Bishop, above, was the Prime Minister. The event will be held at 3:45 p.m. in Machmer E14.

Capraro tips his hat

Continued from page 8

caught 14 times for 28 minutes. UMass clearly held the special teams advantage, scoring three power play goals and one short-handed tally.

"[Assistant Coach Bill Gilligan] generally runs the man-down, and I tried to keep it pretty much in line with what he'd do," Cahoon said. "I thought the kids killed penalties pretty effectively most of the night. And then the power play, we just made some changes yesterday, personnel-wise and setup-wise."

Gilligan was on the recruiting trail, and thus unable to run the penalty killing unit.

The first period was mostly back-and-forth, with neither team able to capitalize until the final minutes. The Minutemen broke the ice at 18:58 when Greg Mauldin found freshman Mark Matheson in the slot. Matheson slung a wrist shot that beat Ackley stick side, making it 1-0. Capraro picked up a secondary assist on the play.

Winer went mostly untested in the first period, although he made a strong stand against one SLU breakaway. The Saints didn't find the net until 2:14 of the third, when a scrum in Winer's crease ended with the puck bouncing off of the goaltender and in. Drew Bagnall was credited with the goal, which made it 5-1. Neither side scored for the remainder.

While Ackley took the loss, and let up four of UMass' five goals, he did manage a number of quality stops, including two quick ones on a breakaway by Tim Vitek, and the subsequent rebound. Mike McKenna stepped in for the third period, and allowed one goal on seven shots.

The game ended with more physicality, as a small skirmish erupted to the right of Winer's net. Cahoon rushed onto the ice to help break up the fracas, and ended up hitting the ice himself. The coach was uninjured, and successfully separated his players from the Saints on the ice.

UMass bounces back

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team was able to regain its composure after two heart-breaking losses in Ohio last weekend. The Minutemen (9-4-1, 3-2-1 Atlantic 10) propelled themselves to a pair of victories, yesterday against Fordham (2-9-1, 1-5-0 A-10), and Friday against La Salle (3-7-3, 1-4-0 A-10).

La Salle	0
UMass	1
Fordham	1
UMass	4

UMass cruised to a 4-1 win as they outshot the Rams 18-12 yesterday at Rudd Field. The weather made for tough playing conditions, as the rain came down steadily and the temperature hung in the low 40's.

"The wet field hurt us a little bit," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "A lot of balls that were played through were going out of bounds wouldn't have normally, which I think would have made it much different."

The game winner for the Minutemen came from senior co-captain Ptah Myers at the 62-minute mark. Myers rolled one past Fordham goalkeeper Stephen Faber off a pass from Dan Colwell for his second goal of the game.

UMass led 1-0 after a relatively mild first half as neither team posed much of a threat. Freshman Richard Higa was tackled inside the box, giving Myers, the Minutemen's leading scorer (nine goals, two assists, 20 points), a penalty shot, which he converted to give his team a slight edge.

Five minutes into the second half, senior Richard Engel headed one over UMass goalie Colin Burns off an assist from Riad Mehovic, tying the game at one.

"I think the one tough thing is that we gave up that one goal to tie it 1-1," Koch said, "but after that goal we started to play the way we need to play."

Although the Minutemen came up with three second-half goals, Koch wasn't impressed with his squad's intensity level.

"We have to play that way all the time and unfortunately we haven't. Once we got the lead again we sort of fell back into our shell and that's what we have to work on to make sure that doesn't happen anymore."

Thirteen minutes after Myers' goal, junior Oral Bullen recorded his sixth goal of the season. Ernie Billittier got the ball through to a sprinting Bullen, who was able to one-touch it past Faber upping the Minutemen's lead to two.

With just 55 seconds remaining in the game, freshman Ian O'Donnell recorded his first career goal off a well-placed corner from Billittier. O'Donnell headed the ball past Faber for the Minutemen's fourth tally, and Billittier's second assist of the game. UMass had nine corners in the contest to the Rams' one.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Senior Devlin Barnes makes a play during yesterday's game.

Burns has started the last five contests in goal for the Minutemen since freshman Nick Billman went down with an ankle injury on Oct. 3 against George Washington.

"We just go week by week," Koch said. "Billman could have come in if we needed him but he's still not a hundred percent, and we're pleased with Colin still."

Friday's match against La Salle proved to be a tougher battle for UMass than what was statistically expected. Still, the Minutemen eked out a 1-0 victory.

"We didn't play well, it wasn't a good game for us," Koch said. "We didn't play very intelligently, we made it more difficult than it needed to be and I don't know why...we didn't play with the intensity that was needed."

The Minutemen created numerous scoring opportunities for themselves, but due to blown shots, miscommunication and misplaced players, they were only able to convert on one.

"It's a game of creating the most chances you can and putting away as many as you can, and fortunately we put more away than they did."

The only goal of the game came with just two seconds left in the first half. Sophomore Tim Kitchell booted the ball up the field to freshman Michael Donnelly, who was able to thread the ball through to Myers. The senior slipped the ball to the left side past Explorer keeper Stash Graham.

The Explorers' offense picked up in the second half as they outshot UMass 11-6. Even with this surge in the La Salle offense, the Minutemen were able to escape without encountering any major threats.

The competition was a little rough, with 36 total fouls called. The referees handed out four yellow cards, with three going to different Explorers and one to UMass' Gabe Barnard.

More strong play from the UMass back line highlighted the Minutemen's win.

"[Craig Canavan] played well and Devlin Barnes played well," Koch said of his top defensive players. "I think it was a good effort by all of them in the backfield."

Canavan left yesterday's game early when an old injury began to give him trouble.

The
BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at
The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Nancy Cole
Karaoke 7-11
Monday Night Football

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 7-11

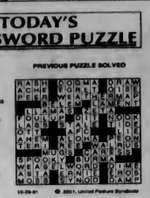
WEDNESDAY — Bill Arnold
DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ-DMAD

FRIDAY — Richard Mwandemand
DJ-Aquarius

SATURDAY — Jeans and T-Shirts

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

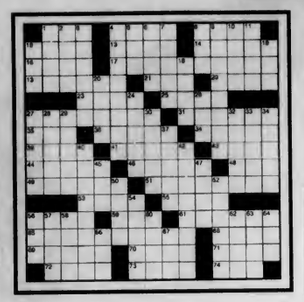


ATTENTION
UMass Amherst Sophomores, Juniors, & Seniors
We would like to invite you to participate in a group interview with 8 10 other students on the topic of student beliefs and values.
The researchers are offering $30 to each participant
The interview will take 1.5 2 hours of your time. Snacks will also be provided.
Monday,Oct. 27
1 3p or 3-5pm
151 Hills South Building
If you are interested in participating, please email Kati Szelenyi, szelenyi@ucla.edu. Please make sure to indicate which of the two sessions you would like to attend.

RAIN ENTERTAINMENT COMPLEX
COMING SOON!
A new two-story MASTERPIECE of nightclub design
Now accepting applications for the following positions:
Bartender, Barback, Cocktail Server, Cashier, Coatroom Attendant, Floor Staff, Door Security, Disc Jockey, Lighting Tech, Video Tech, Entertainers, Dancers
APPLY IN PERSON ONLY!
October 20, 21, & 22
5:00 - 8:00PM
10 Stearns Square
Downtown Springfield
(Formerly the Hot Club)

The Score is coming...

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 "Auction" end
4 Fall on — ears
8 Earth's satellite
13 Ehs or Hurton
15 Assuage (pain)
16 Sacramento pols
18 Basketball's Hakeem
19 Got in at the last moment
20 Positive aspect
21 Once named
22 Painted smears
23 Nicky Rosario
25 Jungle knives
27 Alley habitue
28 Finish cupcakes
30 Steak and pork
34 Selection
36 Sandwich go
41 Less damp
43 Coating of frost
44 Passing container
48 One-masted sailboat
49 Legal matter
50 Fuel source
51 Bleed-scented flower
53 Actor Danza
55 Where poi is served
56 Wreath locale
57 Bridge master
61 Drenched
65 Model's appointment
66 Ticket place
69 Makes docile
70 Mademoiselle's friend
71 Homely
72 "Porgy and —"
73 Air France destination
74 Bruce of kung fu

DOWN
1 Wyatt —
2 — our uses
3 Sailboat
4 Hot-dog topper
5 Dishwasherload
6 — de cologne
7 Org.
8 Honored
9 Khe's entrance
10 Ms. Merkel's predecessor
11 Low-fat spread
12 Finger part
13 Comedian Costello
18 Sault — Marie
22 Encounter
30 Dullard
24 Rips
26 Kind of story
27 Choo-choo
28 Oak product
29 Fragrant wood
30 Long pole
32 Nile city
33 Pinnacles
34 Nail Polish
35 Mass. capital
40 Lawn
42 Vigorously
43 Salt: Importance
44 High mountain
45 Tennessee
46 Ostrich
54 Internet search engine
58 Chicago
57 Moby Dick foe
58 Catcher's base
60 Transvaal
62 Baby
63 Gardner of mysteries
64 Susan of "L. A. Law"
66 WWII spy org.
67 Tanker cargo

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Mamou
- Southern Fried Steak
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 40

TUESDAY
- High: 62
- Low: 40

WEDNESDAY
- High: 52
- Low: 32

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR — Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN — Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR — Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR — Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF — Sarah Lloyd/ Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The black squirrel stole your UCard.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
See a penny, pick it up. Now your hands are dirty and you're still poor.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
That ex of yours is still thinking about you. Tell them off.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You'll never have better manic Monday.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't be such a sourpuss. Dunkin Donuts will sweeten you up.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The Red Sox may be over, but the Pats are just as fun to drink to.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have a face for radio, not TV. Stop whining about Real World callbacks.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You don't have to study; you are far too brilliant to fail.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be bold: try the DC's vegetarian Native American stew.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you sing, make sure no one else can hear it. You're hurting virgin ears.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you rescued a squirrel this weekend, it might just reward you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You look like a bag of hell. Get over it or smash the mirror.

Quote for the Day

"I don't question our existence. I just question our modern needs."

-Pearl Jam

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'Hero' Biologic Warrior who Deliberately Slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'Winning' the War. Style: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. Author: AC graduate, many past productions Venue/Actors: your choice Contact: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

X Productions and Mission 101 Entertainment Presents . . . Ladies night at Atlantis on Wednesday nights at 10pm All ladies get free admission before 11pm DJ Freddy-Fresh on the turntables An 18+ event Atlantis is located behind Antonios Pizza in Amherst Center.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom available in 2 bedroom apartment in Sunderland. On bus route $450/month. Cats allowed 11/1 413-478-9175

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

1995 Honda Accord Standard 125K Excellent Condition $4800.00 253-2740 Evenings

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

EMPLOYMENT

Make over $1000 a week many opportunities available - www.studentsource.net

Drivers and Kitchen Help Wanted Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

EMPLOYMENT

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FURNITURE

Moving Sale Patricia 413-529-9458

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker, and consumer? The Student Legal Services Office can help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRINGBREAK!

Spring Break - Sign up w/ Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A tip of the Cap

GERALD H. LINK/COLLEGIAN

Chris Capraro (No. 23) slips a puck under the stick of St. Lawrence goaltender Kevin Ackley during the second period of Saturday night's game. The first of two goals for Capraro Saturday, this nifty netter was the game winner for the Minutemen, who trumped the Saints 5-1 at the Mullins Center.

Capraro nets two as UMass downs SLU

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

From the day he began his career with the Massachusetts hockey team, Chris Capraro was highly touted, with expectations and an upside through the roof. Saturday night, he proved why.

The sophomore scored two goals, including the game winner, and added an assist as the Minutemen defeated St. Lawrence, 5-1 in a penalty-laden affair at the Mullins Center.

Capraro netted the clincher at 5:15 of the second period. Tim Vitek circled around the net and flipped a pass to the Medford, Mass. native, who slipped past goaltender Kevin Ackley and scored on a point-blank shot to make it 2-0 for his first goal of the season.

St. Lawrence	1
UMass	5

"There's not a lot of guys playing at the highest level of hockey that see the ice the way he sees the ice," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

Capraro was also a big influence on the power play. After the Minutemen put together organized perimeter play, Marvin Degon held at the point, then slid a wrister towards the net, and Capraro stuck his stick out, tipping the puck over Ackley's shoulder and in, to make it 4-0 UMass.

Thomas Pöck scored his third goal of the season after some nifty puck movement from the forward line of Capraro, Vitek, and Stephen Werner. Capraro ended up with the biscuit to Ackley's right, and hit Pöck just inside the blue line, where he fired a wrister glove high.

"We're starting to gel a little more, the lines got changed up, and we played pretty well out there tonight," said Capraro, who along with Pöck is creating a formidable tandem thus far — the two hooked up for a similar goal in Massachusetts' 3-2 win over UMass Lowell last Saturday. "It seemed like we were clicking a little more, and any time I see Tommy with the puck, I know he's looking for me and I'm looking right back. He's a shooter and I'm a passer."

Capraro also benefited from new linemates. He and Greg Mauldin switched up, putting Mauldin on a line with James Solon and Providence transfer John Luscz, while Capraro took the left wing slot alongside Tim Vitek and Stephen Werner.

In all, 30 penalties were called for a total of 60 minutes, though the final eight infractions were called after a post-horn scrap. Sixteen penalties were called on the Saints for 32 minutes, and the Minutemen were made up tonight. We had two guys who could virtually fly on each line and with guys who could complement them, and I thought that really helped us in the end too."

Continued on page 6

New lines yield results

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team made a few adjustments to its lineup for Saturday night's contest against St. Lawrence. The biggest shuffle made was splitting up the first line of Stephen Werner, Greg Mauldin, and Tim Vitek. They decided to move Mauldin to form a line with James Solon and John Luszcz, and replace Mauldin with Chris Capraro.

The new alignment worked in Capraro's favor, as he put on a show for the Mullins Center faithful.

UMass coach Don Cahoon said balance was the major goal in the shift.

"We had talked about this lineup a couple weeks ago. [Assistant coach] Bill Gilligan and I had made changes earlier in the week and I watched them in practice for a couple of days and I didn't like what I saw," he said. "And Bill doesn't even know that we shifted into this gear, this was supposed to be a gear that we were going to shift into a couple weeks from now."

The move benefited all four of the Minutemen lines. Even the third (Obi Aduba, Mike Warner, Stephen Jacobs) and fourth lines (Kevin Jarman, Peter Trovato, Garret Summerfield) had serious scoring threats within them, albeit the biggest change was separating Mauldin and Werner.

"I think the way we mixed and matched the personnel, splitting up Werner and Mauldin helped us a little bit," Cahoon said. "I felt that we had better speed on all four lines the way we turned to the speed of the college game now."

Around two minutes later, Capraro added an assist. Thomas Pöck set up a give-and-go play with Capraro. Capraro fed the pass perfectly to Pöck who put it top-shelf glove side on Ackley.

With around four minutes to go in the second period, Capraro added one more goal on the power play. Marvin Degon fired the pass in front of the net, which Capraro redirected for the goal.

Capraro's three-point night puts him second in points on the roster, just behind Pöck. The two are tied for the team lead in assists with four each.

"The first [goal] was good because I have a little bit more poise with the puck now," Capraro said. "The second one was kind of lucky, I just threw my stick out."

Said Pöck, "I've never seen Chris score a bad goal. I watched him in high school hockey too; they're all nice, too nice."

GERALD H. LINK/COLLEGIAN

Rich Demers breaks for the open during UMass' 27-22 win over Hofstra Saturday. Demers, a castaway from UMass Lowell's disbanded football program, rushed for 139 yards on 28 carries, and caught five passes for 21 yards.

Demers rolls again

Transfer is key as UM beats Pride

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team may not have had as much at stake as its opponent, the Hofstra Pride, yesterday, but it certainly didn't play that way. The Minutemen downed the Pride 27-22 in front of 7,323 at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

UMass Lowell transfer Rich Demers notched his second straight 100-yard rushing game, racking up 139 yards on 28 carries to lead UMass past the visitors. The game qualified as an Atlantic 10 contest for Hofstra only, and was a "miss" in A-10 scheduling parlance for the Maroon and White.

Hofstra	22
UMass	27

The Pride drops to 1-6 in the A-10 (1-4 overall), while the Minutemen improve to 6-1 on the season. They're perfect against Atlantic 10 teams, though only four of the five wins count towards conference standings.

Demers' pounding running style was the hallmark for UMass' game Saturday, but it was the air attack that produced the winning margin. Jeff Krohn found Dominique Stewart for a 28-yard touchdown pass with 6:54 left in the third quarter to put the Minutemen up 27-15.

Although a 2-yard reception by Hofstra wide receiver Isaac Irby cut the deficit to five, the Pride misfired throughout the fourth quarter, and UMass held the edge until the final gun. Amherst native James Ihedigbo mirrored his performance against Maine on Sept. 20 when he picked off Hofstra's Andrew English to give the Minutemen the ball with around a minute remaining, effectively sealing the deal.

"Just another UMass 2003 game, it just seems like it doesn't change," UMass coach Mark Whipple said. "I'd like to think it's not going to be this way, but as long as we keep getting more points than our opponent, it's going to be a good Saturday night."

The opening drives for both teams were high-flying affairs. Lorenzo Perry brought the opening kickoff back 34 yards to start the Minutemen on their own 41, where they struggled to make a first down. Then, on fourth-and-2 at midfield, Anton McKenzie got the ball up the middle, and took it 31 yards. UMass brought it down to the Hofstra 5-yard line, where Rich Demers pounded it in to take the early 6-0 lead.

Hofstra followed up on the next drive with a four play, 80-yard drive capped off by a pass from English to Isaac Irby for the tying touchdown. Both kickers missed their extra point attempts, though, locking the game at six midway through the first quarter.

UMass was stopped on its next drive, and the Pride followed up with a long drive that reached all the way to the goal line, before two consecutive false starts relegated it to a field goal.

"We just started off really slow on defense, we looked really slow," Whipple said, "and we talked about it, so we have to do something better there. We just shoot ourselves in the foot. The defense certainly turned the ball over enough for the offense in the red zone, and the offense didn't come up when it had to."

The Minutemen were 2-for-4 inside the 20, while Hofstra scored all three times it got within range.

Although the running game produced 180 yards for UMass Saturday, quarterback Jeff Krohn had a solid day (20-for-41, 225 yards, no interceptions), a point not lost on Pride coach Joe Gardi.

"They picked on our corners, and I'd pick on our corners too, they have to grow up, they're young guys," Gardi said. "They did a great job of attacking our corners with outs and things of that nature…Their quarterback's outstanding, and I think we had trouble in the first half with fourth-down conversions, we gave some of those up, and that's embarrassing as a head coach. It should be embarrassing for your football team to know they will try to convert fourth downs.

Demers hit the century mark again Saturday, but the play that got him to 100 yards was probably one he'd like to forget. As he was being brought down, he fumbled the ball, and the Pride scooped it up to set up a five play, 41-yard drive that culminated in the 2-yarder to Irby, who sneaked inside the pylon to make it 27-22 UMass with 1:39 left in the third quarter.

Torres struggled for much of the game, missing an extra point and two field goals that were well within his range during the first half. As a result of Torres' uncharacteristic slump, Whipple went for seven fourth down conversions, succeeding on five. Demers was often the go-to player in those situations, and thrived in the role.

"It's just like every other down, you have to get the yardage," Demers said. "It's just on fourth down that it's a little bigger, whether you turn it over or not."

The Minuteman defense and special teams were at full speed early, with a forced fumble by Serge Tikum picked up by Charlie Walker, and an interception on the next Hofstra drive by Tracy Belton that set up a Rich Demers touchdown, making It 20-9 UMass with 9:42 left in the half.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 34

Muhammad makes his case to jury

MARTIN SMITH/BOLTS ENG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Acting as his own attorney, sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad addresses the jury as he delivers his opening argument. Prince William County bailiff Jack Fulmore watches during his trial at the Virginia Beach Circuit Court in Virginia Beach, Va., yesterday,

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad won the right to serve as his own lawyer yesterday in a surprise, last-minute request at his murder trial, then broke a year of stony silence with a rambling opening statement in which he assured the jury: "I had nothing to do with these crimes."

It was not clear why Muhammad decided to fire his lawyers, who will serve as standby counsel in the first trial to come out of last year's sniper spree. Just last week, Muhammad told the judge that he was satisfied with his attorneys.

Muhammad's decision to represent himself in the death penalty case means he could end up cross-examining his accusers, perhaps survivors of the shootings, maybe even fellow suspect Lee Boyd Malvo, who was in the courtroom for about two minutes yesterday to allow a prosecution witness to identify him.

It also could mean jurors will hear some unconventional questioning from the defense. For instance, Muhammad asked an expert witness Monday, "Have you ever seen me shoot anyone?" In his 20-minute opening statement, Muhammad said nothing about the shootings except to deny involvement.

"I know what happened. I know what didn't happen. They're basing what they said about me on a theory. If we monitor [the evidence] step by step, it will all show I had nothing to do with these crimes," he told the jury.

Muhammad, 42, is charged in the slaying of Dean Harold Meyers, a 53-year-old Vietnam veteran who was gunned down outside a northern Virginia gas station last October. He was the seventh victim in a three-week shooting spree that left 10 people dead in Virginia, Maryland and Washington, D.C.

Muhammad and Malvo, 18, were arrested last Oct. 24 at a highway rest stop in Maryland. Prosecutors have said the shootings were part of a plot to extort $10 million from the government.

Prosecutors say Malvo has made several statements to police and jail guards in which he confessed involvement in many of the attacks. But Muhammad barely spoke to investigators, and offered only terse, one-word answers to questions in many pretrial hearings.

Muhammad spoke at length during his opening statement about the nature of truth, saying at one point, "Jesus said, 'Ye shall know the truth.'" He also said he hopes to be found innocent "by the grace of Allah."

"There's three truths. The truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I always thought there was just one truth," he said. "The facts should help us identify what's a lie, what's not a lie."

He also spoke about his children, whom he said he "loves very much."

He said he once punished his daughter for eating chocolate cookies, only to find out later that the daughter had not disobeyed him. Similarly, he said, he is being persecuted by authorities who do not know the truth behind the sniper spree.

Muhammad asked the jury to pay close attention to the facts because "my life and my son's life is on the line," apparently a reference to Malvo. Muhammad and Malvo, 18, are not related, but have referred to each other as father and son.

Later, a Manassas bank employee, Linda Thompson, testified she saw Muhammad and Malvo outside her bank, near the shooting scene, shortly before Meyers was killed. Prosecutors brought in Malvo, in an orange jumpsuit, for the woman to identify.

Muhammad asked the woman why she thought the two were suspicious.

"Was it because we was black that you remember us?" he asked.

She denied that race was an issue.

Associated Press writer Sonja Barisic contributed to this report.

Lobby Day may help rally funds

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

More than 100 faculty and staff from the Massachusetts public higher education system are expected to lobby tomorrow at Beacon Hill in Boston in an effort to have their nearly three-year-old contracts funded.

In addition to going to the statehouse, the Massachusetts Society of Professors is launching a "Virtual Lobby Day" tomorrow. Faculty, staff and students will be writing, emailing and calling the legislators all on the same day.

"We are trying to follow the ways of a lot of other national campaigns," said Max Page, an associate professor of architecture and history and the Secretary of the Massachusetts Society of Professors. "We've done a lot of pushing. We are desperately calling on faculty and staff to get on the bus on Wednesday."

The contracts, which cover 13,000 higher education employees, have been not been funded since July 2001.

"Thirteen thousand higher education employees, not just from the University of Massachusetts Amherst but from Lowell and Dartmouth signed a contract and [the House of Representatives] just decided they wouldn't pay it," Page said.

Page also mentioned that most of the people who are covered by these contracts are support staff.

"One of the key things to note is that out of the 13,000 people I mentioned, 10,000 is staff who don't make much money anyway. They don't receive a dime of raise," he said. The majority of the support staff makes less than $30,000 a year.

Page also mentioned that while the price of health insurance and housing is rising in Massachusetts, the workers have not received appropriate financial support to cope with these problems.

In the fall of 2001, acting Governor Jane Swift sent more than two-dozen collective bargaining agreements with higher education unions to the legislature. Although there wasn't a vote taken to the House floor, in December of 2001 the Senate voted 35-0 to fund the contracts. In May of 2002, the contracts were added as an amendment to the House version of the state budget and passed by a vote of 139-12. One month later, by a vote of 37-0, the Senate added the contracts to its version of the state budget.

In July 2002, Swift vetoed funding for the contracts and the veto was never overridden.

According to Page, over two-thirds of the House of Representatives are in support of funding the contracts.

"That's a majority. That means that even if the governor vetoes it, it could still be passed," he said.

Organizers of Lobby Day argue that the state has a moral responsibility to honor its commitments.

"They have to honor a contract," Page said. "For example, they buy police cars from General Motors and of course they pay. It's the same thing."

Lobbyists also advocate that funding the contracts is important to maintain a high-quality faculty and staff and to attract more workers with the offering of competitive salaries.

Public higher education is the key to the state's economic future, they say, arguing that more than 75 percent of public higher education graduates become Massachusetts' workers and taxpayers.

Buses will leave for Boston from the Haigis Mall at 8 a.m. tomorrow. To reserve a seat or for more information, call 545-2206.

Professor set to speak on 'Einstein's Biggest Blunder'

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Professor Lawrence Krauss, department head of physics at Case Western Reserve University, will give a talk at the University of Massachusetts tomorrow. The lecture is called "Einstein's Biggest Blunder, A Cosmic Mystery Story." This lecture is part of the Five College's Colloquium: What's New in Physics?

Krauss will be speaking on cosmology, which is the study of the history of the universe.

A brief history: In 1915, Einstein created the general theory of relativity. The theory describes the motion of objects in the universe and the motion of the universe itself. The theory stated that the universe was not only expanding, but it was expanding with acceleration. The term that described this acceleration was the "cosmological constant." However, according to public observation, Einstein's theory did not appear to make sense. He called this problem his "biggest blunder" and removed the constant.

However, over the last 10 years, scientists have made observations that may prove the Cosmological Constant to be correct. Through the use of telescopes, satellites and mathematical interpretation, it appears that the universe may, in fact, be expanding outward at an accelerated speed. The source of the phenomenon is the result of some anti-gravity force, which is still a huge mystery to scientists. Physicists and astronomers have observed this cosmological event by measuring the speeds at which stars are moving away from the Earth, as well as by observing the low levels of radiation — or microwaves — that pervade the universe.

"People have generally agreed that the universe is expanding because the world started with an explosion," John Machta, head of the University of Massachusetts physics department, said. "But they also thought that gravity would slow it down." If this data is correct, a 20-year-old cosmology model will be replaced by an entirely new theory. If Einstein's Cosmological Constant is true, it may even suggest that the most of the energy density of the universe may be held in space.

Professor Krauss is one of the most distinguished theoretical physicists in the country. His research interests involve cosmology, high energy physics and elementary particle physics. Among his other interests are exploding stars, dark matter and the early universe.

Krauss is well known for his best-selling book "The Physics of Star Trek." The book examines the technology of the Star Trek television series and explains what aspects of the episodes are possible by the laws of physics and which are not.

Krauss will speak on Wednesday, Oct. 22, in Thompson 104, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Fall foliage colors Pioneer Valley

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

The period of peak foliage color may be nearing an end, but now is the time to catch it while you can.

According to the Massachusetts Office of Travel and Tourism, much of the Pioneer Valley is still at its peak coloration, though some spots are beyond peak and others still contain green. The Berkshires have already experienced significant leaf dropping, but some areas in central Massachusetts, including Worcester County, are also at peak color.

According to the MOTT, foliage period begins at about mid- to late-September and ends in mid- to late-October.

Bernard Rubinstein, professor emeritus of biology at the University of Massachusetts, said one of the main factors for change in leaf color is day length, which shortens at the same rate every year, meaning that we can expect leaves to reach their peak coloration at about the middle of October.

Matthew Kelty, associate professor of forestry at UMass, noted that this year's foliage period has been close to normal in terms of leaf color, though it may have been slightly more yellow and less reddish than in previous years.

According to Kelty, autumn this year was both warmer and wetter than usual, which allowed the leaves to function longer, delaying the colorful foliage.

"Because the leaves were healthy and more vigorous, that meant that the chlorophyll didn't break down as early and it stayed green for a longer period," Kelty said. "That little extra warmth and rainfall just delayed it for a few days … As Autumn comes on, the chlorophyll degrades, that's why you can see yellow in generally any leaf."

Chlorophyll is what makes the leaf function during the process of photosynthesis, he said. As day length becomes shorter and the weather gets colder, the leaf's chlorophyll breaks down and its yellow pigment, which is normally dominated by the more intense green, becomes visible.

According to Kelty, green and yellow pigments can be found in any leaf's chloroplasts all year long. But he added that some trees produce red, orange, or purplish leaf color.

"It depends on the species and the general vigor of the tree as to how red it gets," he said. "There are variations among the individual trees of each species. Not every sugar maple looks the same."

According to Kelty, the red maple got its name due to the fact that it's leaves turn brilliantly red during foliage season. The hickory is an example of a tree that's leaves turn only yellow.

According to Dr. John O'Keefe, coordinator of The Fisher Museum at Harvard Forest, last year was the latest foliage display of 11 seasons on record. O'Keefe, who has done extensive research on autumn color change, said last year was unusually warm through September and October. According to him, the weather this autumn was just as warm and it looked like the foliage was going to last late, but an early cold streak at the start of October sped up the process.

According to O'Keefe, this year's foliage period started four to five days later than the average on record. He said one reason that the brilliance of the peak was reduced is that it was particularly windy last week. He said if it wasn't for the stormy weather that blew many of the transforming leaves off the trees, the peak foliage period could have been a week or more later.

According to Kelty, the window of opportunity to enjoy the vibrant colors of foliage is closing because beginning in November, most leaves will have turned brown.

According to the MOTT, peak foliage area driving routes in the Pioneer Valley are Route 9 through Amherst and Hadley, Route 202 through Pelham and New Salem and Route 10 through Northfield. Routes in central Massachusetts include Route 9 along Brookfield, Route 148 along the Quaboag River and Routes 32 and 32A through the towns of Hardwick, Petersham, Oakham and Barre.

Russians deliver crew to space station safely

By Vladmir Isachenkov
Associated Press

MOSCOW (AP) — A Russian spacecraft filled in for the second time since U.S. shuttle program was grounded this year after the Columbia disaster, delivering a three-man crew yesterday to the International Space Station.

A top Russian space official warned, however, that funding problems could jeopardize future missions.

American Michael Foale, Russia's Alexander Kaleri and Spain's Pedro Duque entered the space station after the autopilot docking of their spacecraft, two days after the Soyuz blasted off from Kazakhstan.

Applause broke out at Russia's Mission Control Center just outside Moscow after the docking.

"I congratulate all our partners on this spectacular success today," said William Readdy, NASA's head of human spaceflight, at a news conference.

The docking went flawlessly despite a minor malfunction in the Soyuz engine's pipeline system that was spotted Sunday. The glitch prompted Russian flight controllers to switch to a backup system for the docking, said Yuri Semyonov, director of RKK Energiya, the company that builds Russian spacecraft.

Readdy, a veteran of three shuttle missions, told The Associated Press the glitch was "nothing serious."

Since Columbia disintegrated while returning to Earth on Feb. 1, the U.S. manned space program has been on hold, leaving Russia's non-reusable Soyuz capsules as the only means for getting crew to and from the station. Russia's unmanned Progress spaceships also ferry supplies to the ISS.

Earlier this year, Russian space officials urged NASA and the European Space Agency to help fund the Soyuz capsules' construction, but they also reminded Moscow of its earlier pledge to conduct several crew rotations.

The Russian government has finally promised to build the ships independently, but Semyonov complained yesterday it had failed to deliver the promised funds. He said that Energiya was forced to borrow money to build spacecraft this year and had to freeze assembly of the spacecraft for future missions.

"The financial situation is catastrophic," Semyonov said. He lashed out at the Americans and the Europeans, saying that they "stood aside while Russia was carrying the entire burden alone."

Nikolai Moiseyev, first deputy director of the Russian space agency Rosaviakosmos, said that the government would come up with the necessary funds shortly.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 3
SOX OFF
RIOTERS CREATED NEGATIVE SPORTS SPIRIT AT UMASS
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
ROOTS
BURNING SPEAR TO PLAY NOHO TONIGHT
SPORTS PAGE 8
MINUTEMEN WIN
BASKETBALL POSTS VICTORY AT GW
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundos
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Mackenzie
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Business Editor Molly Eggleston
Managing Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Besuchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Manager Sandra Marquet
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ramer
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Assistant Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erica Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Morrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year, operating on advertising revenue and subscriptions. It was founded in 1890, the paper began as a weekly and became the Collegian News and the Weekly Collegian. In 1936, published twice weekly. The Collegian has been published since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call Classifieds between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Email threat reported at JQA

Cross-campus disturbance results in multiple arrests

police log

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Saturday, Oct. 11

1:42 a.m. A party reported asking a group of 20 people to leave the Mullins Center. The party reported that the group refused to leave and requested assistance. Officers escorted three subjects to the hotel and three others were picked up by their parents.

3:06 a.m. A caller reported two males climbing onto the roof of Worcester Dining Commons. The responding officer reported that three or four people were on the roof retrieving a Frisbee.

9:41 a.m. A party reported two laptops missing, believed to be stolen, from his office at the School of Management. A second caller later reported her laptop stolen as well.

10:26 a.m. A spoiler was reported stolen from a car in Lot 44 near Sylvan residential area.

Sunday, Oct. 12

10:36 a.m. A report was received of a baby locked in a room at North Village Apartments. The weekend apartment manager reported calling housing maintenance to get someone to open the door; services were rendered.

1:27 p.m. A caller reported her key stolen from the School of Management; a report was taken.

5:17 p.m. A party stated that he had located some new evidence of attempted break-ins at the School of Management.

Monday, Oct. 13

12:39 a.m. A party reported that there were four males smoking marijuana and throwing rocks at the windows in the Cance courtyard. The responding officer reported speaking with one individual; a report was unfounded.

5:46 p.m. A party reported that his wife had heard a noise in their apartment in North Village and that an unknown subject ran from the apartment. No entry occurred and nothing was taken, but the door was partially open.

Tuesday, Oct. 14

3:56 a.m. A party reported a verbal argument with a visiting friend in James Hall. The officer reported that the argument had escalated into a shoving match. The guest was asked to leave and was transported to Hadley until she could contact her parents for a ride.

2:32 p.m. A caller reported he believed that someone had just taken a book off the shelf and sold it back to the Textbook Annex. A report was taken.

9:08 p.m. An officer reported detecting a strong odor of marijuana emanating from a room in John Quincy Adams Hall. The subjects opened the door to the room and no illegal substances were found. One subject, Daniel Vanheyningen, 27, of 461 Columbia Rd., Dorchester, Mass., was arrested on active warrants.

9:09 p.m. A resident assistant reported a swastika painted on the 6th floor stairwell in John Quincy Adams Hall. The responding officer reported finding and removing the swastika.

9:40 p.m. Police responded to an odor of marijuana in John Adams Hall. The officer advised there was an odor of pasta cooking.

Wednesday, Oct. 15

1:32 a.m. A party reported that a group between Brett and Brooks Halls were making a lot of noise and hitting vehicles with tennis balls. An officer reported that an area check was negative.

3:21 p.m. A caller reported having a verbal argument with a subject in Whitmore, then later finding her vehicle parked in Lot 71 vandalized.

8:24 p.m. Student Security reported a fire in the Orchard Hill Bowl. Security later called back and reported the fire extinguished and that a subject had ran into the woods in a northwest direction. A report was taken.

Thursday, Oct. 16

6:35 a.m. Officers served a warrant in Van Meter Hall. David Foster, 20, of 3 Acorn Lane, Cumberland, Me., was charged with possession of a Class D substance and intent to distribute a Class D substance.

9:40 p.m. Arrested during the Southwest disturbance were: John Beggan, 21, of 187 Plain St., Pembroke, Mass., for disorderly conduct; Peter Hutchings, 18, of 95 Mattapoisett Neck City St., Mattapoisett, Mass., for disorderly conduct and failing to disperse, in a riot; Nicholas Mitchell, 18, of 3 Antassawamock Rd., Mattapoisett, Mass., for disorderly conduct and failing to disperse from a riot; Joseph Gelinas, 18, of 611 South St., Dalton, Mass., for inciting a riot, disorderly conduct and failing to disperse in a riot; Matthew Falcone, 19, of 101 Linden St., Winchendon, Mass., for disorderly conduct; Jonathan Cohen of 37 Highland St., Sharon, Mass., for failing to disperse in a riot; Timothy O'Neill, 18, of 125 Summer Ave., Reading, Mass., for disorderly conduct and failing to disperse in a riot; Jared Sinkwich, 29, of 54 Pomeroy Lane, Amherst, Mass., for disorderly conduct and failing to disperse in a riot; Harold Galpin, 19, of 104 Green St., Rockland, Mass., for disorderly conduct; Evan Meyer, 18, of 188D Warner Hill Rd., Charlemont, Mass., for disorderly conduct and mistreating a police dog; Erik Drauschke, 21, of 77 Libby Ave., Reading, Mass., for unlawful possession of fireworks, disorderly conduct, failing to disperse in a riot and inciting a riot; Wesley Culinane, 20, of 58 Anson Rd., Concord, Mass., for disorderly conduct and failing to disperse in a riot; Kenneth Petkunas 18, of 221 South Main St., Sherborn, Mass., for inciting a riot, failing to disperse in a riot and disorderly conduct; and Brandon Hom 22, of 50 Meadows St., Unit 8, Amherst, Mass., for disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and misdemeanor malicious destruction of property.

Friday, Oct. 17

12:20 a.m. A caller reported between two and four people yelling, breaking fencing and throwing debris at cars near Wheeler Hall. An officer advised that a single person took two fence posts out of the ground.

12:26 a.m. Emergency Health and Safety reported that they found major damage to the Thoreau Hall smoke alarm system. All the smoke detectors were torn out of the wall and there was no working smoke detector service on the floor. They reported that Simplex was called and was attempting to get a fire watch for the building.

1:14 a.m. An officer requested assistance from the Amherst Fire department because someone threw an accelerant on the ground and lit it on Massachusetts Ave. The fire was extinguished and it was reported that two 40-oz. beer bottles were filled with some kind of accelerant and later thrown in the bushes.

7:20 a.m. Two vehicles were reported damaged in Lot 52. The first vehicle had two front windows shattered and the second vehicle had the passenger side mirror broken off.

8:39 p.m. Officers checking subjects in Lot 22 arrested Nicholas Viaggio 19, of 51 Cook Rd., Vineyard Haven, Mass., for possession of a Class D substance and being a minor in possession of alcohol; and Andrew Goyer 20, of 7 Depot St., Southwick, Mass., for being a minor in possession of alcohol.

10:31 p.m. A party reported her car stolen from Lot 12. Her vehicle was entered into the computer tracking system as stolen.

'W' drop deadline

Monday, Oct. 27 is the last day for undergraduates and Continuing Education students to drop a course with a "W." Dropping a course with a "W" will have no adverse impact on a student's cumulative average.

Students should consult their academic dean for advice and procedures to follow. Students who have not chosen a major yet should go to Pre-Major Advising Services in 615 Goodell. Students must be aware prior to making decisions that they must carry 12 credits for financial aid and health insurance purposes.

— Ferron Salniker

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

EDITORIAL OPINION

Airport security: reform is underway

Nathaniel Heatwole, a college student at Guilford College in Greensboro, N.C., is waiting for a Maryland court to decide whether he will be charged with a felony for smuggling illegal items onto two Southwest Airlines jets last September.

Box cutters, bleach, modeling clay molded to look like explosives, and matches were among the items that Heatwole was able to smuggle aboard jets at Baltimore-Washington and Raleigh-Durham airports in his own experimental test of the nation's airport security systems.

The bags containing these items also held notes explaining what was in the bags and when they had been carried aboard the cabin. One bag had been smuggled onto a jet on Sept. 12 and the other on Sept. 15, almost two years to the day of the 9/11 terrorist attacks. The bags were hidden in compartments in the rear lavatory of the planes.

Heatwole even went as far as to email the Transportation Security Administration, stating that he had information concerning public safety leaks at certain airports. He had gone through normal security checks, and even carried a few of the items as carry-on. The in-depth emails gave location, flight number, and even Heatwole's name and telephone number.

The student's actions elicited the search of over 7,000 aircraft. He has not yet been arrested, but may be facing a charge that carries a possible 10-year jail sentence: bringing dangerous weapons onto an aircraft.

"The e-mail author ... stated that he was aware his actions were against the law and that he was aware of the potential consequences for his actions, and that his actions were an 'act of civil disobedience with the aim of improving public safety for the air-traveling public,'" an FBI affidavit said.

Heatwole's actions may prove to be a driving force in the reform of airport safety. A political science major, Heatwole has gained national attention by making his views on public safety issues public. He may be the wakeup call that our government needs.

The Massachusetts ally Collegian does not advocate that in order gain recognition of personal beliefs, one should consider breaking the law. The Collegian believes that by this demonstration of his beliefs, Heatwole is a motivational hero for our generation. His knowledge and observations of the lacking airport security will help officials close an enormous gap in a country where security checks miss one in four guns brought onto a plane, and have recovered 1.4 million knives and 40,000 box cutters.

Disturbingly, Congress has already pushed for U.S. airports to cut over 6,000 jobs of airport security personnel over the next five months. These cuts would namely affect the staff that does the luggage screening and baggage checks. If the government continues to have its way, only 18 to 20 U.S. airports will receive the phenomenal funds they need to install bomb-detecting machines.

Clearly, if a man like Heatwole can smuggle weapons and "explosives" onto a jet, and even inform the TSA of his intentions without being immediately caught, there is no doubt that anyone — terrorist or not — could sneak dangerous cargo onto a plane at anytime. The end result could have unthinkable repercussions.

Heatwole's demonstration was not a cry for attention or self-indulgence; it was the act of an American citizen demonstrating his beliefs. His acts demonstrated not only courage, but they portrayed a new version of an American hero. In the war on terrorism, many of the battles will be fought on our own soil. Nathaniel Heatwole is an inspiration here on the home front.

Information for this editorial was. used from www.usatoday.com and www.foxnews.com.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Letter to the Editor

Ever wonder why, every time you sit in the Dining Commons, you sit with people or peers who look just like you? Are you being prejudiced or discriminating against others? Is this segregation or do you just feel comfortable where you are sitting?

The Civil Rights Movement of the 1950s and 1960s was driven by the cruelties of segregation, and a diverse group of people came together to abolish the evils of inequality.

But today we see that even though it is illegal to forcibly separate a people based on race, creed or color, at the UMass Dining Commons students self-segregate to sit with others who look like them and come from similar cultural backgrounds.

When minorities bunch up at one or two close tables at the D.C., it's not because they hate, but because when it's time to eat, it's time to be relaxed, comfortable, and to be correct only in your space. Just like when the whites sit at the same table — it's the same concept.

There is nothing wrong with self-segregation. To many people, including myself, home is your people. The comfort zone is with your people. Your safe space is, most times, with your people no matter where you came from. When being with your own people, you don't have to worry about being politically correct. You don't have to feel the need to compete.

For example, in New York, if you want to immerse yourself in the Latino culture, hit up Harlem or Spanish Harlem. If you want to visit a place where hip-hop and R&B could be the genre of music, go to Crookiyn, better known as Brooklyn, where many black people live. For great Italian home-cooked meals, stop by Little Italy. Are these people indicating to us that they are apparently having serious issues with one another? No, but they do have a sense of home.

UMass also has dorm spaces that are separated to provide the same kind of atmosphere that was created by the students. We call them SIRPs (Special Interest Residential Programs). We have the Native American floor in Chadbourne Dorm in Central residential area, the Harambee floor in the Coolidge Dorm in Southwest, and we know that the Asian population dominates in the Northeast living area. Those are only some; there are more.

I do sit with others at the D.C., and I do meet different people all the time. UMass is a great place to get to know others and learn about other life experiences while building alliances to better help our tomorrow or just to advance in life. But every now and then I still just want to feel at home.

Astariea Martin
UMass student

Taking back a season

Dan Lamothe

Dear Boston Red Sox:

I'd like to say thank you. Thank you for giving me the best season of Red Sox baseball in my entire life.

There. I said it. It sounds too simple, too stupid and too plain for me to say it. It's obvious for anyone that knows me, given that I've been a Red Sox fan since little league, and that I have a Sox cap on my head nearly every day of the year, with at least five different color hats to choose from.

But I need to say it. Because as horrific as this will sound to any true Red Sox fan, my overwhelming emotion early Friday morning for the Red Sox wasn't despair, or sadness. My final response to their loss to the Yankees was a huge sigh of relief.

The last few months are a time that no fan of Red Sox baseball will ever forget. For everything that goes with being a few outs short of making a World Series — second-guessing Grady Little, wondering why Nomar disappeared during the playoffs, and questioning the immortality of Pedro Martinez, among them — nothing can change that fact.

But at the University of Massachusetts, the games changed the way we live. Win or lose, many students on campus dreaded game nights for the Red Sox because of the chaos afterwards. And sadly, the further the Red Sox-Yankees series dragged on, the more I became one of them.

There have been four major post-game disturbances since Oct. 4, for those of you counting. Each time, hundreds of students who want no part of the action had no choice but to be involved. Fire alarms pulled during the disturbances emptied hundreds of unsuspecting students into courtyards filled with drunks throwing rocks at riot police armed with pepperball guns. All they could hope is that they didn't get caught in the crossfire. Thursday night's drama was no different: it even included serious vandalism to the fire alarm system in Thoreau Hall, an inexplicable choice for destruction.

As can probably be expected, Massachusetts Daily Collegian reporters were dragged into the fray as a part of doing their job. This isn't to complain — it's a part of the duties. But we've also been stuck between a rock and a hard place.

Rioters hassled reporters on the scene for being press, identifying us by our open pad and pen. Police hassled us for being on the scene, with many officers treating us no differently than any other student, despite our job at hand. One vandal chased a staff member on Thursday night after she took a picture of him pulling a railing out of the ground near the Morrill Science Center. Two other Collegian reporters were pepperballed in Northeast, even after they identified themselves as media. One of the two vomited from the effects.

Win or lose, many students on campus dreaded game nights for the Red Sox because of the chaos afterwards. And sadly, the further the Red Sox-Yankees series dragged on, the more I became one of them.

The point of mentioning these facts isn't to criticize authorities, or to question the enforcement of school policies on people showing their "love" for the Sox. Quite to the contrary, I sympathize with the officers who missed the games so they could get ready to deal with a bunch of violent idiots.

For many students, the results of the games were rendered almost unimportant by the end, as we dodged a combination of pepperballs, bricks and beer bottles flying through the air. You can love the Sox all you want — it isn't going to save you from taking a brick off the dome piece.

All of this was brought to you by your friendly neighborhood Red Sox fans, as they showed their support for the team through violence.

What rioters forgot, though, is what they were supposedly celebrating.

The 2003 Red Sox formed a team marked by greatness, wish lunch bucket heroes like David Ortiz, Jason Varitek and Trot Nixon representing a team that succeeded because of its togetherness and willingness to put aside egos for the betterment of a group working toward a common goal. How could destruction, mayhem and a blatant disregard for others possibly represent that?

Sure, the Red Sox had their downsides. Pedro's whining and continuing deterioration from the ranks of the all-time greats is disheartening. Manny Ramirez continues to make fans tear their hair out, as they watch a man who has hitting down to a science, but has little clue how to do much of anything else. And finger-flippin' Byun-Hyung Kim has probably played his last game as a member of the Red Sox.

But that's not how I will choose to remember this team, and neither is the violence in Southwest. For all of my frustration and aggravation over the last two weeks covering melees, I refuse to let it sour me on the Red Sox.

I'm taking back this season as a fan, and I'm hoping others will do the same.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

Just drifting here in the pool

What does a born writer do after he graduates from college?

That's what Ambrose, a close friend of mine, keeps asking. I'm not sure, I tell him. I don't want to write; I want to report. My life is already figured out, and I guess that places me in a small group of people who will graduate with a definite plan, a definite outlook on life — but not for the jaded Ambrose.

Russ Juskalian

"I don't know what to do," he says. "I want to write the next Great American Novel, but who is going to read it? Do I need to get an M.F.A. in creative writing or a Ph.D. in English for anyone to pay attention?"

I tell him that it sounds like a good idea. Why not? If you have those extra letters listed behind your name, people take note — that's how it works. I'm not as smart as Ambrose though; he points something out to me.

"But it seems to me that the best writers don't have those letters behind their names, and the authorities all do. Yale. Harvard. Berkeley. Princeton. What does that mean?"

Not trying to show my disinterest I told him that maybe writers write. Simple enough. And the truly smart can understand and pick out what the writer has accomplished. You see Ambrose, those people who go to Yale for a Ph.D. in English really know how a story is created, how prose can set tone — I was talking about Yale, so "prose" sounded appropriate.

Apparently I missed the point completely, and Ambrose trounced my explanation.

"That doesn't make sense. You reporters don't think enough about the subtext."

Subtext, what?

"Yeah, think about it: how could a Ph.D. know all of this about writing, but then the writers, without the initial addendum, are the ones creating the work? Does that mean that the writers are so smart that they don't have to go to school to learn how to write? They just know something and how to tell it?"

It sounded fine to me. Clearly, it seemed, the writers were the superstars, because they didn't need to be formally instructed about tone and story structure; it just seeped from their pens — or keyboards. So I told my lackluster friend that the professors were not as smart as the writers because they could only comment on what was written. And dissecting what someone else produces is clearly a sign that you can't produce what you are dissecting. Clearly. Clearly the mouse had eaten the poisoned cheese without looking around and noticing the snap-door aimed at his neck.

I guess it's a frustrating time for hundreds of thousands of recent college graduates and soon-to-be-graduates with no idea what to do next.

"Then why can't writers be authorities? I mean, they are called authorities, mostly in blurbs: Faulknerian in intensity, reminiscent of Hemingway, with a lucidity that recalls Conrad at his best. But you need a Ph.D. to teach, right? Are we to believe that the writers of these pieces are blind geniuses; they can produce, but they don't know how they produce?"

Not to be upstaged by my literary friend — reporters aren't stupid you know — I told him that people with Ph.D.s serve a different purpose. They have studied the language and are prepared to unravel the genius embedded in the stroke of the writer. The Ph.D. is here to tell us common reporters what we are reading. And in the end, aren't we all reporters? I hoped that allegory would steal Ambrose's attention. Show, don't tell, after all.

"We're off the topic, man. What do I do? How do I get someone to read what I have written? What if I can actually write something great, but no one reads it? And how do I feed myself if no one wants to buy my words?"

I'd been waiting for this question all morning. Ambrose, I told him, if you're good enough, they'll pay attention.

"Bull! Why would we need authorities to tell us what to read if the common reporter could understand greatness? Huh? Why would you understand anyway? I don't know why I am even asking you." And he turned around, walked away, and hasn't spoken to me since.

I guess it's a frustrating time for hundreds of thousands of recent college graduates and soon-to-be-graduates with no idea what to do next. Or at least, that's what my friends tell me. I don't see the problem: pick something you like, or something that is going to make you a lot of money, and go for it. Don't look back and don't worry.

And to Ambrose, or anyone else out there considering authorship as a profession: give it up; it's a dead end anyway. I just want to say one word to you. One word ... are you listening?

Plastics.

Russ Juskalian is a Collegian columnist.

Guide to writing columns

Zach Oelschlegel

After pouring over this beloved newspaper every day last year from cover to cover, and now writing my fifth column for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, I like to think of myself as someone who knows how to write a half decent article. Unfortunately, as a columnist of sorts, I fall into the stumbling areas of writer's block, and I can only imagine that my fellow columnists fall into the same trap. So, after careful observation of the endless opinions I have read, I bring to the Collegian "Zach Oelschlegel's Guide to Writing Columns," in an attempt to help myself and other Collegian columnists come up with excellent journalism when we're out of ideas.

The trick to writing a trendy article is to find a way to bash George Bush. Yes, it is simply that easy. There are countless websites where you can find the next laughable thing our president said. One of the best ways to lampoon Dubya is to take the word "strategery," and create an entire column focusing on the stupidity of such a word, and why Mr. Bush should be impeached for having the language IQ of salami. Or, simply resort to name-calling and refer to our president as a butthead, getting at least a few laughs from the six-year-old leftists. Do not, however, even think about mocking Bill Clinton's "is" controversy, as blasting a democrat is a journalistic faux pas here in Massachusetts.

The trick to writing a trendy article is to find a way to bash George Bush. Yes, it is simply that easy.

Naturally, there's only so much vocabulary a columnist can analyze, so why not try out your hand at some hilarious satire? Campus favorites include writing sarcastic letters to Mr. Bush and commending him for a job well done (NOT!), and then finishing the story by telling us particularly unsavvy readers that you were kidding, followed by you patting yourself on the back for using such inspirational side-splitting comic wit. Sarcastic tones go especially well with the "No Blood for Oil" chant, and the rah-rah "Anybody but Bush" mantra. Throw in a few lines about how Bush has been in bed with every CEO from the Fortune 500 companies if you aren't at the 750-word benchmark.

For your next article, instead of going after one conservative, go after his entire cabinet and maybe a couple more of these "cronies" the democrats keep speaking of. Write them a sarcastic letter in the same fashion you wrote a letter to Bush! No one will care anyway, just as long as what you write is about the Evil Empire called the Yankees ... er, Republicans. Finish your article with the slogan "Bush Sucks!!"

Potential topics for conservative-bashing include stereotyping them for alleged stereotyping of minorities. Ignore the fact that you are doing the same thing you are bashing them for, because in our great state of Massachusetts, no one cares about hypocrisy, especially if it involves a right-wing activist. Continue to make outrageous assumptions about conservatives and finish this article stating that the Republican Club is filled with dimwits, and that if it were legal, they would all try to fornicate with kangaroos.

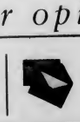
Keep in mind that there is no middle ground in politics. Use Bush's "If you are not with us then you are against us" catchphrase and apply the same to political beliefs. There is no such thing as a true democrat unless he follows the Howard Dean model, leaving moderate democrats like Joe Lieberman in the category of "ultra-conservatives." Likewise, if you are a minority, bash republicans for not accepting you and then denounce Clarence Thomas for being an "Uncle Tom."

Since it is such an important tool of this writing guide, I will repeat it: hypocrisy in your arguments doesn't matter.

Lastly, to really stir up some controversy, make a snide comment about Christianity. True separation of church and state means that all politicians must be atheists; it is a scientific fact that these so called "Men of God" have brains made of fried bologna mixed with Cracker Jack. You can trump Bush's religion and still condemn him for how he discriminates against the Muslims.

In conclusion, I just want to say that it also does not matter if the same points have been made in previous articles, or if you have written an article of similar caliber recently. What really matters is that UMass knows that all republicans would love for nothing less than to wipe out all minorities in a gruesome genocide not unlike the Holocaust, and would jump at the chance to fornicate with certain marsupials. If beating that into the heads of students is the only way to educate them, then so be it. We all know that around here people aren't grading us on our originality, as if that was of any importance.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.



Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back to his roots

Reggae icon Burning Spear returns to original sound with new album and tour

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

First, an anecdote from the biography of Mr. Winston Rodney, otherwise known as Burning Spear:

"The way the whole thing came about is that I found myself moving along up in the hills of St. Ann's and I ran into Bob [Marley] at the same time. And Bob was going to his farm. The man was moving with a donkey and some buckets and a fork, and cutlass and plants. We just reason man to man and I-man say wherein I would like to get involved in the music business. And Bob say, 'All right, just check Studio One.'"

PHOTOS COURTESY BURNING PRODUCTIONS

Burning Spear is one of the most popular reggae artists of all time.

Reggae music legend Burning Spear has traveled a long, long road since having that faithful meeting and getting that crucial favor from the honorable Robert Nesta Marley sometime during the 1960s in Jamaica.

With nearly three decades in the music business under his red, gold and green belt, Spear has released 41 albums (including compilations and live discs), won a Grammy award, toured the world and recently started his own record label.

His name is household material for anyone who has ever caught on to the Rastafari spirit. On a popularity scale in the history of reggae music, Marley is one, Peter Tosh is two, and three would be Burning Spear.

Despite his immense success in the reggae world and in the music business at large, Spear is not beginning to slow down. His goal as an artist and as a human being to educate and uplift people through his music and the Rastafarian prophesies of Jamaican Black Nationalist Marcus Garvey is still being achieved.

Starting in July, Spear and his band embarked on a 50-stop European and American tour. In early August, Spear released his first studio album off his new record label, Burning Productions, entitled "Freeman."

Tonight the reggae phenomenon brings his distinct roots sound and wisdom in support of the new LP to the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton for a show that is guaranteed to be rockin' steady all night long.

Spear is accustomed to playing small venues like the Pearl Street Ballroom when he is in the States but, like many past reggae greats, in Europe he is better recognized at and sells out massive theaters.

"In Europe the feedback is a little bit different than the shows in the America," Spear said. "There are a greater amount of people in the cities who feel the music in the bigger arenas."

"But small places is how I got started and I love to return to my roots," he added.

That is exactly what Spear has done for his new album, "Freeman" — gotten back to his roots, and in the process has attempted to get reggae listeners worldwide back to the roots-reggae style, since dancehall has dominated the charts.

"Roots is still around, there is no competition between the artists or between us and [the dancehall artists]," Spear said. "Roots relates to all listeners and people always love the original form of the music. It's the way reggae music is supposed to be — the original."

En route to retreating to his roots, Spear collaborated with many other reggae musical greats on the 12-track "Freeman." Leroy "Horsemouth" Wallace, Uzziah "Sticky" Thompson and Christopher "Skyjuice" Burth contributed to the percussion tracks, while Lukie D and Pam Hall helped out on background vocals.

The end result of "Freeman" is a progressive, contemporary rock steady reggae album that echoes the sounds of reggae's heyday in the 1970s.

"Freeman" was the work of Spear alone and nobody else, as he has had no one to answer to but his fans since starting his own record label. The album's title is a metaphor for what Spear has been feeling since Burning Productions got underway in 2001.

"I was thinking about starting my own label for quite some time and after being in the business for so long I learned what it takes to get it done," he said. "I am free from contracts and I get to do what I want to do with my music and my message now."

Following an opening act by Pioneer Valley reggae group The Black Rebels starting at 8:30 p.m., Spear's message will be made clear tonight at Pearl Street.

Burning Spear
Tues., Oct. 21
8:30 p.m.
Pearl Street
Northampton
$20 advance
$23 door

What is making me so moody and depressed?

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of the Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) group here at the University of Massachusetts, and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity
Julia Kristan

Q. I've been moody and feeling depressed lately, and my friends think there's something really wrong with me. I don't drink much and I get enough to sleep and eat everyday. The only prescription I take is birth control pills; could this be causing my problems?

A. Yes, birth control has been linked with exacerbating or causing depression. I strongly recommend you visit the doctor who put you on birth control and perhaps visit your primary care physician as well. People with tendencies toward or family histories of depression need to be monitored carefully on birth control. Depression is a serious side effect of hormonal birth control that often gets ignored.

A visit to a doctor who knows your history should be able to pinpoint causes of your recent depression. Ask your doctor plenty of questions. You're worth more than the four minutes they usually spend on patients. You could even bring a friend or relative with you for moral support, and two people remember facts better than just one.

Q. My roommate was telling me that douching is necessary. My mom told me that it was not only unnecessary but that it can be harmful. Who is right?

A. Your mom is correct on this one. Douching has been linked in several studies to vaginal infection, higher rates of HIV and other STD infection, pelvic inflammatory disease, pre-term delivery and even cervical cancer. It is thought that douching upsets the natural pH and microbiotic balance in the vagina, allowing foreign viruses to more easily infect a woman.

Your roommate is a part of the nearly 40 percent of women who douche in America, and perhaps in the 20 percent that does so on a regular basis. Women's bodies are often portrayed

Continued on page 5

'MASSACRE' MAKEOVER

Same old gore, but too trendy

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" is an exercise in unrelenting ugliness. It's a nearly 100-minute wallow in gore and slime, and it assaults the viewers with visions of blood and muck and twitching severed limbs. This just may be the grimiest film of the year.

'The Texas Chainsaw Massacre'
Directed by Marcus Nispel
Starring Jessica Biel, Andrew Bryniarski
New Line
Rated R
90 mins.
Grade C+

It's about the brutalization of five young youths in rural Texas, and it just about brutalizes the audience, too. The viewers are pummeled by images of violence and dementia, and the movie — to its credit — doesn't alleviate the tension campiness or ironic humor. Nor does it alleviate it with scares or suspense either.

The original "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" — from which this film has been proficiently, if crassly, remade — was frightening because it played like a grainy snuff documentary, a nightmare diary of depravity that crawled — or, rather, massacred — its way under your skin. It was low budget, but the very essence of on-the-fly urgency that comes with a low-budget film was what made it terrifying. It plunged the viewer into a fever dream of horror, a hallucinatory carnival that made it seem as though the audience was really there.

Its depiction of five hippies tortured and slaughtered by a clan of demented redneck cannibals was also a provocative indictment of the times, the way the feckless, hedonistic youth paid for their indiscretions at the hands of the chainsaw-wielding Leatherface. It was the first of the modern horror films to stand in as a metaphor for the corruption of innocence and the fatal cost the rampant free love and drug abuse of the era had.

The new "Texas Chainsaw Massacre," like many recent youth horror movies, is a film divorced of any sociopolitical underpinnings. It's a glossy, trendy scary movie for the Saturday night crowd, the kind of movie that turns graphic murder into a kind of hip, macabre burlesque — a chance for audiences to cheer at each death with a flippant, desensitized detachment. It means nothing, it says nothing and it's about nothing

Continued on page 5

COURTESY NEW LINE

Leatherface returns in the 21st century for the remake of the 1970s classic, "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre."

Edward Gein: the real story behind the horror

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

What do the movies "Psycho," "Silence of the Lambs" and "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" all have in common? Certainly they all depict gruesome, macabre serial killers. Norman Bates, Hannibal Lecter, Thomas Hewitt (a.k.a. Leatherface): these names send shivers down spines and force some to sleep with their lights on. However, very few know the actual real life horror show that inspired all three of these films. The story lies in a man who goes by the name of Edward Gein.

On Nov. 16, 1957, in the small town of Plainfield, Wis., reality was thrown a curve ball when a town local was unmasked and revealed for the absolute psychopath that he was. The disappearance of 50-year-old Bernice Worden led to a frenzied investigation that ended up at the farmhouse of Edward Gein.

Before we go into the horrific contents found at the Gein farmhouse the day of the investigation into Worden's death, let's back up a bit. Who was Edward Gein? How did he become a cold-hearted killer?

Edward Theodore Gein was born to George and Augusta Gein in 1906, in the town of La Crosse, Wis. He had a brother Henry, who was four years older than him.

His father, George Gein, was an alcoholic and at times would be very violent toward his wife and children. Ed's mother, Augusta, was fanatically religious and constantly prayed for the salvation of her tortured husband's soul. Meanwhile, behind George's back, Augusta never hesitated to tell her children exactly how much of a sinner their father was.

In 1914, when Ed was eight years old, the family bought a large farmhouse in Plainfield, Wis. Ed would five the remainder of his days as a free man on the family farm.

Continued on page 5

Gein: the serial killer that inspired Leatherface

Continued from page 4

Augusta became increasingly religious after the move to the farm. She constantly reminded her children that they were to stay away from women at all costs. They were told that women were the root of men's evil ways. The epitome of a mommy's boy, and unwilling to turn out like his father, Ed refrained from all contact with women. He would hardly ever look a woman in the eye.

George Gein died in 1940, followed four years later by the death of Henry in a forest fire. Ed was left alone with his mother, and he was overjoyed by the prospect of living with his favorite person in the world. He was devastated when she died of a stroke in 1945.

Alone on the farm and left to his own devices, Gein became a recluse. He had lived with and for his mother the entirety of his life, and with her gone, he was confused. Without his mother's influence constantly restraining him from thinking about the opposite sex, Gein became very much interested in the subject of female anatomy. He spent the next several years studying anatomy books at the local library.

This interest of his shortly became an obsession, and brings the story back to the night of Nov. 16, 1957. Bernice Worden's son Frank, the deputy sheriff of Plainfield was immediately suspicious of Gein. Gein had been frequenting his mother's store for days, and had even asked Frank of his intended plans/whereabouts for the day of his mother's disappearance.

As Frank approached Gein that afternoon, Gein started to stammer on about how he thought he was being framed for the murder of Bernice. Gein was taken into custody. Sheriff Schley was instructed to search the Gein farmhouse.

Among the items that were discovered in Gein's home were: the totally disemboweled and beheaded body of Bernice Worden hung from the rafters of the barn, various objects constructed of human skin (a tom-tom drum, bracelets, a purse, leggings, a knife sheath, seat covers and a lamp shade), a bowl and bed posts made of human skulls, nine death masks, 10 scalped female heads, shrunken heads, and a full woman's body suit made from the skin of various victims. There were also body parts on the stove and in the refrigerator.

When Gein was questioned, he revealed that these items were a result of him robbing graves. He didn't admit to the murder. Sure enough, several graves had been dug up, including the grave of Gein's mother, Augusta. However, the number of victims in Gein's home was not accounted for and it was obvious that Gein had been a murderer as well. After all, the body of Bernice Worden proved this.

After undergoing intensive psychiatric observation and therapy, it was revealed that after his mother's death in 1945, Gein felt absolutely lost. In order to remain close to his mother, he thought he could, in a sense, become his mother. He constructed the full female body suit and would walk around the house in his mother's clothing.

For better of for worse, Gein's staggering story lives on in films such as the "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" which has recently been remade from the 1974 version and is in theatres now.

For more reading on this disturbing serial killer, consult "Ed Gein — Psycho," by Paul Anthony Woods and Errol Morris.

COURTEST HORRORTV.COM

Many horror films are based on Edward Gein's killing spree.

New 'Chainsaw Massacre' just not the same

Continued from page 4

except bloody make-up effects.

The original movie frightened audiences because it was a curveball, a movie that came out of nowhere and did something never seen before. The new movie is a redundant catalogue of violent dispatchings, covering the same ground that has been covered in nearly every slasher movie since, well, the first "Texas Chainsaw Massacre."

This is as cold and as cookie-cutter as any other assembly line fright flick of the past decade. The producers are Michael Bay (yes, Jerry Bruckheimer's pet orchestrator of overkill) and "The Bachelor" mastermind Mike Fleiss. Not surprisingly, this is a movie lacking in subtlety, preferring to hammer forward with ceaseless morbidity in a vain attempt to shock and frighten.

What the movie does have going for it is dread. The new "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" has a mood of rot that permeates every second of it. There's no escaping the feeling of despair that haunts the movie. There are only a couple of cheap jolts, and Scott Kossar's script is too invested in producing generic, colorless horror to generate any kind of real suspense. It's hard to maintain anxiety when the outcome can be seen a mile away. But the thick air of dismay and putrescence that hovers around the frame also affords the movie the chance to generate some superficial tension.

This is not a scary movie, but it does have some disturbing moments, albeit not enough to push it into the realm of the truly nightmarish.

The director, Marcus Nispel, is a former music video auteur who lays off the flashy editing (mostly) and humor, and paints a grim picture, though in the broadest, most repulsive strokes possible. This is a movie that is relentless in showcasing the vile things that happen to its bland young victims.

Daniel Pearl returns as cinematographer from the original, and he does a good job of conveying the soiled, greasy atmosphere of decay, even if it's a tone that's been one too many times in the intervening years between this and "Seven."

There's no denying the cultural impact the original had, the ripple effect that its unlikely success made on the horror genre. This was a movie that practically laid down the conventions of the slasher film, paving the way for movies like "Friday the 13th" and "Halloween." This was the movie that introduced the indelible image of saw-wielding psycho Leatherface, horror moviedom's first anti-superhero. This sleepy, heartless, emotionally and originality-void remake is unlikely to have any similar impact, coming off, as it does, like just another pointless teen horror flick.

The idea of rehiring Pearl and narrator John Larroquette shows a bit of respect for the original, a respect that ultimately becomes suspect considering the slick, machine-like soullessness of the remake. The new "Texas Chainsaw Massacre" is too glossy, too polished to match the tension of the original film, relying so much on traditional genre signposts (rain, night, creepy dilapidated houses) that it's rendered inert and predictable.

Admittedly, this violent and nasty movie is stylishly made. But in this case, style trumps substance — and scares.

Pills control moods

Continued from page 4

as a problem in need of fixing in our society. Between 1,001 "discrete" tampons and pads to choose from, to a multitude of feminine deodorant sprays, one might easily get the impression that menstruation is a disease and that your normal vaginal odor is in dire need of being covered up. Although advertising will lead you to believe that your vagina is a vile body part that needs to be cleaned regularly, this isn't the case. The vagina is a self-cleansing work of bodily art.

Advertising purports douching as a necessary cleansing agent to be used after sex, menstruation or whenever you want that "clean and fresh" feeling. Douching does not help reduce the chance of becoming pregnant by washing out sperm. Menstruation is a healthy and natural shedding of the uterine lining, and when the lining is completely shed, the vagina will clean itself. For a clean and fresh feeling, try a shower or bath and use a gentle, unscented soap on the outside of the vagina.

This leads to another point. If you have stronger, unpleasant odors, or itching, burning and/or pain, it might be time to see a doctor. There is a wide range of healthy and natural vaginal odors. However, your body will tell you when there is something wrong by giving off a different odor or discharge. If you suspect that something is amiss, see a doctor and get treatment as soon as possible. It might be a yeast infection or symptoms of an STD. Couple your personal hygiene and self-monitoring with regular STD-testing for those illnesses which do not have any visible symptoms.

This afternoon on campus:

Planned Parenthood will be on the steps of the Student Union from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. to gain support and provide information specifically for a march on Washington, scheduled for April 2004. The march next spring will focus on reproductive freedoms and women's healthcare rights.

Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@hotmail.com with subject "Sex-iversity." Confidentiality is always respected.

Nada Surf rocks Iron Horse

Low-key band strays from playing 'popular' song

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Dedicated fans and curious concertgoers greeted Nada Surf at the Iron Horse in Northampton Saturday night, as they performed their surf-rock-meets-Beatles'-pop music.

Nada Surf
Iron Horse
Northampton
Oct. 18

As singer/guitarist Matthew Caws took the stage, it was obvious that the band was in light spirits and that the show was going to be informal. Drummer Ira Elliot and bassist Daniel Lorca soon followed Caws up on stage, picked up their instruments, bantered with the audience for a bit and began playing.

Although the band joked around with the audience and told stories between songs, it was very clear that they took their rock seriously. The band played songs from their first album, "High/Low," from their hard-to-find release, "The Proximity Effect," and from their latest, acclaimed album, "Let Go." Despite ignoring the pleas to play their sole hit song, "Popular," Nada Surf tried their best to perform a crowd-pleasing set, honoring most of the audience's requests.

Nada Surf is a relatively low-key band that doesn't rely on much more than good songwriting and melody. So rather than putting on flamboyant performances, the band lets the songs speak for themselves.

"The Way You Wear Your Head" is a pop gem that finds Caws singing, "I want to want you / I need to need you / I'd love to love you," as he strums away on gentle chords.

The band played "Fruit Flies" after an audience member shouted out a request for it, but it was at that time that the show seemed to lose its luster. The band would — jokingly at first — complain about the no-smoking ordinance and their need for a cigarette. But by the last couple of songs, it seemed the band was running out of steam and falling apart. Lorca was pure energy at times and had to lean against the wall for support at others; but still, they pressed on.

It didn't help that their set list seemed to be divided. They began with faster, upbeat songs and ended with slower tunes.

However, despite these problems, much of the show was a success. "Happy Kid" from "Let Go" was one of the standout performances of the show. During "Stalemate," the group broke into a cover of Joy Division's "Love Will Tear Us Apart," and then seamlessly transitioned back to the original song.

The show ended on perhaps the highest note of all. As Elliot and Lorca left the stage and sat down, Caws refused to leave. He began strumming his guitar and broke into "Blizzard Of '77." Elliot and Lorca ran back into the spotlight to perform background harmonies as Caws sadly sang, "I miss you more than I knew."

Nada Surf's pop beauty was illustrated perfectly once again. Despite a few setbacks it seemed that no one left the Iron Horse disappointed, and Nada Surf surely pleased their old fans while they made a couple of new ones.

COURTEST NADA SURF

Nada Surf played the Iron Horse in Northampton on Saturday night.

Mandatory
Arts & Living
Meeting
TODAY
@ 5:30 p.m.

Now Hiring
Advertising
Account
Executives for Fall 2003!
Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.
All Majors & classes Welcome to Apply!
Current Freshmen Strongly encouraged to Apply.

MUSIC · SOFTWARE · MOVIES · BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY®
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

Buy before October 27th, save $130.
$199 ALL-EAST 6-Day Season Pass*
$369 ALL-EAST Season Pass (unrestricted)
Get yours at peaks.com/college.
1 pass. 6 resorts. 659 trails. 99 lifts.
Pico Mountain · Sunday River · Killington · Mount Snow · Sugarloaf/USA
All-East Pass includes Killington, Pico and Mount Snow in Vermont, Attitash Bear Peak in New Hampshire, and Sunday River and Sugarloaf/USA in Maine. *6-Day All-East Pass not valid on Saturdays and the following holiday dates: 11/27-29/03, 12/20/03-1/4/04, 1/17-19/04, 2/14-20/04.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Tiffany Hamill and the Minutewomen have lost three consecutive games, all to conference opponents.

Minutewomen fall to No. 14 Richmond

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team had plenty of time to rest on their long trip to Crenshaw Field in Richmond, Va. But it came to no avail in a 5-1 loss to the No. 14 Richmond Spiders, who improve to 4-0 in the Atlantic 10.

UMass	3
Fordham	1

The Minutewomen drop to 3-12 (1-2 A-10) with the loss, while the Spiders stand at 13-2.

Freshman Inge van Bogerijen scored two goals in the first half en route to the victory for the Spiders. Sophomore Allie Howard, senior Brittney Parrish and freshman Heather Wrublesky also netted one each.

Sophomore Jaime Bawden tallied the lone goal for the Minutewomen, giving her a team-high three goals.

"We just made some really poor choices out there, and they capitalized on them," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "That's going to happen when you have a team as young as this ... we're basically throwing these kids to the wolves. It was not one of our best games."

The Spiders started things off early in the first half with a van Bogerijen goal at 8:16 off a penalty corner, assisted by Howard and junior Laura Hur. The Minutewomen bounced back to tie it up at 22:57 when Bawden snuck one past Richmond goalie Michelle Swartz.

But in the end, it was a late first half rally that spelled the UMass' demise.

Van Bogerijen scored her second goal, the eventual game winner, at 27:38, assisted again by Howard and Hur. That started a streak of four unanswered goals, three coming in the first half. Wrublesky notched her first goal of the year, unassisted, less than a minute later. Parrish knocked in her first of the year as well, assisted by Colleen Wevodeau at 30:27, to wrap up scoring in the first half.

The second half began with a Howard score, unassisted, at 40:12 to mark the final goal of the game. With the goal, Howard now leads the Spiders, as well as the A-10, with 11 goals and 12 assists for 34 points. The Minutewomen were never able to bounce back from the deficit.

The Spiders outshot the Minutewomen 18-5, and dominated the penalty corners 18-3.

"We were just average [Sunday]. We're not good enough to be average. But they have never stopped fighting. They've made some giant steps [since the season started], and I'm proud," Shea said.

UMass goalie Christine Tocco outperformed Swartz in saves (8-3), but let up more goals. Tocco now ranks second in the A-10 in saves (117); while Swartz leads the A-10 in minutes played (935), goals against average (1.05), wins (11), and an A-10 low 14 goals allowed.

"Goals will be scored," Shea said. "We need to save the savable shots to keep the goals down. There were balls [Tocco] could have had; she needs to be more consistent."

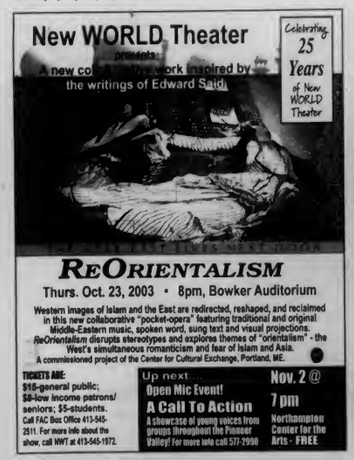
Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Caitlin Beresin and her teammates were unable to keep pace with the 14th-ranked Spiders.

La Salle, Fordham down UM

Continued from page 8

lected 17 including a red card. Senior Erin Muir gave an elbow to the jaw of a defender riding her back and was immediately given a red card, making her ineligible for the next game.



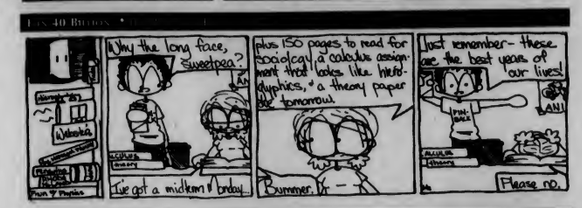
Fordham wasn't an easier opponent, coming in undefeated in the A-10. The Rams did what they had to do to leave undefeated, winning 3-1 Sunday.

"Fordham was on the solid side, didn't play a pretty style of soccer, but were good at what they did," Rudy said. "They were big, but not as skilled as us, though they were better organized and the goalie had a good day."

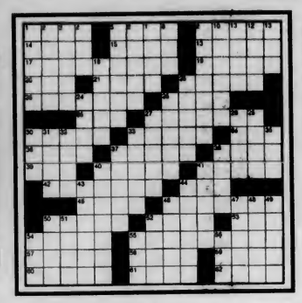
A major contributor to the Rams' success was substitute Holly Laubinger. Laubinger made an immediate impact once entering the game, sending a long cross into the box where Rams defender Corey Dunfey put away a two-yard shot in the 34th minute. Dunfey also made her presence felt again in the 48th minute, putting away a rebound off the crossbar, giving the Fordham a 2-0 advantage.

Laubinger put the third goal in the back of net off a 25-yard blast going to the top left corner.

"We're vulnerable right now," Rudy said. "With our two leaders out, we are incapable of playing the same lineup. It will be a test to the players who want to finish like this or with some style and dignity. We could be one of the six teams in A-10 tourney still. It all comes down to who shows up to play and if we are healthy enough."



"Don't get your knickers in a knot. Nothing is solved and it just makes you walk funny."



-Kathryn Carpenter

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Road rally
6 Wound reminder
9 Well, as a ghost
14 — Cuckoo Porter
15 Cat
16 Jan Brady
17 Old Icelandic prose work
18 Type of boat
20 BBB — board
21 Disagreeable look
22 Acted like a thief
23 Put on weight
25 Peppy in a queue
27 Wisdom up after surgery
30 Quiet
31 Woolmer
34 "Psycho"
35 Ode writer
37 Ice hockey locale
38 Bounder
39 He gives a hoot
40 Mideast citizens
41 Hangs on
42 Landlord
43 Ski shooter
44 Bright fish
48 Customers
50 Added brandy
51 Capacity measure
52 "I knew it!"
53 Prairie roamer
56 Winter sports gear
57 Mia Farrow role
58 Some tributary
59 Pharm's interests
60 Church council
61 Made haste
62 Swampy

DOWN
1 Indian royal
2 Entertain
3 Piece for Ilotka
4 MIT grad
5 Sharp numbers
6 Louisiana native
7 Earth's line of rotation
8 Wheat part
9 Incapacitated
10 Tiny amount
11 — River of Russia
12 Cathedral part
13 Quaker word
18 Cuts of meat
22 Maud's maid
24 Ripped
26 Hindi thugs
27 Athletic-shoe part
28 Dido's son
29 Eye, in Aviles
30 Of address
31 Curtsies
32 Shrill bark
33 Not stale
35 Cartwright
37 Out in front
38 Prison inscription
40 Aged, as cheese
41 Business letter
43 Ballroom style
44 Record-makers
46 Picked
47 Wynonna's mom
48 His and her
49 Brown
50 Sweet-scented tree
51 "O" or cat
52 Fabric sample
54 College dept.
55 "Mayday!"
58 Radio enthusiast

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Scrod with Newburg Sauce
- Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 39

WEDNESDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 31

THURSDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 31

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Barbara Lotto

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Simmons

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas P. Markantonatos/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your pleasant exterior isn't representative of the real you. Your interior is even nicer.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Where you want to be is happy within yourself.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Beware of the abnormally large muffin; your stomach isn't that large.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Stand up for tuna fish.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Check your bank account; they are trying to screw you.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are the world's sunshine.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Careful what you delete; often times it's important.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't bother waiting; you're wasting your time.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Duck! They're aiming for your head.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You may still have a second chance at meeting your hero.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Be a nicer person. It never hurts to be nice.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stop drinking coffee. You're becoming more Colombian than Maxwell House.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

X Productions and Mission 101 Entertainment Presents . . . Ladies night at Atlantis on Wednesday nights at 10pm All ladies get free admission before 11pm DJ FreddyFresh on the turntables An 18+ event Atlantis is located behind Antonios Pizza in Amherst Center.

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Auto for Sale

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

Auto for Sale

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

1995 Honda Accord Standard 125K Excellent Condition $4800.00 253-2740 Evenings

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Employment

Make over $1000 a week many opportunities available www.studentsource.net

Drivers and Kitchen Help Wanted Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Furniture

Moving Sale Patricia 413-529-9458

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject – visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.imagen41.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Tutor

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Shorthanded

Without Nigh, UM drops pair

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Leadership is a key to coming back from anything in sports. With captain and star goalie Kelly Nigh possibly out for the season, the Massachusetts women's soccer team are without their emotional leader and backbone of their defense. Add offensive machine Lindsey Fairweather to the injury list, and coming back from already down season is a harder task than before.

La Salle	2
UMass	0
Fordham	3
UMass	1

The missing presence of the two leaders was felt as the Minutewomen (3-9-1, 2-5 Atlantic 10) dropped both road games, 2-0, to La Salle Friday and 3-1 to Fordham Sunday.

"When we have Fairweather on the field, everything will start to change for us," Umass coach Jim Rudy said. "We will try to get her back for this weekend, but if you think about it, I haven't been able to have the same line-up for more than two consecutive games. The host of injuries has prevented us from playing to our ability."

The Maroon and White traveled to Philadelphia first for a contest with La Salle, but the story wasn't the game.

It was the poor field conditions. UMass has faced issues with La Salle's field before, such as when Rebecca Myers, a star UMass soccer player from '93 to'96, suffered a career-ending knee injury on the poorly managed field.

The awful playing surface was also a result of the most bizarre goal of UMass' ill-fated season. Senior Maggie LaRode sent a routine play back goaltender Kristen Rutland. Rutland went to secure the pass, as the ball took an unexpected bounce over her foot into the empty net.

The first goal was scored off Krista Lee's 25-yard free kick, her fifth of the season. The Explorers took advantage of the home field conditions, outshooting the Maroon and White 13-1. The only Umass shot was taken by Adair Blyler, and it wasn't on net.

"I have played everywhere and I have never put my team on such a pathetic field," Rudy said. "[The field] did not dignify our sport, Division I soccer or the A-10. The reason they scored the second goal was because the ball wasn't moving off a free kick. I'm just happy we didn't come out with any major injuries. Bottom line, you couldn't play soccer on that field."

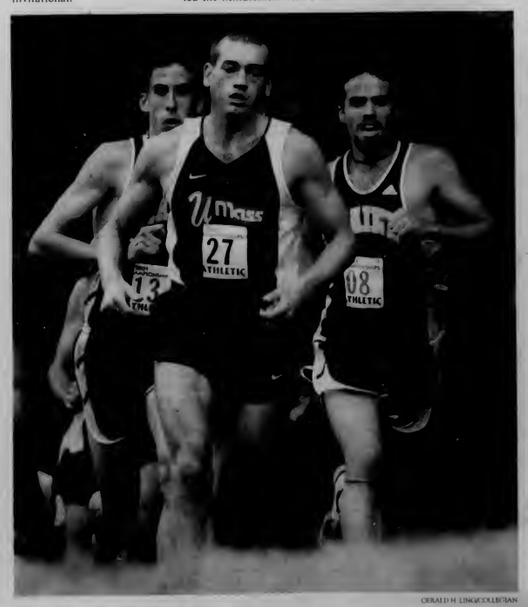
The game itself was one of the roughest, most physical games this season. LaSalle tallied 18 fouls and UMass col-

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Erin Lilly and the Minutewomen were unable to overcome the loss of goalkeeper Kelly Nigh, as they came up short in weekend contests with Fordham and La Salle.

Cross country competes in Albany Invitational



Men finish sixth, women place ninth overall

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

In a late season push for a bid to the NCAA Tournament, the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams finished the regular season with sixth and ninth place finishes, respectively, out of 26 competing teams at Saturday's Albany Invitational.

Anthony Traux won the race with a time of 24:58, but could not lead New Hampshire to victory over the host team, Albany, which bested the Wildcats 65-64. Marist College finished third out of the 26 competing teams with 83 points, and Syracuse finished in fifth place with 177 points.

Sophomore Ryan Corbett led the Minutemen with a time of 25:50, good enough for seventh-place overall. The freshman duo of Michael Dulong and Aaron Strellner finished second and third, respectively, among UMass scorers, with times of 26:26 and 26:41. Junior tri-captain Andrew McCarron and junior Joshua Williams rounded out Minuteman scorers with times of 26:48 and 27:25.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

The men's and women's cross country team competed in their last meet before the Atlantic 10 Championship.

Dulong and Strellner ran personal bests, finishing in the top 50 out of 244 runners.

"What we really need is for two upperclassmen to respond to the success that the freshmen are having, so we can bring in strong scores as a team," head coach Ken O'Brien said.

"It was a pleasant surprise to see our freshmen do so well, but I knew they were capable of it. Michael [Dulong] has been our third and fourth runner all year, so I know he could race like this ... It wasn't a complete surprise, I expect him to run this well, but I think he came on a little slow," O'Brien said.

O'Brien predicts a sixth-place ranking for UMass, going into what may be its last race of the season: the Atlantic 10 Championships on November 1.

"La Salle and St. Joe's are heavily favored, but we have the potential to finish as well as third," O'Brien said. "I think our ranking is due to the inconsistencies of our results. Certain guys race unbelievable one week, then let down the next, and I think the coaches pick up on that."

Middlebury College took top honors in the women's Albany Invite, finishing the 5,000-meter race with six runners in the top 15. Middlebury finished 34 points ahead of the University of New Hampshire with 42, followed by a third-place Binghamton University team that tallied 101 points.

Jacquelin Nunez won the race with a time of 17:36, leading Stony Brook University to a 138-point, fifth-place finish, behind an Albany University team that rounded off the top five with 105 points.

Junior Alexis Anzelone led UMass scorers for the fourth meet thus far, with a time of 18:39, good for 19th place overall. Freshman Cuisle Klerans finished 44th overall, and second among Minutewoman scorers with a time of 19:16.

"Cuisle's been finishing anywhere from second to fifth, and her times have gotten better every week," head coach Julie LaFreniere said. "She's been showing a great improvement for a freshman, and it's a good sign that she's been able to put two strong races together."

Senior Kate Markopoulos finished third among UMass scorers, and 46th out of 210 total competitors, with a time of 19:17. Classmate Tricia Silva finished fourth for the Maroon and White for the second straight meet, despite an incident in last week's New England Championship, which forced her to stop and retie a shoe that had fallen off 1,000 meters into the race.

Out of the 26 competing teams, only 20 were eligible for scoring because they had less than five runners finish the race. At the one-mile mark, UMass runner Allie Lupico suffered a strained hip flexor, but remained in the race for the last two miles, preventing the Minutewomen from forfeiting the race.

"Allie showed heart in fighting through for the team," La Freniere said. "At the end of the race we had to call for transportation because she couldn't walk to the bus without help. If I had known she was that hurt I would have had her stop running."

LaFreniere classifies Lupico as "highly unlikely" to practice over the next two weeks as a precautionary measure.

"I don't want to push her into a racing situation to soon," she said. "Hopefully she can recover safely for the A-10 Championships. I know racing means a lot to her and I hope she gets better soon."

LaFreniere was pleased by the team's performance overall.

"All the girls stepped it up and really ran as a team. They're hard working, and until now they've practiced better than they've raced. So now, they're starting to run consistently as a team, and they're coming on at the right time."

LaFreniere predicts a sixth-place ranking for the Minutewoman going into the A-10 Championships, and she will begin practicing for the longer, 6,000-meter race by running the team up a three-mile dirt road located in Shutesbury.

C's trade Walker

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks bulked up an already strong offense yesterday, acquiring All-Star forward Antoine Walker from the Boston Celtics in a five-player trade.

The Celtics agreed to take center Raef LaFrentz and the four years remaining on a $69 million, five-year contract signed before last season.

The Celtics also get Jiri Welsch and Chris Mills, players the Mavericks got in an offseason trade that also brought Antawn Jamison from Golden State, and Dallas' first-round pick in 2004. The Mavericks will get guard Tony Delk from Boston.

Mavericks owner Mark Cuban confirmed the deal to The Associated Press, saying it was pending league approval.

"It's not every day that a 27-year-old All-Star becomes available," said Donnie Nelson, Dallas' president of basketball operations. "We feel we've got one of the most versatile coaches in the league. To add a player of Antoine's ability just gives (coach Don Nelson) more options to work with."

Nelson struck the deal with Danny Ainge, who became Boston's head of basketball operations in May. The two are close friends, with Nelson having been an assistant to Ainge in Phoenix. Between his jobs with the Suns and Celtics, Ainge was a TV analyst and he said on the air he did not like Walker's game. Since joining Boston, he's said he had no intention of trading Walker.

Now Walker, a three-time All-Star who averaged 17.3 points and 8.7 rebounds last season, goes from playing alongside one high scorer in Paul Pierce to being joined by four: Dallas' nucleus of Dirk Nowitzki, Steve Nash and Michael Finley, plus Jamison, who was added in August.

The Mavericks, the NBA's highest-scoring team the last two years, have now upgraded a roster that won 60 games and reached the Western Conference finals last season. It also counters the changes made by fellow Western Conference opponents San Antonio, Sacramento and the Lakers.

Walker has size (6-foot-9, 245 pounds) but can run the offense. His dribbling and passing skills make him the prototype "point forward" coveted by Mavs coach Don Nelson.

Walker led the Celtics in assists the last three seasons, and he and Pierce combined to average nearly half of Boston's points during that span.

"We see Antoine as a triple-double guy," said Donnie Nelson, the coach's son and an assistant coach. "I know in some form or fashion at the end of the game you're going to see the Big Three and Antoine Squared."

Donnie Nelson said Nowitzki will get more minutes at center. Shawn Bradley and Danny Fortson, also acquired in the Golden State trade, will help man the position. Eduardo Najera could play there, too.

Delk will be a backup swingman, with Travis Best still the primary relief for Nash. Nelson said Delk may be able to provide some of the intangibles lost when Nick Van Exel was sent to Golden State.

"He's not afraid, he's tough and experienced," Nelson said, referring to Delk. "He's got a knack for making big shots and big plays."

LaFrentz was acquired from Denver at the trade deadline two seasons ago, then re-signed last summer. He was mostly a disappointment last season, averaging just 9.3 points and 4.8 rebounds.

The Mavericks had coveted Welsch in their trade with the Warriors but were willing to give up on the project to upgrade their roster now.

The 6-foot-7 swingman from the Czech Republic was a first-round pick last season but saw limited time as a rookie with Golden State.

The oft-injured Mills was seen as a trading chip from the time Dallas acquired him. The forward played only 112 games the last four seasons but has a big contract that expires after this year, which will help the Celtics clear room under the salary cap.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 35

Readership funds proposed

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

Members of the SGA expect a proposal to increase the number of newspapers available on campus to be presented to senators during tonight's SGA meeting at the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Center.

The meeting, which begins at 7 p.m., calls for the allocation of an additional $10,627 to the already $11,250 in approved funds for the USA Today Collegiate Readership Program. The program supplies students with free Boston Globe, New York Times and USA Today newspapers.

According to SGA Speaker Jared Nokes, the total increase calls for about $1.25 to be added to the current $2.50 per student charge previously approved for the program. He said a proposal went before the SGA's Ways and Means Committee this past Sunday that called for increased funding for the program throughout the remainder of the semester.

The proposal was rejected by a vote of five to four. Nokes said the next step is for the senate to either pass or reject the proposal, possibly at tonight's meeting. If the motion is passed, the campus will see an increase in papers by Monday morning.

Ways and Means Chair Patrick Higgins was one of the five members of the committee to reject the proposal. Higgins said he did not believe allocating an additional $10,627 for the remaining 37 days of the semester would be a wise for the SGA. According to him, about $11,000 was set-aside at the end of the spring semester for a "pilot program" to see if the readership program would be successful.

"We were basically giving it a dry run," he said. According to Higgins, the extra allocation Nokes wants doesn't fit into the original plan.

"Do you do a $22,000 dry run?" Higgins asked.

However, according to Nokes, even when USA Today provided additional complimentary newspapers throughout the pilot program period, a total of 1,500 papers available on campus every weekday was still insufficient. Nokes said now the pilot program is completed; there are currently only 450 newspapers available.

"By about 9 a.m., they're gone," he said.

According to Nokes, if the proposal passes, money would be allocated from the long-term reserves of the SGA, which can be used to provide loans to student clubs. The reserves ensure financial stability, he said, but the SGA has the money to spare.

Higgins said the program, if the proposal passes; it's likely to become a $25,000 to $30,000 commitment for next semester and each additional semester in future.

"In light of the fact that we fund R.S.O.'s a couple thousand dollars a piece, I don't know if I feel comfortable funding newspapers at $50,000 to $60,000 [each year]," he said. "You can do a lot more than buy newspapers with $50,000."

Senator Olaf Aprans, another member of the Ways and Means Committee who rejected the proposal agreed.

"That's $50,000 to $60,000 that's going to R.S.O.'s," he said. Aprans said students could also read newspapers online or visit the library.

According to Higgins, the long-term implications of the proposal could drain the SGA's reserves in seven to eight years. Higgins said the SGA is liable for every student RSO on campus.

"I don't think we should be gambling with this amount of money," he said.

Rally supports D.C. march

AMELIA P. LUNA/COLLEGIAN

Eleanor Smeal rallies for support for "Save Women's Lives March for Freedom of Choice."

By Adam Gardner
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's pro-choice rally was held to gain support for the "Save Women's Lives March for Freedom of Choice," which will be held this spring in Washington D.C.

Between noon and 1 p.m. in front of the Campus Center, activists Eleanor Smeal, president of the Feminist Majority, and Gloria Feldt, president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, spoke to a group of about 50 University of Massachusetts students. The speakers were introduced by Cara Bedick, co-founder of the student organization Voices for Planned Parenthood.

Before the rally, the two women said they want people to know the date of the march now, so they can put it on their calendars and plan transportation. They also want family planning to gain a voice, so it can become part of the upcoming national debates.

"The trouble is, so many Americans don't believe that there is a possibility that we could lose access to abortion," said Smeal. "The Supreme Court last stood at 5-4 in our favor; everything is by a thread."

Smeal believes that after the Bush administration takes away the abortion right, it will limit contraceptives for single people as well.

Feldt spoke to the group first. She encouraged every student to tell 100 people about the march.

"You are exactly what the country needs right now to set it on the right path," she said. "Get engaged in the grassroots political process to make sure that your kids and grandkids have the right to family planning."

She said that women will not let the government take control of their bodies or tell them when they are going to be parents. She reminded the group that today is an historic day because the anti-abortion extremists brought an unconstitutional ban on partial-birth abortion to the national legislature for a third time.

"They are hoping that the third time will be a charm," she said.

Smeal started her speech talking about the Massachusetts legislature.

"Right here in Massachusetts, supposedly a liberal state, they are deciding whether or not to cut the family planning budget by 65 percent. If this happens, it means that major health care programs for women will end in Western Massachusetts," she said.

Smeal switched to family planning on an international level and spoke about Bush's overseas policies. She said Bush instituted the Global Gag Rule as soon as he gained office. It prevents caregivers, who work in countries receiving U.S. support, from informing women about the option of abortion. If the rule is broken, the country can lose U.S. health care funding.

"One more supreme court appointment could change everything," she said. This could lead to more devastation for the Third World.

Smeal emphasized that at present, only about 25 percent of Americans between the ages of 18 and 24 vote. That has to change in order to make progress.

"Not on our watch," she concluded, "will we lose the right to family planning or abortion."

The "Save Women's Lives March for Freedom of Choice" will be held in Washington D.C. on April 25, 2004 to demonstrate overwhelming majority support for a woman's right to choose safe, legal abortion and birth control. It is a collaborative effort by the four leading national women's rights groups, the Feminist Majority, Naral Pro-choice America, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America and the National Organization for Women.

"We are shooting for a thousand sponsors," said Feldt. "We have over 200 now."

Organizers for the event hope to break the record of 750,000 attendees that was set in 1992 during a similar women's rights march in D.C.

Cara Bedick and VOX hope to work with the Women's Studies Department to get funding to organize a bus trip to the march.

"This isn't just a women's issue," said Bedick. "This is a human rights issue."

Klein speaks on political awareness

EMILIE FOGGIANO/COLLEGIAN

Joe Klein speaks to students yesterday at Curry Hicks Cage on political awareness and the importance of voting.

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Political journalist Joe Klein told approximately 200 students gathered in the Curry Hicks Cage for his lecture yesterday that they must engage in politics and become better citizens.

Klein is the author of this semester's chosen Dean's Book, "The Natural: The Misunderstood Presidency of Bill Clinton" and currently a columnist for Time magazine.

"Our government has to get a lot more serious too — as we do as citizens."

Klein emphasized this again later, saying, "What they count on is that you're not going to be paying attention. Whether you agree or disagree with the President, you must pay attention."

Klein detailed why he believes students, and all citizens, must pay attention. "We may lose democracy [and] become vulnerable to evil forces in the world, or impoverish ourselves," he began. Klein said the United States has "floated" on the "momentum of our win in WWII and the strong economy that followed," but that period is now over. Klein wondered aloud to students whether Americans will have "the intellectual and moral rigor to face times more iffy with courage."

Klein told students that as "arguably elite young people" they should apply themselves to the poor, and social issues, not just because it will help the poor, but more so because it "will help you to become better citizens than my generation was."

Klein gave his brother as an example of people who purposefully remained uninvolved in politics. Klein said his brother has never voted, and when asked why says, "'I would just encourage [politicians].' " This is a luxury Klein said "we don't have anymore."

"It is a much different world than when I wrote 'The Natural,'" Klein said. " Our votes next year will have a serious impact on how safe and prosperous you will be."

The last election, according to Klein, was centered on three issues; whether we should go to war with Iraq, the economy and Medicare.

"What did these three issues have to do with you guys? They don't. They have to do with geezers," said Klein. "John Kennedy spoke to our generation's idealism. Politicians have stopped, doing that. Why? Cause you don't vote. The elderly are chronic voters; they are sure thing."

Politicians' focus on issues important to the largest voters groups, says Klein, is undemocratic. He blames this in part on political analysts influence on candidates. Klein told students that the next non-fiction book he plans to write will be on "the truly damaging impact political analysts have had on democracy."

However, Klein, added that students' votes and participation in politics would "neuter people like Dick Morris," a political analysist.

Although Klein told students he was "boggled by [the democratic candidates for nomination] and was unsure who deserved the nomination, he sees Howard Dean as good for democracy. Dean, said Klein, is making politics relevant to students.

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
OXYMORON:
WHY MINORITIES CAN'T BE CONSERVATIVES
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
LA VIE BOHEME!
'RENT' PLAYS AT UMASS TONIGHT
SPORTS
PAGE 8
CAPRARO SCORES
FORWARD WINS HOCKEY EAST PLAYER OF THE WEEK
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

Globe editor shares experiences

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

Robert Turner, deputy managing editor of Boston Globe editorial pages, spoke to a small group of students yesterday in Herter Hall about the many issues today's editorial writers take on.

Turner said he has written editorials directed at the Globe's own editors, specifically the news department's lack of focus on policy coverage during current Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney's election campaign. Turner said he believed the news drifted too much into a focus on Romney's Mormon religion.

According to Turner, one thing the editorial department strives for is accuracy. "My own instinct is to be on top of the news," he said.

Turner referenced a highly discussed error in last week's New York Post early editions after the conclusion of Game 7 of the ALCS between the Red Sox and Yankees in which an editorial bemoaning the Yankees loss was featured. However, the Yankees won that night, and according to Turner, a member of the Post accidentally hit a wrong button that caused the erroneous issues to be dispersed to the public.

"We never are quite sure how to measure the impact of editorials," he said. "[But] we want to be part of the debate. One thing we want to do is to try to write editorials that have some backbone to them."

Turner said the department wants to provide the public with an argument they haven't read a hundred times before, so they have some impact. He said he wants people to pause for a second before skipping the editorial page.

According to Turner, one example would be to call for legislation. Turner said the Globe's editorial pages have called for a statewide ban on the use of handheld cell phones while driving. Turner said he believes drivers who engage in handheld cell phone conversations while driving are indistinguishable from drunken drivers.

But Turner said a major project that he became interested in is the surface of the "Big Dig" in Boston, an issue he has been involved with for the last few years. Turner said he became intrigued by the potential of what was going to go on its surface — a space that is to become available to urban planners.

"Wouldn't it be a good idea to make something special out of it?" he asked.

According to Turner, it was something he wrote extensively about for the Globe's editorial page. Turner said the Globe and Massachusetts Institute of Technology put together forums with national experts who were confronted with the questions of what to do about the waterfront and other various aspects of the city's future. According to him, it was an endeavor that tied the editorial pages and the news department together, an unusual assimilation of two very different entities.

The Globe has also worked in conjunction with Boston's Channel 5 "The Chronicle" series.

"I don't think there's been anything comparable to the extent that it contains so many different elements," he said.

Turner acknowledged that questions might be raised about whether it was appropriate for a newspaper to engage in such a campaign. But, he said, it was a campaign without a specific goal or desire for the Globe.

"What we wanted was excellence," he said. "We felt it wasn't compromising." Turner said in the end, the city thought the results were very positive.

According to Turner, the surface area of the Big Dig is likely to feature some open lawns for people to stretch out and throw a Frisbee.

Continued on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Partington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Crum
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Bessuchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallek
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACORN LEFT BELOW THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Weekly Calendar of events

October 22 - October 28 2003

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Today

Master printer Maurice Sanchez and Elizabeth Murray will present a special three-day workshop on printmaking from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. from Oct. 22-24 at Smith College's Brown Fine Art Center, Hillyer L08. Workshop attendees will be able to witness Sanchez and Murray in the collaborative process of printmaking as they create a series of monotypes.

At noon, students can listen to a Zimbabwean musical performance by Jennifer Sarudzai Kyker, Mount Holyoke graduate '02 in the Great Room in Blanchard Campus Center at Mount Holyoke College. Kyker played both mbira and marimba professionally since age 12 and sings.

Professor Lawrence M. Krauss, an internationally known theoretical physicist, will give a lecture entitled: "Einstein's Biggest Blunder: A Cosmic Mystery Story," which will discuss how Einstein added the term "Cosmological Constant" to his General Theory of Relativity. The lecture will be held at UMass, at 7:30 p.m. in Thompson 104.

Tomorrow

Richard Stameiman, Professor of French and Comparative Literature at Williams College will give a lecture titled, "The Mystery of Perfume in French Culture" at 4:30 p.m. in Fayerweather 115 at Amherst college. A reception will follow the lecture.

Actors are called to audition for Amherst College's "Dead Fall" from 7 to 10 p.m. in Studio 2, Webster Hall. "Dead Fall," tells the story of three generations of an American family. Students can sign up for auditions outside the Theater and Dance Department Office at Webster G27. Auditions will be held on Friday night.

At 7 p.m., "Fahrenheit 450" will play in Franklin Peterson Hall of the East Lecture Hall at Hampshire College. This event is sponsored by Hampshire College Center for the Book.

"One Voice: Students Against Violence", a concert of acapella groups and solo acts will perform to get students to show their support for violence against women. The event will be held in Amherst College's Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall at 8 p.m. Admission is $3 for students, $5 for the community. Proceeds will benefit the Everyday Women's Center.

The 10th Annual Deerfield-Wellesley Symposium in American Culture will be held from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on both Friday and Saturday at the White Church Community Center on Memorial Street in Deerfield. The symposium features 12 speakers addressing topics on African Cultures in the North American Diaspora. Cost is $25 for students, $70 generai.

Rob Tapper and Kristen Ploeger from Eastern Washington University, Ann Mages, Genevieve Rose, Claire Arenius, Eugene Uman, Joe Belmont, Nathan Chiders and Director of Jazz Studies Bruce Diehl will perform in a Jazz Concert at 8:30 p.m. in Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall of the Arms Music Center.

Friday 24

Saturday 25

The New England Regional African History Conference will come to Smith College from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Historians from various African universities will present examples of contemporary African schoiarship in African History.

From 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., Amherst College will host a symposium titled "The Medieval Mediterranean: Contacts, Exchanges, and Shared Culture Across Religious Frontiers" in Fayerweather Hall on Saturday and Sunday. Registration is from 8 to 9 a.m on Saturday. The event is free and open to the public. For more information contact: 542-2229.

Hampshire College Farm is hosting its Fall Festival from 2 to 4:30 p.m. The Fall Festival will feature hay rides, a blacksmithing demo, a sheep herding dog demo, cider pressing, pumpkin painting, wool crafts and more.

At 7 p.m. there is a fireworks display open to the community at Hampshire College soccer fields as part of Homecoming weekend.

Sunday 26

Hampshire College Chorus, under director Elaine Broad, will present Mozart's Missa Brevis in D, k. 194 at 2 p.m. at Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst. A reception will follow the performance.

Monday 27

At 4:30 p.m., Dr. Cynthia P. Schneider, who served as an ambassador to the Netherlands under Clinton, will give a lecture titled "From Monticello to Mulan: Communicating Values Through Culture." It will be hosted by Smith College in Seelye 106.

At 7 p.m. in Smith College's Campus Center 208, there will be a lecture "Addressing the Social Development Needs of Adolescent Girls: An international Case Study from Rural Upper Egypt" given by Martha Brady of the Gender, Family and Development Population Council.

Tuesday 28

Andrew McClellan, Associate Professor and Chair of the Department of Art and Art History at Tufts University, will give the lecture: "Historicai Evolution of Museum Architecture" at 4:30 p.m. in 115 Fayerweather, Amherst College.

At 5 p.m. Benjamin, Harshav, a professor at both Yale University and Tei Aviv University, will give a iecture "Marc Chagall: Artist in the 20th Century: Culture, Politics, and Modernism" in Graham Hall, Hillyer, Brown Fine Arts Center at Smith College.

The Luce Fund and The Ada Howe Kent Fund will sponsor a iecture by guest Geshe Lobsang Tsetan titled " Compassion in Tibetan Buddhism. The lecture begins at 7:30 p.m. in Smith College's Wrigth Hall Common Room.

Klein speaks on upcoming elections

Continued from page 1

Klein summed up his thoughts on the upcoming election by saying, "Reality is about to collide with political process — it doesn't always happen. This election is out of the hands of politicians. It is going to be decided by Iraq, homeland security and the economy."

Pat Mercaitis, a professor of Communication Disorders and Dean's Book instructor, appreciated Klein's message to students.

"The message that he had to students about what their responsibilities are as citizens — I don't know that that is something that a lot of kids talk about at with their folks around the dinner table at home — for a journalist to talk so strongly about it. It goes back to the Acients —'attention, attention' pay attention to what is going on around you."

Fellow Dean's Book instructor Katja Hahn-D'Errico agreed with Mercaitis and said that that after reading "The Natural" their students had felt, "a wake up call to really become more interested and be more alert to what is happening and how complex it is."

Linda Slakey, Dean of the Commonwealth College, which sponsored the event, said she felt that for Dean's Book students and others in attendance, Klein's responses to questions were rewarding.

"For the people who stayed for all the questions got really rewarded," she said. "I think he was really pleased by the depth of the questions, and got really engaged at the end, and that was quite wonderful."

'March for Choice'

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The president of the Feminist Majority Foundation, Ellie Smeal spoke to an audience of about 70 at Amherst College last night to promote the March for Choice on April 25, 2004.

Planned Parenthood, NOW, NARAL and the Feminist Majority are organizing this march on Washington to demonstrate support for birth control and legal abortion. Smeal emphasized that young people have to realize the government can take away the right to legal abortion. She encouraged young people to register to vote.

"We must show the government we are organized and registered to vote. If more young people voted, the government would debate the need for prescription drugs, not family planning," said Smeal. She localized the decline of family planning programs through budget cuts in Western Massachusetts. The state legislature has cut women's health services by 65 percent, and since July, four family planning clinics have closed in Mass.

Although she spoke of the effects on Western Mass. she emphasized how much worse the situation is abroad. Smeal told the audience to have a global perspective when thinking about feminism.

"We talk about our problems as if we are in a vacuum, and what we decide here can impact other poor countries. It is much easier to see the negative implications of our policies abroad," Smeal said. She described the totalitarian regime of the Taliban in Afghanistan and said that in recent months, the Taliban has burned 30 girl's schools.

"I think terrorist groups are particularly awful to women because the feminist movement has become a symbol of the west," said Smeal. She then described women who are also exploited in Mexico.

"These women work at predominately American companies for 40 cents an hour. Recently, between 800-1,000 of these women were killed on their way home from work. Smeal expressed her outrage that the U.S. government refused to build roads for these women.

"I believe the exploitation of these foreign women are directly linked to our reproduction policies. The policies of the West are keeping the cheap labor pools going," said Smeal. "I don't think it's a coincidence that people who vote to exploit women also vote to withhold birth control. I think it is primarily an economic issue."

"Smeal blames the conservative right for the elimination of family planning programs and domestic violence programs. She emphasized the lack of concern the Republicans have for these family planning issues. This is the reason the March for Choice will occur.

"I believe as long as the right organizes in this country to eliminate social programs we are killing women abroad," said Smeal. "I want whoever wins the election in November to know women and men won't take this anymore."

This campaign is nothing new to Smeal, who led the drive to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment, which was the largest grassroots campaign in the women's movement. She has also worked for passage of the Pregnancy Discrimination Act, Civil Rights Restoration Act and Violence Against Women Act.

Smeal was a former president of NOW and has led the Feminist Majority Foundation since 1996 and say these issues will end when women stand up and say they won't take it anymore

"We have to stand up and say this is our future," said Smeal. "So get on the buses, come to Washington, and help build this movement from the ground up."

On the Net: www.MarchForChoice.org, or e-mail info-@marchforchoice.org.

Partial birth abortion ban

By Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Tuesday voted to ban the practice that critics call partial birth abortion, sending President Bush a measure that supporters and foes alike said could alter the future of U.S. abortion rights.

Years in the making, the bill imposes the most far-reaching limits on abortion since the Supreme Court in 1973 confirmed a woman's right to end a pregnancy.

"This is an enormous day. It's been a long seven-year fight about the issue of partial birth abortion," said Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan. He was a leader of the drive to end abortions, generally carried out in the second or third trimester, in which a fetus is partially delivered before being killed.

"This is indeed a historic day," said Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., lead opponent of the legislation, "because for the first time in history Congress is banning a medical procedure that is considered medically necessary by physicians."

The 64-34 vote came three weeks after the House passed the same measure by 281-142.Bush had urged Congress to pass the ban, which Republicans had pursued since the GOP captured the House in 1995, and the president had said he would sign it into law.

But opponents said the first federal ban on abortion since the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe v. Wade decision was unconstitutional and, like similar state laws, would be struck down.

The president, said Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J. "will become the first United States president to criminalize a safe medical procedure." Doctors who violate the ban would be subject to prison terms of up to two years.

The two sides differed widely on the frequency and definition of partial birth abortion, which is not a formal medical term.

The bill defines partial birth abortion as delivery of a fetus "until, in the case of a headfirst presentation, the entire fetal head is outside the body of the mother, or, in the case of the breech presentation, any part of the fetal trunk past the navel is outside the body of the mother for the purpose of performing an overt act that the person knows will kill the partially delivered living fetus."

Opponents of the legislation argued that, as defined in the bill, it could apply to several safe and common procedures, and that the real goal of the legislation was to erode overall abortion rights.

"I see what this is about ... this is about politics," said Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., an opponent of the legislation. "I never dreamed I'd be down here with senators who think they know more than doctors."

Exploring world issues through editorials

Continued from page 1

"For an urban area, it's got to be more heavily programmed than that." Turner has mentioned the possibility of a high-volume restaurant for the area in the Globe's editorials.

There are four different groups in charge of the outcome, Turner said.

"One thing we've been pushing for is more coordination," he said. "There isn't enough continuity ... nobody knows whose in charge."

According to him, the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority presently has the major clout. Turner said Boston Mayor Thomas Menino claims to want a larger role, but he doesn't want the responsibility of managing the budget.

"The city control is crucial to their success," he said. "That was obviously not happening and still isn't."

Another portion of the discussion concerned the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System exams that are mandatory for Massachusetts's high school students to pass prior to graduation.

According to Turner, the Globes' editorial staff has been fairly consistent regarding this subject from the start. Turner said the difficulty with the test is that some people feel it is narrowing, focusing only on English and Math; the fear is that some kids who fail will really be hurt and branded by it.

Turner said the editorial staff at the Globe felt the upside of a carefully worked out standard of minimum competency was simple. "I think the results support our position that MCAS is doing more good than harm," he said. Turner said he believes there is a stronger sense of accomplishment when a student graduates without just being handed a diploma; a high school diploma has a higher value than it did two years ago.

Turner said the Globe's editorial staff has also taken a hard stance on the graduation requirement not being lowered for special needs kids.

"We feel a high school diploma should mean a certain competency at a certain level," he said.

A native of north metro Boston, Turner began work for the Globe in 1965. He has been the chief editorial writer for the past nine years.

REGENCY HAIR STYLISTS
253 - 9526
Keep that summer color

$75.00 for 5 tanning visits + highlights
189 North Pleasant St., Amherst

ATTENTION
UMass Amherst Sophomores, Juniors, & Seniors
We would like to invite you to participate in a group interview with 8-10 other students on the topic of student beliefs and values.
The researchers are offering $30 to each participant
The interview will take 1.5 2 hours of your time. Snacks will also be provided.
Monday,Oct. 27
1 3p, or 3-5pm
151 Hills South Building
If you are interested in participating, please email Kati Szelenyi, szelenyi@ucla.edu. Please make sure to indicate which of the two sessions you would like to attend.

RAIN ENTERTAINMENT COMPLEX
COMING SOON!
A new two-story MASTERPIECE of nightclub design
Now accepting applications for the following positions:
Bartender, Barback, Cocktail Server, Cashier, Coatroom Attendant, Floor Staff, Door Security, Disc Jockey, Lighting Tech, Video Tech, Entertainers, Dancers
APPLY IN PERSON ONLY!
October 20, 21, & 22
5:00 - 8:00PM
10 Stearns Square
Downtown Springfield
(Formerly the Hot Club)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

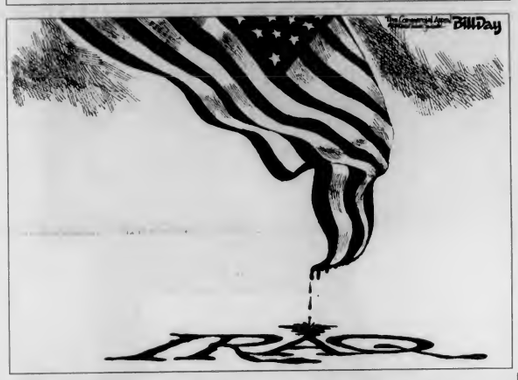
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Support the faculty's fight for contract funding

Many of you are probably already aware of the situation involving the contracts of higher education employees in this state. Today, many members of the University of Massachusetts faculty and staff are in Boston fighting for what is owed to them. Three years ago, they signed new contracts, and they have been battling the state to get those contracts funded ever since.

These men and women have been doing the best that they can to make their voices heard, but it is time for all of us, as students, to help out.

Aside from the trip to the state house, today is also a day for lobbying, not only on campus, but all over the state. The Massachusetts Society of Professors has claimed today as a day for writing letters, e-mails and even making phone calls. Many professors here at UMass will be passing around pre-printed post cards (if they haven't already) in an attempt to get students active in this struggle; student participation in this lobbying is essential. There is immense power behind united faculty and staff speaking out on their own behalf, but that power is magnified by the involvement of concerned students who themselves have nothing to gain.



There are no excuses not to help out in this situation. The 13,000 employees whose contracts are in question are faithful, hardworking members of the UMass community who have been patiently awaiting their hard earned raises for the last three years. The state is committing an injustice against them by not honoring the commitment they made back in July of 2001. As students of this community, we have an obligation to speak out against injustice, especially when it concerns the people who are here working for us, doing their best to make our time here as pleasant as possible.

For those of you who think it may require too much effort to pitch in, you couldn't be any more wrong. The pre-printed post cards that may be passed around your classes are almost completely filled out for you. All you have to do is write down your name and address, and if you've made it this far in college, that shouldn't be a problem.

If you're feeling motivated, and want to do more, write a personal letter to your senator or representative. Tell them how you feel the about the state's higher educatlon faculty and staff. Tell them that these people deserve to have their contracts funded. Tell them that they are supposed to be representing you, and that you believe In fulfilling the promises that you make.

There's safety in numbers, but there is also power. The more of us that speak out, the clearer the message will come across at the State House. We are the voices of tomorrow's voters, and if we speak loudly enough, our representatives and senators will hear us.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The conservative contradiction

Thomas Naughton

If you are a woman, a person of color, and/or a homosexual and you try to convince me that you are a conservative or a Repub-lican, I will laugh at you. The idea is a contradiction in terms. Somehow you have believed the lies that have been told to you by our media. Somehow you have lost touch with the reality that conservatism is a movement of and for white, straight, Christian males. I am aware that many aforementioned white straight males are now livid after reading these past few sentences. You're all shouting, "So we're the bad guy; we're the only group who has ever been the oppressor in the world." No, that's not entirely correct, you're just the group that's most often the oppressor. How's that working out?

I always enjoy reading books by people like Ann Coulter, who writes grandiose battle stories of the heroic conservatives who beat back the demanding and foul mouthed liberals who want to rob the rich of their hard earned money, who have sexual intercourse for pleasure and not to procreate, who take great pleasure in a good old fashioned abortion, and who use the American flag as a bib for their insatiable feast of perversion. Ann Coulter is the J.R.R. Tolkien of the right wing, second only to the supremely boring Bill O'Reilly. The icing on the Coulter cake is that the woman looks like the welfare-mother-turned-prostitute that she is constantly calling out against for depleting her colleagues of their disposable income. She's always wearing some terrible magenta Channel suit with her blonde tresses all falling seductively over her hunched and nerdy frame. She looks like an alumna of the Ron Jeremy School of Congeniality. She is always talking down about feminists or women, who don't shirk their responsibility as a woman (the way she does): to fight for equality in a world that they do not control.

My good friend Tom, a wonderfully smart and sarcastic Harvard University graduate, is a gay libertarian. He and I shared conversation upon conversation concerning public policy, government subsidies, taxes, and the welfare state. He makes quite the fiesty argument for the libertarians in America, however, I doubt that any of his libertarian counterparts would ever make an argument in favor of him as a gay male. When the middle of the summer rolled around, the Supreme Court ruling against sodomy laws made Tom feel misaligned with the libertarian platform he had once so whole-heartedly aligned himself with. Suddenly, everyone was talking about gays, gay marriage, sodomy, sin, right and wrong, and Tom's "live and let die" world as a libertarian seemed to turn upside down. He was torn between his politics and his persona. He was facing (as many gay, minority, or women republicans/conservatives will be forced to someday face) the fact that his politics would ultimately leave him out of their platform and their world.

What do I want to say to Condoleeza Rice? The same thing that was said to Clarence Thomas by Leon Higginbotham in an open letter that was printed in many newspapers when Clarence Thomas was appointed to the Supreme Court: "What have the conservatives of this country ever done for people of color?" Perhaps Ms. Rice missed that question because Clarence Thomas was never able to answer it. He never wanted to answer it because it's easier to believe what conservatives want people of color to believe: that conservatives aren't racist, that the scope of the American Dream includes people of color, that conservatives want to "make things better and more equal" between white people and people of color.

These are lies. Things are not getting better. Before 9-11 and the resulting reverence paid to the New York Police Department, the NYPD were not the crew to revere. Are you offended by that statement? Good, because I bet Patrick Dorismund's mother was offended when an undercover New York Policeman shot and killed him. I bet Amadou Diallo's family was very offended when they found out that Amadou had been shot and killed by New York police officers when he was pulling out his wallet to show identification. Did he die from loss of blood from one gunshot? No. Diallo was shot 41 times. That's a lot of bullets. When the wallet hit the ground, did it still look like a gun? Things are "more equal" now that affirmative action is being systematically phased out, right? Now we can go back to de facto discrimination, and everything will be nice and tidy and equal, right?

You readers can dismiss my opinion as more "liberal muckraking" in the media if you like. I love that myth about the media: it's entertaining, and it's the best example of how far conservatives will go to advance their racist, homophobic, misogynistic, classist agenda. Do you think that people like Katie Couric, Diane Sawyer, Barbara Walters, or Bryant Gumble are democrats? Do you think they actually vote with their viewers in mind, or their six-figure income? I think that conservatives actually think that the media is liberal because it's never as cruel, white, straight, restrained, or Christian as they want it to be (except Fox News).

So why would I laugh at you if you, a woman, a gay or lesbian, or a person of color told me you were a republican or conservative? Because your politics will someday leave you out; your politics will eliminate you.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Due process of the law owed to University students

S.J. Port

In the United States people are innocent until proven guilty. At the University of Massachusetts, however, students are guilty until proven innocent.

The 14th Amendment of the Constitution states that "nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law..." This right, adopted in 1868, applies to all persons, citizen or alien, as well as to corporations. Due process in the United States refers to how and why laws are enforced; it is the right to a fair trail, the right to be safe and secure in one's home. This means the State must use fair and just legal procedures to prove a man's guilt before they take away his life, freedom or possessions. These are procedural rights, and they include: right to a fair and public trail conducted in a competent manner, right to be present at the trail, right to an impartial jury and the right to be heard in one's own defense.

When a student commits a crime on campus, he is arrested and charged with a crime. His room is possibly searched, his belongings confiscated. Whether he is arrested by the University of Massachusetts Police Department, the State Police or the F.B.I., if it is on campus, he is usually given less than 24 hours to leave University housing — regardless of whether he guilty or innocent. The accused is shunned by the University administration, exiled from school and barred from an education.

The case of one student, recently expelled from the University, is particularly unethical. The student, known to many simply as T.J. was at the scene of the second Red Sox riot in Southwest. Before leaving campus, T.J. posted flyers around his dorm and campus telling his story.

In his flyer T.J. stated that he had only gone to the riot, because he'd been in Southwest watching the game in a friend's room. Following the game, he and his friend joined others in celebrating. T.J. said that although people were yelling and "having a good time," he was unable to yell because of an infection in his throat. T.J. did not yell with others, nor did he begin a fire or riot, according to his posted statement. Furthermore, T.J. said, "I didn't know a riot was going on. Maybe the police had a better view."

When the police came through, T.J. watched as people ran. Upon witnessing a female student being pushed over, T.J. helped her up, and propped her behind a tree "so she wouldn't get hurt." After helping his peer, T.J. walked away from the "shouting police and down a flight of stairs to my left where that café thing is." There his statement details witnessing an incident in which the police shoot a female student a "few times because she was walking too slow."

To expel a student is to send one more person into the Commonwealth without an education.

"The police wanted her to run home," his statement said.

T.J. sat on a bench near the dining hall and watched. When a policeman told him to leave, T.J. said that he was peacefully assembling and did not move. The policeman returned a few moments later, according to T.J.'s flyer, and again told him to leave. T.J. repeated that he was "peacefully assembling," at which point the policeman "jabbed a club into me and put hand straps on me."

"He told me comforting things like I was going to be kicked out of school and work at Seven Eleven my whole life and next time I would think twice about questioning authority," T.J. said in his statement.

T.J. was then loaded into a van and taken away.

According to friends, T.J. was held at the UMass Police Station until approximately 4 a.m., when a friend posted bail and brought him home to his dorm. At 8:30 a.m., he appeared in a Hadley Court and pled not guilty to charges of disturbing the peace, failure to disperse, and inciting a riot — the last of which is a felony.

After attending court, T.J. went to speak to the Interim Dean of Students, Gladys Rodriguez. Rodriguez allegedly told T.J. he had until 5 p.m. Friday to remove himself and his things from his residence hall and campus.

T.J. was expelled before he saw a judge, before being convicted of any of the crimes accused of him, his friends said. The University forwent the due process of law, and in doing so, took away T.J.'s rights.

Of course, the University, because of their Code of Conduct laws, is allowed to do this. However, what they do is by no means in the best interest of the student, or society.

T.J. may not have been correct in refusing to disperse, but the University committed a more heinous crime when it refused a student the decency of a trail, or defense of any kind. Additionally, the speed with which the University sends students packing is mind-boggling. T.J. no doubt was spinning when he left campus. In 24 hours, he had been charged with three crimes, including a felony, expelled from his education and evicted from his dorm. The University tore apart his life before he was convicted of any crime.

To expel a student is to send one more person into the Commonwealth without an education — an education that would presumably teach the student why what he did was unacceptable behavior. Instead of expelling the student, the University should rethink its own actions, take into consideration the law of the larger land and the harm they do these students. Just think of all the community service these charged students (many of whom, like T.J., have not committed violent, destructive or dangerous acts) could be forced into if allowed to stay on campus, regardless of the judgment they receive in court.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

Walling off hopes for peace

Yousef Munayyer

A poet who spent much time in New England wrote "something there is, that doesn't love a wall, that wants it down."

Today, in the West Bank, Israel continues a policy to create a wall on Palestinian territory that is further perpetuating the cycle of violence by tightening the illegal occupation.

Why build a wall, one may ask — and many have. Israel continues to argue that the wall is for security purposes and is needed to deter suicide bombings. Not everyone agrees. The wall that Israel is building which is projected to span a length of approximately 700 kilometers and cost up to $1 billion will serve other purposes. This is definitely not a short-term project.

Considering the border of the West Bank and Israel is only 350 kilometers, you may ask where the rest of these hundreds of kilometers of wall are going. The answer is simple. They are cutting deep into the West Bank, cutting off towns and villages, destroying agriculture and economy, and forcing harsh living conditions onto an already exhausted Palestinian population.

Much of the wall has not yet been built; it's a monstrosity in progress. However, earlier this month, the Israeli cabinet voted and approved the proposed route of the wall.

The Green Line, the line that is the border of the West Bank as of the armistice of 1948, is not where the wall is being built. In fact, the wall does not even follow the outline of the Green Line. Some have argued that Israel needs a buffer zone. It is outrageous for Israel to annex more Palestinian land for this purpose. If they need a buffer, they should use their own land for it. They have stolen enough. What is even worse is the actual track this wall has taken so far, and its projected path that was approved on Oct. 1.

The wall as it stands so far today is 125 kilometers long, dipping into the West Bank past the Green Line. It separates villages from towns that are vital to each other for economic and medical reasons. Its construction has lead to the uprooting of orchards and olive trees and destruction of property and almost 40 kilometers of water pipes. This region is vital to the West bank particularly because its high cultivable land is pertinent to the economy.

Qalqiliya, a city of approximately 40,000 Palestinians, has become a ghetto. The city is now walled off completely with only one way out that is controlled by the Israeli forces. Qalqiliya's 30 neighboring villages that are home to about 90,000 others are cut off from their economic center.

The projected path of the wall only continues to look worse. Not only does it dip within the Green Line destroying everything in its path, it will continue to encircle Palestinian areas separating them from Israeli settlements and further implementing the Bantustans all along the occupied territories. Words like "apartheid," "ghetto" and "Bantustan" scare the supporters of this wall, and they should. The world needs to call this for what it really is even if it puts Israel in a bad light.

This issue has been followed by a war of words. The rhetoric used by different people is comical yet at the same time disheartening. The Israelis continue to call this a security "fence." Has any one seen a 30 ft high concrete "fence?" I haven't. This will be taller and longer than the Berlin Wall, so do not sell it short.

The State Department and White House carefully change their rhetoric, depending on who they're addressing with this issue. In July, the former Palestinian Prime Minister, Mahmoud Abbas, was in Washington, and the Secretary of State said that he was concerned with the Israeli "wall." But only a week later, when the Israeli prime minister was in town, President Bush said he sees the need for Israel's "security fence."

The projected path of the fence has been put on hold for the time being because of American pressure. However, when it comes to Israel, this pressure never holds, particularly when it comes to election time in Israel.

The wall divides the West Bank. What was only 22 percent of historic Palestine will be divided even further into two areas in the north and south, separated by the areas around Jerusalem to protect Israeli settlements. It will also be separated from Jordan. Israel has maintained that it needs to control the area of the West Bank in the Jordan River valley for approximately six to 10 kilometers.

This leaves two separate, divided Palestinian populations in the West Bank, separate from each other, from their schools, from jobs and hospitals, and also separated from Jordan, their lifeline to the rest of the world. Jenin, Nablus, Tulkarem and Ramallah will now not only be separated from each other, but they will be walled in and separated from Jerusalem and Jericho. Hebron and Bethlehem will also be separated in another chunk of territory created by this wall.

What we have here is the age-old theory of divide and conquer. With every meter built of the wall, Israel is annexing more land. Since 1948, Israel has been taking land that was lived on and worked by Palestinians. This continues, clearly, today with the erection of this apartheid wall.

The Israeli cabinet continues to claim the wall is for their security To believe this, however, would mean we have learned nothing about the nature of resistance. The more land that is taken from the Palestinians and the harsher the occupation gets, the greater they will lash back through violence. Israel is holding all the cards, and it needs to realize that building walls and destroying land will not bring it security. On the contrary, it will only bring the opposite.

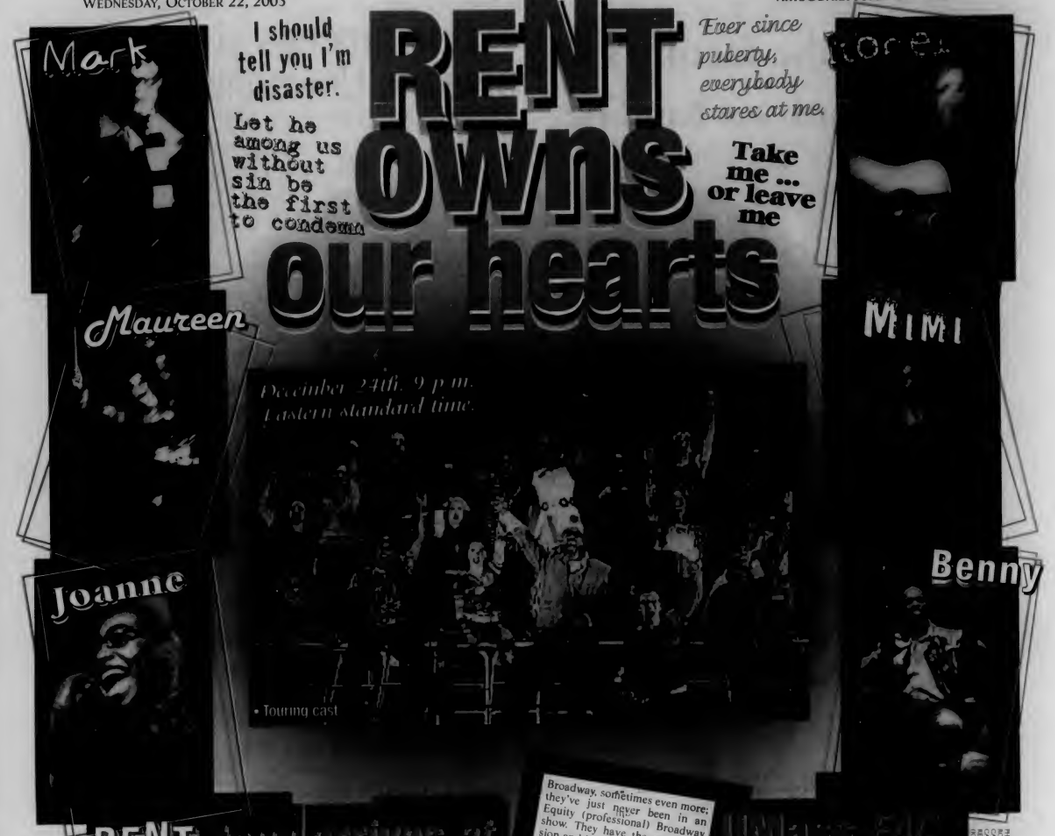
Like the Robert Frost poem, some people call it a fence when it's not a fence at all, and this wall will not make good neighbors.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Oh lover, I'll cover you

One song before I go



Today for you. Tomorrow for me.

That's Poetic. That's Pathetic.

LA VIE BOHEME

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

RENT tour arrives at UMass PAC

By Joe Piedrafite
Collegian Staff

"How do you measure a year? In daylights? In sunsets? In midnights? In cups of coffee? In inches? In miles? In laughter and strife? In 525,600 minutes?" Jonathan Larson's epic rock opera "RENT" begs to answer these questions. And starting tonight, when the current national tour of "RENT" pulls into the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, you too can try to answer them.

The current tour has crisscrossed the country since it has returned from hiatus in mid-September. Before the University of Massachusetts, the tour previously played in Georgia and Pennsylvania. It's booked well into 2004, continuing on to future stops in Chicago, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Houston and Las Vegas. The show is identical to the one that plays nightly at the Nederlander Theater in New York — with one small exception. It's a Non-Equity tour. However, all that means is that the cast is full of unknown actors, waiting to make their big break. They've had just as much experience as those on Broadway, sometimes even more; they've just never been in an Equity (professional) Broadway show. They have the same passion and intensity, and their performances are nothing less than stellar.

This tour boasts a talented young cast, lead by Brian Gilgor as Mark, an aspiring film maker, and Collins, an HIV positive, computer pro, is played by Marcus Paul James. Constantine Maroulis tackles the role of Roger, a wanna-be rock star infected with HIV who's trying to write one great song before he dies. HIV positive, S&M dancer Mimi (and Roger's love interest) is played by Jamie Lee Kirchner. Also included in the vagabond army are Damien Deshaun Smith as Angel, a sassy drag queen with a heart of gold, Daryl C. Brown as Benny, an aspiring entrepreneur and former friend of Mark and Roger (also the landlord of their building) Leslie Diamond as Maureen, a lesbian performance artist and Mark's ex-girlfriend and Joanne, a public interest lawyer and Maureen's lover, played by Rebecca Jones. Rounding out the rest of the ensemble, who play various characters throughout the show, are Jahmal Adderly, Jeannette Bayardelle, Jeff Scot Carey, Dan

Continued on page 5

The line forms here

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

The original 1996 Broadway cast of "RENT" proposed the idea of selling a set number of tickets at a cheaper price. The idea was to make going to the show an option for those who couldn't necessarily afford to pay the going rate for tickets on Broadway; people like those they were portraying in the show.

Today, each venue that hosts "RENT" puts aside a certain number of tickets to be sold for $20 on a first-come, first-serve basis. The number of tickets available depends on the size of the venue, but it's usually in the neighborhood of 30, and they are always in the first two rows of the theater. Though the box office won't sell these tickets — known as 'rush' seats — until two hours before the show starts, tradition dictates the line begins to form long before the box office even opens.

Here at UMass, there will be 28 rush tickets available for each show. They will be $20 per ticket, but if you're student at UMass, you will only be charged the $15 student price. Tickets will go on sale at 5:30 p.m., but people can line up

Continued on page 6

RENT 101: The basics

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

Some people have seen "RENT," some have listened to the soundtrack; but almost everyone has at least heard of the award winning Broadway show. For those of you who have no knowledge of the show at all, here's a quick primer.

Jonathan Larson's "RENT" opened on the 100th anniversary of "La Boheme," an event that Larson didn't plan, but one that was apropos for a show that was based on Giacomo Puccini's 19th century opera.

"People try all the time to do stuff like this," Larson said in a 1996 interview with the New York Times. "But this is an amazing coincidence."

What wasn't a coincidence were all the parallels to the classic opera that can be found in Larson's show. Larson was greatly influenced by "La Boheme," a show he had seen in puppet form as a child. He recognized himself and his friends in Puccini's bohemian characters, identifying with their survival struggles. He took the opera one step further and modernized their fight, bringing it up-to-date musically and by having his characters wrestle not only with financial woes, but also with drugs, sexual confusion, and AIDS.

Just as "RENT" is based on "La Boheme," Puccini's opera is based on a book of autographical short stories of Henri Murger, a French writer

Continued on page 5

Larson lives on

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

On Feb. 13, 1996, one of the most successful shows to hit a Broadway stage premiered at the New York Theater Workshop, but the man who created "RENT" never got to see his dream become a sensation.

According to the "RENT" Web site, Jonathan Larson watched the final dress rehearsal, did an interview with a reporter from The New York Times, went home and died on the floor of his kitchen, where his roommate found him a few hours later. On Jan. 25, 1996 — just 10 days before his 36th birthday — Larson died of an aortic aneurysm.

Just a week prior, Larson collapsed during rehearsal and asked for an ambulance. Ironically, the cast was rehearsing the song "What You Own," which Larson wrote about living and dying in America at the end of the millennium. The Web site says Larson "later told friends that he could not believe the last burst of music he would hear might be his own song about dying."

Larson lived the bohemian life he wrote of in "RENT," but his life was far from difficult. From the time he graduated college until his death, Larson lived in New York City, 30 minutes from the suburb of White Plains where he grew up. Though his upbringing was comfortable, with his loft apartment, illegal wood-burning stove, serving job and dancer girlfriend, Larson could have easily

Continued on page 5

Film puts Food For Thought on the map

Bookstore to debut educational film by mother/son team

COURTESY ODC

Ruth Abrams and her son Bob have put together an educational video that delves into the hidden messages in maps.

Many Ways to See the World
Wed. Oct. 22
Food For Thought Books
Amherst
free

Food For Thought Books in downtown Amherst will host the debut of the educational video entitled, "Many Ways to See the World!" The showing will take place Wednesday Oct. 22 at 6 p.m. in the Bookstore. The event is free and open to the public.

Director Ruth Abrams 79 and her son Bob Abrams collaborated to produce this 30-minute video that contains a message of seeing through the hidden meaning of maps. In a press statement Abrams said, "Maps do make a difference in how we see the world!"

There are three key messages to the video and they are:

1. We can only understand the world if we're willing to see things from multiple perspectives.
2. The "truth" must be seen from many vantages points.
3. One person's voice can make a huge difference in the world.

"Many Ways to See the World" is a follow-up and elaboration to the book "Seeing Through Maps." The book was a groundbreaking piece of work took an honest deconstructing stand on dissecting the subtle and subconscious language hidden in maps.

The video showing will begin promptly at 6 p.m. Wednesday evening. All attendants will be given a free world map. For more information, call 800-736-1293.

-Cameron J. Woods

Keller Williams hits Pearl Street tonight

Musician hopes to make himself at home in Northampton

COURTESY SCHERLETT

Keller Williams has grown over the years as an underground talent and is now emerging in unpredictable ways.

Keller Williams
Wed. Oct. 22
Pearl Street
Northampton
$15 advance
$18 door

With the release of his first ever solo, studio recording, "Home," recorded in his hometown of Fredericksbug, Va., Keller Williams has kept it real and gives new meaning to the term one-man band. With an upcoming show in Northampton, Williams is sure to impress fans anew with his musical toys and eclectic stylings. His vibrant melodies are infused with a unique combination of funk, jazz, roots, reggae and a certain flare categorical all his own. Not only is there clear evidence of his technical dexterity, but his sense of humor and quirky swerving, smiling melodies are imbued with energy and gusto.

"Home" is William's eighth album release, his first three albums, "Freek" in 1994, "Buzz" in 1996, and "Spun" in 1998, offered a reflection of his live experience whereas his more recent style is more infused with bluegrass, psychedelics, blues and funky indiscriminately rhythmic instrumentals and beats. At least part of his unique sound could be attributed to having self-renovated a 12-string guitar into a 10-string guitar he is able to play base and guitar simultaneously while upholding rhythm. And in case there is any wonder at what some of his influences are, he names Ani Difranco, Michael Hedges, Victor Wooten, Bobby McFerrin and the Grateful Dead as some of the prominent ones.

Williams claims not even to prepare a set list most of the time, so it is difficult to predict what will he will play, but at least some songs from his new album are to be expected, such as "Love Handles" and "Tubeular".

The show will be at Pearle Street in Northampton on Wednesday.

-Diana Mogilevsky

New tenants move into FAC

Continued from page 4

Domenech, Joe Donohoe, Lesly Terrell Donald, Badia Farha, Erin Greiner, Genny Padilla, Daniel Shevlin and Suzanne Slade.

The original creative team repeats its duties on the road, under the sublime and superb direction of Michael Greif. Marlies Yearby duplicates her memorable choreography as well, Angela Wendt's hip and audacious costumes are just as fabulous on the road as in New York, and Paul Clay's abstract set and Blake Burba's inventive lighting are brilliantly recreated. The edgy subject matter and themes of sexuality, AIDS, class, hopes and dreams, preaching about facing an uncertain future with courage, humor, loyalty and love and aspiring to make it big have all helped "RENT" achieve acclaim. Having sharp, thought-provoking lyrics, a hot, sexy and freakishly talented young cast belting out a blazing score with a backbone in rock doesn't hurt either.

"RENT" sets up shop at the Concert Hall for two performances on Wednesday and Thursday. Tickets cost $15 for Five College Students, and range from $15-$45 for the public. For more ticket information, call or visit the FAC box office, 413-545-2511.

In case you'll miss it at UMass, the tour stops next at the Providence Performing Arts Center Friday and Saturday.

On the Net: www.siteforrent.com or www. rent thetour.com.

The legend of Larson lives on through 'Rent'

Continued from page 4

been one of his characters.

Larson attended Adelphi University on a full theater scholarship, a testament to the talent he was well known for in his town. His high school, not having a program in musical theater when Larson started, created one for him, so that he would not be without an outlet. It was in college that he truly shined, and in his senior year, he wrote a letter to Stephen Sondheim, one of the most famous writers on Broadway, looking for a mentor. Shortly before his graduation, Sondheim contacted Larson, and they struck up a friendship. It was Sondheim that would eventually encourage Larson to focus solely on writing music.

"There are more starving actors in New York than there are starving composers," was Sondheim's advice to his protégé, according to "The Creation of RENT," a souvenir book. That was all it took to convince Larson to move to New York City in 1982, right after his college graduation.

"RENT" may be his piece de resistance, but Larson did more than just this one show. He also produced his rock monologue "tick, tick ... BOOM!" He worked on film scores and "Sesame Street" and wrote and directed four songs for "Away We Go," a musical video for children. He wrote music for Steven Spielberg's books-on-cassette, including "An American Tail" and "Land Before Time."

On the surface, it might seem like he was doing well in his chosen field, but Larson worked as a waiter for more than 10 years. Until October 1995, Larson worked at the Moondance Diner so that he could "keep food in his mouth," according to his father, Al, sited in a 1996 New York Times article.

Larson was rewarded for his work with some impressive accolades; he was a 1989 recipient of the Stephen Sondheim Award from the American Music Theater Festival, for his contribution to the musical "Sitting on the Edge of the Future." In 1994, Larson was awarded the Richard Rodgers Award for "RENT," a grant that allowed him to do a workshop production of the show.

There was a distinct sense of loss at the theater the day of Larson's death, but the overwhelming feeling was that Larson would have wanted the cast to perform.

Larson was given more awards posthumously for "RENT." In 1996 alone, the show received four Tony Awards, including Best Musical and Best Score of a Musical. "RENT" received the 1996 Drama Desk, New York Drama Critics Circle and the Outer Critics Circle awards for Best Musical, as well as awards in other categories, and some specifically for Larson. The show also won three Obie Awards, with one specifically for Larson for "Outstanding Book, Music and Lyrics."

Perhaps the biggest award Larson won after he died was the 1996 Pulitzer Prize for Drama.

There was no pause in the show when Larson died. 'The show must go on,' is the one tenet that everyone in theater holds tightly to, regardless of the role they play. There was a distinct sense of loss at the theater the day of Larson's death, but the overwhelming feeling was that Larson would have wanted the cast to perform. So, they did, to an audience filled with Larson's friends and family, the people he loved the most.

"It was incredible and terrible," Anthony Rapp told the Web site. Rapp played the role of Mark in the off-Broadway production at the New York Theater Workshop, and in the original Broadway cast when the show opened in April 1996 at the Nederlander Theater.

"It was like we had to do it," the site reported he said. "We were all sobbing and crying."

The show Larson saw the night he died has been reworked a few times. Scenes have been reblocked and lyrics re-written in a way that doesn't compromise Larson's intended message.

"RENT" is based heavily on Larson's life and the people that roamed freely in and out of it. It was an intensely personal show for him to write, and it took seven years of hard work to bring about the show we see now. And in December 1995, Larson was finally able to describe "RENT" to his collaborators in one succinct sentence, immortalized in the show's history on the Web site.

"Rent is about a community celebrating life, in the face of death and AIDS, at the turn of the century," he said.

Information from the New York Times and the official RENT Web site (www.siteforrent.com) was used in this piece.

A new Bohemia lives on

Continued from page 4

that struggled in life to stay true to his art. When Larson was writing "RENT" he would refer to Murger's work, "Scenes de la Vie de Boheme," knowing he needed to dig deeper than Puccini's opera in order to fully give his character's life. All of Murger's stories are about struggling artists who choose their art over everything, including life.

"Murger's characters are much grittier," Larson told the New York Times before his death in 1996. It wouldn't be long before he would stop trying so hard to remain true to Puccini's work. Though the basis of the characters and the story is clearly visible beneath the surface, it is Larson's own life — and death — and the people in it that would truly define what the show would become.

Rodolfo the poet became Roger, the ex-rock band front man, looking for his one shot at immortality before he dies. The updated version of Murger and Puccini's character is HIV-positive, a former junkie, and emotionally cut off after "his girlfriend, April, left a note saying 'we've got AIDS,' before slitting her wrists in the bathroom." Roger, like Rodolfo before him, only truly begins to live again when he meets Mimi.

In "La Boheme," Mimi is frail, sick with tuberculosis. Her inevitable death in the opera is sad, but not a surprise. Larson's Mimi is also sick, but with the plague of the 20th century. This updated version of Puccini's ingénue is an HIV-positive, S&M club dancer, junkie "looking for baggage that goes with mine."

It is Mimi's live-for-the-moment attitude offends Roger when they first meet, but her zest for living in the face of inescapable death is as infectious as her disease, and Roger is drawn to her. She helps him let go of his fear of being alive, reminding him that their time is too short to regret past mistakes, or worry about what tomorrow will bring.

"No day but today" is her way of life, and this is her message to us all. She unabashedly pursues Roger, and with a push from his roommate, Mark, Roger gives in.

The character of Mark emerged from Marcello, a painter. The modern version is a filmmaker that escapes into his work rather than face the wreckage that his life has become. He is the narrator, often speaking directly to the audience to emphasize a point. He is cynical and jaded and still smarting after being dumped by his ex-girlfriend — for a woman — a storyline that mirrors Larson's own life.

The ex-girlfriend, and ex-roommate, is Maureen, a character based loosely on Murger and Puccini's Musetta. Like Musetta, Maureen is free-spirited, but the original character has been recaptured in the form of a diva performance artist who uses her act to play out her social commentary and take jabs at Benny, a former roommate that used to have morals but "abandoned them to live as a lap dog to a wealthy daughter of the revolution."

Benny evolved from Murger and Puccini's Benoit, a landlord in both the book and the opera. While Benoit is a relatively minor character in "La Boheme," in "RENT" he is more than just the yuppie landlord. Benny is the former roommate-turned-landlord who has dreams of developing Mark and Roger's apartment into a commercialized cyber-world, with film and music production studios on the lower floors, and lofts to rent out on top. But he can't do that without convincing Mark and Roger. They see the truth of his greed, so Benny demands the back rent for a year, evicting his former roommates when they refuse to pay. It is his demand that the entire first act hinges on.

Mimi and Rodolfo's love story was the focus of "La Boheme", just as it is primarily Mimi and Roger's story that "RENT" is performed around. But theirs is not the only love portrayed, and it is quite possible that the most touching part of the show is the story of Collins and Angel, based on Puccini's Colline, a philosopher, and Schaunard, a composer.

Collins – Tom Collins – is gay, politically outspoken, black and HIV-positive. He is mugged on this Christmas Eve, the day on which the entire first act takes place, and is found by Angel Dumott-Schunard, a cross-dressing Hispanic street drummer. Angel's introduction of himself to Collins comes in the form of an invitation to a Life Support meeting. "Yes, this body provides a comfortable home for the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome," he says by way of explanation. "As does mine," is Collins' reply. Their love is defined by the song "I'll Cover You," in which both characters sing "I think they meant it when they said you can't buy love, now I know you can rent it, a new lease you are, my love, on life. Be my life."

To say that this show is about struggling to survive in today's society as a homosexual or a minority or someone with a disease, is to undercut its very spirit.

To say that this show is about struggling to survive in today's society as a homosexual or a minority or someone with a disease, is to undercut its very spirit. Mark and Roger don't seem to care about having a gay roommate. Joanne and Maureen have their share of lover's spats, but never are they about being part of an interracial couple. Benny, the landlord regarded as "yuppie scum," is black, when stereotype dictates that yuppies are white.

This show isn't about avoiding racial and ethnic issues in society. It is about proving that it's not important what color your skin is or where you are from or how you were raised. Everyone can be affected by disease; everyone can find himself or herself in need of money; everyone struggles to realize their dreams.

The ultimate message seems to be to live each day as if it were your last; love whom you will love; be as you will be. If this were your last year on earth, would you be satisfied that you lived each of your "five hundred twenty-five thousand six hundred minutes" to the fullest?

That's what we get each year, just 525,600 minutes. Make each one count. That's what this show is about.

Information from the New York Times and the RENT official site www.siteforrent.com was used in this piece.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004

The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28 @ 7pm in Thompson 102
WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 29 @ 7pm in Bartlett 65
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3 @ 7pm in Tobin 304

This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in English 112/113. (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

UMASS Campus Recreation

Get those forms in by:

3-on-3 Basketball (M/W/C)	10/27
Holiday Basketball (M/W)	10/27
2-Ball Soccer (C)	11/24
Spring Basketball (M/W/C)	12/1

Mandatory clinics for Spring Basketball officials are scheduled in two parts. Clinics are scheduled for January 26 &27 at 6 p.m. and January 28 &29 at 7 p.m. Call for requirements and locations.

On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

New WORLD Theater presents
A new collaborative work inspired by the writings of Edward Said
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater
THE YEAR PAST IS THE NEXT DOOR
ReORIENTALISM
Thurs. Oct. 23, 2003 • 8pm, Bowker Auditorium
Western images of Islam and the East are redirected, reshaped, and reclaimed in this new collaborative "pocket-opera" featuring traditional and original Middle-Eastern music, spoken word, sung text and visual projections. ReOrientalism disrupts stereotypes and explores themes of "orientalism" - the West's simultaneous romanticism and fear of Islam and Asia.
A commissioned project of the Center for Cultural Exchange, Portland, ME.
TICKETS ARE: $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/seniors; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511. For more info about the show, call NWT at 413-545-1972.
Up next... Open Mic Event! A Call To Action
A showcase of young voices from groups throughout the Pioneer Valley! For more info call 577-2990
Nov. 2 @ 7pm Northampton Center for the Arts - FREE

Fans take more from show

"Rentheads" form subculture of their own

Continued from page 4

whenever they choose. There is a limit of two tickets per person, so the first 14 people to line up will get the tickets.

In every city except New York, the first person in line finds out how many tickets will be released and starts the list. The list keeps track of how many tickets are left and when the tickets have all been .claimed. Once the magic number is reached, the list is put away until the box office opens. The 'rush' formula dictates that each person is allowed one ticket, and if you make it on the list, you must wait there for the duration of the day. Exceptions are obviously made for bathroom breaks and food runs, but competition is intense for these seats. If you're gone too long, you will lose your spot.

However, the list is not a guarantee of anything except that you were there all day. The theater ultimately has the final say in how 'rush' tickets will be distributed. While most will go by the list, some theaters follow the lead of the Nederlander Theater in New York City, where the Broadway cast performs.

A lottery system was started in New York when it became clear that the same people were getting the tickets night after night, despite requests to give others a chance to see the show. The lottery gives everyone a fair shot at the $20 tickets, regardless of whether you got there at 5 a.m. or 5 p.m. To prevent fans from congregating in line for hours or days, the lottery system is instituted at theaters for the touring show. But, it is not the institution of a fair system that has fans as upset as the fact that loitering is no longer allowed outside.

Outside of any theater where "RENT" is housed, you are likely to find people sitting patiently on the sidewalk. These are the 'Rentheads,' young fans who have an all-consuming obsession with the show. They come from near and far, travel across state and country lines, just to see the show. They bring coolers of food and drink and sleeping bags, prepared to hunker down for the long wait before the show. Fans share board games and books, paper and writing utensils, and even their clothes.

Strangers become fast friends out here. In a few short hours, they will have formed a community of their own, as strong as the one found in "RENT."

Seventeen-year-old Meghan McMahon of Staten Island, N.Y. equates sitting outside — known as rushing the show — with better understanding the show's meaning.

"Within minutes of meeting people in line you know you have someone to watch your back," she said. "It's bonding, because the ones who have tickets have to watch out for each other and make sure that no one tries to take their place."

COURTESY SETHCRAIGART.COM

Once The Nederlander Theater had 'Rentheads' lined up outside for hours before shows, but the lottery system for 'rush' tickets changed that.

McMahon has been a "Renthead" since she was 12, when she would skip school to sit on line for tickets in New York City. Those days are gone, now, with the institution of the lottery system, but McMahon likes to talk about the good old days.

"I met my best friend here," she said. "The two of us are taking on the world together. That's what the show is about. 'To being an us for once, instead of a them,' " McMahon says, quoting a song from the show.

There's something unique about 'Rentheads,' and it's not just their willingness - their enthusiasm, even - to sleep on sidewalks. They know every word to every song ...

There's something unique about 'Rentheads,' and it's not just their willingness — their enthusiasm, even — to sleep on sidewalks. They know every word to every song, and even the intermingling dialogue of "RENT." They have been known to wear clothing similar, if not identical, to the costumes worn by a favorite character. Their devotion to the show can be alarming to outsiders, but cast members are thrilled with their presence.

Gwen Stewart, part of the original Broadway cast, told the New York Times in 1996: "The kids up front are the lifeline of the whole place. The whoop and holler and don't use the usual Broadway tact. It's good to see those faces."

There are, however, some over-the-top fans who can be more than a little obsessed with both the show and the cast. Horror stories fly amongst 'Rentheads' about fans that have lied about being on their deathbed to get cast members to visit them, or the fans that honestly believe they are going to marry a character.

"The crazy ones scare me," McMahon said. "They don't know limits." She admits, though, that she used to be scared that cast members would see her as a stalker because they started knowing her name.

"Yeah, I was here everyday," she said. " I was always hanging out by the stage door with my friends. But, I didn't come here for them."

McMahon is quick to add that she doesn't dislike the cast members. But, "I came because of the story and the characters, not the people who play them." Most 'Rentheads' would agree it is not because of the people in the show that they are united. There is no doubt that the show and its message have been instrumental in bringing fans together from all corners of the world, but it is the relationships amongst each other that they find most important. Sitting outside for hours allows for strong bonding and time to practice concepts from the show.

"We used to get called names all the time," McMahon said. "But everyone would literally just laugh it off and sing 'let he among us without sin be the first to condemn.' "

McMahon has intertwined "RENT" song lyrics into her everyday vocabulary, and she proudly admits that she lives by the motto "forget regret, or life is yours to miss."

"Life is too short to feel bad about little things," she said. "Learn your lesson and move on."

There are many lessons to be learned from the show. But, according to McMahon, the most important philosophy 'Rentheads' can take away is that life is for learning to live, not waiting to die.

'Rentheads' have found something they relate to in this show. In an age where "strangers, landlords, lovers, your own blood cells betray," devoted fans have found amongst themselves friends that understand what is truly important to them. These friendships may only last the hours spent on line, but they will resonate forever in memories.

These fans live the philosophy, "no day but today." They celebrate life and living, understand that love is found everywhere and that death of body does not have to mean death of spirit.

Celebrations tainting the game

Matt Barstow

Four years ago, when Barry Sanders scored his 109th career touchdown, he calmly handed the ball to the referee and walked off the field, bringing with him the last shred of gamesmanship left in the NFL.

If you watch any modern football game, you're bound to see three things: obsessive celebrating, trash-talking and taunting. There are still classic celebrations such as the "Lambeau Leap," "Mile-High Salute," "Icky Shuffle" and even the ludicrous "Dirty Bird." These touchdown celebrations have become an integral part of the NFL, because they are inoffensive, include the whole team, and don't directly gloat in the competitions face.

Over the past few years, there's been an increase in the number of flashy, in-your-face touchdown dances invented to get the scorer on Sports Center. The National Football league has done little to cut down on taunting. The mandatory 15-yard penalty for taunting is rarely enforced, and the $5,000 league fines don't appear to be an effective deterrent against multi-million dollar show-boaters.

So when does the professional football player decide it's OK to taunt the opposition? And what can be done to stop player arrogance from alienating the NFL from long-time fans?

What possessed Randy Moss to do the "Moonwalk" into the end zone during a Monday Night Football game?

For many of these superstar athletes, the "Neon Deion" school of showboating begins during childhood.

When Johnny from Saugus has a camera shoved in his face after a Little League World Series game, and asked is asked to comment on the similarity between his swing and Ted Williams', what do you think that does to Johnny's ego?

No wonder 18 year-old LeBron James, before ever setting foot on an NBA court, thanked himself first-and-foremost for all the success he's been assured by coaches and peers since his days in peewee basketball camp.

The natural result from a culture that puts its athletes on a pedestal for something they do for sixty minutes a week is the creation of raving, egotistical superstars like "Give Me the Damn Ball" and get out of my way, Keyshawn Johnson.

To many football fans, taunting and celebrating are two reasons to watch the NFL. Last year, when Terrell Owens scored a touchdown during a Monday Night Football game against the Saints, he pulled a pen out of his sock, signed the ball and handed it to his financial consultant.

Terrell's antics were semi-amusing, but obviously ridiculous. The league decided it would be too much trouble to demand an apology from Owents, and despite a plea from Seahawk's tackle John Randle, who called the episode "an embarrassment to football," Owen's was never fined

To Owens, the ball-signing debacle may have been his way of interacting with the fans. But what about the game when Owens scored a touchdown against Dallas, ran to midfield, held his arms out, and posed in the position of a mock crucifix? This kind of behavior alienates casual football fans that don't want to see a young man glorifying himself for making a catch. Aside from being offensive, no football player should be allowed to run 50 yards to the middle of the field, spike the ball and taunt the opposition.

In order to prevent the NFL from becoming a total circus, the league needs to fine players like Jeremy Shockey when they punt the football into the stands in an end zone celebration as the Giants tight end did last Sunday. In the NBA, if a coach or player boots a basketball into the stands they receive a technical foul. It's a disservice to the fans when football players are allowed to run amuck without accountability.

I'm sure NFL players could think up crazy dances and taunts faster than the league could classify them as taunting, but where should the league draw that line?

Is it acceptable for Warren Sapp to skip through the Redskin's warm-ups before a game? What if he's talking trash? What if he bumps a ref on the way as he did two weeks ago? Do players making $50 million a year care about a $50,000 fine? Should Sapp be forced to humiliate himself on a mock-pogo stick for the rest of his career?

I love football; I love the competitiveness, the glory, and the failures. But dancing does not need to be in a football player's resume.

My favorite NFL moment occurred in Super Bowl XXVIII, when Leon Lett danced down the sideline after catching a pass from Troy Aikman, waving the ball at the perusing defender on his way to the end zone. In a great moment of poetic justice, Buffalo's Don Beebe blindsided Lett, and knocked the ball out of his showboating hands, teaching NFL players a much-needed lesson in humility.

Matt Barstow is a Collegian columnist.

All-stars subpoenaed

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Barry Bonds will testify in December before a federal grand jury probing a laboratory that supplies some of the nation's top athletes with nutritional supplements.

The San Francisco Giants slugger is one of several dozen athletes who have been subpoenaed by the panel. Others include New York Yankees slugger Jason Giambi, sprint champion Kelli White and U.S. shot put champion Kevin Toth.

Bonds' attorney, Mike Rains, said Tuesday that his client received a subpoena about a month ago asking him to appear Dec. 4. Rains said he was told by the prosecutor leading the investigation that "Barry is a witness and not a target of the grand jury."

The company at the center of the investigation is the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative, or BALCO, which was raided by the Internal Revenue Service and drug agents in September. An attorney for BALCO founder Victor Conte confirmed Monday his client is the target of the grand jury probe.

The scope of the investigation is unclear, and federal officials have refused to comment.

Conte has been accused by the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency of supplying athletes with a new designer steroid that is rocking the world of track and field.

Bonds has been a BALCO client since 2000, and in the June issue of Muscle & Fitness magazine credited Conte for a personalized program that includes nutritional supplements.

The home of Bonds' personal trainer, Greg Anderson, was raided last month in conjunction with the raid on Conte's lab.

"When Barry gets a grand jury subpoena and his trainer's door gets kicked in by drug enforcement agents, that's when I get involved," Rains told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Tuesday. "All of that has certain ominous appearances to anybody."

Giambi confirmed his subpoena Monday while at a World Series workout in Miami.

Conte has said in e-mails that he was told by athletes that 40 Olympic and professional athletes have been subpoenaed. Being subpoenaed does not imply any of the athletes has done anything wrong.

IRS spokesman Mark Lessler wouldn't comment, referring reporters to his agency's Web site for a description of the responsibilities of the agency's criminal investigation unit.

"CI's top priority is the investigation of violations of the tax law," the site says. "However, CI special agents lend their financial investigative expertise to money laundering and narcotics investigations conducted in conjunction with other law enforcement agencies."

Robert Holley, an attorney for Conte, said the BALCO founder has not been subpoenaed.

"My client is innocent until proven guilty," Holley said Monday. "So far as I know, he is the target of the investigation."

Conte was named by an anonymous track coach as the source of a substance that turned out to be a previously undetectable steroid, tetrahydrogestrinone, or THG. Conte has denied he was the source.

The USADA said last week it retested hundreds of samples from track and field athletes after identifying THG, and that several tested positive during the U.S. track championships in June. They now face two-year suspensions.

Hockey East teams go on road

Continued from page 8

a power play, and Stephen Gionta added the winner Ty Hennes in the box for interference at 15:51 of the second.

While the scoreboard reflected victory for the Eagles, they suffered what might be an even bigger loss, that of captain Ben Eaves. Eaves left the ice with a head injury just 2:53 in, and it's not clear when he'll return.

A long haul for Lowell

The River Hawks may think twice the next time someone invites them to The Last Frontier, after taking a tie and a loss in the Frontier Classic at Alaska-Anchorage. Lowell tied Miami (Ohio) 4-4 in the opening game Friday, and won the shootout, though it only counts for tournament seeding. The hosts then showed their brand of hospitality, edging UML 1-0 in Saturday's tournament final.

Rocky Mountain low

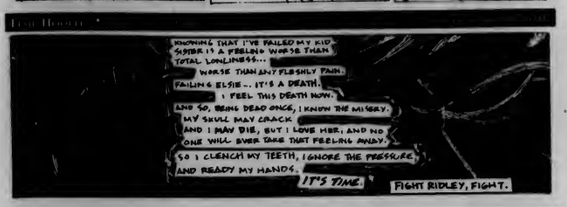
Northeastern also struggled on the road, dropping two games to Denver at Magness Arena. The Pioneers beat NU by three goals both nights, with Kevin Ulanski grabbing two goals and two assists. The Huskies may have seen a goaltender controversy generate out of the weekend, though, as sophomore Tim Heneroty (31 saves, six goals allowed) showed at least as much poise in game two as junior Keni Gibson showed in the opener (23 saves, five goals allowed). Gibson was in net for 22 of Northeastern's games last year, but the sophomore from Pittsburgh, Pa. could be giving the veteran a strong push this year.

Welcome to the show

This weekend saw four Hockey East rookies score their first collegiate goal. BC's Brian Boyle scored at North Dakota, Boston University's Kevin Schaffer at Vermont, UMass' Mark Matheson hit paydirt at home against St. Lawrence, and Maine's Keith Johnson found the mark against Holy Cross.

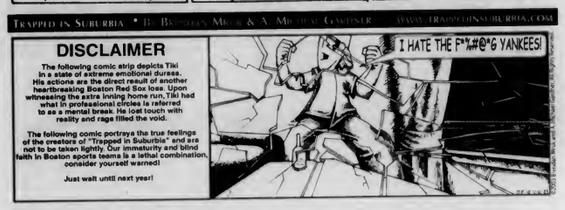
Lowell finds a superstar

Sophomore Ben Walter, who scored five goals in 35 games last year for UML, already has four tallies in three contests this season. The Langley, B.C. native scored two against Miami (Ohio) in the opening game of the Nye Frontier Classic at Alaska-Anchorage, both on the power play.



$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Ale, Points Blue, Chicken Fingers, Quesadilla Stacks, 30 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

Clip Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!



GREENLEAVES
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"It's like I'm being tied to the hood of a yellow rental truck, being packed in with fertilizer and fuel oil, pushed over a cliff by a suicidal Mickey Mouse."

- "Over the Moon," "RENT"

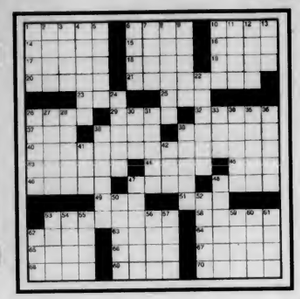
TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 Slovenlies
6 Sailor's saloutdoors
10 Sugar source
14 Horse — baker
15 Tires
16 Singer Ed
17 Mollusk
18 Unlucky time for Caesar
19 Opposite of him
20 Pads, as a law
21 In detail
23 Recipe qty.
26 Zodiac sign
28 Fang aide
29 Dry
30 Intermittan teats
37 Bullring cheer
38 Electrician's item
39 Type of rope
40 Lucrative severance agreement
43 Cat's mark
44 Rock's back and forth
45 Citrus pieces
46 Novelist Daniella
47 "Little Women" role
48 Took a cab
50 Kimono sash
51 Kimono bush
53 Like pre-college courses
58 Capeize
62 Forest mole
63 "Help!" in Paris
64 Fencing sword
65 Zeus' spouse
66 Salamander
67 British Museum's — Marbles
68 2001, e.g.
69 Food holder

DOWN
1 Pajama coverer
2 Pull — hassled
3 "Stormy Weather" singer
4 Builds
5 Pub game
6 Pub brew
7 German import
8 Acutely
9 Edition
10 Commanded
11 Actor Jennings
12 Spooky
13 Pleasant sound
21 Eye surgery
24 Hatcher
25 Ling's logs
27 Soaking
28 Contradict
30 Comic Kabibble
31 Rental agreement
33 Stadium cheer
34 Croquet's last stand
35 Was fond of
36 Beckoning
38 Chopped down
39 Boise locale
41 Pogo singer Kitt
42 Tan region
47 Tiller
48 Small wave
50 Intended
52 Train alternatives
53 Fit to —
54 Irene of "Fame"
55 Thickening
57 Pilaris state
59 Chicago, e.g.
60 Token
60 Writer Daghod
61 Wallet bills
62 Timid

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

70 Thrills, slangily

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. •Reggae Night • Dance Party
THU. •Glen Robertson Band
FRI. •Open Irish Sejsiun
SAT. •The Shooks
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans and Rice (vegan)
- Riblets Gardenburger (vegan)

DINNER
- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 31

THURSDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 29

FRIDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 29

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lindsay Clark/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
People want you to fail. Don't let them have their way.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
No matter how much you finish, there will always be more.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Why do you even try to apologize? No one is mad at you.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Smiling makes the worst task seem bearable.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your current romantic situation is up for a change.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You know many things, but you don't know everything.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
Paint someone with a paintbrush. It will startle them.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't let my existence get in the way of your fun.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't get caught under your desk.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Look at those eyes. You need to sleep more!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Find a hottie and take them home with you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The best vacations are random and spontaneous.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

X Productions and Mission 101 Entertainment Presents . . . Ladies night at Atlantis on Wednesday nights at 10pm All ladies get free admission before 11pm DJ FreddyFresh on the turntables An 18+ event Atlantis is located behind Antonios Pizza in Amherst Center.

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Auto for Sale

Sizzling Red Convertible, Pontiac Sunfire 1997 excellent $3900.00 549-0822

Achieva 92 Oldsmobile 66,000 Miles FWD 4 shows good condition No rust $1995.00 548-1020

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Auto for Sale

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

Computers

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

Employment

Make over $1000 a week many opportunities available www.studentsource.net

Drivers and Kitchen Help Wanted Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Employment

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Partending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Rent

Ski House For Rent So. Londonberry, VT: 15 mins to Stratton. 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30. $1000/week. katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

For Sale

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office Regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Furnitures

Moving Sale Patricia 413-529-9458

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost and Found

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Found: 10/18 Woman's gold ring outside Judies- call to describe 413-549-7454

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

Services

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Capraro honored

Recieves HE award

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team earned its first weekly hockey award Sunday, when sophomore Chris Capraro was given CCM Hockey East Player of the Week honors. Capraro earned the nod after his second three-point game this season in a 5-1 win over St. Lawrence.

Capraro scored two goals — including the game winner — and added an assist in the Minutemen's third victory of the season. He also notched three assists against Connecticut on Oct. 9, a 6-3 win in UMass' home opener. His six points (two goals, four assists) are second on the team behind senior Thomas Pöck, who is in a three-way tie with Providence's Chase Watson and Torry Gajda for the conference lead.

Friars continue to roll; Eagles split with Sioux

Some Hockey East teams found themselves flung all over the continent this weekend. Five squads — Boston College, Providence, Northeastern, UMass Lowell and Merrimack — played at least one game outside the New England area. Lowell won the distance competition, traveling to Anchorage, Alaska, for the Nye Frontier Classic. BC split a two-game set at North Dakota. Providence hiked to Minnesota State, and Merrimack had the relatively short trip, playing one game at Union, in Schenectady, N.Y. on Saturday.

The Friars came out the big winners this weekend, sweeping their series against MSU in Mankato, Minn. To remain undefeated in four games this season. PC edged the Mavericks 2-1 in the first game, and rolled past the hosts 5-3 in the second. Sophomore Bobby Goepfert shined in game one, stopping 34 of 35 MSU shots en route to his fourth win of the season. Watson scored two goals and an assist in game two, good enough to earn him Rookie of the Week honors.

Preseason conference No. 1 BC had a tougher time with North Dakota. The Sioux trumped the Eagles in the opener 6-4 behind a hat trick from Brandon Bochenski. In game two, the BC special teams took over, and the Maroon and Gold scored on both the power play and penalty kill to win 2-1. Ryan Shannon scored with 1:36 remaining in the first on

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. UNG / COLLEGIAN

UMass forward Chris Capraro won the first Hockey East Player of the Week award for the Minutemen. The Maroon and White return to action this Friday against Holy Cross in the Mullin's Center at 7 p.m.

Losing all-star Walker will hurt Celtics

Todd Foster

There is one key rule in trading. When trading an All-Star, get an All-Star or at least someone with All-Star potential.

The Celtics made a bold, risky move trading three-time All-Star Antoine Walker along with sharp-shooting Tony Delk to the Mavericks for soft finesse center Raef LaFrentz, unproven combo guard Jiri Welsch, washed up Chris Mills and a 2004 first-round draft pick. When you look over this trade, you have to think what new Celtics GM Danny Ainge was thinking.

According to ESPN.com, in the first meeting between Ainge and Walker, Ainge told Antoine he didn't think much of his game and Walker told friends he was out of Boston at the end of the season.

A new GM should never say something like that to one of the team's longtime stars in their first meeting. Toine had worked hard all off-season to drop 20 pounds off his frame making his versatile game more dangerous in all aspects, but I guess Ainge didn't care.

Instead, he got rid of a man who averaged 20.8 points, 8.7 rebounds, 1.52 steals and 4.2 assists for two players who never reached their potential and a player with limited potential. Ainge traded, due to his personal bias, an All-Star for at best three role players. They got nothing and I proved my point on trading. Or did I?

Before I keep bashing Ainge, I have to say I hated Walker's game. He shot too many threes, didn't hustle at times, whined more than Jessica Simpson and was definitely a ball hog. Don't forget the NBA also added the luxury tax and the C's would not put up the money for Walker next season. Toine is now gone and I can only speak the truth on the matter.

The team is now Paul Pierce's team. This could be the season where Pierce becomes the top player in the NBA. He will see the ball 12 to 15 more times every game this season, giving him the opportunity to score over 30 points every night. While the Truth will hold down the perimeter with rookie Marcus Banks and camp surprise Mike James, Piece will finally have two solid post players to support him in LaFrentz and finally Vin Baker. I'm sure half of the Celtic faith just threw the paper away after I mentioned Baker, so let me explain.

This off-season, Baker earned the nickname "Flash" after dropping 30 pounds and showing flashbacks of the low-post moves during his All-Star days in Milwaukee from '93-'98. There is no other reasonable explanation for Walker being traded than Baker's drastic improvement.

Baker has been impressive this off-season making classic pivot moves, solid outlets to start the break, cleaning the glass and hustling. Will he be the Vin Baker of the mid-90s? I don't think so, but I hope I'm wrong. He will however get 12 points and seven boards a game.

Baker will occupy one block and LaFrentz will hold down the other. LaFrentz, who is extremely overpaid, will make around 10-million a year. LaFrentz is changing over from the West to the East and everyone knows there is no good Eastern centers.

His shot blocking and scoring opportunities will improve not having to face Shaq, Yao and Tim Duncan. He won't be an All-Star, but he will be one of the four best Eastern centers. It also being interesting seeing the two Kansas All-Americans (Pierce the other) reunited.

One aspect the C's lose with no Toine was no one else pushed the ball. Walker would grab a board, start the break and would make an awful decision half the time. Enter rookie Marcus Banks to run the break. Banks is a speed demon and true point receiving outlet passes from Baker, LaFrentz or Battie.

Once he gets the pass and starts the push, he will have an emerging Kedrick Brown, who has incredible athleticism and a 40-inch vertical leap — and the best two-guard in the L on the other side. The UNLV-product can also finish strong, like he showed LeBron James in the Celtics Summer League.

No one is taking notice to the addition of Jumaine Jones. The former Cavalier is a solid small forward who does a little bit of everything. Three solid small forwards in Brown, Jones, and underrated (or overrated) Eric Williams gives the Celtics more depth than last season in the frontcourt.

The Celtics do have more depth and options with at least three solid players at every position. Was the Walker trade worth the added depth? The answer is certainly not. The superstars shine in the playoffs, and we only have one star without Walker. If triple teams shut down Pierce, Ainge will be crying for Walker after they lose in the first round.

Egos kill championships, and Ainge's ego killed it before we had chance.

Todd Foster is a Collegian columnist.

Kobe Bryant goes on trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NBA all-star Kobe Bryant will be going on trial Nov. 10 for the alleged sexual assault of a 19-year-old girl in Eagle Colorado

By Jon Sarche
Associated Press

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Kobe Bryant has been ordered to stand trial on a charge of sexually assaulting a 19-year-old Colorado resort worker, but the judge said prosecutors had offered only minimal evidence.

Eagle County Judge Frederick Gannett said Monday that although prosecutors presented "a minimal amount of evidence," what they did show suggested "submission and force." The evidence included photographs of the woman's injuries, as well as blood on her underwear and on Bryant's T-shirt.

The NBA star could face life in prison if convicted. His next appearance, in district court, was set for Nov. 10.

Bryant has said the sex was consensual. His attorneys suggested the woman's injuries came during sex with other men in the days before her June 30 encounter with Bryant at a posh resort in nearby Edwards.

The defense can appeal Gannett's ruling, but such appeals are rare, legal experts said.

At Bryant's first appearance in state district court he will be advised of his rights, the charge and the possible penalties. He could also enter a plea during that hearing.

Unless Bryant waives his right to a speedy trial, the trial would be scheduled within six months of his plea.

Prosecutors in Colorado almost always succeed in persuading a judge to order a trial after a preliminary hearing because the standard of proof required is relatively low. Allegations are usually enough to advance the case to a higher court for trial, where the standard of proof is much higher.

District Attorney Mark Hurlbert said he was "pleased" by the decision, "although we had confidence all along in the case."

Bryant's attorneys issued a statement saying that although they knew their chances of getting a dismissal had been slim, "the prosecution's case simply had to be tested."

"The standard at trial is a far higher burden: proof beyond a reasonable doubt. When this case is tested by that standard, Kobe Bryant will be found innocent," Pamela Mackey and co-counsel Hal Haddon said in a written statement.

At the Los Angeles Lakers' El Segundo, Calif., practice facility, Bryant was asked before the ruling how much anxiety he was feeling. "Basketball, zero anxiety. Other stuff, a little anxiety," he said.

"But now I just pretty much, you know, give it up. I've pretty much done all I can. Now I'll let God carry me the rest of the way. I feel comfortable with that," he said. John Clune, the lawyer representing Bryant's accuser, declined comment.

Gannett's comments on the evidence indicate he had questions about the prosecution's case, legal analysts said.

Judges normally don't issue written rulings after preliminary hearings, and the fact that Gannett wrote his suggests the case is fraught with difficulties, said Scott Robinson, a Denver defense attorney.

"The reality is that unless there is significantly more substantial evidence available at trial, and a suitable explanation for some of the puzzling physical evidence which surfaced last week, a conviction looks like a completely unlikely scenario," Robinson said.

Bryant's preliminary hearing lasted nearly two days and included graphic testimony about an encounter prosecutors say turned violent after flirting by both Bryant and his accuser.

Sheriff's Detective Doug Winters testified the woman went to Bryant's room at the Lodge & Spa at Cordillera shortly after checking in him and his two bodyguards.

The two chatted and began kissing. But a few minutes later, Bryant grabbed the woman by the throat, bent her over a chair and raped her, asking her several times not to tell anybody, Winters testified.

She told Bryant "no" at least twice, and he stopped only after she pulled his hand off her neck, Winters said.

The woman was left with vaginal tears consistent with assault and her blood was found on Bryant's shirt, Winters said.

But he acknowledged under cross-examination by Mackey that the woman had sex with another man shortly before her encounter with Bryant. She also didn't tell Winters initially that she had said "no."

The defense argued that semen and pubic hair found in the woman's underwear that weren't from Bryant prove he is innocent — an argument ridiculed by prosecutor Greg Crittenden.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 36

Physical Plant addresses SGA

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Mina Safain, secretary of administrative affairs, speaks during the motion session at last night's SGA meeting.

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts physical plant managers spoke of the need for the student body to help keep the campus clean, while other issues such as excessive police force, judiciary appointments and the current percentage of ALANA students enrolled at the University were addressed by the 51 senators who attended the SGA meeting last night.

The meeting at the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union featured three physical plant managers who spoke of their commitment to improving the appearance of the University. It was the first appearance made by representatives of the physical plant at a meeting of the SGA since 1987, the same year that a policy prohibiting food and beverages in classrooms was put in place.

"We've been under pressure to make the campus look better. We have been challenged to be more productive," said Patrick Daly, director of the physical plant, admitting that the University should have cleaner facilities.

However, Daly wants the University and the students to help them. Daly said the plant's budget was cut at mid-year last year, even though $40,000 was spent on trash containers. According to the managers, the proper recycling bins are being used only 50 percent of the time.

"If we had more money then we could do more things," Daly said. "Unfortunately the funding is restricted."

If students help keep the campus clean then the plant staff can focus more on facility restoration, washing the facades of buildings, and dusting rather than picking up trash, he said. According to Daly, the plant managers have spoken with two sub committees of the Faculty Senate, and after speaking with the SGA their next step will be to discuss the issue with all of the University's department heads.

"There are generation gaps," Daly said. He had hoped to get as many ideas as possible from the SGA as to how to get students to react with positive energy with respect to the campus. One idea, proposed by senator Craig Goldschmidt, was to promote student employment and volunteers. He said if he knew that his best friend was picking up trash then he would be less likely to litter. Daly concluded by reminding the senate that there are faces behind the scenes cleaning up after them.

The other major issue brought up by senator Daniel Pozmanter was the excessive police force during the recent spate of riots, especially during last Thursday's activities.

"I did not think they were there to further student safety on campus," he said.

Pozmanter said he believes the SGA should take a serious look at their actions from a civil liberties point of view. He said he is going to be questioning the UMass Police Department about several things.

Chair Jason Bissonnette added that for those students living in the Southwest Residential Area, last week turned into a much larger problem than it appeared in the newspaper. President David Carr

Continued on page 4

Contract supporters lobby at Statehouse

By Erin Lemkey
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON — More than 300 faculty, support staff and graduate students from the University of Massachusetts and state community colleges crowded into the Massachusetts Statehouse yesterday to lobby state legislators on their commitment to honor salary contracts for higher-education employees.

In 2001, two-dozen contracts were negotiated with union leaders who represented more than 13,000 employees, and all were passed overwhelmingly in the House and Senate as a part of the fiscal year 2002 budget. These contracts promised pay raises of $15 a week for maintenance, administrative, police and support staff, many of whom make under $30,000 a year. The contracts also promised competitive salaries for faculty members that reflect the standard of living costs of Massachusetts. Before being passed, however, acting Governor Jane Swift vetoed the funding for these contracts and this veto was not overridden.

Recently, Democratic Rep. Martin Walsh wrote a letter to House Speaker Thomas Finneran, urging him to bring a bill to the House to fund the contracts by the end of October. His letter mentioned that the "recruitment and retention of top quality faculty and staff are severely threatened" and that "the legislature has never before reneged on its obligation to fund collectively bargained contracts ... [which] renders [the process] practically meaningless".

Since the distribution of this letter to state legislators, 127 members have signed on. Yesterday's trip to Boston provided faculty and staff the opportunity to follow up on these signatures as well as speak to legislators who have not shown support. A meeting was also arranged for union leaders to speak with Finneran at noon.

Before the lobbying began, a group that had a close to equal ratio of unionized faculty and support staff assembled on the fourth floor of the State House to hear words of encouragement from legislators and union leaders.

Representative Ellen Story began by expressing her complete support and offering her office as a "home base" for lobbyists to come and "vent" about the situation. She encouraged faculty and staff not to get discouraged if they talked to aides rather than legislators, as aides were often very knowledgeable and could shape their legislators' decisions.

Her words were followed by a forceful and impassioned speech from a representative from Watertown who raised cheers from the crowd when he emphasized that the state could not have a surplus "until all past bills have been paid." He referred to this month's $726 million dollar budget surplus — a surplus that has yet to be spent. The president of the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers was also present, along with Jenny Spencer the UMass Faculty Union President.

"It was great," she said after returning to Haigis Mall. "All of the faculty and staff were well organized, and every [legislator's office] was visited." Spencer, who is also a professor in the English department, was "hopeful that there's enough energy to solve the problem."

Todd Evans, a graduate labor student at UMass, was similarly impressed with the energy and the turnout, however he advanced some skepticism about the commitment of the state's legislators.

"I was disappointed with the reactions of the office aides," he said. "I felt they didn't give as much weight to the fact that the state reneged on a deal — they didn't see the ramifications it would have."

Dan Clawson, professor in the sociology department at UMass said, "If the state doesn't appropriate the money, we've heard reports the university is considering itself giving us a tiny raise." He said that the contradiction, however, is that "the only way the university could do so is to raise tuition or cut course offerings, and both of those are unacceptable."

Despite the hopefulness of union leaders, the mood in the return bus to UMass was mixed with sardonic humor.

"In short, I could have gotten the same thing out of going to China Dynasty today without the travel," said police officer Jerry Perkins. "I walked out feeling full, yet I was hungry again 20 minutes later, after I realized I was told absolutely nothing to make me feel like the contracts were going to be honored anytime soon."

Editor in chief of Parade magazine to speak today

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Lee Kravitz, editor in chief of Parade magazine, will speak and answer questions today at 1 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts as part of journalism professor Steve Simurda's media criticism class.

Parade is the Sunday magazine distributed by 340 newspapers nationwide, including the Boston Globe. The magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine; it reaches 80 million people.

Kravitz, who is also senior vice president of Parade, was named to his position in March 2000. From 1995 through 2000, Kravitz was editor of React magazine, a teen magazine launched by Parade and distributed in 225 newspapers in the United States. He was also responsible for the management of React's website, react.com.

Prior to joining Parade Publications, Kravitz was an editorial director for Scholastic, Inc.

The speech and question-and-answer session will be held in 227 Herter Hall. Professor Simurda moved the class to the auditorium in order to accommodate more students.

Simurda explained that Parade is probably a difficult magazine to manage because it is a general interest magazine, which means it must always cover diverse topics.

"Parade is a very unusual magazine because it has a very large circulation and it covers a wide variety of topics, which is not easy to do," he said.

He went on to say that due to Kravitz's experience with Scholastic, Inc, he is knowledgeable on young people and education, which gives him more of a reason to speak to UMass students.

In comparison to other publications, Parade is a unique magazine. Simurda pointed out that contrary to the fact that the magazine does not have specific types of stories that it tends to publish, there are many features that draw a reader's attention each week. One of those features is the "Ask Marilyn," column.

"This woman has a high IQ, she's a genius. People send her questions about almost anything," he said. "[In one issue] someone wrote, 'In 2003 we have only one Friday the 13th. What is the maximum amount of Friday the 13th's we can have every year?'"

Another notable feature is Walter Scott's "Personality Parade," which is a section where people write in questions about their favorite celebrities.

The speech and question-and-answer session should run between an hour and fifteen minutes and an hour and a half. The event is open to all students.

'Cosmic Mystery' discussed

By Keyana Brown
Collegian Correspondent

Yesterday evening, professor Lawrence Krauss gave an hour and a half lecture in Thompson 104 at the University of Massachusetts. The event was hosted by the Physics department, which was sponsored in part by the Five College system.

Despite cold temperatures and drizzle, Krauss still managed to attract an audience of about 300; some individuals had to sit on the floor or stand up in the overcrowded auditorium.

John Machta, the head of the physics department, was the first to speak. He gave a brief overview of Krauss's many accomplishments before introducing him to the floor.

Professor Krauss holds a Ph.D. in Physics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has written more than 200 scientific articles. Krauss is one of this country's most distinguished theoretical physicists and the author of several best selling books, including "The Physics of Star Trek" and "Fear of Physics." His studies include the nature of dark matter, the early universe, general relativity, and neutrino astrophysics.

Currently, Krauss is working on a new introductory physics text for non-science majors and a new popular book entitled, "Hiding in the Mirror," which is scheduled for publication in 2004. Also, public television is undertaking a five-part television series to be hosted by Krauss.

The audience applauded loudly as the Krauss approached the floor of the auditorium. His main topic was, "Einstein's Biggest Blunder: A Cosmic Mystery Story." He incorporated visuals and overhead projections. Krauss managed to grab the audience's attention throughout the entire lecture by incorporating humor and sarcasm into his lecture. He discussed cosmology, methods of weighing the universe, Newton's Law of Gravity, Kepler's discovery, orbital velocity versus distance, Einstein's theory of relativity, expansion of the universe and the Hubble space telescope. Krauss ended the lecture with, "I hope to have made your heads spin," as he smiled.

Krauss stressed that physics is alive and not just some ancient finding by "dead white men hundreds of years ago." When asked why he is so passionate about cosmology, he answered with the question, "How could you not be?" He said that he feels practically everyone should be interested about the fate of the universe and where the future is going in scientific terms.

While some students attended the lecture for extra credit, the majority was genuinely fond of Krauss and interested in his field of study. "I am very interested in astronomy and cosmology," said junior Nicole Tanot.

"I am a history major, but I wanted to learn about something I found interesting that wasn't history," said Ethan Bude.

At the end of the lecture, nearly a dozen individuals stayed after to speak with Professor Krauss and ask further questions.

Krauss will lecture again today at 11:15 a.m. in Lederle Graduate Research Tower room 1634 on the fight against scientific ignorance.

EDITORIAL/OPINION Page 5
OVERSEAS
STUDYING ABROAD REWARDING EXPERIENCE
ARTS & LIVING Page 6
TWICE-BAKED
DAVE CHAPPELLE HITS NOHO
SPORTS Page 12
DO OR DIE
FOOTBALL TEAM FACES VILLANOVA SATURDAY
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS Page 11

Cosmology expert Dr. Lawrence Krauss speaks last night to a full auditorium on "Einstein's Greatest Blunder."

If you accidentally got pregnant, could you still make it to graduation?

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective in preventing unintended pregnancies.

If you're not ready, you're not ready. That's why more women than ever choose Depo-Provera. You need just 1 shot every 11 to 13 weeks to protect you from pregnancy. So, you can focus on history, not maternity.

Depo-Provera does not protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant or if you have had any unexplained periods. You should not use it if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a loss of some of the bone mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures.

Some women using Depo-Provera have side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months. You may gain weight when using Depo-Provera. About two thirds of the women in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 lb during the first year of use.

If you're not ready to get pregnant, be ready with effective birth control. Talk to your health care provider to see if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit www.depo-provera.com.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on the adjacent page.

DE148562A © 2003 Pfizer Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA/September 2003 10% TOTAL RECOVERED FIBER Pfizer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonnace
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Ferrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Stroub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salzaker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Benschamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagnic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erika Lovely
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The Collegian Signal in 1901, The Weekly Collegian in 1914, published Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1916, published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been microfilmed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction: Because of a reporting error in yesterday's Page One story "Globe editor shares experiences," the location of Robert Turner's speech was incorrect. The event took place in Bartlett hall.

Statewide smoking ban goes through House

Associated Press

Diane Pickles, right, executive director of Tobacco Free Mass, speaks during a news conference at the Massachusetts Statehouse in Boston on Tuesday.

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — House lawmakers overwhelmingly approved a bill yesterday banning smoking in bars and restaurants across the state.

The bill would prohibit smoking in all enclosed work areas including auditoriums, conference rooms, offices, elevators, hallways, cafeterias, employee lounges, restrooms and staircases.

Smoking would be still allowed by nursing home residents and in fraternal organizations, such as American Legion halls.

Supporters of the bill — which passed the House on a 125-25 vote — said it will protect workers and patrons of bars and restaurants from the harmful effects of second hand smoke.

"This legislation will save lives," Rep. Peter Koutoujian, D-Waltham, House chairman of the Health Care Committee.

Critics said Democratic leaders were speeding the bill through the House without giving lawmakers enough time to study the details.

Critics also said it's disingenuous of the state to collect cigarette taxes while telling people where they can smoke.

"It's somewhat like a drug dealer who gets you hooked and makes a ton of cash. The only difference is that the drug dealer is illegal," said Rep. George Peterson, R-Grafton. "We're still going to make that $450 million (in tobacco taxes), but we're also going to tell you where you can smoke it."

Gov. Mitt Romney said yesterday he hasn't taken a position on the bill, but said local control is usually preferable to state mandates.

"Philosophically, local control is always favored," he said. "There are some circumstances where you decide that statewide action is the most equitable and appropriate. I'll have to consider the advantages of statewide action relative to having each municipality make its own independent decision."

Romney said an important consideration would be if the business community supported the ban.

The bill would allow tobacco farmers in Western Massachusetts to continue to operate tobacco testing sites, and local officials would be allowed to issue special permits for certain smoke-oriented establishments such as cigar bars.

House approves bill: Wrongfully convicted able to sue state

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Anyone wrongfully convicted of a crime and sentenced to a year or more in jail could sue the state for up to half a million dollars under a bill approved by House lawmakers yesterday.

Currently, it takes a special act of the Legislature to compensate the wrongfully convicted. Lawsuits can also be brought under federal civil rights law, but only if the conviction was the result of misconduct by police or prosecutors, rather than a mistake.

Anyone filing a claim under the bill would have to show by "clear and convincing evidence" that they did not commit the crime for which they were convicted. The attorney general would defend the state once the claim was filed.

The state wouldn't be liable for punitive damages under the proposal.

The bill was approved without debate on a voice vote.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Patricia Jehlen, D-Somerville, called the legislation a "matter of simple justice."

"There are a number of people who have had many years of their lives taken from them and they've spent them in prison for crimes they didn't commit," Jehlen said. "When the state damages someone and takes the best years of their lives, justice demands some kind of restitution."

The House approved a similar bill late last year, but it failed to come up for a vote on the floor of the Senate before the end of the session.

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
76 Sunderland Road, North Amherst MA 01059
www.northamhersmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

New WORLD Theater presents:
A new collaborative work inspired by the writings of Edward Said
Celebrating 25 Years of New WORLD Theater
THE NEXT EAST LIVES NEXT DOOR
ReOrientalism
Thurs. Oct. 23, 2003 • 8pm, Bowker Auditorium
Western images of Islam and the East are redirected, reshaped, and reclaimed in this new collaborative "pocket-opera" featuring traditional and original Middle-Eastern music, spoken word, sung text and visual projections. ReOrientalism disrupts stereotypes and explores themes of "orientalism" - the West's simultaneous romanticism and fear of Islam and Asia.
A commissioned project of the Center for Cultural Exchange, Portland, ME.
TICKETS ARE: $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/seniors; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511. For more info about the show, call NWT at 413-545-1972.
Up next... Open Mic Event! A Call To Action
A showcase of young voices from groups throughout the Pioneer Valley! For more info call 577-2990
Nov. 2 @ 7 pm
Northampton Center for the Arts - FREE

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Interested in an Internship for Spring Semester?

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

TODAY! Thursday, Oct 23
3:00 pm
•
Monday, Oct 27
3:00 pm
•
Tuesday, Oct 28
10:30 am

All Welcome Sessions take place in 104 Career Services Bldg. (across from the Newman Center)

For more information about Internships and Co-ops, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-6265

CareerServices

SGA debates over excessive police force

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Physical Plant director Pat Daly addresses the SGA during last night's meeting.

Continued from page 1

said he wants freshmen to be more informed and believes the University doesn't provide enough programming for students.

"We need to socialize the campus culture," he said. According to Carr, 8 of the eleven students arrested in the riots were freshmen.

However, Carr did not agree with Poznanter's belief that the police may have acted inappropriately last Thursday night.

"I think the situation was handled a lot better that night than it was any of the previous four nights," he said.

Carr said he was present for every riot that has occurred this semester. Poznanter admitted that he could not say the same.

"They [UMPD] only come in when they're forced to," Carr said. "The police don't want to come into these situations. They really don't."

Associate speaker Christopher Eckel agreed.

"Institutionally the police did a much better job," he said. "They need to be commended on it."

There were also concerns about a student who was suspended as a result of his arrest following a recent riot. According to Carr, in many cases an arrest is considered dangerous enough for the courts to prohibit a student from returning to campus until after trial. He said, whether you agree or not, that's what happens.

Attorney general Mark Morrison said that he has dealt with students who have been suspended for the past three days. But according to him, some deserve it. Morrison said there is a culture that defies authority, one that doesn't care about the University's reputation.

Bissonnette also announced that the coordinating council has approved two new judiciary appointments: freshman Elizabeth Hickey and former SGA senator Michael Pantina. According to Morrison, there are currently four other judiciary officers. Addressing concerns over Hickey's freshman status, Morrison said he believes the judiciary should have freshmen and sophomores, due to the fact that the other four seats of the judiciary are divided between juniors and seniors.

"We need freshmen," he said. "This girl knows her stuff. We need more people with character and less people seeking prestige in the SGA."

Russell Plato, secretary of diversity issues, addressed previous concerns about the percentage of ALANA students on campus. According to Plato, the percentage of ALANA students at the University has been going up in regards to all undergraduates.

However, Plato said, the percentage of Latino students is problematic. According to him, they have dropped significantly in their representation in the student body as a whole.

Secretary of public policy and relations Mina Safain also voiced his concern that of the 24 members of the University's presidential search committee, only one was a representative of the University system, from UMass Worcester Medical extension.

"One student who is not an undergrad is choosing our next president," he said.

The conclusion of the meeting featured a motion to impose a total charge of about $1.25 to students, for the increase of the number of newspapers available on campus through the USA Today Collegiate Readership Program that supplies students with free Boston Globe, New York Times and USA Today newspapers. It passed by a vote of 24 to 23.

India seeks to mend relations with Pakistan

By Beth Duff-Brown
Associated Press

NEW DELHI (AP) — India unveiled major proposals yesterday to improve relations with Pakistan, expanding travel and reuniting families. Pakistan saw some positive elements but expressed disappointment that the steps fail to include negotiations with Islamabad on Kashmir.

Although formal talks between the leaders of the two South Asian nations are still off, the proposals cover human concerns such as allowing athletes to compete in India-Pakistan cricket matches and letting fishermen go about their trade without fear of arrest.

The pronouncements by Foreign Minister Yashwant Sinha were the most extensive efforts so far to heal the wounds from a December 2001 attack on India's parliament complex. New Delhi blamed Pakistani-based militants for the attack, which killed 14 people, and insisted Islamabod's spy agency was behind the plot.

They were also seen here as a move to jump-start Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee's stalled peace initiative with Pakistan ahead of elections next year and seal his legacy as the man who renewed their friendship.

The travel proposals include the resumption of air and rail links, and running buses between the capitals of Kashmir, the Himalayan territory divided between the two South Asian rivals and a flashpoint for two of their past wars.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Adam Ereli welcomed the proposals, saying: "They represent a major step toward establishing normal links between these two important neighbors and for providing a foundation for real progress in resolving differences between India and Pakistan."

The Indian government also announced that for the first time in 13 years, it would meet with members of the separatist movement in India's portion of Kashmir, the country's only Muslim-majority state. But it did not offer to negotiate the issue with Pakistan — which the Islamabad government has long sought.

In Islamabad, a Pakistani Foreign Ministry statement said the proposals to restore travel links, sports competitions and other people-to-people initiatives would be given serious consideration.

But it added that Islamabad was "disappointed" that India still refused to discuss Kashmir with Pakistan.

India has long insisted that the way to peace with Pakistan is through a step-by-step process that involves normalizing trade and people-to-people contacts, before tackling Kashmir. Islamabad insists Kashmir is the central issue, and other disputes would easily be resolved after the major sore point is settled.

The militants in India's part of Kashmir have been fighting for the northern state's independence or merger with Pakistan since 1989, an insurgency that has cost more than 63,000 lives.

India accuses Pakistan of maintaining rebel camps on its territory and helping to arm and sneak them across the Line of Control, claims that Islamabad denies.

Sinha said yesterday that Pakistan first had to take significant steps to end the infiltration of militants before dialogue on Kashmir could resume.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Editorial Opinion

Thursday, October 23, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Florida out of line in right-to-die case

Every now and then there's an issue in the news that has no right answer. The case of Terri Schiavo and the right-to-die controversy that centers on her situation is one of those issues.

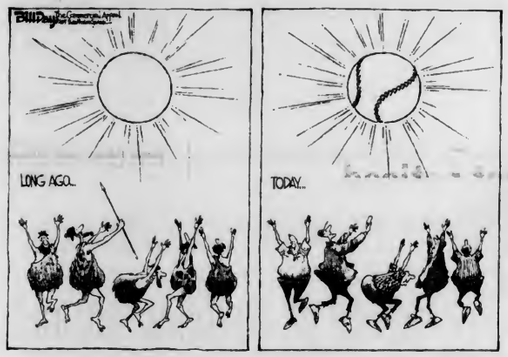
Terri Schiavo lies in a bed in Florida, brain-damaged. According to CNN, she's been that way since 1990, when she collapsed after heart failure. While she recovered from the heart attack, she was left in what doctors call a "persistent vegetative state" due to a lack of oxygen. While she responds to stimuli, doctors have said she has nearly no brain activity going on, and she receives nourishment to keep her alive through a feeding tube.

That feeding tube, and what should be done with it, has become national news over the last week, as Florida Gov. Jeb Bush stepped in to a messy situation where family members of Schiavo are pitted against each other. Bush ordered her feeding tube be reinserted after doctors removed it, and a judge has since rejected a request for an emergency injunction that would have prevented the re-feeding of Schiavo. Schiavo's husband, Michael, asked for the injunction.

Michael Schiavo is at the heart of the developing conflict, as his lawyers openly criticize other members of Schiavo's family, the governor and the judge rejected the injunction request.

"Each of us — and the Florida Supreme Court has said this — has a right to control our own body," Attorney George Felos, Michael Schiavo's lawyer, told CNN. "We have a fundamental right to make our own medical treatment choices, and the state doesn't have the right to override our wishes."

At the very least, Felos raises an interesting argument that comes down to a debate on a general respect for life and what respect for life entails. How long is it appropriate for one to hang onto their loved ones in a situation like Schiavo's?



Gov. Jeb Bush put himself and the state of Florida squarely in the middle of a conflict between Michael Schiavo and Terri Schiavo's parents, the Schindlers, by overruling a decision that had been previously made. And each side appears to have doctors backing them with their medical opinions, so the conflict is not going away anytime soon.

CNN also reported doctors have said it is possible that by reinserting the feeding tube, the "death process" that had already started may have been stopped — a process that probably resulted in serious organ failure and kidney damage, even if Schiavo were to live.

We, at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, feel that there can be no overriding way to make decisions in cases like this one, and that the state of Florida is the wrong group to be making life-and-death decisions. The decision to prolong a life in agony or to pull the proverbial plug is not one to be made by an elected official. It's one to be made by loved ones, with the advice of doctors.

Michael Schiavo may not be the right man to make that decision on his own, and the Schindlers probably deserve more input before that decision is made. But Bush and the state of Florida have no right to be intervening on behalf of the people of Florida at large. Schiavo's story is a tragic one — but it's a private one. No government should be able to alter the life and death of someone.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Celebrating United Nations Day

Peter Trovato

Tomorrow marks a less known holiday around the globe — United Nations Day. Although the holiday has been in existence since 1945, not much has been made of it. After calling the United Nations "irrelevant" and going over the Security Council's head in regards to Iraq, I doubt President Bush will be throwing a block party in Washington. He should. As a matter of fact, he should throw an all inclusive steak dinner.

The only problem is that this hypothetical dinner would be well attended. Today and tomorrow, representatives from countries around the world will be meeting in Spain for the international donor's conference, a meeting that seeks to raise money from other nations to aid in rebuilding Iraq. It doesn't look good. The Bush Administration's foreign policy has severed ties with many of our allies. Bridges haven't just been burned; they have been entirely torn down. Professional construction companies working on the "Big Dig" would have trouble fixing this debacle.

This two-day donor conference looks to raise $36 billion on top of the $20 billion the United States has already signed away on. A total of $56 billion, just to kick start Iraq's economy. So far, the effort hasn't been entirely terminal. Almost $3 billion has been raised, Japan heading the list along with Spain and the UK. All in all, the pledges received so far are about as significant as a deck chair on the Titanic.

The problem is that the heavy hitters aren't coming to the table. France, Germany and Russia, all nations whose interests were snubbed by Bush this past year, have said they probably won't offer any monetary support. Poor Colon Powell, a man who was leery about this war to begin with, is stuck begging for money, telling France the whole 'freedom fries' thing was a mistake.

Let's hope someone helps, because this has become a serious issue for everyone. And as college students, soon to enter the workforce, it's time we start paying attention to these decisions.

Bush's trillion-dollar tax cut for the wealthiest people in this country leaves the rest of us forking over the dough for Iraq. Yes, that means us. It's not just our parents anymore. We, students of UMass Amherst, are among the millions of Americans who are going to inherit a national debt of more than 4 trillion. It may be time to start rioting over something more than just the Red Sox.

The Bush Administration's foreign policy has severed ties with many of our allies. Bridges haven't just been burned; they have been entirely torn down.

The reconstruction plan is enough to cause some outrage. Our country is building $400 million jails in Iraq with $50,000 beds in each cell. We are spending $100 million on 2,000 trash trucks and $9 million to establish zip codes.

Meanwhile, back at home the statistics are mind-boggling. Since, the current administration has taken office, the stock market is down 11 percent; so much for lining the pockets of the wealthy so they can throw their tax refund money back into the market. The unemployment rate is up 50 percent; thousands of jobs are being lost a month. A budget surplus has turned into a deficit of drastic proportions. And as for Iraq, it looks as if we are in this alone.

Our relationship with our allies has weakened. Nuclear proliferation has increased. Our homeland security has not been upgraded; instead of putting money into the fire departments, police units, and border control, it is being shipped overseas to reconstruct Iraq.

I hope this donor conference goes well. I hope we can rally some monetary support for this endeavor that has morphed into a daily catastrophe. I hope that soon we can gain more ally troop support for the region, but then again, that doesn't look too promising either.

More than 391 soldiers have been killed on duty in Iraq. These are young men and women — 18, 20, 30 years old. They are not trained for guerilla warfare; they are ill equipped, some reportedly with defective bulletproof vests, and forced to buy their own equipment. They are dying daily, and supposedly the major combat is over.

It is a shame that our leaders, who are placed in office to make decisions for the welfare of our nation, did not respect the organization we celebrate tomorrow: the UN. If they did, maybe the current situation would not look so glum. Maybe our economic future would look more promising. Maybe today's donor conference would not have to take place. Maybe our soldiers would not be suffering in a desert thousands of miles away from their families. Certainly, it is hard to look back now. But nevertheless, have a happy U.N. Day.

Peter Trovato is a Collegian columnist.

Fighting for women's rights

Gilad Skolnick

Imagine a country in which half of its population is not allowed to vote, not allowed to drive, not even allowed to leave home without permission. imagine a country in which half of its population has basically no independence or freedom. Such a country would be terrible place of oppression, and one wouldn't expect the United States of America, a nation that prides itself in justice and liberty, to have any relations with such a place.

The law does not protect women in Jordan from honor killings, when a women's brother or father can murder her if she has sexual relations outside of marriage. In Iran, women are very limited in terms of career choices. The Palestinian Authority encourages women to become suicide bombers like Hanadi Jaradat, who blew up in a café in Israel two weeks ago murdering 20 people. But nowhere is life as bad for women as it is in Saudi Arabia.

Women in Saudi Arabia are essentially under house arrest from the moment that they are born to the moment they die, only permitted to leave the house when accompanied by a father, brother, or husband, and can only leave the country with written permission from a close male relative. Once leaving the home they must cover themselves from head to toe in the choking Saudi Arabian heat, where temperatures are often above 120 degrees Fahrenheit. Only their faces can be left exposed for the world to see. If a female wishes to show her sexy ear, the religious police can arrest her.

Life is even harder for women who are divorced or widowed. Men can divorce women for no reason but women must provide legal grounds to divorce their husbands. if a Muslim woman is divorced or widowed she can usually keep her children until they are seven if they are boys and nine if they are girls. Once they pass that age, then the former husband or the deceased husband's family gets custody of them.

It's so hard to imagine, but it's true; a woman who is raped in Saudi Arabia must produce four witnesses to the crime to avoid being locked up in jail for adultery. If four people watch a man rape a woman and don't do anything about it, chances are they won't testify against the man in court.

A woman who is raped ... must produce four witnesses to the crime or else be locked up in jail as an adulteress.

Something is very wrong in a country when women can be raped, blamed for being raped, and then arrested or killed to preserve the family honor. Something is definitely wrong when millions of girls are forced to undergo female genital mutilation, a practice widespread and legal in Saudi Arabia.

Every other person who happens to not end up with a Y chromosome is subjected to a life consisting of nothing more than housework and pleasing her husband. Joys such as swimming, playing tennis, or even just going out of a jog are about as realistic for women in Saudi Arabia as the hope in the US that Ralph Nadir will be the next president.

What baffles me is why women's rights groups haven't done anything significant about the oppression of women in Saudi Arabia. Why other campus groups, which are quick to attack the U.S. and other countries for their actions, remain silent on this issue befuddles me. Certain Middle Eastern history professors spend heir energy bashing certain countries but rarely mention the wrongs in Saudi Arabia if not entirely skipping over them.

Meanwhile, the US buys more than 13 billion dollars worth of oil and other commodities from Saudi Arabia, in addition to selling them billions in advanced weaponry. A country where it's against the law to practice any religion other than Islam in public, and only Muslims can be Saudi citizens, a country in which converting someone, being gay, and murder all carry similar punishments, is not a country that the U.S. should buy $15 billion worth of goods from. The greatest hypocrisy on campus, in the U.S., and in the world in general, is the abandonment of the plight of the women of Saudi Arabia.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Cry for my car, call for change

Frannie Carr

Today marks the thirtieth day that I have been without a car. I don't live on a bus route, so that's 30 days worth of rides to and from school, back and forth from my internship, not to mention long days spent schlepping to various car dealerships all over Massachusetts. (To those of you who have made my life possible for these past few weeks, you know who you are, and your generosity will not be soon forgotten.) It's like Joni Mitchell says, "Don't it always seem to go, that you don't know what you've got 'til it's gone." I never realized how reliant I was on my car, until it drowned in a flash flood.

On a rainy Tuesday morning in September, I decided to treat myself to a metered parking spot close to my class instead of parking in my designated lot down the road. It was coming down pretty hard, and I figured since I only had this one class, I would splurge so I spent a buck or two on parking. It would end up being the most expensive parking spot of my life.

This is a call to all the flash flood victims whose cars were flooded in the first row of Boydon Gym parking lot.

One hour and 20 minutes later I returned to my car. It was still pouring. I approached and was relieved not to see a ticket under the windshield wiper. I got to the driver's side door, key in hand, and then I saw it, a veritable swamp on the floor of my car. My jaw dropped, and I fumbled with my keys to open the door. My CDs and tapes were floating in puddle three inches deep. I sat in the driver's seat and tried to start the car. My feet were submerged in rainwater. The engine grinded. It sounded like the painful death of a large animal. At this point I lost my composure. I started to cry.

This was not just any ordinary hunk of junk, a gets you from point A to point B kind of a car. This was a family heirloom. This maroon '91 Honda Accord LX Wagon was originally owned by a family friend. I vividly remember taking it on a test drive when I was eleven. Maureen, our friend, showed me how the vanity mirrors had lights that only turned on when the headlights were on. Not only was this car sleek, but it was smart too. I was impressed by this feature and have looked for it in cars since.

In '95, my mom bought the car from Maureen. It carted groceries, three dogs and garbage to name a few things. It picked my sister and me up from a countless variety of activities over the years. And it was in this car that I learned how to drive and began a lifetime love affair with standard transmissions.

When my mom got a new car and the wagon became mine, I was in the ungrateful-wretch-what-are-people-going-to-think-if-they-see-me-driving-a-station-wagon mode. I admit, with great remorse, that for a year of her life, she was drastically under appreciated. This would all change when I went to pack up for college. While my friends would have to make seven trips in their sedans, I simply flipped down the back seat, and my entire life was neatly packed.

The stickers alone were a heartbreaking loss. There was the Bucknell University and University of Massachusetts sticker that my sister and I affixed, the Museum of Fine Arts Member Sticker that allowed my mom preferential parking, the Farnsworth Museum in Maine sticker representing her recent move up north, and the Cape Cod Canal Tunnel Permit from the summer I spent working in Chatham. Then there was the Acton-Boxboro Lacrosse sticker from my athletic glory days, the "none for the road" sticker representing my involvement with SADD and the four national conferences I attended in D.C. The NPR affiliate, WFCR 88.5FM sticker showed my passion for public radio, and, of course, my UMass parking permit stickers. Those were different; they represented the enemy.

Had this parking lot been built properly, this never would have happened. My car was in the valley between two small sloping hills. The water was rushing down at such velocity that it didn't have a chance to make it to the gutters. The police officer on the scene said that already four cars had reported being flooded. I walked down the aisle and saw that every single car in my row had had some water damage.

So finally: The Point. This is a call to all the flash flood victims whose cars were flooded in the first row of Boydon Gym parking lot on Commonwealth Avenue. We have to do something. This lot needs to be repaired. People shouldn't have to go through this inconvenience or heartache again. There simply should not be meters where cars can potentially be totaled if a heavy rain comes through.

Of course in the grand scheme of things, I realize that this is insignificant. There are a lot worse things in the world than people's cars flooding and being temporarily inconvenienced. In fact, that is the most important thing that this fiasco has taught me. I am entirely too reliant on my car. However, the universal unimportance of this issue should not dissuade our campaign to fix the potentially harmful lots. Let's take a stand and make sure this doesn't happen to another innocent station wagon.

Frannie Carr is a Collegian columnist.

Applications for assistant Ed/Op editor will close on Friday. Interested in applying? Contact Paige Cram.

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

The mystery of the Espresso Hut

Scott Eldridge II

If I were to describe the glaciers I've seen or the sea, the wildlife or the mountains and try to wrap words and grammar around indescribable landscapes, I would do Calliope injustice. More within my lexicon are the words to describe some of the uniquely Alaskan establishments I see, and perhaps the most amazing of all of these is the Alaskan espresso hut.

